Liquidation—Honorarium.—An assessee acted as Secretary of a Company without remuneration from the date of its incorporation until his appointment as Liquidator of the Company. When the liquidation of the Company was completed, there was a sum in hand, after discharge of all liabilities, which according to the Company's Memorandum of Association was divisible amongst the ordinary shareholders of the Company. By a unanimous resolution, these shareholders voted the sum in question, in equal shares to the Chairman of the Company, and to the assessee. The assessee contended that this payment was a voluntary gift and that the whole of his duties as Secretary and Liquidator had terminated before the gift was made. Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the sum voted by the shareholders of the Company to the assessee did not accrue to him in respect of an office or employment of profit and that, therefore he was not chargeable to income-tax in respect of the sum in question.

Per M. R. Særdale.—"The argument was rather narrowed to this, that a voluntary payment cannot be a profit of the office after the office has terminated unless that office had been an office of profit beforehand. Now I cannot accept that as a broad proposition. It seems to me that there may very well be a payment in respect of an office which had been gratuitous up to its end but which still may be a payment for the services of that office and therefore be a profit accruing by reason of the office. I do not think that a hard and fast line can be drawn. . . . In Duncan's Trustees v. Farmer, 5 Tax Cases 417, Lord Dunedin says 'My Lords, I confess I have never been able to see how it could possibly be said to be in respect of his office when the whole reason it was given to him was that he was no longer in the office.' At first sight that may seem to bear out the proposition that was contended for. I do not think that it does because it will be seen that the noble Lord was speaking of the facts of that case an annuity was granted to a Minister of the Church on retirement through ill-health and therefore it was given to him as a sort of compassionate allowance and could not be obtained except when he had resigned his cure. Therefore I do not think that proposition can be maintained. But the fact that the office is at an end is a fact of very great weight, and when you add to it that the payment is made, not by the employer, because it was not made and could not be made here by the Company which was the employer but by other persons—in this case it was the shareholders individually—the facts still more point to it not being a payment for services or a profit accruing by reason of the office To my mind that points to this not being a payment in respect of services rendered, but being something in the nature of what is referred to by Lord Loreburn in Cooper v. Blackiston, 5 Tax Cases 347; (1909) A.C. 104; Cowan v. Seymour, 7 Tax Cases 372; (1920) 1 K.B. 500, 509 (C.A.) reversing the judgment of Rowlatt, J., in (1919) 2 K.B. 146

Overdrafts—Guarantee of—Commission for.—The bankers of a company refused to allow its overdraft to be increased except upon the joint and several personal guarantee of its directors, of whom the assessee were two. In consideration of such guarantee, the company granted to each of the directors a commission of two per cent. of the whole amount guaranteed. The original guarantee was for one year only, but, similar circumstances arising in the following year, the directors renewed their guarantee (for a still greater amount) for a further year, and were granted commission thereon at the same rate as before. The assessee contended that the commissions arose from casual, unsought and exceptional transactions and were not chargeable to Income-tax. Held, that the commissions were annual profits or gains within the meaning of Case VI of Schedule D, and had been properly assessed to Income-tax thereunder.

Per Rowlatt, J.—"It was not in the line of business of either of them to give a guarantee, and one of them, at any rate, who is a solicitor, had never done it before, and probably will never do it again; they did it unwillingly it seems to me that, on the view of the facts taken by the Special Commissioners, by which, of course, I am bound, I must treat this case as just on the same footing as if a person, not connected with business at all, received a commission from another person, also not connected with business, for doing him the favour of guaranteeing his account at a bank. "Profits or gains" mean something which is in the nature of interest or fruit, as opposed to principal or free. A person may have an emolument by reason of a gift inter vivos or testamentary, or he may acquire an emolument by finding an article of value or money, or he may acquire it by winning a bet. It seems to me that all that class of cases must be ruled out, because they are not profits or gains at all. Without pretending to give an exhaustive definition, I think one may take it as clear that where an emolument is received, or, rather, where an emolument accrues, by virtue of some service rendered by way of action or permission, or both, at any rate that is included within the words "profits or gains". Now, what is the meaning of the word "annual"? It may mean, and perhaps its most obvious meaning is "annually recurring", like the seasons; or if not recurring in perpetuity like the seasons as a matter of nature, "annually recurring" in the ordinary way for a considerable space of time; or it may conceivably mean "lasting only for a year", as you speak of an annual plant; but I do not think that is really a very true meaning of the word "annual", because I think when you speak of an annual plant what is in your mind is the necessity of annual sowing; the plant is not annual; it is the sowing that is annual.

At any rate, that is a possible meaning of the word "annual". Thirdly, it might mean "calculated with reference to a year"; that is, like interest of so much per annum. If there is anything in the suggestion that "annual" means or includes "lasting for a year" I must point out that this guarantee did last for a year, and it was renewed for another year; but there is nothing in that, because it was renewed de novo and did not run on; it was a transaction for a year twice repeated. Those are three possible meanings of the word "annual", but I do not think any of them is applicable in this particular case dealing with Income-tax. One is not left entirely without guidance, at any rate as a matter of practice. Take the case of letting a furnished house. It has been recognized that if a furnished house is let even for a few weeks in any one year the letting will attract Income-tax, under this case, upon the profits so made. That is the inveterate practice, and although it has never been relied upon, in principle, by the Courts, it has been tacitly assumed by the Courts in Scotland, and it seems to me out of question that a Court of First Instance, at any rate, could possibly say that that is wrong. The letting in such a case is not recurring yearly, nor does it last for a year, nor is it calculated with reference to a year, because it is calculated with reference to the amenities of a few particular weeks. Again, take the case of a person who is appointed to perform some services, which might possibly be by way of an office, a person appointed, not carrying on any trade or any business, but who happens to be appointed— as a retired Judge was appointed some years ago to hold a very important arbitration in connection with the London water— appointed with a lump sum remuneration to do a particular piece of work, or, to take a humbler instance, which is more familiar perhaps to us here, the case of a Judge's marsh I, who gets a little appointment for a week or two, he suffers a deduction of income-tax when his modest emolument is paid to him. Now, recognizing that position, it seems to me that 'annual' here can only mean 'in any year' and that the 'annual profits or gains' mean 'profits or gains in any year as the succession of years comes round'. That being the position in which I think I am, this litigation seems to me to raise the whole question of casual profits. I have already referred to the furnished house illustration. Now, a man may carry on no business and no profession; he may not be a journalist, he may not be an author, but he may be called upon to write an article for a paper for reward. He may find that there would be a demand for a single book from his pen, as a traveller, a soldier, a sailor or a statesman, or what not. Now, it seems to me that all cases of that kind, like this case of these gentlemen who gave this guarantee, are instances of casual profits which cannot in any way be distinguished from the profit which is obtained by a man who lets his house furnished", Ryall v. Hoare and Honeywell, 8 Tax Cases 521; (1923) 2 K.B. 447.

Following the above it was held that a bonus received by a solicitor from his client in return for guaranteeing an overdraft granted to the client by a bank was taxable even though the overdraft did not continue beyond a single year, Sherwin v. Barnes, 16 Tax Cases 278.

Similarly, when a solicitor lent money or arranged for a loan of money on two occasions to a builder to enable the latter to purchase certain properties and received a bonus on the loans when the properties were eventually sold, it was held that the bonuses were taxable, not being of the nature of accretion of capital but payments "for the finding of money and (having) the character of income". The decision of the Commissioners was overruled. The assessee contended unsuccessfully that the bonuses were analogous to premia on repayment of debentures, Wilson v. Mannoch, 16 A.T.C. 121; 21 Tax Cases 178 (K.B.).

The case, however, was near the border line, and the fact that it is usual for a solicitor to arrange for finance may have influenced the decision and outweighed the isolated nature of the transactions.

Compensation for loss of office.—A firm of ship managers were employed as such by a steamship company and remunerated by a percentage of the company's annual net profits. The company went into voluntary liquidation and transferred £50,000 of 5 per cent. bonds to the firm as a 'compensation for loss of office'. Held, that on the findings of the Commissioners as to the nature of the payment, which there was evidence to support, the sum was not a 'profit' liable to income-tax.

Per Rowlatt, J.: "I think everybody is agreed . . . that in cases of this kind the circumstance that the payment in question is a voluntary one does not matter . . . You must not look at the point of view of the person who pays and see whether he is compellable to pay or not; you have to look at the point of view of the person who receives, to see whether he receives it in respect of his services . . . or in respect of trade . . . If it was a payment in respect of the termination of their employment, . . . I do not think that is taxable as profit. . . . A payment to make up for the cessation for the future of annual taxable profits is not itself an annual profit at all . . . I should not have thought that either damages for wrongful dismissal or a payment in lieu of notice at any rate if it was for a longish period—I will not say a payment in lieu of notice, I will say a voluntary payment in respect of breaking an agreement which had some time to run—would be taxable profits. But at any rate it does seem to me that compensation for loss of an employment which need not continue but which was likely to continue is not an annual profit within the scope of the income-tax at all", Chibbett v. Joseph Robinson & Sons, and Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Joseph Robinson & Sons, 9 Tax Cases 84.

According to the articles of a company, a director vacating office except in certain specified circumstances, after not less than five years' service as a director, was entitled to certain compensation. There was no contract of service between the directors and the company. Following Chibbett's case, Rowlatt, J., held (in a group of three cases) that the compensation was not taxable, but the Court of Appeal reversed the decision on the ground that the compensation was really not for loss of office since it was also payable in the event of death or voluntary resignation and therefore amounted really to a holding over of a part of the remuneration till the director vacated office. In the Deverhurst case, the director wanted to retire but the other directors wanted him to remain; he accordingly resigned office as chairman, received a lump sum as compensation and continued as a director on a lower salary. The Court of Appeal however saw no material difference between the three cases. The House of Lords reversed the decision in the Deverhurst case on the ground that the compensation was given in consideration of the assessee's not receiving remuneration for service as chairman as agreed. A sum of money paid to obtain a release from a contingent liability under a contract of employment is not received under the contract of employment, and is not remuneration for services rendered under or to be rendered under the contract. The other two cases did not go to the House of Lords, Henry v. A. Foster; Henry v. J. Foster; and Hunter v. Dewhurst, 16 Tax Cases 605.

On the other hand when a director of a prosperous private company who wished to resign was induced to remain as director on a lower salary (doing less work) by payment to him of a large lump sum at once, it was held that this payment arose from his office. There were two contracts, one for the payment of the lump sum and the withdrawal of the resignation, and the other for the lower salary. The question was whether the lump sum was paid in virtue of the office of director or as consideration for the withdrawal of the resignation. The consideration for the payment was his agreeing to remain in office; and there was no discharge of any contingent liability as in Dewhurst's case. There is, in substance, no difference between a promise not to resign and a promise to continue, and the essence of the contract was the continuance in the office. It was wrong to think (as the dissenting view in the lower Court held) that the continuance was merely a by-product of the undertaking not to resign, Prendergast v. Cameron, 19 A.T.C. 69 (H.L.).

An employee, when entering into an agreement of services for five years (determinable earlier, in certain events), simultaneously agreed, in the event of his service being determined from whatever cause earlier, not to work in a competitive capacity for a specified period in a specified area, and received a lump sum in consideration of the latter undertaking. It was held that the lump sum was not received as remuneration of his employment and represented only the value of a covenant that would arise after termination of employment Beak v. Robson (H.L.), 1943 1.T.R. (Sup.) 23.

The Managing Director of a Company was entitled to a salary of £6,000 a year, and if he vacated the post to a pension of £4,000 a year for ten years. He gave up the latter right and agreed to receive salary at £2,000 a year and a lump sum of £40,000 to be paid in two instalments. The House of Lords held that neither the pension nor its commuted lump sum arose from office and that part of the £40,000 which represented the drop in salary was taxable as salary, i.e., profit from office of director. The ordinary way of remunerating an employee is by periodical payments; and an arrangement which reduces future payments by a larger payment in the first instance cannot convert the latter into capital, Tilley v. Wales, 1943 1.T.R. (Sup.) 69.

Following the above, it was held in Wilson v. Nicholson, Sons and Daniels, 1944 K.B.D. (?) that a sum received by a dominant Managing Director as 'compensation' on his voluntarily resigning his office was income. Where a Society under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act formed itself into a company and one of the directors received compensation for the loss of his rights as a director but continued as a director on the same terms, it was held that the compensation was income from the office of director. Lee v. Boarland, 1945 K.B.D. (?).

Where, under a contract, a lump sum was paid to the representative of a deceased employee to whom or whose representatives the sum was due on the termination of his service from any cause other than wilful negligence on his part, it was held that the payment was a profit from office, the death being the occasion for, and not the cause of, payment. Allen v. Trehearne, 22 Tax Cases 15.

'Compensation for loss of office' is a well-known term and means a payment to the holder of an office as compensation for being deprived of profits to which as between himself and his employer, he would, but for an act of deprivation by his employer or some third party, such as the legislature have been entitled. Per Romer, L.J., in Henry v. Arthur Foster, 16 Tax Cases 605.

In the earliest ruling in India of this type of cases, the Calcutta High Court held that compensation received by a company for the loss of one of the managing agencies held by it was not exempt under this section, Turner Morrison & Co v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 3 I.T.C. 214, but the same Court observed in a later case, Mundy v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Assam, 4 I.T.C. 370, that the above ruling was based on the particular facts of the case. The Madras High Court ruled that compensation paid to a Government servant for his premature retirement on the basis of a proportion of the difference between his pay and his pension was taxable as salary, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Panchapakesa Iyer, 62 M. L.J. 656; 6 I.T.C. 69. The Patna High Court held that a commuted pension paid in lump to an employee was not exempt under section 4 (3) (vii) because it arose from the office, Rutherford v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Behar and Orissa, 10 Pat. 315. All these rulings however have been superseded by the ruling of the Privy Council that in this clause "receipts from business, etc." can only mean receipts from the carrying on of business, etc. Therefore the compensation paid to an agent for the cessation of his agency is not taxable since the receipt does not arise from the carrying on of the business. Turner Morrison's case was definitely disapproved by the Privy Council, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Shaze Wallace & Co., 59 I.A. 206.

Where an agent, on termination of his agency and in consideration of past services and also of refraining from competing with the principal, opened his own office, and received from the principal a monthly payment for five years, the payment being continued to his son, if necessary, to make up the period of five years, it was held that the payment was taxable, Commissioner of Income-tax (Sind) v. Katrak, 1937 I.T.R. 527. The case was different from Shaze Wallace & Co.'s case, 59 I.A. 206; 59 Cal. 1343; A.I. R. 1932 P.C. 138, and really governed by Gopal Saran's case, 62 I.A. 207; 14 Pat. 552; 1935 I.T.R. 237, the agent being allowed, so as to speak, to continue to enjoy a part of the fruits of the tree which he had watered, provided he did not destroy it by competing.

Commission—Addition to salary.—An Incorporated Accountant who was Secretary and Director of a Company received a salary as such. He negotiated a sale of a branch of the company's business, and received £1,000 as commission for his services in negotiating the sale. Held, that the £1,000 was part of the profits from his office.

Per Rowlatt, J.—"If an officer is willing to do something outside the duties of his office, to do more than he is called upon to do by the letter of his bond, and his employer gives him something in that respect, that is a profit; it becomes a part of his office which is enlarged a little so as to receive it", Mudd v. Collins, 9 Tax Cases 297; 41 T.L.R. 358. Under a verbal arrangement, the Secretary of a Company negotiated for the sale of the Company's works and the Directors confirmed by a minute the verbal promise that the excess of the sale-proceeds over a certain figure would be paid to the Secretary. The Company went into liquidation after the sale and the liquidator paid the agreed amount to the Secretary. The Special Commissioners held that the case was governed by Cowan v. Seymour, 7 Tax Cases 372, and that the payment, being a gift, was not taxable, but Finlay, J., overruled the decision. On the evidence, only one conclusion was possible, viz., that the money was paid for services rendered, since the liquidators could not give away the assets of the Company as presents to persons with no claims against the Company, Shipway v. Skidmore, 16 Tax Cases 748.

In another case, Denny v. Reed, 18 Tax Cases 254; 12 A.T.C. 433, it was held on the evidence that certain voluntary payments paid to an employee in addition to his salary, and regularly deducted from the employer's taxable profits were perquisites of the employee's office.

An assessee was the chairman of a British Company. In addition to his ordinary fees, he was allowed a certain remuneration for inspecting the Company's agencies in China and negotiating with the Chinese Government. Held, that the additional remuneration was part of the appellant's profits as chairman, notwithstanding its being given for work done abroad.

Per Rowlatt, J.—"There appears to be no power for a Director to divide himself into two and to be a Director in China as well as a Director in England so as to be capable of being regarded as filling two severable capacities", Barson v. Aircy, 5 A.T.C. 65 (C. of A.); 10 Tax Cases 609.

An assessee, whose remuneration as general manager of a limited company consisted partly of a fixed annual salary and partly of a commission or bonus on the company's net profits, had been assessed to income-tax on 'the basis of the total amount of salary and commission or bonus received or receivable by him from the company in respect of each of these years. Held, by the House of Lords that the commission or bonus was 'perquisites' and therefore assessable. McDonald v. Shaud, 8 Tax Cases 420. The chairman of a company was voted along with other directors a bonus in addition to his ordinary remuneration. Held, setting aside the decision of the commissioners, that the bonus was taxable as it arose from the assessee's office, Rudcliffe v. Holt, 11 Tax Cases 621.

Profits from under-writing shares.—An assessee, whose ordinary business was that of a rope-manufacturer, underwrote 15,000 shares in an Oil Company for which he received a commission. It was contended on his behalf that the profits arose from an isolated transaction and were therefore of the nature of capital receipts. Held by Rowlatt, J., following Ryall v. Hoare, 8 Tax Cases 521, that the profits were taxable, Lyons v. Corcher, 5 A.T.C. 226; 10 Tax Cases 438.

Bonus dividend.—A bonus dividend is not exempt under this clause, Forbes v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Behar and Orissa, 6 I.T.C. 208; as to the extent of its liability, see section 2 (G-A).

Professionals—Benefits.—An assessee was a professional cricketer. A match was played for his benefit, and, in accordance with the rules of the club which employed him, the net proceeds of the match and certain other sums obtained by public subscription were invested in the name of the trustees of the club. After a few years the investments were realised, and the proceeds made over to the assessee who, with the consent of the club, bought a farm. It was admitted by the Crown that receipts from public subscriptions were not taxable but that the gate-money was, on the ground that it was a perquisite of his employment as a professional cricketer. It was held by Rowlatt, J., that the gate-money was not taxable. The ratio decidendi was that such receipts come to a man only once in a lifetime, and were really of the nature of an endowment, that there was really no difference between the gate-money and the other public subscriptions and that the assessee had no control over the money except with the consent of the club. This decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal (Sargent, L.J., dissenting), but the House of Lords restored Rowlatt J.'s judgment (Lord Atkinson dissenting), Reed v. Seymour, 11 Tax Cases 625; (1927) A.C. 554.

In Davies v. Harrison, 6 A.T.C. 536; 11 Tax Cases 707, in which a professional footballer was given a benefit on transfer from one club to another, it was held that the benefit was liable to tax, the case being distinguished from Reed v. Seymour, 11 Tax Cases 625, on the ground that having regard to the rules of the clubs and the league controlling the clubs the benefit was really a business arrangement, being a pre-arranged reward for service and not a voluntary gift or compensation for loss of employment.

Reed v. Seymour was distinguished also in Corbett v. Duff, 1942 I.T.R. (Sup.) 55 in which benefit payments from matches (in accordance with the Football League Regulations) were made to a professional. The test laid down in Cooper v. Blakiston and Reed v. Seymour is whether the payment is in respect of office or a mere personal testimonial. The regulations of the Football League contemplated such payments, which though not contractual, were expected. The benefit was given for a certain length of service and for loyal and meritorious services and was therefore of the nature of accrued pay. The case was almost on all fours with Davies v. Harrison. It was therefore held that the payments arose out of the office or employment.

In Wing v. O'Connell, 1927 I.R. 84, it was held by the Irish Supreme Court (Murnaghan, J., dissenting) reversing the decision of the High Court that the presents received by a jockey from the owners for whom he rode were taxable even though the presents were given voluntarily and after the employment had ceased.

See notes under section 2 (1).

(ix) Any income received by trustees on behalf of a recognised provident fund as defined in clause (a) of section 58-A.

History.—This clause was introduced by Act XII of 1929.

See section 58-A. The funds referred to are not governed by the Provident Funds Act, 1925. Funds governed by that Act are exempt from tax on their investments by virtue of clause (iv) of this sub-section.

(x) Any income received—

(a) by a person accredited as representative in British India for political purposes of an Indian State or the Ruler thereof, as his remuneration from the State or Ruler for service in such capacity;

(b) by a Consul-General, Consul, Vice-Consul or Consular Agent of a Foreign State, as remuneration from such State for service in such capacity;

(c) by a person employed by the consulate of a foreign State, not being a British subject or the subject of an Indian State, as remuneration from such foreign State for service in such capacity;

(d) by a Trade Commissioner or other official representative in British India of the Government of any other part of the British Empire or of a Foreign Government, as his official salary, if the official salary of the corresponding officials, if any, of the Central Government resident for similar purposes in the country concerned enjoy a similar exemption in that country;

(e) by a member of the staff of a Trade Commissioner or official representative referred to in sub-clause (d), as his official salary, when such member is a subject of the country represented, and the country represented has made corresponding provisions for similar exemptions in the case of members of the staff of the corresponding officials of the Central Government.

(xi) With effect from the 2nd day of September, 1939, the income chargeable under the head 'salaries' of a Nepalese member of the Nepalese Military force serving with His Majesty's Forces, or of any member of an Indian State Force so serving, and any other income accruing or arising without British India which is received in or brought into British India by any such member while the Force to which he belongs is serving with His Majesty's Forces.

History.—Sub-clauses (x) and (xi) were added in 1941. Before 1939 such exemptions were given by notification under section 60; but since that date that section cannot be used for such purposes, and it is necessary to amend the statute itself.

(xii) Any income chargeable under the head "income from property" in respect of a building the erection of which is begun and completed between the 1st day of April 1946 and the 31st day of March, 1948 (both dates inclusive), for a period of two years from the date of such completion.

History.—This clause was added by Act VIII of 1946. It is a part of the post-war reconstruction policy of the Government in order to stimulate building.

Notes.—It will be observed that both the beginning and the completion of the erection must fall within the two stated dates. 'Erection' will probably include earthwork preliminary to building, such as levelling, digging for foundations and so forth, but it is not so clear what it will include at the stage of completion. Perhaps it should be confined to those processes that make the house inhabitable, and probably the Municipal or other report of fitness for occupation will be a piece of evidence. It is hoped that the clause will not be attempted to be construed too meticulously.

The freedom from tax is only for two years from the date of completion. This period may run into three accounting or financial years, for the cause does not refer to the two next taxable periods but to two years; i.e., continuous periods of twelve months each.

Exemptions generally—United Kingdom Law.—Under the English Acts, there is no provision corresponding to section 60 of the Indian Act giving power to the executive to grant exemptions; and the exemptions are in the Acts themselves. There are certain exemptions under the English law which have no counterparts here. These are the exemption of Friendly Societies, Savings Banks, Trade Unions, Industrial and Provident Societies (corresponding to Co-operative Societies here—but the English Societies enjoyed greater concessions than those given to Co-operative Societies in India under section 60), National Insurance Funds, Unemployment Schemes, and Superannuation Funds (about this however, see notes under section 10 and Chapter IX-B). The exemptions in favour of Friendly Societies and Co-operative Societies have however been mostly withdrawn since 1933. All exemptions in the United Kingdom have to be claimed from the Special Commissioners who are an official body—see notes under section 5.

Residence in British India.

4-A. For the purposes of this Act—

(a) any individual is resident in British India in any year if he—

(i) is in British India in that year for a period amounting in all to one hundred and eighty-two days or more; or

(ii) maintains or has maintained for him a dwelling place in British India for a period or periods amounting in all to one hundred and eighty-two days or more in that year, and is in British India for any time in that year; or

(iii) having within the four years preceding that year been in British India for a period of or for periods amounting in all to three hundred and sixty-five days or more, is in British India for any time in that year otherwise than on an occasional or casual visit; or

(iv) is in British India for any time in that year and the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that such individual having arrived in British India during that year is likely to remain in British India for not less than three years from the date of his arrival;

(b) a Hindu undivided family, firm or other association of persons is resident in British India unless the control and management of its affairs is situated wholly without British India; and

(c) a company is resident in British India in any year (a) if the control and management of its affairs is situated wholly in British India in that year, or (b) if its income arising in British India in that year exceeds its income arising without British India in that year.

History.—This section was first inserted in 1939 as a consequence of the radical changes made in section 4. Sub-clause (iv) of clause (a) was added in 1941 in order to cover a lacuna.

Individuals.—The words “any year” in clause (a) clearly refer to the “previous year”, since the section has to be read with reference to section 4. From the definition in section 2 (11), the “previous year” may be more or less than 365 days according to circumstances.

The word “is” in sub-clause (i) refers to physical presence. Fractions of days will evidently be reckoned as days, for there is nothing in this definition to require the presence of the individual for any minimum number of hours in a day. It should be noted that the different sub-clauses are alternatives and the fulfilment of any one of the conditions will make the individual “resident”.

Under sub-clause (ii), two conditions have to be satisfied, viz., (a) the maintenance of a dwelling place for not less than 182 days in the year and (b) physical presence in British India, no matter for how short a period (even a few hours would seem to suffice). There is nothing to require that the physical presence in British India should synchronise with the maintenance of the dwelling place or that this assessee should actually live in that dwelling place or anywhere near it.

A “dwelling place” need not be a house and can include accommodation reserved in a hotel or a boarding house. But it should be maintained by him, i.e., at his cost and under his control or maintained for him, i.e., intended for his occupation whether at his cost or not.

Under sub-clause (iii), three conditions have to be satisfied, viz., (a) within the four years (‘previous years’ or periods of 365 days?, presumably the former) preceding the previous year under assessment, the individual should have been physically present in British India for 365 days or more in all; (b) he should be physically present in British India during the previous year under assessment for any time; and (c) such presence should be otherwise than on an occasional or casual visit. Having regard to (c) the “any time” referred to under (b) cannot be a few days. What is “occasional or casual” must be a question of fact, and these words bring out the idea that the visit must not be part of the assessee’s plan of living. Periodical visits would not be occasional or casual, and even isolated visits, if in connection with an established business or profession, could hardly be considered casual. All such questions, however, must, as already observed, be questions of fact.

Sub-clause (iv) was added in 1941 in order to deal with new arrivals in British India.

Physical presence.—It will be seen that each of the alternatives requires the presence of the individual in British India for at least some time, however short, during the year in question. Cf. Cooper v. Cadawaldar, 5 Tax Cases 101.

As a consequence, and because a person cannot be ordinarily resident and non-resident simultaneously, and also because a remittance into British India by a non-resident is not taxable under section 4, an individual, even though ordinarily resident, can by remaining away from British India for the whole of a 'previous year' and remitting foreign profits into British India during that year escape tax in so far as it has not been already taxed in earlier years on the basis of his residence (and ordinary residence). In the United Kingdom, a British subject whose ordinary residence has been in that country, remains assessable though absent abroad, if such absence is for occasional residence abroad only. This rule was applied in Rogers v. Inland Revenue, 1 Tax Cases 225, in which a master mariner was absent the whole year on a voyage.

Residence in Burma before 1st April, 1937.—Having regard to the definition of British India in the General Clauses Act, 1897, as amended by the Adaptation of Indian Laws Order, 1937, residence in Burma before its separation from India amounts to residence in British India during that period, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Papammal, 1942 I.T.R. 349.

Residence of firm.—In T. S. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 50 Mad. 847; 2 I.T.C. 320, it was held (before 1939) that the residence of a firm does not depend on the physical residence of the partners but on the place of control, and also, following, Swedish Central Railway v. Thompson, 9 Tax Cases 342 (H.L.), that a firm can have more than one residence. A similar decision was given in In re Sarupchand Hukamchand, 1945 I.T.R. 245 (Bom.). Both these decisions relate to the pre-1939 law when there was no statutory definition of 'residence'. In the latter case the assessee's claim was that the principal place of his 'world' business was outside British India, and not the same place as the principal place of the assessee's business in British India.

In Mahomed Jamaluddin v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1942 I.T.R. 484, a firm of Colombo opened a branch in British India where one of the partners resided and managed that part of the business. It was held that the firm resided in British India as its management was not situated wholly outside British India.

Hindu undivided families.—In a case before 1939, the Madras High Court held that a Hindu undivided family even if a trading family, resided in all the places where its members resided, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. V. S. K. S. Somasundaram Chettiar, 6 I.T.C. 96; 55 Mad. 885. The Rangoon High Court observed in Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. S. P. K. A.R. M. family that the dictum in the Madras case was too wide, though the decision in the particular case was rightly made if regard be had to the amendment in 1939 which merely clarified the law. The karta in that case visited British India periodically for the purpose of supervising the business. What the law means is that the residence of a family should not be inferred from the fortuitous residence of individual members but from whether they reside for the business.

De facto control.—The definition of 'residence' in this section relates to actual events; and it is residence in fact that attracts tax. There is nothing in the section to impose tax because of mere power to control and manage, even though in fact the power is not exercised at all. If mere power was the test, every firm in which any partner was in British India would be resident. The power may be a relevant consideration but is not conclusive, Naik v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 124. The test is not where the individuals who can control and manage in fact reside but where "control and management" is 'situated'. This applies to all cases and not only to firms. A partnership of six individuals owned a rubber estate in Malaya. All the partners had money-lending business of their own in Malaya. According to the partnership deed two partners in rotation had the control of the estate from year to year, and it was open to the controlling partners to act through their money-lending agents. During a particular year, of the two controlling partners, one resided in British India. The firm claimed that copies of correspondence between the controlling partners and the persons in charge of the plantation had not been preserved, but it was seen from a letter written before the year under issue that the agents in Malaya had asked for instructions for the disposal of profits, whether they were to be spent in replanting, etc., and there was nothing to show that the nature and extent of control during the year under issue was different. Held, that part of the control was in British India and that therefore the firm was resident in British India, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Shanmugham Rubber Estate, 1945 I.T.R. 329.

The omission of the words "in any year" should be noted; unlike sub-clauses (a) and (c) under which residence depends on events during the previous year, sub-clause (b) regulates residence with reference to locus of control and management which is not likely to change from year to year.

It will be noted that unless the control and management lie wholly outside British India, the family, etc., will be resident; so even if a part of the control and management is in British India the firm will be resident. It will be a question of fact where and to what extent control and management are situated.

Where a family and its karta reside outside British India and the business of the family is carried on in British India through agents, the mere visit of the karta to British India for a few days will not in itself make the family resident. What is required to make the family resident is evidence that during the visit the karta exercised control or management, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Gangabishun Mohanlal, 1945 I.T.R. 20.

It should also be noted that, both in sub-clause (b) and in sub-clause (c), the reference is to "control and management" and not to central control and management.

Note also that in both (b) and (c) the words "control and management" are followed by the singular 'is' and not by the plural 'are'; the two words together therefore, constitute a single activity. Consequently the control must be effective, i.e., of the nature exercised by an owner, and not restricted like that of a mere paid manager. Therefore if the partners of a firm do not reside in British India, the firm could not be resident. So also, if there is only a 'sleeping' partner in British India who exercises no 'control and management'.

Companies.—There are two alternative conditions to be fulfilled by a resident company, (a) either the control and management lie wholly in British India, or (b) its income arising in British India in the previous year exceeds its income arising abroad. It will be noted that whereas a Hindu family or firm or other association will be considered to be resident unless the control lies wholly abroad, a company will be deemed to be non-resident unless its control lies wholly in British India. So, in cases of divided control and management a firm or other association or a Hindu family would be resident while a company would be non-resident (apart from the effect of the alternative condition about proportion of British Indian to foreign profits).

The words used in condition (b) of sub-clause (c) are "arising in British India" and not "arising to the company in British India." Are the British Indian profits then to be calculated with reference to receivability in British India or with reference to sources in British India? In the latter alternative, difficult problems of mixed fact and law will arise with reference to the place of arising of profits of business like shipping, banking, insurance and even imports and exports. Such questions however arose even under the law as it stood before 1939, not with reference to the determination of residence but with reference to that of liability of profits to tax. Where the British Indian profits cannot be easily separated, Rule 33, and in respect of insurance businesses Rule 8 of Schedule, will evidently have to be applied.

According to the Income-tax Manual, it is only the income arising in British India, and not the income which may be deemed to arise in British India, that has to be taken into account in determining whether or not a company is resident in British India. The whole of the income arising in British India (including agricultural income and any other income which may be exempt from tax) has to be taken into account in determining whether more than half the income arises in British India. This view is evidently based on the use of the word 'income' and not 'total income' in this section, as in sections 3 and 4.

It is submitted that 'arising in British India' in this context refers, not to receivability but origin or derivation from a source in British India.

In order to determine the residence of a company with reference to the relative magnitude of the profits abroad and in British India, sums paid to a company for a particular purpose, viz., for payment of interest on debentures and earmarked for that purpose are not part of the profits of the company abroad; they do not belong to the company at all, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. B. B. & C. I. Ry., 1943 I.T.R. 578.

Whether section 4-A (c) (b), ultra vires.—The validity of this provision has been questioned unsuccessfully on the ground that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the Indian Legislature. It was held by the Federal Court that the legislature which has the power to impose tax has also the power to determine who should pay and for that purpose to lay down rules as to who is to be regarded as resident and what income is to be regarded as accruing, etc., in British India. There is also nothing in the Government of India Act, 1935, precluding the legislature from passing extra-territorial legislation. Wallace Brothers, Ltd v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 39. See also notes under Explanation 3 to section 4 (1) (c) in respect of which also the jurisdiction of the Indian legislature has been unsuccessfully challenged.

English rulings.—The following rulings in the United Kingdom where there is no definition of residence will be of interest.

'Residence' signifies a man's abode or continuance in a place. "When there is nothing to show that it is used in a more extensive sense (it) denotes the place where an individual eats, drinks and sleeps or where his family and servants eat, drink and sleep," per Bayley, J., in R. v. North Curry, 4 B. & C. 959, but it is an ambiguous word per

Cotton, L.J.—In re Bowie: ex parte, Barwell, 16 Ch. D. 484. Per Pollock, C.B.—"The word 'reside' does not necessarily mean 'dwell'".

Per Martin, B.—"Strong ground for contending that one who spends the day at his shop attending to his business, and may there be seen and conversed with on matters of business, and does not choose to be communicated with elsewhere, is 'residing' there" Attorney-General v. McLean, 1 H. & C. 750.

The words 'residence' and 'place of abode' are flexible and must be construed according to the object and intent of the particular legislation where they may be found R v. Tyrone Justices, (1901) 2 I.R. 510 (from Stroud).

In connection with house-keeper's allowance, which, under the United Kingdom law, can be claimed by widowers in certain circumstances, it has been held that 'residing with' means 'sleeping at the place of'. Brown v. Adamson, (1937) 2 A.E.R. (K.B.D.) 792; 16 A.T.C. 90.

Domicile has nothing to do with residence, Attorney-General v. Coote, (1817) 4 Price 183. A man can have two or more residences in two or more different countries but can have only one domicile. Lloyd v. Sulley, 2 Tax Cases 37. See also Walcot v. Botfields, (1854) Kay 534 (a case of construction of a will). The domicile of an infant may be in a country to which he has never been physically. 'Residence' connotes the idea of the person's bodily presence at some time or other. In In re Young, 1 Tax Cases 57 a master mariner who was abroad for the greater part of the year was considered to be 'resident' because his wife and family resided in the United Kingdom in a house of which he was the tenant. A similar decision was given in Rogers v. Inland Revenue, 1 Tax Cases 225 and Lloyd v. Sulley, 2 Tax Cases 37 (in the latter case the assessee resided mostly at Leghorn where he carried on business). In Turnbull v. Foster, 6 Tax Cases 206 it was laid down that "the test of liability is not having a residence in the United Kingdom, it is residing in the United Kingdom"—Per Lord Trayner.

If the person does not reside even for a day in the United Kingdom during the year of assessment, he is not a 'resident' for this purpose. In Cooper v. Cadwaladar, 5 Tax Cases 101, an American ordinarily resident in New York, and with no place of business in the United Kingdom who had rented a house and shooting rights in Scotland for a term of years and spent two months there every year was held to 'reside' in the United Kingdom.

Per the Lord President.—"A person may have more than one residence if he maintains an establishment at each of them."

In Brown v. Burt, 5 Tax Cases 667 the assessee—an alien, who had lived for 20 years on board a yacht anchored near the shore in an English port—was held to 'reside' in the United Kingdom. In Thompson v. Bensted, 7 Tax Cases 137 it was held that a person employed by an English company in Nigeria, who was the rated owner of a residence in England where his wife and family resided and who spent four months a year there 'resided' in the United Kingdom.

Per L. J. Clark.—"I think, in the sense of the Income-tax Acts, a man may reside in more than one place at the same time."

"When you are considering a question like residence, you are considering just a bundle of facts."—Per Rowlatt, J., in Loewenstein v. De Salis, 10 Tax Cases 424.

" must be a question of degree and of fact
I suggest as a characteristic factor for consideration, even if it does not fulfil the nature of a test, to ascertain if the suggested alternative place of residence is one which the subject seeks willingly and repeatedly in order to obtain rest or refreshment or recreation suitable to his choice; where for a time he is embedded in the enjoyment of what he desired to attain, and found in the abode of his own option. Another factor may be found and an important one—if he returns to and seeks his own fatherland in order to enjoy a sojourn in proximity to his relations and friends". Per M. R. Hanworth in Levene v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 6 A.T.C. 323; 12 Tax Cases 486; (1927) 2 K.B. 37; (1928) A.C. 217.

See also Karupiah Kangani v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 3 I.T.C. 282. "We entertain no doubt that he could properly be described as residing here; he owned a house in the Ramnad District where his second wife and her children by him lived and he stayed in the house whenever he came to British India."

An establishment is not necessary in order to have a residence in a country. Even a tramp must be resident in a country. If a man chooses to live in hotels or even to stay with friends or relations it makes no difference, Lysaght v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 6 A.T.C. 64; 13 Tax Cases 511; (1928) A.C. 234.

Decisions on the question of residence under Statutes other than Taxation Acts, e.g., Military Service Acts, would evidently not be applicable to Income-tax.

Residence of companies.—Per Lord Loreburn in De Beers v. Howe, (1906) A.C. 455; 5 Tax Cases 198.

"A company cannot eat or sleep but it can keep house and do business. We ought therefore to see where it really keeps house and does business. The decisions of Chief Baron Kelly and Baron Huddleston in the Calcutta Jute Mills v. Nicholson, 1 Tax Cases 83 and the Cesena Sulphur Company v. Nicholson, (1876) I.R. 1 Ex. D. 428; 1 Tax Cases 88, involved the principle that a company resides for purposes of income-tax where its real business is carried on. These decisions have been acted on ever since. I regard that as the true rule, and the real business is carried on where the central management or control actually abides".

A company, registered both in the United States of America and Ireland, purchased raw linen goods in Scotland and Ireland, arranged for manufacture by other firms and folded the finished goods themselves and sold them chiefly in the United States of America. The registered office of the company was in Belfast where general meetings were held, the minute book was kept, the accounts were audited and dividends were declared. But the sole director who had exclusive control resided in the United States of America. Held, that the company was resident in Ireland, John Hood and Co. v. Magee, 7 Tax Cases 327.

In New Zealand Shipping Company v. Thew, 8 Tax Cases 208 the company was incorporated in New Zealand with its registered office there; with two boards of directors, one in London and the other in New Zealand. The London Board had exclusive control over finance and administration and bigger questions of policy. The other board conducted the business in Australasia and negotiated independently of the London Board most of the freight contracts. General meetings were held and the share registers kept in both countries but the accounts were kept and the dividends declared in London. Held, that the Commissioners had sufficient evidence before them to arrive at the finding that the company was resident in London, and that where a company or a person resides is a question of fact.

An English company which was registered in the United Kingdom and carried on business there, promoted a company to own certain cotton mills in the U.S.A., the latter company being incorporated and registered in the U.S.A. No part of the output of the mills was sold in the United Kingdom. The entire stock of the American company was owned by the English company either directly or through trustees. Under the bye-laws of the American company, there had to be seven directors of whom three had to reside in America. The current business of the company was to be directed by an executive committee of three directors resident in America and the regular meetings of the Board were to be held in America, extraordinary meetings being held in the company's office in England. The more important powers could be exercised only by the extraordinary meetings of directors in England: for example, the appointment of higher officials, the filling of casual vacancies among directors, entering into contracts for over one year, the appointment of directors, the borrowing of money, etc. In practice, dividends also were declared in the extraordinary meetings in the United Kingdom. Held, that there was sufficient evidence before the Commissioners to justify their finding that the American Company was resident in the United Kingdom, American Thread Company v. Joyce, 6 Tax Cases 1 and 163; 28 T.L.R. 233; 29 T.L.R. 266.

The "head and brain" of a business cannot be a paid employee, or in the case of a company any one else than the Directors, however valuable might be the services of such employee or manager. See per Rowlatt, J., in Noble v. Mitchell, 11 Tax Cases 372; (1927) 1 K.B. 719.

See also incidentally San Paulo Railway v. Carser, 3 Tax Cases 407; (1896) A.C. 31; Apthorpe v. Peter Schoenhofen, etc., 4 Tax Cases 41; Grove v. Elliotts and Parkinson, 3 Tax Cases 481 and St Louis Breweries v. Apthorpe, 4 Tax Cases 111, referred to in the notes under section 4.

Can a Company have more than one residence?—As to whether a company could have more than one residence there had been obiter dicta in the affirmative—see per Channell, J., in Gocz & Co. v. Bell, (1904) 2 K.B. 136; per Phillimore, J., in De Beers v. Howe, (1906) A.C. 455 (the House of Lords did not disapprove of this obiter dictum); per Buckley, L.J., in American Thread Company v. Joyce, 6 Tax Cases 1. The decision in Mitchell v. Egyptian Hotels, Ltd., (1915) A.C. 1022; 6 Tax Cases 542 though it did not expressly decide this point, is, as pointed out by Lord Cave in Swedish Railway Co. v. Thompson, (infra), inconsistent with the view that company cannot have more than one residence. A definite pronouncement was made on this question for the first time in Swedish Central Railway Company v. Thompson, 9 Tax Cases 342, infra.

A company owned a railway in Sweden, which was let to a company in Sweden. The income of the former company whose registered offices were in London consisted only of the rent received for the railway. The Secretary resided in London but the directors resided in Sweden. The control was exercised in Sweden and only the formal administrative business was conducted in London by a Committee residing there. Held, (Lord Atkinson dissenting) by the House of Lords that a company which is controlled from abroad but which is registered in the United Kingdom can for the purpose of Income-tax reside both in the United Kingdom and abroad, Swedish Central Railway Co. v. Thompson, 9 Tax Cases 342; (1925) A.C. 495.

Per Lord Chancellor Cave.—An individual may clearly have more than one residence, Cooper v. Cadwalader, (1904) 5 Tax Cases 101, and on principle there appears to be no reason why a company should not be in the same position. The central management and control of a company may be divided and it may keep house and do business in more than one place, and if so, it may have more than one residence.

(But) I am not prepared to say that registration in the United Kingdom would itself be sufficient proof of residence here: that point does not arise in this case and I express no opinion on it. But however that may be, I am satisfied that the fact of registration together with the other circumstances which were found by the Commissioners to exist were sufficient to enable them to arrive at a finding.

Per Lord Buckmaster.—The reference to the registered office is important; it is to my mind one of the critical facts in determination of residence in this country, but not necessarily the sole and exclusive fact. It varies in consequence in every instance. Nor, even if it were the sole fact, would it follow that a company incorporated and with a registered office elsewhere could not also be resident here for purposes of income-tax.

In Todd v. Egyptian Delta Land and Improvement Co., 14 Tax Cases 119; (1929) A.C. 1, the Lower Courts decided that a registered office in itself involved "residence", but the House of Lords did not accept this view. The reasoning was as below. The Companies Acts say nothing about 'residence'. Down to 1853 most tax-payers were natural persons. Throughout the United Kingdom Income-tax Acts, therefore, the word 'resident' with its various qualifications 'actually', 'ordinarily', 'occasionally', 'temporarily', and so forth is used in a sense in every way appropriate to natural persons but only artificially applicable to incorporated persons and never really appropriate. Indeed, the words "a person ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom" are so inappropriate a term for a person, though an artificial one, who is always and by law immovably resident in the United Kingdom, that it cannot be sustained. When the question of 'residence' of companies, under Income-tax Acts, first came before Courts, they might well have left it to the Legislature to enact what 'residence' of artificial persons meant but the Courts applied the word by analogy from natural persons. In the case of the latter residence depends on personal facts. Place of birth, nationality and allegiance are not the tests, nor is domicile. What does matter is voluntary choice and habitual and repeated action—such as making a home, keeping an establishment, pursuing a settled object in a particular place. Therefore there can be no real analogy between natural persons and artificial persons except that both must carry on business somewhere, and it is really this that settles the residence of companies.

Under the Companies Act, no business need be done at its registered office and no profits or losses made there. The obligation to have a registered office, to keep registers for inspection, etc., is intended to help creditors, and not to attract tax. The latter is to be done by a Taxing Act and not by the Companies Act.

In the Swedish Railway case it was unnecessary for the House of Lords to decide more than that a company could reside in two places. The question is one of degree on facts, and that was really a case of divided control at the two places. You cannot have one test of residence for foreign companies, viz., place of control of business and another for local companies, viz., place of incorporation. You must be consistent.

4-B. For the purposes of this Act—(a) an individual is “not ordinarily resident” in British India in any year if he has not been resident in British India in nine out of the ten years preceding that year or if he has not during the seven years preceding that year been in British India for a period of, or for periods amounting in all to, more than two years; (b) a Hindu undivided family is deemed to be ordinarily resident in British India if its manager is ordinarily resident in British India; (c) a company, firm or other association of persons is ordinarily resident in British India if it is resident in British India.

Clause (a).—“In any year” i.e., the ‘previous year’ as defined in section 2 (11). It is with reference to that year that the various tests of ‘residence’ and ‘ordinary residence’ as laid down in sections 4-A and 4-B have to be applied. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v P. E. K. R. Saumiamurti, 1946 I.T.R. 185. It will be noted that even ordinary residence may vary from year to year, and that it does not depend, as in the United Kingdom, on the general impression formed by the Commissioners as to the general course and order of the assessee’s life over a period of time, but on a rigid formula as a consequence of which the assessee’s status may change from year to year. The meaning of this section gave considerable difficulty to the Legislature as will be seen from the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly. The reasons for the definition are given in the following speech of the Hon’ble the Finance Member in the Legislative Assembly.

“The Honourable Sir James Grigg: Sir, I will do my best to solve these conundrums. In the first place, we were trying to cover rather compendiously two entirely different classes of cases, firstly the European official or the trader for that matter in the early years of his stay in India, before it has become established that his career is in India. The other is the case of the Indian trader abroad who has an ancestral home in India to visit very irregularly, but possibly enough to become technically resident in every year. The conditions to be satisfied are cumulative, that is a man has to be resident in nine out of ten years preceding the year of assessment. Now, that means that there are three ways in which a man can become resident. He can become resident by being in the country for six months; he can become resident if he has got a house in the country and comes here for one day; he can become resident in a year if he is here for one day; and if he has been here before that year for one year out of four, i.e., a regular visit of about three months a year. Any one of these definitions of ‘resident’ or one or other of these definitions of

'resident' has got to be satisfied in nine out of ten years. Then, you come to the second wing, to the case where a man becomes resident technically in every one of the ten years although his visits are very short and he becomes resident in the main, in fact entirely, because, he keeps an ancestral house in British India; and, therefore, unless he is in India for a substantial period over seven years he is to be regarded as not ordinarily resident. That was the objective which the Leader of the Muslim League party had, that is, to cut out the Indian trader whose connection with India had become rather attenuated and only existed at all because he had an ancestral house and come back to it at odd intervals for short periods. So that a man is not ordinarily resident unless he satisfies both of those conditions and both of those conditions amount to saying that he must have been resident in nine out of ten years and he must have been here for substantial periods in the preceding seven years. And those are the criteria we have invented to cover two different types of cases. There are two cases in which a man may become resident by being in India for a single day for a tax year. The first is that he has got a furnished house and he occupies it and the second is, if he has been a regular visitor for substantial periods for four years preceding that year, and the criterion for that is that he has been here for one year in the preceding four. And in both those cases a man can technically become resident by being in the country for one single day. And you cannot exclude the rather absurd extreme case where a man has been here for (say) one day in nine years out of the preceding ten and becomes ordinarily resident by that criterion alone. And that was the objective which not only Mr. Jinnah but the Leader of the Congress Party had in mind, to cut out the person whose connection with India had become so attenuated as to be non-existent.

Mr. S. Satyamurti: Are these accumulative or alternative conditions?
The Honourable Sir James Grigg: They are accumulative."

Individuals.---From the fact that the words "not ordinarily resident" are enclosed in quotation marks, it can be argued that they show signs of being intended to connote a positive concept and not merely the negative of ordinary residence, especially since the second proviso to section 4 (1) to which the definition in this section is related does not use the positive form and determine in terms the liability of a person ordinarily resident but merely seeks to limit liability, subject to certain conditions, of a person not ordinarily resident. On the other hand, clauses (b) and (c) of section 4-B use the positive form "ordinarily resident". It is obvious that the fulfilment of either of the negative conditions in clause (a) will make the person "not ordinarily resident". It should be noted that while under the first alternative, the criterion is residence during preceding years as defined in section 4-A, the criterion under the second alternative, which uses "has been" is that of physical presence in British India for a period of more than two years in all during the seven preceding years.

The proposition A is not B if he is either not-X or not-Y is best diagrammatically represented as follows. It is clearly not the same as that A is B if he is neither not-X nor not-Y.

To put it differently, nothing can be inferred definitely as to when A must be B; all that can be stated is that either not—X or not—Y (not necessarily both) carries the inevitable consequence of being not—B (with its attendant leniency) and that A, in order to be B, must be both X and Y. That is, the area of B cannot be wider than this common area of X and Y; but it can be smaller, i.e., some more conditions may have to be fulfilled to declare A to be B. It can therefore be argued that while 'not ordinarily resident' is to be interpreted in accordance with the definition, "ordinarily resident" should be interpreted at the discretion of the Income-tax authorities as a question of fact and in accordance with the trend of rulings in the United Kingdom. Clause (b) referring to Hindu families, however, makes it necessary to determine positively whether its manager is ordinarily resident, and on the whole it would appear that the more probable intention of this section is that B should be coterminous with the common part of X and Y, i.e., A is B if it is both X and Y, though the words of the section do not necessarily convey that meaning. This is also borne out by Sir James Grigg's statement in the Legislative Assembly that the two conditions in clause (a) are cumulative.

The official view is contained in the following instruction in the form of Return of Income (Rule 19). "An individual is ordinarily resident in British India if he has been resident as defined above in nine out of ten years preceding the year and has been in British India for previous amounting in all to more than two years during the seven years preceding that year."

Another way of looking at the matter is that if the assessee fails to discharge the onus of proving that he is not ordinarily resident, i.e., he will be assumed to be ordinarily resident and ex hypothesi he cannot question such an assumption which is merely founded on the equivalence or "ordinarily resident" with "not-not-ordinarily-resident", which may be assumed for the purpose in the absence of anything to the contrary.

Data for determination.—It will be seen that in some cases the residence in the ten years preceding the previous year will have to be examined. Under section 4-A (a) (iii), it may be necessary to refer also to another four years earlier, thus making it necessary in all to cover a period of 15 years including the previous year. The questions to be considered however, will all be questions of fact.

There is nothing in the section however to prevent the periods of residence and stay in British India of the successive managers of a family (Hindu joint) during its continued existence being added together for the purpose of the section, Marimuthu Pillai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1945 I.T.R. 186. 'Seven years' refers to seven periods of twelve calendar months each preceding the appropriate 'previous year' and not to the period of seven years ending on 31st December, before the previous year, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. V. E. K. R. Saumiamurthy, 1946 I.T.R. 185. This, however, may result in some cases, where different previous years are adopted for different sources of income, in the assessee's being considered resident in respect of some sources but not in respect of others.

Hindu undivided family.—It will be observed that the status of the family will vary from time to time entirely with reference to the status of its manager and irrespective of any other condition. The status of the Manager will be determined with reference to (a) of this section.

It is not clear why the words "deemed to be" have been used in condition (b) alone but not in (a) or (c).

Companies, etc.—This part of the definition presents no fresh difficulty, i.e., apart from the determination of the company's residence under section 4-A.

In a way, this definition merely codifies Lord Sumner's dictum in Todd v. Egyptian Delta, etc., Co., 14 Tax Cases 119, that the words "ordinarily resident" are singularly inappropriate in the case of a company.

United Kingdom Law.—There is no definition in this law, either of residence or of ordinary residence. The word "ordinarily" in this connection has however been interpreted by the House of Lords to mean as part of the regular order of a man's life or habitually and normally and in the customary course of events, rather than continuously or mainly; "the converse to 'ordinarily', is 'extraordinarily'; and that part of the regular order of a man's life adopted voluntarily, and for settled purposes, is not 'extraordinary';" see per Lord Sumner in Lysaght v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 13 Tax Cases 511. A 'voluntary' beginning is however, not essential for 'ordinary' residence. An inmate of a mental hospital was therefore held to be ordinarily resident. Mackenzie v. Attorney-General, 1941. What about a foreigner who comes temporarily, commits a crime and is imprisoned for a long period, or a prisoner of war in a lengthy war?

INCOME-TAX AUTHORITIES.

5. (1) There shall be the following classes of Income-tax authorities for the purposes of this Act, namely:—

- (a) the Central Board of Revenue,
- (b) Commissioners of Income-tax,
- (c) Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax who may be either Appellate Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax or Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax,
- (d) Income-tax Officers,

(2) The Central Government may appoint a Commissioner of Income-tax for any area specified in the order of appointment, and may appoint Commissioners of Income-tax, not more than three in all, each to discharge, without reference to area, and to the exclusion of any Commissioner appointed for any area, the functions of a Commissioner in respect of any cases or classes of cases assigned to him by the Central Board of Revenue.

(3) The Central Government may appoint as many Appellate or Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers as it thinks fit.

(4) Appellate Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax shall be under the direct control of the Central Board of Revenue and shall perform their functions in respect of such persons or classes of persons or of such incomes or classes of income or in respect of such areas as the Central Board of Revenue may direct, and, where such directions have assigned to two or more Appellate Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax the same persons or classes of persons or the same income and classes of income or the same area, in accordance with any orders which the Central Board of Revenue may make for the distribution and allocation of the work to be performed.

(5) Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers shall perform their functions in respect of such persons or classes of persons or of such incomes or classes of income or in respect of such areas as the Commissioner of Income-tax may direct, and, where such directions have assigned to two or more Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax or Income-tax officers the same persons or classes of persons or the same incomes and classes of incomes or the same area, in accordance with any orders which the Commissioner of Income-tax may make for the distribution and allocation of the work to be performed. The Commissioner may, with the previous approval of the Central Board of Revenue, by general or special order in writing, direct that the powers conferred on the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner by or under this Act, shall, in respect of any specified case or class of cases, be exercised by the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner and the Commissioner, respectively, and, for the purposes of any case in respect of which such order applies, references in this Act or in any rules made hereunder to the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner shall be deemed to be references to the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner and the Commissioner, respectively.

(6) The Central Board of Revenue may, by notification in the official Gazette, empower Commissioners of Income-tax, Appellate or Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers to perform such functions in respect of such classes of persons or such classes of income or for such area as may be specified in the notification, and thereupon the functions so specified shall cease to be performed in respect of the specified classes of persons or classes of income or area by the authorities appointed under sub-sections (2) and (3).

(7) Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers shall, for the purposes of this Act, be subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax for the area in which they perform their functions or where they perform functions assigned to them by a Commissioner of Income-tax appointed without reference to area, to that Commissioner.

(7-A) The Commissioner of Income-tax may transfer any case from one Income-tax Officer subordinate to him to another, and the Central Board of Revenue may transfer any case from any one Income-tax Officer to another. Such transfer may be made at any stage of the proceedings, and shall not render necessary the re-issue of any notice already issued by the Income-tax Officer from whom the case is transferred.

(8) All officers and persons employed in the execution of this Act shall observe and follow the orders, instructions and directions of the Central Board of Revenue:

Provided that no such orders, instructions or directions shall be given so as to interfere with the discretion of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner in the exercise of his appellate functions.

History.—Sub-sections (3) and (6) were amended in 1933 in order to enable Government to appoint Commissioners for such areas as may be found administratively convenient instead of by provinces, and sub-section (5) so as to enable Commissioners to distribute work according to administrative exigencies. The Calcutta ruling in Basantlal Nathani's Case, 5 I.T.C. 114, is obsolete. The whole section was recast in 1939, so as (1) to separate Appellate Assistant Commissioners from Inspecting Assistant Commissioners, (2) to have not more than three Central Commissioners to deal with special classes of cases (superseding the territorial Commissioners), (3) to place Appellate Assistant Commissioners under the direct control of the Central Board of Revenue and (4) to give the Central Board of Revenue formal powers of administrative control without interfering with the Appellate Assistant Commissioner's discretion. The section was again revised along with section 64 in 1940, with retrospective effect from 1st April, 1939, assessments by Income-tax Officers under the non-area Commissioners having been successfully challenged before the Courts on the following grounds: (a) section 64 had not been amended; (b) completed assessments (i.e., right of appeal or revision) could not be transferred. The power to transfer a case from one Income-tax Officer to another was also provided.

Income-tax Authorities.—(1) The Central Board of Revenue is appointed by the Central Government. Apart from its rule-making powers under section 59, its specific powers are mentioned in the various sections, e.g., sections 2 (6), 2 (11) (b), 5 (6), 18 (6), chapters IX-A and IX-B and section 64. The Board also issues executive instructions for the guidance of subordinate authorities regarding the interpretation of the provisions of the Act and the rules, and is entrusted with the general administration of the Act. Sub-section (8) of section 5 regularises the administrative control of the Central Board of Revenue which it has all along exercised. Certain rules in regard to "recognised provident funds" however are made by the Central Government.

(2) The head of the Income-tax Department of a province or other area or group of cases entrusted to him is the Commissioner of Income-tax who is appointed by the Central Government.

The specific powers conferred upon the Commissioner in regard to income-tax proceedings are specified in sections 5, 28, 32, 33, 33-A, 35, 37, 54 (5), 58-B, 58-D, 58-G, 58-J, 64 (3) and 66 of the Act. In particular he is vested with power under section 33-A in certain stated circumstances to revise orders passed by an income-tax authority subordinate to him, and he alone may, under section 66 of the Act, ask on behalf of the Crown for a case to be stated for the opinion of the High Court.

(3) The functions of Appellate Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax are set out in sections 28 (1), 30 (2), 31, 35 and 37. They are appointed by the Central Government without reference to jurisdiction, which is determined by the Central Board of Revenue. The jurisdiction may be by persons or classes of persons or incomes or classes of income or areas as may be found convenient.

(4) The functions of an Inspecting Assistant Commissioner are mainly extra-statutory. His statutory powers are set out in section 5 (5) (the last part), 23-A, 28, 38, 39 and 53. The powers under sections 38, 39 and the last proviso of section 50 can evidently be exercised by both classes of Assistant Commissioners.

Inspecting Assistant Commissioners are also appointed by the Central Government and without reference to jurisdiction, which is determined by the Commissioner of Income-tax. As in respect of Appellate Assistant Commissioners, jurisdiction may be by persons or classes of persons or incomes or classes of income or area as the Commissioner may find convenient. Where there is an overlap of jurisdiction as between more than one Assistant Commissioner, the Central Board of Revenue, in the case of Appellate Assistant Commissioners and the Commissioner in the case of Inspecting Assistant Commissioners, will give directions about the allocation of work.

The Assistant Commissioner when exercising the powers of the Income-tax Officer need not actually go to the area of the Income-tax Officer to exercise the functions, Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 4 I.T.C. 283; 9 Pat. 240; A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 81.

(5) Income-tax Officers are the actual assessors. Section 64 of the Act specifies the particular Income-tax Officers by whom assessments shall be made. Sub-section (4) of the same section provides that every income-tax Officer shall have all the powers conferred by or under the Act on an Income-tax Officer in respect of any income, profits or gains accruing or arising or received within the area for which he is appointed. This particular provision was inserted mainly in order to permit of enquiries being made into the profits of a branch business by the Income-tax Officer of the place in which the branch is situated and in order to enable every Income-tax Officer to make enquiries regarding all income, profits and gains arising or accruing within the area to which he is posted, even though the assessment in respect of the particular income, profits or gains may not be made by him. Income-tax Commissioners have therefore been directed to secure by issuing instructions or otherwise that there is no overlapping in this matter and that the same person is not assessed to income-tax by more than one Income-tax Officer but that all Income-tax Officers should at the same time give the utmost assistance to the assessing Income-tax Officer in regard to any property, income, profits or gains within their respective areas which are liable to assessment elsewhere.

(6) While the income-tax staff are normally appointed in provincial cadres, there are certain classes of cases for which it may be advisable that assessment should be made by an all-India staff or by specially trained staff. Examples of the following are the cases of military officers and of officers of other departments serving directly under the Government of India who are liable to transfer from one province to another; and there may be other cases such as the assessment of railway or insurance companies or banks which may be dealt with by special officers for the whole of India. Sub-sections (3) and (6) make provision for the appointment of special officers and Special Commissioners in such cases. Examples of the other kind are the special staff in big cities like Bombay or Calcutta who deal, under the supervision of a Special Commissioner and Assistant Commissioners, with intricate cases specially made over to them. For a list of special officers under sub-section (6), See notifications.

Sub-section (2).—'Any cases or class of cases'. These words permit individual cases—not necessarily classes of cases—being dealt with by one of the Special Central Commissioners.

Sub-section (4).—While it is stated in this sub-section that the Appellate Assistant Commissioners will be under the "direct control" of the Central Board of Revenue, it is stated in sub-section (7) that Assistant Commissioners, i.e., Appellate and Inspecting will be 'subordinate' to the Commissioner concerned. The subordination contemplated in sub-section (7) is one merely of jurisdiction as will be seen from section 33-A.

Transfer of cases.—Till 1940, there was no provision for the transfer of a case from one Income-tax Officer to another. Sub-section (7-A) now provides for such transfer. It will be noted that notices issued by the previous Income-tax Officer (of course if they are otherwise valid) are automatically kept alive in relation to the proceedings before the new Income-tax Officer; otherwise there would be avoidable delay, and assessments have to be completed within a particular time under section 34.

It will be noted that there is no provision for transferring an appeal from one Appellate Assistant Commissioner to another or a revision petition from one Commissioner to another.

Proviso under sub-section (8).—The “Appellate Assistant Commissioner” referred to in the proviso clearly includes the Commissioner functioning as Appellate Assistant Commissioner under sub-section (5).

Income-tax Officer promoted as Assistant Commissioner.—When an Income-tax Officer is promoted as Assistant Commissioner, he must not, in fairness, hear appeals against his own orders as Income-tax officer which should be dealt with by another Assistant Commissioner appointed under sub-section (4). This, it is believed, has been laid down in executive orders.

CHAPTER II-A.

APPELLATE TRIBUNAL.

5-A. (1) The Central Government shall appoint an Appellate Tribunal consisting of not more than ten persons to exercise the functions conferred on the Appellate Tribunal by this Act.

(2) The Appellate Tribunal shall consist of an equal number of judicial members and accountant members as hereinafter defined.

Provided that the Tribunal shall not be deemed to be invalidly constituted merely by reason of a temporary inequality caused by the death, retirement or removal of any member.

(3) A judicial member shall be a person who has exercised the powers of a District Judge or who possesses such qualifications as are normally required for appointment to the post of District Judge; and an accountant member shall be a person who has, for a period of not less than six years, practised professionally as a Registered Accountant enrolled on the Register of Accountants maintained by the Central Government under the Auditors' Certificate Rules, 1932:

Provided that the Central Government may appoint as an accountant member of the Tribunal any person not possessing the qualifications required by this sub-section, if it is satisfied that he has qualifications and has had adequate experience of a character which render him suitable for appointment to the Tribunal.

(4) The Central Government shall appoint a judicial member of the Tribunal to be president thereof.

(5) The powers and functions of the Appellate Tribunal may be exercised and discharged by Benches constituted from members of the Tribunal by the president of the Tribunal.

(6) A Bench shall consist of not less than two members of the Tribunal, and shall be constituted so as contain an equal number of judicial members and accountant members, or so that the number of members of one class does not exceed the number of members of the other class by more than one.

(7) If the members of a Bench differ in opinion on any point, the point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority, if there is a majority; but if the members are equally divided, they shall state the point or points on which they differ, and the case shall be referred by the president of the Tribunal for hearing on such point or points by one or more of the other members of the Tribunal, and such point or points shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority of the members of the Tribunal who have heard the case, including those who first heard it.

(8) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Appellate Tribunal shall have power to regulate its own procedure, and the procedure of Benches of the Tribunal in all matters arising out of the discharge of its functions, including the places at which the Benches shall hold their sittings.

Powers.—As regards the powers and duties of the Tribunal, see sections 28, 33, 35, 37, 48 and 66.

Rules of procedure.—The rules made under sub-section (8), which, however, must be "subject to the provisions of this Act" have been set out along with other Rules.

CHAPTER III.

TAXABLE INCOME.

6. Save as otherwise provided by this Act, the following heads of income, profits and gains, shall be chargeable to income-tax in the manner hereinafter appearing namely:—

Heads of income chargeable to income-tax.

- (i) Salaries.
- (ii) Interest on securities.
- (iii) Income from property.
- (iv) Profits and gains of business, profession or vocation.
- (v) Income from other sources.

History.—In the Act of 1886, Income was taxed under four separate schedules—Salaries, etc.; Interest on Government securities; Profits of Joint Stock Companies; and other Income. In the 1918 Act, a sixfold classification was introduced, the wording being as below:—

- (i) and (ii) Same as now;
- (iii) Income derived from house property;
- (iv) Income derived from business;
- (v) Professional earnings;
- (vi) Income derived from other sources; and a decision in Rowe & Co. v. Secretary of State, 1 I.T.C. 161; A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 30, confined (iii) only to residential house property. In 1922 the words "Income derived from" in items (iii), (iv) and (vi) were omitted; and the word "heads" was substituted for "classes". Simultaneously section 9 was altered so as to make "property" include all buildings and appurtenant lands not used for business. The word 'property' is used in sections 6 and 9 in this restricted sense. Real property not falling under section 9 therefore comes under "other sources" which is a true residuary head, Probhat Chandra Barua v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Assam, 57 I.A. 228; 59 M.L.J. 814 (P.C.). Income from mining leases, for example, is not income from "property" but from "other sources". Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O. v. Kamakshya Narain Singh, 1940 I.T.R. 563. So long as something is income and does not fall under one of the other heads, it will fall under this head, unless it is excluded from 'total income' altogether by one of the exemptions in section 4 (or section 60).

Items (iv) and (v) were amalgamated, and the words 'Income from' inserted both in items (iii) and (v), in 1939.

Scope of section.—Though Chapter I is headed "Charge of Income-tax" this section is according to the Privy Council really the charging section inasmuch as it sets out the different categories of taxable income—see the ruling of the Privy Council in the case of Raja Probhat Chandra Barua v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Assam, 57 I.A. 228; 59 M.L.J. 814 (P.C.). This remark, according to Kania, J. in In re Kamdar, 1946 I.T.R. 10, was merely due to the express reference in section 4 (1) (as it stood before 1939) to section 6; and this remark has no significance now. In Raja Raghunandan Prasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 1933 I.T.R. 113, however, the Privy Council though not referring to section 3 in terms as a charging section assume that it is such. See also Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P. v. Shrimati Singari Bai, 1945 I.T.R. 224 (All.).

Section 6 contains a list of sources only in the sense of attributing income to property as distinct from employment and to business as distinct from employment and so forth and not in the sense of attributing income to one property rather than another or one business rather than another, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. C. B. Mehta, 1938 I.T.R. 521 (P.C.).

Section 6 however, merely sets out the different sources of income liable to tax if the conditions laid down in section 4 are satisfied; i.e., if the income is chargeable with reference to that section; the manner of taxing each head, or rather the method of computing income under each head is explained in the following sections. As to the computation of the income falling under each of the categories set out in this section, see the notes under sections 7 to 12 and 13.

Income, profits and gains.—While this section uses the words 'profits and gains' in reference to a business, profession or vocation and income with reference to 'property' and 'other sources', a study of the different sections of the Act will show that the words are used more or less promiscuously. See, however, notes under section 2 (6-C) 'Income' and under section 3 as to the difference between 'capital' and 'income'.

The tax is not on gross receipts but on "income, profits and gains," i.e., after deductions have been made as provided under sections 7 to 12, Probbhat Chandra Barua v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Assam, 57 I.A. 228; 59 M.L.J. 814 (P.C.).

United Kingdom Law.—The corresponding provisions in the United Kingdom Law are in the several elaborate and complicated Schedules, the scope of which is roughly summarised below.

Schedule A.—In respect of the property in all lands, tenements, hereditaments, and heritages in the United Kingdom. This is known as the 'property' or the owners' tax, and covers not only lands and buildings but also mines, gas-works, water-works, salt-springs, docks, railways, fisheries, roads, markets, fairs, tolls, bridges, ferries, etc. Needless to say, it also includes agricultural lands. It will be seen that this Schedule partly covers the following heads under the Indian law, viz., Property, Business and Other sources. There are elaborate rules as to how a property shall be valued, what deductions may be allowed, which persons may be charged, and so forth. These rules, however, are not of much interest in India.

Schedule B.—In respect of the occupation of all lands, tenements, hereditaments, and heritages in the United Kingdom: This is known as the occupiers' tax. There is no corresponding tax in India.

Schedule C.—In respect of all profits arising from interest, annuities, dividends, and shares of annuities payable out of any public revenue: This corresponds to a part of the tax on Securities in India under section 8.

Schedule D.—In respect of—

(a) The annual profits or gains arising or accruing—

(i) to any person residing in the United Kingdom from any kind of property whatever, whether situate in the United Kingdom or elsewhere; and

(ii) to any person residing in the United Kingdom from any trade, profession, employment or vocation, whether the same be respectively carried on in the United Kingdom or elsewhere; and

(iii) to any person, whether a British subject or not, although not resident in the United Kingdom from any property whatever in the United Kingdom or from any trade, profession, employment, or vocation exercised within the United Kingdom; and

(b) All interest of money, annuities, and other annual profits or gains not charged under Schedule A, B, C or E, and not specially exempted from tax; in each case for every twenty shillings of the annual amount of the profits or gains.

Tax under this Schedule shall be charged under the following cases respectively; that is to say—

Case I.—Tax in respect of any trade not contained in any other Schedule;

Case II.—Tax in respect of any profession, employment, or vocation not contained in any other Schedule;

Case III.—Tax in respect of profits of an uncertain value and of other income described in the rules applicable to this Case;

Case IV.—Tax in respect of income arising from securities out of the United Kingdom, except such income as is charged under Schedule C;

Case V.—Tax in respect of income arising from possessions out of the United Kingdom;

Case VI.—Tax in respect of any annual profits or gains not falling under any of the foregoing Cases, and not charged by virtue of any other Schedule; and subject to and in accordance with the rules applicable to the said Cases respectively.

This is the most important of the Schedules, and covers the heads, Business, Professional earnings, salaries of certain classes, a part of Securities and a part of "Other sources" under the Indian law.

Schedule E.—In respect of every public office or employment of profit, and in respect of every annuity, pension, or stipend payable by the Crown or out of the public revenue of the United Kingdom other than annuities charged under Schedule C. Since 1922 this Schedule covers the bulk of private salaries also.

Under each Schedule there are elaborate rules as to computation, deductions, etc., and a reference to these rules and to the extent that they can be followed, even as a guide, in India, if at all, is made in the notes under the corresponding sections in the Indian Act.

Income-tax is a single tax.—In London County Council v. Attorney-General, 4 Tax Cases 265; (1901) A.C. 26, it was contended on behalf of the Inland Revenue that the Income-tax on property was totally distinct from Income-tax on profits, etc., a separate tax so to speak, and that there was nothing to prevent the same income being taxed twice over in the hands of the same person. This view had been sometimes upheld by Courts, but the House of Lords overruled it.

Per Lord Macnaghten.—Income-tax, if I may be pardoned for saying so, is a tax on income. It is not meant to be a tax on anything else. It is one tax, not a collection of taxes essentially distinct. There is no difference in kind between the duties of income-tax assessed under Schedule D and those assessed under Schedule A or any of the other Schedules of charge. One man has fixed property, another lives by his wits, each contributes to the tax if his income is above the prescribed limit. The standard of assessment varies according to the nature of the source from which taxable income is derived. That is all. . . . In every case the tax is a tax on income, whatever may be the standard by which the income is measured. . . . But to read the enactment as imposing a double duty (on the same person and on the same item) would be contrary to the whole scope of Income-tax legislation and whimsical in the highest degree."

The above remarks apply a fortiori to India, In re Bcharilal Mullick, 2 I.T.C. 328; 54 Cal. 630; Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Namberumal Chetti, 56 Mad. 329 (A case of enhancement of assessment on appeal; see notes under section 32). In the United Kingdom, there is no provision like section 18 (5) of the Indian Act which says that tax paid at source shall be 'credited' to the account of the assessee. Nor is 'set-off' allowed in the United Kingdom as between different sources of income to the same extent as in India. Further, assesseees in the United Kingdom are not allowed to deduct interest on borrowed capital (except in respect of irregular, fluctuating payments like interest on overdrafts), and have to pay tax on the gross profits, though they are legally entitled to deduct the Income-tax from the persons to whom they pay, interest, etc.

Double taxation.—It seems clear that the same income cannot be taxed twice over in the hands of the same person on the ground that it appears in two sources. When, to take a common example, income from property or interest on investments enters into 'Business,' the assessee cannot be taxed on property or interest as such, and again on that portion of the business profits which includes the income already taxed, Raja Probhat Chandra Barua v. Crown, 1 I.T.C. 414; 52 Cal. 546; In re Commercial Properties, Ltd., 3 I.T.C. 23; 55 Cal. 1057; Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. A. S. P. L. V. R. Ramasami Chettiar, 1933 I.T.R. 389. As regards investments of Insurance Companies, see Rules in the Schedule.

The following dicta may also be noted.

"Now it may be true that there are no specific words in this statute which point out that the Government are not to receive the tax twice over, but it would be so clearly unjust and obviously contrary to the meaning of the statute that the Government should have the tax payable twice over by the same person in respect of the same thing, that I should say it was a necessary implication that it could not be right," per Lord Justice Brett in Gilbertson v. Fergusson, 1 Tax Cases 501; 7 Q.B.D. 562.

"Speaking generally, all income is chargeable, but chargeable only once. Income is brought into charge at its source and the burden is then distributed among the recipients of the income who bear their share, in just proportion," per Lord Macnaghten in Attorney-General v. London County Council, 5 Tax Cases 242; (1907) A.C. 131.

But, "Money passes through the hands of a great number of people . . . you have received your money and have paid Income-tax upon it, and then you pay it out again to other people and they make a profit out of it and they pay Income-tax upon it again," Per Grantham, J., in Leeds Building Society v. Mallandaine, 3 Tax Cases 577; (1897) 2 Q.B. 402.

"There could be double taxation if the Legislature distinctly enacted it, but upon general words of taxation, and when you have to interpret a Taxing Act you cannot so interpret it as to tax the subject twice over to the same tax. But it all depends on its being the same tax and . . . there is nothing to prevent either one Legislature or two Legislatures, if they have jurisdiction over the subject-matter, imposing different taxes on the same subject-matter," per Channel, J., in Stevens v. The Durban, etc., Mining Company, 5 Tax Cases 402; 25 T.L.R. 316.

" . . . the assessee is only a reversioner of the estate and not the owner thereof during the lifetime of the present incumbent, and the allowance, having been paid out of the agricultural and taxed income of the estate, may be taxed again when it passes from the owner of the estate to the assessee, for in his hands the character of the income has been changed," Kedar Narain Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1938 I.T.R. 157 (All.).

Tennant v. Smith, 3 Tax Cases 158 (H.L.), which exempted the value of a rent-free residence on the ground that it could not be converted into money was decided solely on that ground and not on the ground that the employer had paid tax on the building under Schedule A, see Robinson v. Corry, 18 Tax Cases 411 (C.A.); (1934) 1 K.B. 240.

Per Mukerjee, J., in Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Secretary of State, 34 Cal. 257, "Courts always look with disfavour upon double taxation, and Statutes will be construed, if possible, to avoid double taxes: see the observations in Carr v. Foxule, (1893) 1 Q.B. 251. To the same effect are the observations of Chief Justice Waite in Tennessee v. Whitworth, (1886) 117 U.S. 139 in which that learned Judge, in delivering the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, remarked as follows:—

'It is no doubt within the power of a State to subject a corporation to double taxation. Double taxation, however, is never to be presumed. If property is taxed once in one way, it would ordinarily be wrong to tax it again in another way, when the burden of both taxes falls on the same person. Sometimes tax laws have that effect, but if they do, it is because the Legislature has unmistakably so enacted. All presumptions are again such an imposition.

But when the Legislative intent is clear and unmistakable, effect must be given to the statutory provisions on the subject. The question of double taxation is one of expediency for the consideration of the Legislature; it cannot be affirmed, as a matter of law, that double taxation is forbidden; see the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Davidson v. New Orleans, (1877) 96 U.S. 97; New Orleans v. Houston, (1886) 119 U.S. 265; see also Reclamation v. Hagar, (1880) 6 Sawyer 567; 4 Fed. Rep. 366 and United States v. Benzon, (1865)

2 Cliff 512; 24 Fed. Rep. 1112. It must be held consequently that the royalty received by the plaintiff, is liable to be assessed with cesses, as it is part of the net annual profits from the mine, and it is also liable to be assessed with income-tax, inasmuch as it is taxable 'income' within the meaning of the Income-tax Act."

Again in Raja Probhat Chandra Barua's Case, 1 I.T.C. 414, per Rankin, J.:—

"In Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Secretary of State, 34 Cal. 257, reference was made to certain dicta of American Courts and to the English case of Carr v. Fowle, (1893) 1 Q.B. 251. But the only observation in this case was to the effect that the statute presumably did not intend that a vicar should in effect pay the same tax (land tax) twice on the same hereditament. This is plain enough. Thus the income-tax is one tax, and income assessed under one Schedule cannot be assessed all over again under another. That there is any legal presumption of a general character against 'double taxation' in any wider sense is a proposition to which I respectfully demur as a principle for the construction of a modern statute. In Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Secretary of State, 34 Cal. 257, it did not avail to cut down clear though absolutely general language."

In an Allahabad case, In re Mukund Sarup, 2 I.T.C. 495; 50 All. 495; A.I.R. 1928 All. 81, there are suggestions that the Legislature should be presumed not to have intended to tax the same source of income under different Acts. But these suggestions were questioned by the Patna High Court, Rajni Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 264, who were disposed to agree with the views of Rankin, J., quoted above. The Madras High Court in Commissioner of Income-tax v. S. V. K. L. Somasundaram Chettiar, 6 I.T.C. 88, saw no indication of any general idea in the Act against double taxation. All that the Act did was to exempt certain kinds of income from being taxed twice. Cf. section 14.

Holding Companies—Taxation of.—The super-tax paid by companies in India is not paid on behalf of the shareholder—see sections 16, 18 and 49-B; it is really of the nature of a corporation tax on profits. Double taxation can arise only if the same person is taxed twice in respect of the same income. See, however, exemption under section 60 in respect of income of Investment Trust Companies.

Can the Crown choose the head under which to tax?—The problem often arises in the United Kingdom in respect of investments in the course of business, chiefly that of Insurance Companies, whether to tax the investments (less expenses) or the net profits. Several decisions:—Norwich Union Fire Insurance Co. v. Magee, 3 Tax Cases 457; Revell v. Edinburgh Life Insurance Co., 5 Tax Cases 221; Liverpool and London and Globe v. Bennett, 6 Tax Cases 327, had assumed that the Crown had the right to choose the source under which the income may be taxed.

The question whether income from lands and buildings can be assessed alternatively under Schedules A and B and under Schedule D was examined by the House of Lords in Fry v. Salisbury House Estates, Ltd., (1930) A. C. 432, and it was decided that the assessment must be made under Schedules A and B, the assessment being exhaustive and there being no option to the Crown to tax under Schedule D the excess of the profits over the assessments under Schedule A or B. The option of the Crown in respect of other schedules and in respect of the different cases of Schedule D was left undecided.

As regards income from house property, a similar view to that in Fry's case, supra, has been taken by Indian Courts, In re Commercial Properties Ltd., 3 I.T.C. 23; Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. A.S.P.L.V.R. Ramasami Chettiar, 1933 I.T.R. 389; see also query by the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Basantrai Takht Singh, 60 I.A. 307. Where, however, income is of a composite nature and arises partly from the ownership of property and partly from business, e.g., the income to an owner of a "tied" house which partly arises from the ownership of the house and partly from the owner's trade of supplying liquor to the public, an assessment can be made partly under Schedule A and partly under Schedule D, Alfred Leney Co. v. Whelan, 13 A.T.C. 100. Fry's case prohibits an assessment under Schedule D only in respect of income arising from sources which are taxable under Schedule A or B; it does not prohibit additional taxation if the land is put to specific uses, and profits arise from activities other than the ownership or occupation of land. Section 21 of the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1934 has however largely altered the effects of the ruling in Fry's case (1930) A.C. 432.

In India, the words "Credit shall be given to him therefor in assessment, if any, made for the following year under the Act" in section 18 (5) would seem to imply no option to the income-tax authorities to tax interest on securities as a separate source finally. The assessment is made with reference to 'total income' (sections 3, 22 and 23), and 'total income' is defined in section 16. Under section 24, set-off is allowed as between the different sources of income. It is clear from these provisions and section 48 that if the interest on investments made by an assessee, is in excess of his 'total income' (after set-off), the tax deducted at source on the interest on investments is partly or wholly refundable.

7. (1) The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head "Salaries" in respect of any salary or wages, any annuity, pension or gratuity, and any fees, commissions, perquisites or profits in lieu of, or in addition to any salary or wages, which are due to him from, whether paid or not, or are paid by or on behalf of, the Crown, a local authority, a company, or any other public body or association, or any private employer; and for the purposes of this subsection advances by way of loan or otherwise of income chargeable under this head shall be deemed to be salary due on the date when the advance is received:

Provided that the tax shall not be payable in respect of any sum which the assessee by the conditions of his employment is required to spend out of his remuneration wholly necessarily and exclusively in the performance of his duties:

Provided further that the tax shall not be payable in respect of any sum deducted from the salary payable by or on behalf of the Crown to any individual, being a sum deducted in accordance with the conditions of his service for the purpose of securing to him a deferred annuity or of making provision for his wife or children, provided that the sum so deducted shall not exceed one-sixth of the salary:

Provided further that where tax is deductible at the source under section 18, the assessee shall not be called upon to pay the tax himself unless he has received the salary without such deduction.

Explanation 1.—The right of a person to occupy free of rent as a place of residence any premises provided by his employer is a perquisite for the purposes of this sub-section.

Explanation 2.—A payment due to or received by an assessee from an employer or former employer or from a provident or other fund is to the extent to which it does not consist of contributions by the assessee or interest on such contributions a profit received in lieu of salary for the purposes of this sub-section, unless the payment is made solely as compensation for loss of employment and not by way of remuneration for past services:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall render liable to income-tax any payment from a provident fund to which the Provident Funds Act, 1925, applies, or any payment from a recognised provident fund within the meaning of Chapter IX-A if such payment is exempted from payment of income-tax under the provisions of Chapter IX-A, or any payment from an approved superannuation fund within the meaning of Chapter IX-B made on the death of a beneficiary or in lieu of or in commutation of an annuity, or by way of refund of contributions on the death of a beneficiary or on his leaving the employment in connection with which the fund is established.

(2) Any income which would be chargeable under this head if paid in British India shall be deemed to be so chargeable if paid to a British subject or any servant of His Majesty in any part of India by or on behalf of the Crown or by a local authority established in the exercise of the powers of the Crown Representative or the Central Government in that behalf.

History.—For corresponding provisions in the 1886 Act, see sections 3 (4), 3 (5), 7, 8 and 9 of that Act. In the 1918 Act, there was no 'explanation' clause, and the section did not extend to salaries paid by all private employers, but only to those paid by employers who had entered into an agreement with the Income-tax Officer to recover the tax on behalf of Government. The words "or any servant of His Majesty" in sub-section (2) were inserted in the Act of 1918 so as to bring all servants of the Crown, whether British subjects or not, within the purview of this sub-section.

The following changes were made by the Amending Act of 1939:—

In sub-section (1),—

(a) the words "received by him" were omitted;

(b) for the words "which are paid by or on behalf of the Crown" the words "which are due to him from, whether paid or not, or are paid by or on behalf of, the Crown" were substituted;

(c) for the words "by or on behalf of any private employer" the words "any private employer; and for the purposes of this sub-section advances by way of loan or otherwise of income chargeable under this head shall be deemed to be salary due on the date when the advance is received:", were substituted.

(d) the first and third provisos of sub-section (1) and Explanation 2 with its proviso were all added.

In 1944, the words 'at or in connection with the termination of his employment, whether or not the employment is then terminated or to be terminated, occurring after 'other fund' in Explanation 2 were omitted.

Explanation (1).—Under the Act of 1918 [section 3 (2) (ix)] 'a perquisite or benefit which is neither money nor reasonably capable of being converted into money' was exempt from taxation. This merely set out the English law as expounded by the House of Lords in Tennant v. Smith, (1892) A.C. 150; 3 Tax Cases 158. In 1922 it was decided to abandon this position, as it led to inequalities and to tax perquisites and benefits that possessed a money value, whether or not they were in fact capable of conversion into money. But the wording of section 7 did not fully carry out this intention; for in no sense could it be said that a rent-fee residence was 'paid' to a person, hence the 'explanation' clause in 1923.

Perquisites—Other than residences.—The position regarding benefits other than free residences, e.g., free medical advice, free conveyance for other than official duties, free board, etc., should be evidently governed by the principle of Tennant v. Smith, (1892) A.C. 150; 3 Tax Cases 158. Such benefits are not ordinarily capable of conversion into money, and are no more 'paid' than free residences. These benefits are therefore not taxable.

Where however a company paid its managing director the taxes and cost of his repairs of his house (which he was asked to occupy partly in order to maintain the dignity of the business), and also his lighting, heating, telephone and other domestic expenditure, it was held that the taxes, etc., were 'money's worth' and therefore taxable as the income of the managing director, Nicoll v. Austin, 19 Tax Cases 531 (K.B.D.). Per Finlay, J., "it seems to me to be impossible to say that Mr. Austin when he was enjoying the amenities and pleasures of his house and his garden was engaged wholly and exclusively on the business of his company." See also notes under section 4 (3) (vi) and Abbot v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 9 I.T.C. 9, referred to there. Nicoll v. Austin was distinguished in Reed v. Cattermole, 1937—in which case the rates on his house paid to a methodist minister were held to be exempt—on the ground that he occupied the house in a representative capacity while Mr. Austin occupied his house in an individual capacity.

Where a company allotted shares to its officers (as bonus) at par on condition that the shares were not to be sold except with the permission of the Directors, it was held that the officers received an advantage that could be converted into money and that therefore the difference between the true value of the shares (which was the market value less a deduction on account of the restriction on sale) and the par value was taxable as salary. Ede v. Wilson and Cornwall, (1945) 1 All. E. R. 367 (K.B.).

Salaries—Tax on—Collection of.—As to how taxes are collected on 'salaries', see section 18; as regards annual returns to be furnished by employers, see section 21; and as regards refunds, see section 48.

Meaning of words: Salary.—"Signifies a recompense or consideration given unto any man for his pains bestowed upon another man's business." (Terms de la ley) (Stroud).

Wages.—"Though this word might be said to include payment for any services, yet in general the word 'salary' is used for payment of services of a higher class, and 'wages' is confined to the earnings of labourers and artisans," per Grove, J., in Gordon v. Jennings, 51 L.J. Q.B. 417.

"Wages then are the personal earnings of labourers and artisans." (Stroud).

This distinction between salary and wages is of no importance in India, as the law does not prescribe different arrangements for the taxation of salaried persons and wage-earners as the United Kingdom law does.

Annuity.—"A yearly payment of a certain sum of money granted to another in fee for life or years charging the person of the grantor only" (Co. Litt. 144-b) (Stroud).

But in this context it simply represents a recurring annual payment.

Pension.—Is really deferred pay or a compensation for past services, etc., and is sometimes distinguished, in India at any rate, from 'gratuity', the latter refers to lump sum payments while the former denotes periodical recurring payments.

But according to the Concise Oxford Dictionary, 'gratuity' means "a money present of amount fixed by giver in recognition of an inferior's good offices".

Fees.—Here evidently refer to fluctuating payments depending on the work done as distinguished from salaries, etc., which are fixed with reference to a period of time.

Commissions.—Payments being percentages on amounts involved.

Perquisites.—See notes under section 4 (2) (vi).

Date of receipt.—The head of a Government Office who draws the salary of a subordinate from the Treasury and disburses it to him is not drawing the money from the Treasury as a trustee or bailee for the subordinate, and it is not therefore open to the Income-tax Officer to tax the subordinate with reference to the date of drawal of the salary from the Treasury by the head of the office, Banke Behari Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 345. This ruling was given with reference to the law as it stood before 1st April, 1939.

Which are due to him—Whether paid or not, or are paid.—The section as it now stands has adopted in respect of salaries, both the 'accrual' and 'receipt' bases instead of, as formerly, the 'receipt' basis only, though with the adoption of the 'slab' system of taxation, the incentive to postpone receipt of salary mostly disappears. The words 'whether paid or not' are superfluous and merely repeat and emphasise the sense of the word 'due'.

While the section adopts both the accrual and receipt basis, it does not say with whom the option rests of choosing either basis. Section 13 cannot be applied because it does not refer to section 7. Is the option then to be that of the Income-tax Officer?

Though it is not stated in terms, it may be assumed that salary taxed in an earlier year on an accrual basis cannot be taxed a second time on a receipt basis when received in a later year. Further, where accrual basis has been adopted and the collection of tax on salary is postponed till it is actually received, it would evidently not be open to the Income-tax Officer to change the basis afterwards and tax the salary on a receipt basis (i.e., including it in the total income of the year of receipt) instead of on an accrual basis (i.e., as part of total income of year of accrual).

Similarly if salary has been taxed as a loan or advance in an earlier year, it cannot be taxed again when adjusted by the employer against salary earned in a later year. Adjustments made after 1st April, 1939, in respect of advances of salary made before the date can presumably be taxed on the 'accrued' basis at the time of adjustment since the amendment in 1939 will not have retrospective effect.

Salary due but not received.—The last proviso to this sub-section ensures that the employee cannot be taxed direct unless he has received the salary without deduction of tax. It has been evidently put in out of abundant caution, for even in its absence, it would be held, on the strength of St. Lucia Usines and Estates Co. v. St. Lucia, (1924) A.C. 508 and similar rulings, that income of the nature of salary could not be actually taxed before receipt. An assurance was given to the Select Committee and repeated in the Legislative Assembly that administrative action would be taken to obviate the hardship that might arise when salary due had not been received or might not be received at all. Action in this respect cannot be taken under section 60 as will be seen from a perusal thereof but only through executive orders, and it was stated by Government that instructions would be issued for the postponement of collection of tax on salary not actually received. The tax so held over would evidently be worked out at the 'average' rates laid down in section 18 (2); see also notes under that section.

The basis of taxation being salary due, whether received or not, an employee cannot escape tax merely by not drawing it. Such surrender may merely be an application of income; on the other hand, if, ab initio, there is no idea of drawing any salary, there will be no liability. See Reade v. Brearley, 17 Tax Cases 687 and Daly v. Inland Revenue, 18 Tax Cases 641. On which side of the line a case falls can only be determined by the facts of the case; and having regard the original object of the amendment of section 7 in 1939, viz., to prevent avoidance of tax by salaries being drawn late, and the comparative absence of a similar motive under the slab system of tax, it is believed that in practice the Revenue do not carry the implications of section 7 to the utmost limit.

For the purposes of this section.—These qualifying words the significance of which is not clear might create the anomaly that while an employee was taxed on the ground that something was his salary, his employer might be refused the corresponding deduction from his taxable profits. In any case, the explanation clause has to be read in conjunction with section 2 (6-C), section 18 and other connected sections.

Due date.—The time at which a person becomes entitled to a remuneration must be determined with reference to the relevant circumstances, e.g., the contract of service or the rules and conditions of employment, and in the case of a director of a company, the articles of association of the company the date of declaration of bonus or extra dividends if any and so forth, cf. Grey v. Tilley, 16 Tax Cases 414. The law presumes nothing as to the intervals at which salaries are payable, for they are to be governed by the facts of each case.

It was suggested in passing in In re Usharani, 1942 I.T.R. 199, that the taxable salary need not be 'due' in respect of the year under assessment but might cover salary due in respect of earlier years also.

Employment and Profession.—As to the distinction between the two words, see notes under section 4 (3) (vii). If the earnings of a person's livelihood depend, not on obtaining a single post and sticking to it more or less but on obtaining a series of separate engagements and moving so to speak from one to another, the person exercises a profession, not an employment, Davies v. Braithwaite, 10 A.T.C. 286; (1931) 2 K.B. 628. There should be a relationship of employer and employee or of principal and agent if a payment from the one to the other is to be considered salary. A restrictive covenant undertaking to refrain from doing something is entirely different in its nature from a contract of service; and a payment in consideration of such a covenant cannot be 'salary', Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Mills Store Co., 1941 I.T.R. 642.

An official liquidator under the Companies Act holds an 'office'; and his remuneration is 'salary' (under section 7) and neither professional earnings (section 10) nor income from 'other sources' (section 12). In re Bhagawati Shankar, 1944 I.T.R. 193.

Honoraria.—Honoraria or fees paid to Government servants by local bodies or private persons, companies, etc., for professional work, the whole of which is in the first instance credited to Government, after which the whole or part is drawn under proper sanction by the Government servant concerned on a bill, should be taxed as salary by deduction at source. They are obviously fees, commissions, or perquisites received in addition to salary and paid by or on behalf of Government [section 7 (1)].

Child allowance.—An allowance paid to an employee to meet "the increased cost of children" is not a payment belonging to the children but a part of the salary of the parent; and if both the father and mother are employees of the same employer, the allowance should be treated as part of the salary of the father and not of the mother, since the father is the natural guardian, Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Rcv. Manry, 1942 I.T.R. 205 (All.).

Place of payment—Immaterial.—The tax is chargeable irrespective of the place of payment, even though such place be not merely outside British India but outside India. It will be sufficient if the income clearly accrues or arises in British India.

Under Explanation 2 to section 4 (1), income which would be chargeable under the head 'salaries' if payable in British India, and not being pension payable without India should be deemed to accrue or arise in British India wherever paid if it is earned in British India. The second sub-section of section 7 applies to income which is neither paid in British India nor accrues or arises in British India. See also the amendment to section 18, sub-section 2 (A), introduced in 1925, which goes further and applies to sterling overseas pay which is payable outside India but earned by service in British India.

Advances by way of loan or otherwise of income chargeable under this head.—The words 'or otherwise' are merely put in out of abundant caution. The advance must be of the income, i.e., it cannot cover a bona fide debt even if such debt was secured on pay or measured in terms of pay. Advances for specific purposes, e.g., purchase of houses, motor cars, typewriters, etc., will not ordinarily be advances of salary. The nature of the advance—whether it is of salary or not—must obviously be a question of fact. The advance if caught by this section will be deemed to be salary due on the date of receipt of the advance.

The nature of income as 'salary' cannot be changed merely by assigning it to a creditor in payment of a debt. Cf. Parking v. Warwick, 25 Tax Cases 419 (K.B.D.).

Out-of-pocket expenses.—The first proviso merely reiterates the principle of section 4 (3) (vi) and makes it clear that expenditure incurred out of salary for the purpose of the employer's work should be deducted from taxable income; see also notes under section 4 (3) (vi).

It should be noted that the use of the word 'necessarily' makes the provision more stringent than similar provisions in sections 10 (2) (xii) and 12. The words "conditions of his employment" mean, evidently, circumstances of his employment and not contractual conditions.

A parson was bound by law to live in the parsonage and make it over to his successor. The Government proposed to extend an aerodrome for which purpose they had to acquire the parsonage and its grounds. The parson opposed the Bill which Government brought for this purpose; and as a result when the Bill became law, there was provision in it for acquiring another site and building a new parsonage. The expenditure incurred by the parson in opposing the Bill was allowed as a necessary expenditure in computing his income under Schedule E. Mitchell v. Child, 1942 Taxation Reports 243. On the other hand costs payable to an employer by an employee in respect of unsuccessful litigation about the latter's pension have been disallowed as a deduction from pension. Magraw v. Lewis, 18 Tax Cas. 222. Similarly, fees paid to an employment agency to secure a job were not allowed to be deducted from salary, as the expenditure was not incurred in the performance of the duties of office. Short v. McIlgorm, (1945) 1 All E. R. 391 (K.B.). Medical expenses incurred by an employee, even if his illness be due to the conditions of his employment are not incurred in the performance of office. Norman v. Golder, 1945 I.T.R. 21 (Sup.) (C.A.).

The travelling expenses to and from a college incurred by a student assistant in the research laboratory of a business, it being a condition of his employment that he should attend evening classes in the college and take a degree in science were held not to have been incurred 'in the performance of his duties' as an assistant in his employer's laboratory, Blackwell v. Mills, 1946 K.B.D.

Bonuses, gratuities and accumulations of provident funds.—Explanation 2 read with the definition of 'income' in section 2 (6-C) is intended to nullify the Privy Council decision in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Fletcher, 1937 I.T.R. 428 (P.C.), by declaring that the payments in question which are inherently of the nature of capital will be deemed to be income.

It should be noted that in this explanation also the accrual basis is adopted.

The reference to 'other' fund is only out of abundant caution, and, in any case, 'other' should evidently be construed ejusdem generis.

In In re S. R. Mittra, 1942 I.T.R. 259, which arose after the amendment in 1939, the Patna High Court held that a lump sum received in the course of an employee's service (not at or in connection with the termination of his service) representing the employer's contribution to a provident fund was not taxable. The ratio decidendi is not clear but the effect of the decision has been nullified by the omission of the words "at or in connection, etc." in the explanation clause in 1944.

Solely as compensation for loss of employment and not by way of remuneration for past services.—The word 'solely' shows that a payment cannot be dissected into separate parts if it is of a mixed nature and that if it is only partially of the nature of compensation the whole of it will be presumed to be remuneration. The reference to "past services" shows that a premium in respect of future services may be capital and not covered by this explanation. A payment to an ex-employee for refraining from competition would be neither compensation for loss of employment nor remuneration for past services. A gift, pure and simple, to an ex-employee would presumably be neither remuneration nor compensation. As to what constitutes compensation for loss of office see notes under sections 3 and 4 (3) (vii).

So long as the payment in truth represents compensation for loss of employment, it is immaterial in what manner the service terminates whether by formal resignation by the employee or by his dismissal and also by what name the compensation is described. In re Khosla, 1945 I.T.R. 436 (Lah.).

Exceptions.—The proviso covers: (1) payments from Government and Railways, etc. Provident Funds unconditionally, (2) payments from recognised Provident Funds under Chapter IX-A if the payments are exempt under that chapter; and (3) certain payments from Superannuation Funds under Chapter IX-B.

Gratuities.—See notes under section 4 (3) (vii). The Madras High Court ruled that a gratuity paid to a Bank employee on his retirement was taxable, Balaji Rao v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1935 I.T.R. 461: 8 I.T.C. 8, but this is not in accordance with the Privy Council ruling in Show Wallace's case, 59 I.A. 206; 59 Cal. 1343; 6 I.T.C. 178.

In Allan v. Trehearne, 22 Tax Cas. 15, an employee was entitled to a lump sum payment to be paid to him or his representatives on the termination of his service from any cause other than wilful negligence on his part. He died and the lump sum paid to his representatives was taxed as profit from office on the ground that the death was the occasion for, and not the cause of, the payment.

Where, however, an agent, on termination of his agency and in consideration of his past services and also of his refraining from competing with the principal who opened his own office, received a monthly payment for a period of years (the payment being continued, after his death, to his son), it was held that the payments were salary, being gratuities for services rendered. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Katrak, 1937 I.T.R. 527.

Salaries—Pensions paid by Foreign Governments.—The salary paid by a Foreign Government or an Indian State cannot fall under this section. Such a State is not Government (see General Clauses Act), nor a local authority (ibid.), nor a company [see section 2 (6)], nor a public body or association, nor a private employer. A foreign State can hardly be considered a public body or a private employer. Such 'salaries' are therefore income under 'other sources' under section 12 though with some straining they may be considered to be income from profession under section 10. In either case deduction of tax cannot be made at source; and the Income-tax Officer can only recover the tax after assessing the income at the end of the year.

Annuities—Not paid by employer.—This section does not apply to annuities other than those paid by Government, etc., or a private employer. Such annuities, (e.g., under a will or paid by an Insurance Company) fall under 'income from other sources'—section 12, and the tax on such annuities cannot be deducted at source under section 18.

Real nature of salary to be seen.—A school was owned by a religious body and staffed by priests who under the rules of the order were forbidden to receive any remuneration. In response however to the requirements of the Board of Education that only teachers on formal agreements should be employed, agreements were made between the school and the teachers, and the transactions on account of salaries were shown as payments to teachers and simultaneous per contra donations by them to the school; nothing was paid to the teachers. Held, that the so-called salaries were not taxable, Reade v. Brearley, 12 A.T.C. 96; 17 Tax Cases 687. Similarly, where in order to meet the household expenses of priests living in community payments were made from the mission to which the priests belonged the payments were not held to be emoluments of office Daly v. Inland Revenue, 18 Tax Cases 64.

In Secretary of State v. Mohiuddin, Ahmad, 27 Cal. 674; 1 I.T.C. 4, the facts of which were peculiar, it was held that the superior of a khankha (a kind of monastery) was the owner of the income from the endowment and not the recipient of a salary therefrom. The income in question was wholly agricultural, and therefore, exempt in the hands of the superior, but if he had been a salaried employee, he would have been taxable.

Whether a salary paid out of agricultural income is paid out as such income or not depends on the facts of each case. Broadly speaking if the salary is given directly as a share of such income, it will be exempt; otherwise not. So, where the joint owners of certain agricultural lands arranged that one of them should reside on the estate and manage it under the directions of another, and the resident owner received remuneration over and above his share in the income from the lands, it was held that the remuneration was 'salary' and not a share of the income, and therefore taxable. Major Conville v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1935 I.T.R. 404. So also in a partnership having agricultural income where a partner received remuneration in excess of his share, Danby v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1944 I.T.R. 381. See also notes under section 2 (1) regarding payments out of agricultural income.

Proviso—Deductions.—In regard to this the following extract from the old Income-tax Manual may be noted:—

"The proviso to sub-section (1) applies only to compulsory deductions made under the authority of Government, and not to compulsory deductions made by other employers. The amount exempted under this proviso has, however, to be taken into account under section 16 (1) in computing the total income of an assessee for the purpose of determining whether he is liable to tax and the rate at which he is to be assessed. An assessee, for example, who has a salary of Rs. 180 per mensem or Rs. 2,160 per annum and from whose salary a compulsory deduction is made by the authority of Government of Rs. 300 per annum of the nature referred to in this proviso, is liable to pay income-tax on Rs. 1,860 at the rate applicable to an income of Rs. 2,160.

"Under section 58 of the Act this proviso does not apply to super-tax, that is, no allowance of this is made for super-tax purposes."

Under the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) 'Government' includes Local Governments: deductions made under the orders of Provincial Government are also therefore entitled to this exemption.

It will be seen that the maximum limit under the second proviso which applies only to servants of the Crown is one sixth of the salary (not total income) and that this limit is not subject to the absolute further monetary limit laid down in section 15 (3) in respect of one-sixth of total income exempted under that section. Can such a limit be imported by implication from section 15?

Pensions and gifts—In the United Kingdom under a special provision, viz., section 17 of the Finance Act, 1932, voluntary pensions paid by employers to employees or their families or dependants are taxable. This provision merely nullifies rulings, Stedeford v. Beloe, 1932 A.C. 388; 16 Tax Cases 509; Beynon v. Thorpe, 1920 L.J.K.B. 705; 14 Tax Cases 1, that such pensions were windfalls and therefore not liable to tax. In India it is considered that all pensions are taxable. See also notes on 'Gifts' under section 4 (3) (vii).

Provident Funds.—As regards "recognised provident funds" see section 15 and Chapter IX-A.

The following rulings relate to the law as it was before 1st April, 1939.

A payment made on retirement, etc., to an employee from a private Provident fund, not recognised under Chapter IX-A, that has been formed into a trust, cannot be regarded as a payment of salary within the meaning of section 7 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922) because the trust is not the employee's employer. Such a payment is therefore not liable to taxation by deduction of tax at source. If, however, the trust is not effective and the employer retains a legal or beneficent interest in the monies the bonuses might be of the nature of salary, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Rangoon Electric and Tramways Company, 1933 I.T.R. 315.

Employer's contributions from year to year and interest thereon are taxable only when actually received by the employee. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Bombay Burma Trading Corporation, 1933 I.T.R. 152; Smyth v. Stretton, 5 Tax Cases 36, or when the employee can claim the bonuses from the trustees (or others in control of the fund) immediately and unconditionally. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Rangoon Electric and Tramways Company, 1933 I.T.R. 315.

Where bonuses were allowed from year to year entirely at the discretion of the employer, and not on the basis of contractual rights, to certain selected employees satisfying certain conditions laid down in the rules of the fund made by the employer and the bonuses were accumulated till the employees retired or died when alone he or his estate could draw the money, it was held, notwithstanding the trust created in favour of the employees which each of them could enforce on the fulfilment of the conditions by which his interests were bound, that the bonuses were not of the nature of deferred salary but were merely the measure of a sum which the employer volunteered to pay at the time of termination of the employee's service and that the accumulations in the fund were capital. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Fletcher, 1937 I.T.R. 428 (P.C.); I.L.R. (1938) Mad. 1; A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 261. This was followed in In re Hattiangadi, 1940 I.T.R. 85 (Bom).

All these rulings are now obsolete in the light of the new definition in section 2 (6-C).

Salaries—Exemption.—For classes or portions of 'salaries' which are entirely exempt from tax, see exemptions under section 4 (3) (x) and (xi) and by notification under section 60.

Salaries paid in India but outside British India.—Section 7 (2). With regard to salaries paid in India but outside British India the following instructions have been issued for the guidance of the Department:—

Under sub-section (2) of section 7 all servants of Government including those whose services have been lent to a local authority established in exercise of the powers of the Crown Representative or the Central Government are liable to pay tax on their salaries if they are employed in any part of India, irrespective of their nationality.

The pay of officers whose services have been lent to, and whose salaries are paid by, Indian States is not chargeable to income-tax under this section unless it is drawn or received in British India. The portion of salaries of Government Officers serving in Indian States, which is paid in the first instance by the Central Government but is subsequently recovered from the State concerned, is not liable to income-tax. Leave allowance not drawn or received in British India for leave earned during the period of service in an Indian State is also not taxable as it does not fall within the purview of Explanation 2 to section 4 (1).

Object of sub-section (2).—This sub-section is necessary because otherwise the salaries would not be taxable, as they neither accrue nor arise in British India nor are received therein—see notes under section 4 (1) regarding the meaning of the word 'accrue' or 'arise'. This sub-section suggests that the cancelled exemption under section 60 exempting salaries of officers on deputation abroad who also received their salaries abroad, was superfluous.

Endowed income—Whether salary.—In Secretary of State v. Mohiuddin Ahmed, 27 Cal. 674; 1 I.T.C. 4, the facts of which were peculiar, it was held that the Superior of a Khankha (a kind of monastery) was the owner of the income from the endowment, and not the recipient of a salary therefrom. The income in question was wholly agricultural and therefore exempt in the hands of the recipient, but if the Superior had been treated as a salaried employee he would have been taxable.

Salaries—Paid free of tax.—A Railway Company had been assessed to income-tax under Schedule E in respect of all offices or employments of profit held under the company. In pursuance of a contract with its officers the company did not exercise its statutory right to deduct on payment of the salaries the tax in respect thereof payable by the company, and the Schedule E assessment had accordingly been made upon the company in a sum representing the amount of salaries actually paid plus the amount of income-tax thereon borne by the company on behalf of its officers. Held, that the contract to pay the salaries free of income-tax constituted in effect an agreement to pay the salaries plus the tax thereon and that the Schedule E assessment upon the company had been correctly computed by reference to the amount of salaries actually paid plus the tax thereon borne by the company, The North British Railway Company v. Scott, 8 Tax Cases 332; (1923) A.C. 37.

In a later case it was held that the income-tax paid by the employer on an employee's salary—even though under no legal obligation to do so—is part of the employee's emoluments for purposes of income-tax, Harland v. Diggins, 5 A.T.C. 117; 10 Tax Cases 247; (1926) A.C. 289.

Salary received in arrears or advance.—See section 60 regarding the powers of the Central Government to grant relief in cases in which as a consequence of salary being received in advance or in arrear income is assessed at an unduly high rate.

United Kingdom law.—The provision corresponding to section 7 in India is contained in Schedule E, the detailed rules in which are materially different, and give rise to numerous questions, e.g., what is a public office within the United Kingdom which have led to considerable litigation. See for instance, Macmillan v. Guest, (H.L.) 1943 I.T.R. (Sup.) 35.

8. The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head “Interest on securities” in respect of the interest receivable by him on any security of the Central Government or of a Provincial Government, or on debentures or other securities for money issued by or on behalf of a local authority or a company:

Provided that no income-tax shall be payable under this section by the assessee in respect of any sum deducted from such interest by way of commission by a banker realising such interest on behalf of the assessee or in respect of any interest payable on money borrowed for the purpose of investment in the securities by the assessee except interest chargeable under this Act which is payable without British India, not being interest on a loan issued for public subscription before the 1st day of April, 1938, unless in respect of interest which is so chargeable tax has been paid or deducted under section 18, or unless there is a person in British India who may be appointed an agent under section 43 in respect of such interest:

Provided, further, that no income-tax shall be payable on the interest receivable on any security of the Central Government issued or declared to be income-tax free:

Provided, further, that the income-tax payable on the interest receivable on any security of a Provincial Government issued income-tax free, shall be payable by that Provincial Government.

History.—See sections 13 and Second Schedule, Part III in the Act of 1886 and section 7 of the 1918 Act. The reference to the securities of a Local Government including the relative proviso, dates from 1922; formerly, Local Governments did not issue securities. The first part of the first proviso was added in 1933 and the second part, i.e., the words after “assessee” in the first proviso was also added in 1939 thus regularising a concession formerly given by executive orders. As regards the non-deductibility of interest payable outside British India and chargeable under this Act, except under certain conditions, compare proviso to section 9 (1) (iv), proviso to section 10 (2) (iii), and section 12 (2) (b).

Scope of Section.—The interest chargeable under this section is the interest only on securities of the Central Government or of a Provincial Government or on debentures or other securities for money issued by or on behalf of a local authority or company. It does not include the interest on debentures issued by firms, associations, clubs, or individuals the interest on which is chargeable under section 10 or 12.

Exemptions.—For interest on other securities which are entirely exempt from tax, see Notification of exemptions under section 60.

For interest on securities held by Provident Funds, see notes under section 4 (3) (iv) and (ix).

For interest on securities held by Charities, see notes under section 4 (3) (i) and (ii).

For interest on securities held by a Co-operative Society, see exemption under section 60.

Taxation at Source.—As in respect of salaries, so in respect of interest on securities, income-tax is chargeable at source, i.e., at the time the interest is paid. The person paying the interest is personally responsible to the Crown for collecting the tax and making it over (section 18). Super-tax is not deductible ‘at source’ except in the special cases indicated in section 18 even though the interest disbursed by the same person to a single individual may exceed the appropriate limit.

The special provisions in section 18 apply only to dividends of companies, interest not being interest on securities or any other sum chargeable.

As regards refunds, see section 48.

Tax-free securities.—These are not tax-compounded securities in the sense that the receiver of interest is credited with a notional payment of income-tax. The owner therefore is not entitled to any refund under section 48 (small incomes relief) or 49 et seq. (double-tax relief) in respect of such tax constructively paid by him; not even in respect of tax-free securities issued by a Provincial Government though the tax in such cases is paid to the Central Government by the Provincial Government.

Debenture.—The following extract is from Stroud.

"No one seems to know exactly what 'Debenture' means" (Buckl, 192, citing British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Inland Revenue, 50 L.J.Q.B. 517; 7 Q.B.D. 165, in which Grave, J., said: This is "a word" which has no definite signification in the present state of the English language", Re Florence Land Co.: Ex parte Moore, 48 L.J. Ch. 137; 10 Ch.D. 530. It should rather be said that no one has yet laid down an exhaustive definition of a Debenture. The British India Steam Navigation Co.'s case shows that it is not true to say that a Debenture is necessarily an obligation under seal, or a charge on any property. Faute de mieux, it is suggested that, a Debenture is a written Obligation or Acknowledgment in an impersonal form, and with conditions more elaborate than those of a Promissory Note, given by or for a Corporation or a Company to secure a sum of money. Thus, in the British India Steam Navigation Co.'s case, Lindley, J., said: "Now, what the exact meaning of 'Debenture' is I do not know. I do not find any particular definition of it, and we know that there are various classes of instruments called 'Debentures' You may have Mortgage Debentures, which are charges of some kind on property; you may have Debentures which are Bonds; you may have a Debenture which is nothing more than an Acknowledgment of debt; you may have an instrument, like this, which is something more—It is a statement by two Directors that a Company will pay. I think any Instruments of that sort may be Debentures." So in Brown v. Inland Revenue, 64 L.J.M. C. 211, Charles, J., said: "A Debenture, though never, I believe, legally defined, is included under one or other of the three descriptions laid down by Boven, L.J., in English and Scottish Trust v. Brunton, (1892) 2 Q.B. 700; 62 L.J.Q.B. 136, as—'(1) a simple Acknowledgment, under seal of the debt; (2) an Instrument acknowledging the debt and charging the property of the Company with repayment; (3) an Instrument acknowledging the debt, charging the property of the Company with repayment, and further restricting the Company from giving any prior charge.'"

Other Securities for money.—There is no definition of this expression. Generally speaking, a 'security' is anything that makes money more assured in its payment or more readily receivable, as distinguished from a mere I.O.U., which is only evidence of a debt. In its most general sense the expression would include Bank notes, Bills of Exchange, Promissory notes and cheques.

Mortgages are securities for money, Dicks v. Lambert, 4 Ves. 725; Ogle v. Knipe, L.R. 8 Eg. 434. It does not include Bank stock (Ogle v. Knipe) nor shares in a company, Huddleston v. Gouldsbury, 10 Rea. 547; Re Maitland, 74 L.T. 274; M'Donnell v. Morrow, 23 L.R. Ir. 591. It would include a Life policy, Lawrence v. Galsworthy, 3 Juv. N.S. 1049; Bonds Dicks v. Lambert, supra; Mainland v. Upjohn, 41 Ch.D. 142; Bills of Exchange, Cheques and Promissory notes if complete, Barry v. Harding, 1 Jo. and Lat. 475, R. v. Hart, 6 C. & P. 106; Goldsmind v. Hampton, 5 C.B.N.S. 94. (Stroud.)

In this section of the Indian Income-tax Act the expression 'securities for money' should evidently be construed ejusdem generis with debentures, i.e., as referring to securities in the nature of debentures. It would not therefore include a life policy or cheque on neither of which, by the way, would interest ordinarily be payable—nor bills of exchange nor promissory notes (on neither of which would interest be paid at fixed recurring periods, which is evidently the generic feature contemplated by the section). The expression evidently refers to bonds in the nature of debentures, and would clearly not include Bank deposits. See however dicta cited below.

United Kingdom Law.—It is a matter of importance in the United Kingdom—especially when the income arises abroad to a resident—whether the income is from "securities" or not; also whether the securities are brought in "cum coupon" and sold "ex coupon".

"Shares in a company are not 'securities' but portions of its capital," per Wright, J., in Bartholomay Brewing Company v. Wyatt, 3 Tax Cases 213; (1893) 2 K.B. 499.

"The holding of shares in a foreign corporation entirely situated and carrying on business in a foreign country, comes unquestionably under Rule 5 (Case V)"—Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J., in Gramophone and Typewriter Company v. Stanley, 5 Tax Cases 358.; [1908] 2 K.B. 89. The point in this case was that if it was "securities" it fell under Case IV whereas otherwise it fell under Case V.

"The word 'Securities' has no legal signification which necessarily attaches to it on all occasions of the use of the term. It is an ordinary English word used in a variety of collocations; and it is to be interpreted without the embarrassment of a legal definition and simply according to the best conclusion one can make as to the real meaning of the term as it is employed in, say, a testament, an agreement or a taxing or other statute as the case may be." per Lord Shaw in Singer v. Williams, 7 Tax Cases 419; (1921) 1 A.C. 41.

"A 'security', I take it, is a possession such that the grantee or holder of the security holds as against the grantor a right to resort to some property or some fund for the satisfaction of some demand, after whose satisfaction the balance of the property or fund belongs to the grantor. There are two owners and the right of the one has precedence of the right of the other. A share in a Corporation does not answer the above description. There are not two owners, the one entitled to a security upon something and the other entitled to the balance after satisfying the demand. A share confers upon the holder a right to a proportionate part of the assets of the Corporation; it may be a proportionate part of its profits by way of dividend or it may be a proportionate part of its distributive assets in liquidation. There is no owner other than himself," per Lord Wrenbury in Singer v. Williams, supra.

"The normal meaning of the word 'securities' is not open to doubt. The word denotes a debt or claim the payment of which is in some way secured. The security would generally consist of a right to resort to some fund or property for payment; but I am not prepared to say that other forms of security (such as a personal guarantee) are excluded. In each case however where the word is used in its normal sense some form of secured liability is postulated. No doubt the meaning of the word may be enlarged by an interpretation clause contained in a statute . . . but in the absence of any such aid to interpretation I think it clear that the word 'securities' must be construed in the sense above defined, and accordingly does not include shares or stock in a company," per Viscount Cave in Singer v. Williams, supra.

Receivable and payable.—It will be noted that the words used are not "received" and "paid" and that as a consequence the 'accrual' basis is to be adopted under this section. It is doubtful however whether, in the face of rulings like the one in St. Lucia Usines and Estates, (1924) A.C. 508, interest can be taxed before it is received, unless it is part of profits of a business, profession or vocation and is taxed on an accrual basis under section 13.

In any case, under section 18, tax can be collected at source only when interest is actually paid, and under section 19 the tax cannot be collected by the Income-tax Officer until there has been failure to collect under section 18. Therefore, even if tax is levied on an accrual basis the interest being included in 'total income', i.e., for regulating tax on other blocks of income, the tax on the interest itself cannot be collected till the interest has been actually received.

Interest on securities does not come under section 18-A for the purpose of provisional advance payments of tax.

Receivable—Whether in British India.—The interest need not necessarily be receivable in British India. It is sufficient if it accrues or arises there, see Raja Bahadur Bansilal Motilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 54 Bom. 460. The question by whom the income is receivable is of some importance when it has to be decided whether a trustee or beneficiary should be assessed, Trustees of Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1934 I.T.R. 148 (P.C.). These decisions however were given before the amendment of section 4 and section 41 in 1939.

Interest chargeable under the Act, etc.—See section 42 as to the nature of such interest.

Conditions to be satisfied to secure allowance.—(a) The interest should be payable in British India; or (b) if payable outside British India but chargeable under section 42, (i) must be interest on a public loan issued before 1st April, 1938, (ii) or tax on it has been paid under section 18, or (iii) there is an agent under section 43 (who need not have been already assessed). As to (iii), the Income-tax Officer's judgment is evidently to be the determining factor. For similar provisions, see sections (9) (1) (iv) proviso, 10 (2) (iii) and 12 (2) (b).

Income from securities—Deductions.—The following executive instructions have been issued:

Where a Bank or other concern engaged in business similar to that of a Bank receives deposits or loans in the course of its business and invests the money so borrowed as occasion arises, the entire interest on such borrowings will be allowed as a deduction against its entire income liable to tax without attempting at allocation of the borrowed money to investments in tax-free and other securities.

Where, however, there is a definite proof (not a mere inference) that a certain sum was specifically borrowed by a Bank or similar concern for the purpose of investment in tax-free securities and has been so invested, the interest on money so borrowed will be set-off against the interest on the tax-free securities only

In the case of Co-operative Societies whose business income has been exempted from tax under section 60 of the Act, a proportionate amount of interest will be allowed against the income from interest on taxed and tax-free securities. This interest will bear the same proportion to the total interest paid as the capital invested in securities bears to the total working capital.

Under each category of income—sections 7 to 12—the law sets out what deductions may be made in arriving at the taxable income; and no deductions were contemplated in respect of interest on securities, till the first proviso was added in 1933, Maharaja, etc., Sahi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 6 Pat. 29; 2 I.T.C. 281; Rajni Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Patna, 4 I.T.C. 264; Raja Bijoy Singh Dudhuria v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 57 C. 918; Forbes v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 4 I.T.C. 1; all these rulings were given before the first proviso was inserted; other deductions than those allowed by the proviso, e.g., brokerage on sale or purchase are not admissible even now. The first proviso applies only to taxable securities while the second applies to tax-free ones, Madras Provincial Co-operative Bank v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1942 I.T.R. 490.

Accrued interest since the date of last payment paid to a vendor is not deductible, Rajni Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 4 I.T.C. 264; Rm. Ar. Ar. Rm. Arunachallam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, (unreported case) (see also Wigmore v. Thomas Summerson & Sons, 9 Tax Cases 577 and other cases under section 3), not even if such interest is specially quoted in the contract of sale, Havelishah Sardari Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 298, nor the depreciation in the value of securities held by a bank, In re Tata Industrial Bank, 1 I.T.C. 152; Punjab National Bank v. Emperor, 2 I.T.C. 184.

Impartible Hindu Family.—Interest received under section 8 or under section 12 (but not income under section 9) by the holder of an impartible Hindu family is taxable on the basis of his being an individual even though he may have sons from whom he has not divided. In its simplest form the question is whether the interest comes to him as the person beneficially interested or as a manager on behalf of himself and others, Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Diwan Kishan Kisorc, 1941 I.T.R. 695 (P.C.).

Indian Tax-free Securities in Burma.—Under clause 10 of the Burma Adaptation of Laws Order and section 148 of the Government of Burma Act, income-tax-free securities of the Government of India issued before the Government of Burma Act came into force could not be made liable to income-tax in Burma during their currency, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Central Bank of India, 1940 I.T.R. 264.

Set-off.—The net income under section 8, after deducting the interest paid out, can be negative; and in that case the loss can be set-off under section 24 against other heads of income.

United Kingdom Law.—In the United Kingdom, the Crown has in certain cases the right to choose under which head of income it shall tax an assessee (see notes under section 6) and the law and practice in that country do not therefore form a guide for interpreting the Indian law in this respect.

See however Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand, 17 A.T.C. 139 (H. of L.) referred to under section 10 (2) (iii).

9. (1) The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head "Income from Property" in respect of the bona fide annual value of property consisting of any buildings or lands appurtenant thereto of which he is the owner, other than such portions of such property as he may occupy for the purposes of any business, profession or vocation carried on by him the profits of which are assessable to tax, subject to the following allowances, namely:—

(i) where the property is in the occupation of the owner, or where it is let to a tenant and the owner has undertaken to bear the cost of repairs, a sum equal to one-sixth of such value;

(ii) where the property is in the occupation of a tenant who has undertaken to bear the cost of repairs, the difference between such value and the rent paid by the tenant up to but not exceeding one-sixth of such value;

(iii) the amount of any annual premium paid to insure the property against risk of damage or destruction;

(iv) where the property is subject to a mortgage or other capital charge, the amount of any interest on such mortgage or charge; where the property is subject to an annual charge not being a capital charge, the amount of such charge; where the property is subject to a ground rent, the amount of such ground rent; and where the property has been acquired, constructed, repaired, renewed or reconstructed with borrowed capital, the amount of any interest payable on such capital:

Provided that no allowance shall be made in respect of any interest or annual charge payable without British India and chargeable under this Act, not being interest on a loan issued for public subscription before the 1st day of April, 1938, except interest or a charge on which tax has been paid or from which tax has been deducted under section 18 or in respect of which there is an agent for the payee in British India who may be assessed under section 43;

(v) any sums paid on account of land revenue in respect of the property;

(vi) in respect of collection charges, a sum not exceeding the prescribed maximum;

(vii) in respect of vacancies, the part of the annual value, which is proportional to the period during which the property is wholly unoccupied or, where the property is let out in parts that portion of the annual value, appropriate to any vacant part, which is proportional to the period during which such part is wholly unoccupied.

(2) For the purposes of this section, the expression "annual value" shall be deemed to mean the sum for which the property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year:

Provided that, where the property is in the occupation of the owner for the purposes of his own residence, such sum shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed not to exceed ten per cent. of the total income of the owner.

(3) Where property is owned by two or more persons and their respective shares are definite and ascertainable, such persons shall not in respect of such property be assessed as an association of persons, but the share of each such person in the income from the property as computed in accordance with this section shall be included in his total income.

Rule 7.—Under section 9 (1) (vi) of the Act, the sum to be allowed in respect of collection charges shall not exceed 6 per cent. of the annual value of the property.

History.—Under the Act of 1886, income from house property was taxable under "Other income", and there was no provision in the Act as to what deductions could be made. There was also a special section (section 24) as regards occupying owners. These persons were assessed at five-sixths of the annual value of the house.

In the 1918 Act, the corresponding section covered only house property, and did not cover other buildings or lands appurtenant to any buildings. Also, all house property was taxed under this head and a corresponding deduction was made under "business" in respect of premises used for business.

Clause (iv) of sub-section (1) was amended in 1933 so as to permit the deduction of interest on borrowed capital even if not charged upon the property and was further expanded in 1939.

The following are the more important among the changes made in 1939:—(a) the exception now applies to property used not only for the assessee's business but for his profession or vocation; (b) interest, etc., paid to non-residents are disallowed except under certain conditions; (c) the allowance in respect of vacancies has been made less discretionary; (d) the annual value can now be a negative figure and set-off against other income; (e) sub-section (3) was added in order to deal with cases of joint ownership of property. The words "net" and "after deducting the foregoing allowances" qualifying "annual value" and occurring twice in clause (vii) were omitted in 1940.

Provincial property tax.—A property tax, levied by a province, on buildings and lands, even if based on annual value, is not necessarily a tax on income, and may be merely a tax on lands and buildings within item 42 of the Provincial legislative list in the Government of India Act. In section 9 of the Income-tax Act, the income from property is one of the elements making up the total income of the tax-payer, which is what is taxed, and the fact that this element is measured by the 'annual value' of the property does not necessitate the conclusion that every tax based on the 'annual value' is a tax on income. It is not the measure, but the substance that has to be seen, Sir Byramji Jeejeebhoy v. Province of Bombay, 1939 I.T.R. 670.

Property outside British India.—On the analogy of Schedule A of the English Act, the Madras High Court held under the pre 1939 law that this section applies only to property in British India, property outside falling under "Other Sources" (section 12), A. S. P. L. V. R. Ramaswami Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1933 I.T.R. 389; A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 59. Under the present law, however, where a resident in British India owns property abroad, his income therefrom is to be worked out with reference to section 9 even if the property is acquired in the course of business, S. N. A. S. A. Annamalai Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1944 I.T.R. 254; Arunachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1945 I.T.R. 183.

Business premises.—Buildings or lands appurtenant thereto, occupied by the owner for his business, profession or vocation, the profits of which are assessable to tax cannot be taxed under section 9, and no allowance will be given under section 10 for any notional rent of such premises, the profits being taxable without deduction of rent for such premises. If, for any reason, the business, profession or vocation is not assessable, then the income from property will be taxable.

Property and business.—See In re Kaladan Suratee Bazar, 1 I.T.C. 50 [under section 2 (4)] and Mangalagiri Factory case, 97 I.C. 850; 2 I.T.C. 251 [under section 10 (2) (vi)]. The computation of income from property should be calculated under section 9, and not under section 10. Income derived from 'property' is a specific category, and the mere fact that the owner of a 'property' is a company will not make the income one derived from 'business'. In re Commercial Properties, Ltd., 3 I.T.C. 23. On the other hand, in the Mangalagiri case, 2 I.T.C. 252 and Commissioner of Income-tax v. Bosotto Brothers, the Madras High Court ruled that depreciation allowance was admissible on mills (in the first case) and a hotel building (in the second case) when let out as part of a business. It was held by the Allahabad High Court that income from leasing land and erecting stables thereon is income from 'other sources' and not from 'property', but the correctness of this view was doubted by the Privy Council, In re Basantrai Takhat Singh, 60 I.A. 307; 55 All. 452; 6 I.T.C. 459.

The erection of buildings for rent is ordinarily of the nature of investment and not of that of trade or business; but even if the ownership and letting of buildings should be so conducted as to make the transactions a business, the assessment should be still made under section 9.

Under section 12 (3), however, which was introduced in 1941, it would seem that income from buildings let out along with machinery or plant should be treated as income from 'other sources' and not as income from property under section 9.

Where the actual profits exceed what is taxable under section 9 and the ownership and letting are of the nature of business it is not open to the Crown to make an assessment under section 9 on a notional income in accordance with that section and a supplementary assessment under section 10 or 12 of the difference between the actual profits and the notional income. Cf. Sahsbury House Estate, Ltd. v. Fry, 15 Tax Cases 266: (1930) A.C. 432 (H.L.). If however the income is of a composite nature arising partly from the ownership of property and partly from other trade, e.g., the profits of a brewer from a "tied house" which arise partly from the ownership of the public house and partly from the sale of liquor to the publican, assessments can be made separately for each part of the income, Alfred Leney & Co. v. Whelan, 13 A.T.C. 100 (K.B.D.).

In Shop Investments v. Sweet, 19 A.T.C. 35 (K.B.), it was held, on the facts, that the difference between the Schedule A assessment and the actual rent was a profit arising out of the business of letting of the premises. In Croft v. Seywell Aerodrome, 1942 I.T.R. 96 (Sup.) the facts in which were peculiar, the Court of Appeal reached a somewhat contrary conclusion. See, however, the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1940 which allows an additional assessment in such cases, and for this purpose, it was held in Mellows v. Buxton Palace Hotel, 1944 (C.A.), that compensation paid by Government to an owner of a commandeered building is of the nature of rent, the Crown being the tenant.

The various rulings of the United Kingdom referred to above rest on provisions not to be found in the Indian law. Under the latter, if a property (or part thereof) is not used for business and therefore falls under section 9, the income therefore is merely the 'annual value' (less the allowances) as defined therein; and if it is used for the business, the compensation received (say) for commanding will ordinarily be a receipt of the business of a revenue nature and therefore taxable as a business receipt. So also, rent received for a part of the business premises. The tax under section 9 is on the owner's rights in the property and his ability to exploit such rights; if he exploits the property itself, apart from his rights in it, and if such exploitation is not for his business, profession or vocation and at the same time produces income, such income, it would seem, would fall to be taxed under section 12 as income from 'other sources'.

Property—What it includes.—The tax is payable under this head in respect of property consisting of any building or lands appurtenant to a building by the owner of such property. Lands not attached to a building are not chargeable under this section. The income derived from vacant lands let out in urban areas for the purpose, e.g., of storing material, is chargeable to the tax under section 12. (Income-tax Manual.)

Land.—Would evidently include ponds, etc., if they are 'appurtenant' to the buildings. 'Appurtenant' means usually enjoyed with or occupied with, see Bayley v. G. W. Railway, 26 C.L.D. 434; Ongley v. Chambers, (1824) 8 Moore C.P. 66 (Stroud). 'Appurtenance' is obviously a question of fact, and income if any from surplus land would fall to be taxed under section 12.

'Building'.—"What is a building is a question of degree and circumstances; its ordinary and usual meaning is a block of brick or stone work covered by a roof", per Lord Esher, M.R., in Moir v. Williams, (1892) 1 Q.B. 264.

In restrictive covenants, various questions may arise as to what constitutes a 'building', but for the purpose of income-tax, the word must obviously be construed in the sense of a structure possessing "annual value". It would therefore include docks, wharves, bridges and the like.

Annual value—Property occupied by owner.—In reckoning total income of the owner, the annual value of the house which the owner himself occupies should not exceed 10 per cent. of the total income. By annual value here is clearly meant gross annual value before making the various deductions permitted under section 9 (1), and not the net annual value after these deductions have been made. "Total income" [see section 2 (15)] excludes income to which the Act does not apply, e.g., agricultural income [see section 4 (3) (viii)].

The insertion of the word "own" between the words "his" and "residence" indicates that the phrase applied only to a human being and not to a fictional person like a company. The benefit of the proviso to the second sub-section cannot therefore be claimed by a company in respect of its offices. In re The Calcutta Stock Exchange Association, Ltd., 1935 I.T.R. 105: 62 Cal. 547.

Definition of annual value.—Tax is chargeable, in respect, not of any actual rental or cash received but of the bona fide annual value. The bona fide annual value is the full annual rental at which the building could be let from year to year if the owner bears all owner's burdens, including municipal rates or taxes chargeable on the owner and if the tenant bears all tenant's burdens including municipal rates and taxes chargeable on the tenant. It differs from the actual annual rent payable on a long term lease or the actual rent payable on a yearly lease under a privileged rental or with tenant's liability to pay owner's rates or taxes. (Income-tax Manual).

The words 'bona fide' are otiose, the expression 'annual value' having been defined by sub-section (2). 'Bona fide' merely repeats the idea of the word 'reasonably' in that sub-section. A decision on 'bona fide' or 'reasonable' value is necessarily a decision on a pure question of fact. see Gour's case, 3 I.T.C. 33. It seems obvious from the definition that the annual value includes the value of any easement rights that may go with the buildings or lands.

The liability to tax under section 9 arises out of ownership of the property and irrespective of whether the owner can receive the annual value or not. Trustees, therefore, who own a building occupied by beneficiaries free of rent are liable to tax. D. M. Vakil v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1946 I.T.R. 298 (Bom.).

Annual value—How to be worked out.—The annual value is a question of fact to be determined on the evidence. It is only when the actual rent is not ascertainable or does not represent the true rent that the question of a hypothetical tenant and the rent that he would pay arises. In shops, for example, the annual value would not necessarily be the same as 365 times the daily rent. In ascertaining the annual value, no allowance should be given for cost of repairs, interest on capital, fair profits and the like; for, the assessee would then get double deductions in respect of certain items, e.g., repairs, and escape altogether in respect of others, e.g., interest and profits. There is no analogy between Municipal Acts which allow such deductions for the purpose of local taxation and the Income-tax Act which specifically provides for certain deductions only from the gross annual value, Sooratee

Bazaar, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 99 [reviewing Sooratee Bazaar v. Municipal Corporation of Rangoon, 5 R. 715]. William v. Sanders, (1927) 2 K.B. 498 and Attorney-General v. Mutual Tontine, etc., Association, (1876) 1 L.R.Ex.D. 469. Even the actual rent paid is only prima facie evidence of annual value and a consideration of the rents paid for similar and similarly situated properties in the locality may show the annual value in any particular case to be less or more than the rent actually paid, Lallamal Sunghamlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 250; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 762.

Owner's taxes.—A Division Bench of the Lahore High Court held in Nawab Muhammad Akbar Khan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 344 that the expression 'annual value' in section 9 (2) includes House tax payable to a local authority, realised by the landlord from the tenant. Another Division Bench of the same High Court came to a different conclusion in Chuna Mal Salig Ram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 465. The matter again came up before a Full Bench of five Judges of the Lahore High Court in Chuna Mal Salig Ram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 316. The Full Bench held, approving, 3 I.T.C. 465, and overruling 3 I.T.C. 344 that the 'annual value' of property under section 9 does not include sums paid by tenants to owner on account of Municipal House tax payable by owner. The Calcutta High Court dissented from the above Full Bench ruling, In re Krishnalal Seal, 60 Cal. 357. The annual value is a hypothetical sum, and the question who pays tax can come in only to the extent that the actual rent is evidence of annual value. If the tenant pays the tax, it is obviously part of the consideration paid by him to the landlord. A bench of seven Judges of the Lahore High Court overruled the decision of the previous Full Bench in Chuna Mal Salig Ram's case and adopted the view of the Calcutta High Court, Lallamal Sunghamlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 250. See also Gappumal Kanhaiyalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1945 I.T.R. 210 (All.). The term 'annual value', it should be noted, does not necessarily mean the annual money benefit derivable from the property by the landlord.

The present executive instructions in the Income-tax Manual referred to later follow the above decisions and explain how owner's and occupiers taxes should be dealt with. The form of the Return of income (Rule 19) makes the position clear.

Under the English Acts, there are elaborate rules regarding the ascertainment of 'annual value', but these are of no assistance in interpreting the Indian law. Reference however may be made to cases of rating, the general principles of which (in so far as they are not in conflict with provisions in Income-tax laws) can be applied to valuations for income-tax purposes also. That is, the Income-tax Officer should value the property with due regard to the environment, the nature of the building, its amenities both internal and external, and so forth, and not merely with reference to its bare ground and its four walls and the roof, see L. C. C. v. Erith Churchwardens, (1893) A.C. 562; Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Assessment Committee, (1901) A.C. 175; Kirby v. Hunslet Union Assessment Committee, (1906) A.C. 43; all, rating cases.

"Whatever is fixed to the realty so as to pass landlord's fixtures in a demise of the premises must be taken to be part of the premises for the purpose of ascertaining its rateable value," per Blackburn, J., in Childley v. West House, (1874) 32 L.T. 486.

"Things which are on the premises to be rated, and which are there for the purpose of making, and which make the premises fit as premises for the particular purpose for which they are used, are to be taken into account in ascertaining the rateable value of such premises. . . . It seems to me that when things are brought into that category they would pass by a demise of premises as such between landlord and tenant."—Per Lord Esher, M.R., in Tyne Boiler Works v. Tynemouth, (1886) 18 Q.B.D. 81.

See also the following cases:—Stocks v. Sulley, 4 Tax Cases 89 infra and Gundry v. Dunham, 7 Tax Cases 12, referred to under section 23.

"Annual value is but an hypothetical sum arrived at in a certain manner."—Per Buckley, L.J.

It is 'not an actual but an hypothetical sum'.—Per Kennedy, L.J., in R. v. Special Commissioners: Ex parte Essex Hall, 5 Tax Cases 636; (1911) 2 K.B. 434.

In the words of the English Poor Law statutes, it is the "rent at which hereditament might reasonably be expected to be let from year to year free of all usual tenant's rates and taxes and to the commutations, tenth charge if any."

Under the United Kingdom law, insurance premia paid on property cannot be deducted in full in all cases, and an attempt was made in Turner v. Carlton, 5 Tax Cases 395; (1909) 1 K.B. 932, in which the lessor agreed to pay the insurance premium, to deduct this premium from the rent before ascertaining the annual value. The case was thrown out on other grounds, but Channell, J., incidentally expressed the opinion that the deduction was not admissible. It was held in a later case House and Property Investment Co. v. Kneen, 17 A.T.C. 113 (K.B.), that in such circumstances the gross rent, i.e., including the insurance premium and not the net rent is the annual value. In India, under section 9 (1) (iii), the annual premium paid for insurance against damage or destruction can be deducted.

Under the United Kingdom law (section 138 of the 1918 Act), if a dispute arises as to 'annual value' under Schedule A or B, the General Commissioners may if they consider necessary, and shall, if required by the appellant, direct him to cause a valuation to be made by a person of skill named by them, and may require the same to be verified on the oath of such person. The annual value shall thereupon be determined in accordance with such valuation; and with reference to this provision, it has been held that the function of the Commissioners is finally and formally to adopt the valuation of the person appointed, except in cases of dishonesty, fraud or other apparent invalidity, Lyons v. Collins, 15 A.T.C. 510 (C.A.).

Evidence of municipal valuations.—Though the annual value is a question of fact, the value adopted by local bodies for rating purposes would have a high evidential value. See Gundry v. Dunham, 7 Tax Cases 12, referred to under section 23; but the municipal valuation would not bind the Income-tax Officer.

Reasonably.—"It would be unreasonable to expect an exact definition of the word. Reason varies in its conclusions according to the idiosyncrasy of the individual and times and circumstances in which he thinks. The reasoning which built up the old scholastic logic, sounds now like the jingling of a child's toy. But mankind must be satisfied with the reasonableness within reach; and in cases not covered by authority, the verdict of a jury

(or the decision of Judge sitting as a jury) usually determines what is reasonable in each particular case, but frequently reasonableness 'belongeth to the knowledge of the law', and therefore to be decided by the justice.
 . . . " (Co Lete 56, B)—

Cost of building.—It would be open to the Income-tax Officer in arriving at the annual value to take into account the cost of erection of the building, though, ordinarily, it would only be a remote consideration, Dewanchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1933 I.T.R. 218; 7 I.T.C. 358.

Annual value—Evidence—Lease—Not conclusive.—A mother granted to her son a lease of a public house at a rent of £19-10s., such lease, dated 2nd May, 1898, being in continuation of one dated July, 1889. The Commissioners considered that they were not bound to accept either lease in the circumstances as conclusive evidence of the annual value of the premises, and fixed such value at £40. The Court affirmed the determination of the Commissioners, Stock v. Sulley, 4 Tax Cases 98; In re Babulal Raj Garhia, 1936 I.T.R. 148 (Cal.).

Of which he is the owner.—Should evidently be constituted as 'of which he was the owner during the previous year, the previous year being understood of course with reference to section 2 (11). The present tense in 'is' has no specific reference to the point of time at which the tax is assessed. Section 9 is primarily a section of computation, the liability to tax being determined by sections 3 and 4. The liability to tax will therefore not cease merely because since the close of the 'previous year' the assessee has ceased to own the property, In re Beharilal Mullick, 2 I.T.C. 328 (Cal.); 54 Cal. 630; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 553.

According to one view, since abandoned 'of which' means 'of which annual value' if the section is to be in conformity with the general scheme of the Act, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Abubaker Abdul Rehman, 1939 I.T.R. 139; consequently where beneficiaries receive the income the trustees having no discretion as to its disposal, the beneficiaries are the owners. Commissioner v. Income-tax, Bombay v. Ibrahimji Hakimji, 1940 I.T.R. 501.

"It must be presumed that the Legislature was aware that the expressions 'owner', 'ownership' and the verb 'to own' in its various tenses, have been frequently used in Acts of a similar nature, and further that they can be and are used in various meanings in different Acts, in some of which they have been specially defined for the purposes of particular sections. Nevertheless, the expression has not been defined for the purposes of this Act. It may have the narrow and technical meaning of the full ultimate and legal owner, but if this was intended, it could easily have been expressed, and the failure to do so points to it not having been so intended," The Burma Railways Company v. The Secretary of State for India, 1 I.T.C. 140; A.I.R. 1921 L.B. 9; 64 I.C. 801—in which it was accordingly decided to tax a Railway company managing a State-owned Railway.

In Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Diwan Kisan Kisore, 1939 I.T.R. 427, the Lahore High Court dissented from the above rulings of the Bombay and Rangoon Courts; and the Privy Council also in the same case on appeal, 1941 I.B.R. 695, agreed with the Lahore High Court that whatever the difficulty in applying to particular cases the simple and ordinary phrase 'of which he is the owner', it is not permissible to substitute a phrase of dubious and noticeably different meaning. In that case it was held that the owner of buildings of an impartible Hindu family is the family even though the holder thereof may be the owner of the income.

The Privy Council felt that the question of ownership is of some difficulty when it has to be settled whether a trustee or a beneficiary should be taxed, Trustees of Sir Currimbhoy Ibrahim Baronetcy Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1934 I.T.R. 148; 61 I.A. 209.

See also D. M. Vakil v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1946 I.T.R. 208 already referred to under "Annual value".

See also notes under sections 40 and 42 as to the taxation of trustees and agents.

The word 'owner' may even include a person with a right of occupancy only and without full right of property, cf. Lady Miller v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 15 Tax Cases 25; (1930) A.C. 222.

"There may be cases, as, for instance, the case of a person who receives an allowance from his father, where the sum is certainly not assessable under any clause of the Income-tax Act, and yet it represents income which the man is free to expend as he pleases. And, conversely, there are such cases as that of a person who has a life-rent of a house under a trust or settlement, which he is, by the terms of the deed, precluded from letting. There again his right is not value in money, because he cannot let it, and yet he could undoubtedly be subject to assessment under Schedule A, and without relief from any other party," per Lord McLaren in Corke v. Fry, 3 Tax Cases 335; 32 Sc.L.R. 341.

'Owner' evidently means beneficial owner, cf. Joly v. Pinhoe Nurseries, Ltd., 20 Tax Cases 271 (K.B.D.); (1936) 1 All. E.R. 841, in which under Schedule B of the United Kingdom Act (occupier's tax) it was unsuccessfully contended that the trustee in bankruptcy was retrospectively occupier from the time of the act of bankruptcy. Lawrence, J., held that 'occupation' meant beneficial occupation. The radical right of a bankrupt, however, in his sequestrated estate is nothing but a right of reversion to the balance remaining after the creditors are satisfied, for which balance he is entitled to call the trustee to account. It is not a specific right to particular assets or a right which applies specifically to that part of the reversion which originated from revenue on the one hand and that part which originated from capital on the other. Therefore, the income of the estate is the income of the trustee, who alone has the right to put it into his pocket as income, and cannot become the income of the bankrupt on his re-investiture, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Fleming, 14 Tax Cases 78 (C.A.). Following this ruling, the Calcutta High Court have held, In re Official Assignee (Estate of Jnanendranath Pramanik) 1937 I.T.R. 233, that the Official Assignee is the owner of property under his administration for the purpose of this section.

In Eglinton v. Norman, 46 L.J.Q.B. 559 the expression was defined as "The person in whom (with his or her assent) it (the property) is for the time being beneficially vested, and who has the occupation or control or usufruct of it, e.g., a lessee is during the term the owner of the property demised."

In the context in section 9, a distinction is implied between an 'owner' and a 'tenant'; and it would appear from the general structure of the section—which merely contemplates the taxation of the annual value (subject to certain deductions)—that it is intended to tax only one person, that is, the ultimate owner. The intermediate tenants if any, are chargeable on their income as income from ‘other sources’ under section 12—if the circumstances are such that the intermediate persons cannot be taxed under section 10 (Business). See dicta in In re Gooptu Estates, Ltd. (Calcutta), 57 C. 910.

The Allahabad High Court took the view, In re Basantirai Takhat Singh, 4 I.T.C. 324 and 5 I.T.C. 442, that if a house is built on leased land and would eventually revert to the lessor, the lessee should be taxed in respect of rents received from the houses and shops and from squatters to whom portions of leased land had been let out, under section 12 ‘income other sources’ and not under section 9. This view however was incidentally questioned by the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Basantirai Takhat Singh, 1933 I.T.R. 197; 60 I.A. 307; 6 I.T.C. 459 before whom this particular point was not taken on appeal. If the house will not revert to the lessor (e.g., perpetual lease) the lessee should be taxed under section 9, Rochiram Khattar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 6 I.T.C. 127. A person constructing a building on leased land is liable to be taxed as owner in so far as he has the right to remove the superstructure, Madras Cricket Club v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1934 I.T.R. 209. If the superstructure cannot be removed and if the house will revert to the lessor, it has still to be definitely decided whether or not the case falls under section 9 and if so who is the owner.

Before an assessee can be taxed as ‘owner’, it must be decided that he is in fact the owner of the property in question, and this decision rests with the Income-tax Officer subject to the usual rights of appeal and reference. The mere existence of a dispute as to title, even when a suit has been filed, cannot, of itself, hold up an assessment; otherwise, it would be open to an assessee to delay an assessment indefinitely by arranging for the institution of collusive proceedings, In re Keshardeo Chamria, 1937 I.T.R. 246 (Cal.). In this case, in a suit for partition in a Mitakshara Hindu family, a consent decree was passed declaring two persons (of whom the assessee was one) to be equally entitled to the residue of an estate, and a Commissioner was appointed to partition the estate. Meanwhile the two persons were allowed to collect the income of the estate and incur the necessary expenditure. The Income-tax Officer assessed each of the two on one half of the annual value of the property as owners thereof, and it was held that the assessments were in order, and that the assessee (and the other person) were not managers on behalf of another under section 41.

Repairs: [Section 9 (1) (i)].—The allowance to be made on account of repairs, has nothing to do with the period for which the house has been occupied. The allowance is also a fixed sum, namely, one-sixth of the annual value, and it can neither be reduced nor increased by the Income-tax Officer. Similarly, under clause (ii) of section 9 (1) where the tenant has undertaken to bear the cost of repairs, the allowance is also a fixed amount, being the difference between the annual value of the house and the rent paid by the tenant, subject to a maximum of one-sixth of the annual value.

The allowance will be given in full even when an allowance is given for vacancies under clause (vii).

In the United Kingdom, only the actual cost of the repairs is allowed.

Proof of expenditure.—The allowance for repairs, being a fixed figure can be claimed without any proof; on the other hand, the allowances under clauses (iii) to (vi) are related to actual expenditure and the Income-tax Officer is entitled to demand proof of such expenditure.

Property—Insurance deductions: [Section 9 (1) (iii)].—The only insurance deduction permissible is the amount of the annual premium paid to insure the property against risk of damage or destruction. According to the old departmental instructions, which do not, however, find a place in the latest edition of the Income-tax Manual, where an owner insures against loss of rent and asks for an allowance on account of the annual premium for such insurance, it should be allowed if such owner agrees to pay tax on any amount recovered from the insurance company. Where no such allowance is claimed or allowed, tax is not to be charged on the amount recovered from the insurance company.

Annual premium.—It is not usual to enter into contracts for fire, etc., insurance for long periods, but if a person entered into such a contract and paid a lump sum premium for a longer period than one year, only the premium for one year could be deducted from the income. See however, the meaning of the word 'annual' in annual profits discussed by Rowlatt, J., in Ryall v. Hoare, 8 Tax Cases 521; also see section 10 (2) (iv) and 15 in which the word 'annual' does not appear. The omission of the word "annual" in section 10 (2) (iv) is probably accidental.

Damage or destruction.—From any cause whatever, e.g., fire, earthquake, lightning or civil commotion. 'Damage' means a partial injury to the property whereas 'destruction' is complete damage.

Mortgage, ground rent, etc.—[Section 9 (1) (iv)].—The question arises, under this clause of the sub-section, whether, when the property is subject to a mortgage or charge, the amount of interest to be allowed as a deduction should be the interest that has accrued, or the interest that has been actually paid during the year. In respect of premiums paid for insurance or on account of land revenue, the word 'paid' has been used in clauses (ii) and (v); and it would seem, from the absence of the word 'paid' in clause (iv), that a charge or interest on mortgage may be deducted when it has accrued—even if it has not been paid, Beharilal Mullick v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 54 Cal. 636; 2 I.T.C. 328.

Outside the Presidency towns, a mere deposit of title deeds will not result in a charge. In re Basantraï Takhat Singh, 4 I.T.C. 324; see also section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

So long as there is a mortgage or charge, the purpose for which the mortgage or charge was created is irrelevant and interest can be deducted from the annual value. On the other hand, where income from land is assessed under section 12, no such deduction can be made unless the mortgage is for the purpose of earning the income under assessment. In re Amulyadhan Addy and others, 1936 I.T.R. 164 (Cal.).

Where the property belongs to a Hindu undivided family and what is mortgaged is only the share of an individual member the interest on the mortgage cannot be deducted either from the income of the family or from that of the individual member. Both the property and the mortgage should relate to the same assessee if the interest is to be deducted, In re Amulyadhan Addy and others, supra.

Before, 1933, no allowance was given for interest unless there was a mortgage or charge. From that year allowance is given for interest on capital borrowed for acquiring the property, even if there is no mortgage or charge; and since 1939, the concession is extended to money borrowed for constructing, reconstructing, repairing or renewing the property.

The word 'annual' in 'annual charge' simply means 'recurring' and does not exclude interest or charge for shorter periods. See Ryall v. Hoare, referred to under section 4 (3) (vii). All the items referred to in this clause can be claimed on an "accrued" basis, and there is nothing requiring that they should have been actually paid in the accounting year concerned. In respect of the concluding item as already pointed out no charge is necessary on the property.

It was claimed in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Mahomedbhoy Rowji, 1943 I.T.R. 320 that the Bombay City Municipal-tax was an "annual charge" because, if the tax fell into arrear, it became a charge on the property. The claim was disallowed. Per Beaumont, C.J. "I do not find it very easy to say what is the meaning of an 'annual charge'. The words would mean a charge arising annually. But charges, as a rule, do not arise annually. The words, I think, would cover a charge to secure an annual liability. . . . I find it impossible to suppose that the Legislature (having regard to the scheme of the Act, which allows only payments to preserve the property or earn income), whatever they may have intended the words to cover, can have intended to include Municipal taxes in such an expression as an annual charge, not being a capital charge." A similar view was taken by the Madras High Court in Muhammad Keyi, v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1943 I.T.R. 484 in respect of the urban-tax on immovable property in Bombay City. That tax is neither an 'annual charge' nor land revenue. The relevant Act clearly distinguishes between the tax and land revenue. On the other hand it was held in Gappumal Kanhaiyalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1945 I.T.R. 210 (All.) that house tax and water-tax were deductible under section 9 (1) (iv) on the ground that under the relevant Municipal Act these taxes were first charges on the buildings or lands.

In re Chovringhee Properties, Ltd., 1944 I.T.R. 434 (Cal.) a company purchased its debentures with an overdraft from a bank with whom the debentures were pledged as security. Interest was paid on the overdraft but no interest was paid on the debentures. It was held that interest on debentures was allowable (following In re Beharilal Mullick) even though it was not paid, because the debentures had not been cancelled and were alive and the Bank could have proceeded against the accumulated interest on the debentures if there had been a default in the overdraft account. The result however, is at variance with the general scheme of the Act which allows only for actual or accrued expenditure and not for remotely contingent and possible expenditure, and even then it should be noted that in this particular case, the Bank could not have claimed more than the interest on the overdraft, though it could have proceeded against the interest on the debentures.

A house inherited or received as a gift with an attached debt will not receive exemption in respect of interest unless there is a mortgage or charge, for it is not 'acquired' with borrowed capital.

The proviso prohibits the allowance of interest or charge payable to a non-resident except under certain conditions, c.f. first proviso to section 8, proviso to section 10 (2) (iii) and section 12 (2) (b).

As to what is chargeable under the Act, see sections 4 and 42.

Property—Collection charges.—[Section 9 (1) (vi)].

As regards collection charges, Rule 7 fixes 6 per cent. of the annual value as the maximum amount permissible. The burden lies on the assessee to prove that he has incurred the expenditure claimed by him as allowance. Legal expenses incurred in recovering rents from tenants are allowed subject to the following conditions:—(a) Only net expenses, that is, expenses deducting any costs recovered from the opposite party are allowed. (b) The total allowance for collection charges including legal expenses allowed does not exceed the statutory 6 per cent.

No collection charges can arise in respect of property occupied by the owner. Under this clause notional expenditure cannot be claimed, Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 10 Pat. 261. This allowance is in the discretion of the Income-tax Officer, i.e., with reference to the evidence before him, subject to the maximum prescribed by the rules. In re Basantraï Takhat Singh, 5 I.T.C. 441.

Legal expenses in collecting interest on arrears of rent as distinguished from the rent itself will not be deductible c.f. Ramaranvijaya Prasad v. Bihar, 1942 I.T.R. 446.

The amendment to clause (vii) in 1939 has removed most of the discretion which the Income-tax Officer had before and made the allowance more or less automatic in respect of the length of time. But it still leaves two problems uncertain, viz., (a) what is meant by "wholly unoccupied"? Would the occupation by a watchman or by a few servants be covered by these words? If not, if the question is to be one of degree, it is obvious that the Income-tax Officer must exercise some discretion. (b) What is 'appropriate' to the vacant part? This can only mean what in the judgment of the Income-tax Officer can be attributed to the vacant part in relation to the occupied parts, having regard to all the relevant circumstances.

While the Income-tax Officer would seem to have discretion about these two points, he has none in regard to the period for which the allowance is to be given.

The word 'net' before 'annual value' and the words "after deducting the foregoing allowances" after 'annual value' were omitted in 1940, in order to remove 'a legitimate grievance of property owners' (to quote the Statement of Objects and Reasons)

Under Rule 4, No. VII, Schedule A of the English Act, a vacant house is automatically exempt for the period of vacancy.

The expression used in the English Act is 'unoccupied' and not 'vacant' and its variants. In Queen v. The Assessment Committee of St. Pancras, (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 581, which was a rating case, it was held that the test of occupancy was not actual habitation of residence but the state of the house which permits of its being inhabited or resided in at any time.

Per Lush, J.—"If, however, he (the owner) furnishes it (the house) and keeps it ready for habitation whenever he pleases to go out, he is an occupier though he may not reside in it one day in a year."

In Smith v. Dauncy, 5 Tax Cases 25, a case under the Inhabited House Duty Act, the assessee paid Income-tax on property under Schedule A but disputed the liability to Inhabited House Duty. It was held that the words 'habited' and 'occupied' meant the same thing, and that the house in question which was furnished ready for use, was assessable to the Inhabited House Duty, even though it was not dwelt in or slept in by any person during the year in question.

In Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Sri Krishna Chandra Gajapati Narayana Deo, 2 I.T.C. 104; 49 Mad. 22; A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 287, the Madras High Court held, following R v. St. Pancras Committee, (1877) 2 Q.B.D. 581.

"If a man owns a house ready for his own occupation, ready for him to live in when he chooses to do so . . . he is assessable."

A house occupied by the owner, i.e., kept in such a manner that he can enter into residence at any time, and not let is not vacant unless dismantled and shut up. The contrasting terms are more appropriately 'user' and 'non-user', rather than 'occupation' and 'vacancy'. The provision in section 9 (1) (vi) is meant for let houses. It was held therefore in Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 35; 10 Pat. 261; A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 223, that the owner of a house who occupies it himself and keeps it as a guest-house cannot claim an allowance for vacancies on the ground that no one resided in the house; see however 2 I.T.C. 104 (Sri Krishna Chandra Gajapati Narayana Deo's Case.)

Unrealised rent.—A Notification under section 60 exempts from tax and also excludes from total income "such part of income under the head 'property' as is equal to the amount of rent payable for a year but not paid by the tenant and proved to be lost and unrealisable, if (a) the tenancy is bona fide; (b) the defaulting tenant has vacated, or steps have been taken to compel him to vacate the property; (c) the defaulting tenant is not in occupation of other property of the assessee; (d) the assessee has taken all reasonable steps to institute legal proceedings for the recovery of the unpaid rent, or satisfied the Income-tax Officer that legal proceedings will be useless; and (e) the assessee has for the year in which the unpaid rent was due, paid income-tax in respect of the annual value of the property to which the rent relates."

The ruling in Muhammad Naqui v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 132 I.C. 1; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 656, which permitted the deduction of unrealised rent on the strength of Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Arunachallam Chettiar, 47 Mad. 660, may now be taken as obsolete.

Deductions allowed in respect of property.—It is to be particularly noted that no deductions are permissible on account of any municipal or local rates or taxes in respect of property. Where however, under the tenancy agreement the owner pays the occupier's share of municipal tax, then the amount included in the rent on account of such tax is deductible from the gross rent for the purpose of arriving at the bona fide annual value. On the other hand if there is a stipulation that the tenant will in addition to the regular rent payable to the owner, pay to the municipality the owner's share of tax, such tax must be deemed to be a part of the rental value and must be added to the rent to arrive at the bona fide annual value. (Income-tax Manual.)

No allowance can be claimed beyond what is provided for in the section. Brokerage or Legal Charges in raising a loan would not be admissible, being of the nature of capital expenditure and not provided for.

Similarly expenditure on structural alterations, depreciation whether on the building or on its furniture or fittings, cannot be allowed as deductions. In the United Kingdom various deductions are allowed, e.g., expenditure on embankments, drainage, etc., but such allowances cannot be made under the Indian Act.

Proviso to sub-section (1).—Before 1st April, 1939, there was a proviso which limited the aggregate of the allowances under the various clauses to the annual value; in other words, annual value could not be a negative figure. With the deletion of the proviso a loss under income from “property” is possible and can be set-off or carried forward in accordance with section 24.

Property occupied by owner.—An important effect of the proviso under sub-section (2) is that if the taxable income is only from the property under residential occupation of the owner, no tax can be levied. Income not taxable under this Act, e.g., agricultural income cannot be included in “total income”.

Method of accounting under this section.—The tax under this section being levied on a notional basis, there is no provision in this section, as in sections 10 and 12, regarding the method of accounting to be adopted.

Joint ownership of property—Sub-section (3).—This sub-section resolves the difficulties created by difference of opinion in High Courts as to whether cases of such joint ownership should be treated as cases of associations of persons. See also notes under section 3. The shares referred to are shares in the income (as measured by the annual value) of the property. The words “definite and ascertainable” not only exclude cases where income cannot be divided in definite proportions but cases where the income cannot be immediately divided among the co-owners, for what is taxed is the income of the particular previous year.

The sub-section, therefore, cannot be applied to a case in which the joint owners are litigating among themselves as to their respective rights. Abdul Rahman v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 302.

10. (1) The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head “Profits and gains of business, profession or vocation” in respect of the profits or gains of any business, profession or vocation carried on by him.

(2) Such profits or gains shall be computed after making the following allowances, namely:—

(i) any rent paid for the premises in which such business, profession or vocation is carried on, provided that when any substantial part of the premises is used as a dwelling-house by the assessee, the allowance under this clause shall be such sum as the Income-tax Officer may determine having regard to the proportional annual value of the part so used;

(ii) in respect of repairs, where the assessee is the tenant only of the premises, and has undertaken to bear the cost of such repairs, the amount paid on account thereof, provided that, if any substantial part of the premises is used by the assessee as a dwelling-house, a proportional part only of such amount shall be allowed;

(iii) in respect of capital borrowed for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation, the amount of the interest paid:

Provided that no allowance shall be made under this clause in any case for any interest chargeable under this Act which is payable without British India, not being interest on a loan issued for public subscription before the 1st day of April, 1938, except interest on which tax has been paid or from which tax has been deducted under section 18 or in respect of which there is an agent in British India who may be assessed under section 43 or, in the case of a firm, for any interest paid to a partner of the firm;

Explanation.—Recurring subscriptions paid periodically by shareholders or subscribers in such Mutual Benefit Societies as may be prescribed, shall be deemed to be capital borrowed within the meaning of this clause;

(iv) in respect of insurance against risk of damage or destruction of buildings, machinery, plant, furniture, stocks or stores, used for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation, the amount of any premium paid;

(v) in respect of current repairs to such buildings, machinery, plant, or furniture, the amount paid on account thereof;

(vi) in respect of depreciation of such buildings, machinery, plant, or furniture being the property of the assessee, a sum equivalent where the assets are ships other than ships ordinarily plying in inland waters to such percentage on the original cost thereof to the assessee as may in any case or class of cases be prescribed and in any other case to such percentage on the written down value thereof as may in any case or class of cases be prescribed:

and where the buildings have been newly erected, or the machinery or plant being new has been installed after the 31st day of March, 1945, a further sum (which shall however not be deductible in determining the written down value for the purposes of this clause) in respect of the year of erection or installation equivalent—

(a) in the case of buildings the erection of which is begun and completed between the 1st day of April, 1946 and the 31st day of March 1948 (both dates inclusive, to fifteen per cent. of the cost thereof to the assessee;

(b) in the case of other buildings to ten per cent. of the cost thereof to the assessee;

(c) in the case of machinery or plant, to twenty per cent. of the cost thereof to the assessee;

Provided that—

(a) the prescribed particulars have been duly furnished;

(b) where full effect cannot be given to any such allowance in any year not being a year which ended prior to the 1st day of April, 1939, owing to there being no profits or gains chargeable for that year, or owing to the profits or gains chargeable being less than the allowance, then subject to the provisions of clause (a) of the proviso to sub-section (2) of section 24, the allowance or part of the allowance to which effect has not been given, as the case may be, shall be added to the amount of the allowance for depreciation for the following year and deemed to be part of that allowance, or if there is no such allowance for that year, be deemed to be the allowance for that year, and so on for succeeding years; and

(c) the aggregate of all such allowances made under this Act or any Act repealed hereby, or under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1886, shall, in no case, exceed the original cost to the assessee of the buildings, machinery, plant, or furniture as the case may be;

(iii) in respect of any such building, machinery or plant which has been sold or discarded or demolished or destroyed, the amount by which the written down value thereof exceeds the amount for which the building, machinery or plant, as the case may be, is actually sold or its scrap value:

Provided that such amount is actually written off in the books of the assessee:

Provided further that where the amount for which any such building, machinery or plant is sold exceeds the written down value, so much of the excess as does not exceed the difference between the original cost and the written down value shall be deemed to be profits of the previous year in which the sale took place;

Provided further that where any insurance, salvage or compensation moneys are received in respect of any such building, machinery or plant which has been discarded or demolished or destroyed, and the amount of such moneys does not exceed the written down value, the amount allowable under this class shall be the amount, if any, by which the difference between the written down value and the scrap value exceeds the amount of such moneys:

Provided further that where any insurance, salvage or compensation moneys are received in respect of any such building, machinery or plant as aforesaid, and the amount of such moneys exceeds the difference between the written down value and the scrap value, no amount shall be allowable under this clause and so much of the excess as does not exceed the difference between the original cost and the written down value less the scrap value shall be deemed to be profits of the previous year in which such moneys were received:

Provided further that for the purposes of this clause, the original cost of a building the written down value of which is determined in accordance with the first proviso to sub-section (5) shall be deemed to be the written down value so determined as at the date of its being brought into use for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation.

(viii) in respect of animals which have been used for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation otherwise than as stock in trade and have died or become permanently useless for such purposes, the difference between the original cost to the assessee of the animals and the amount, if any, realised in respect of the carcasses or animals:

(ix) any sums paid on account of land-revenue, local rates or municipal taxes in respect of such part of the premises as is used for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation:

(x) any sum paid to an employee as bonus or commission for services rendered, where such sum would not have been payable to him as profits or dividend if it had not been paid as bonus or commission:

Provided that the amount of the bonus or commission is of a reasonable amount with reference to—

(a) the pay of the employee and the conditions of his service;

(b) the profits of the business, profession or vocation for the year in question; and

(c) the general practice in similar businesses, professions or vocations;

(xi) when the assessee's accounts in respect of any part of his business, profession or vocation are not kept on the cash basis, such sum, in respect of bad and doubtful debts, due to the assessee in respect of that part of his business, profession or vocation, and in the case of an assessee carrying on a banking or money-lending business, such sum in respect of loans made in the ordinary course of such business as the Income-tax Officer may estimate to be irrecoverable but not exceeding the amount actually written off as irrecoverable in the books of the assessee:

Provided that if the amount ultimately recovered on any such debt or loan is greater than the difference between the whole debt or loan and the amount so allowed, the excess shall be deemed to be a profit of the year in which it is recovered, and if less, the deficiency shall be deemed to be a business expense of that year;

(xii) any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) laid out or expended on scientific research related to the business;

(xiii) any sum paid to a scientific research association having as its objects the undertaking of scientific research related to the class of business carried on, and any sum paid to a university, college or other institution to be used for such scientific research:

Provided that such association, university, college or institution is for the time being approved for the purposes of this clause by the prescribed authority;

(xiv) in respect of any expenditure of a capital nature on scientific research related to the business, an allowance for each of the five consecutive previous years beginning with the year in which the expenditure was incurred or where the expenditure was incurred prior to the commencement of the business, for each of the five consecutive previous years beginning with the year in which the business was commenced, one-fifth of such expenditure:

Provided that no allowance shall be made for any expenditure incurred more than three years before the commencement of the business:

Provided further that—

(a) where an asset representing scientific research expenditure of a capital nature ceases to be used for scientific research related to such business—

(i) no allowance shall be made in respect of any previous year after the previous year in which the cessation takes place; and

(ii) if the aggregate of the amounts allowed under this clause added to the value of the asset immediately before the cessation is less than the said expenditure, there shall also be allowed in respect of the previous year in which the cessation takes place an additional deduction equal to the difference;

(b) where such asset is sold without having been used for other purposes, the sale proceeds shall be taken to be the value of the asset immediately before the cessation, and if an additional allowance or a greater additional allowance would have been made in respect of the previous year in which the cessation occurred on the basis of that value, an amount equal to the additional allowance which would have been made or as the case may be, to the difference between the additional allowance which would have been made and the additional allowance which was made for that year shall be made in respect of the previous year in which the sale occurs.

(c) where the proceeds of the sale plus the total amount of allowances made under this clause exceed the amount of the expenditure, the excess or the amount of the allowances so made whichever is the less, shall be treated as a receipt of the business accruing at the time of the sale:

(d) where a deduction is allowed for any previous year under this clause in respect of expenditure represented wholly or partly by any asset, no deduction shall be allowed under clause (vi) or clause (vii) for the same previous year in respect of that asset;

(e) where an asset is used in the business after it ceases to be used for scientific research related to the business, and a claim for an allowance under clause (vi) or clause (vii) is made in respect of that asset, the actual cost to the assessee of the asset shall be treated as reduced by the amount of any deductions allowed under this clause;

(f) clause (b) of the proviso to clause (vi) shall apply in relation to deductions allowable under this clause as it applies in relation to deductions allowable in respect of depreciation;

(g) if any question arises under clause (xii), clause (xiii) or this clause as to whether, and if so to what extent, any activity constitutes or constituted, or any asset is or was being used for, scientific research, the Central Board of Revenue shall refer the question to the prescribed authority, whose decision shall be final:

Explanation.—In clause (xii), clause (xiii) and this clause,—

(i) 'Scientific research' means any activities in the fields of natural or applied science for the extension of knowledge;

(ii) references to expenditure incurred on scientific research do not include any expenditure incurred in the acquisition of rights in, or arising out of scientific research but, save as aforesaid, include all expenditure incurred for the prosecution of or the provision of facilities for the prosecution of scientific research;

(iii) references to scientific research related to a business or class of business include—

(a) any scientific research which may lead to or facilitate an extension of that business, or as the case may be, all businesses of that class;

(b) any scientific research of a medical nature which has a special relation to the welfare of workers employed in that business, or as the case may be, businesses of that class;

(xv) any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure or personal expenses of the assessee) laid out or expended wholly and exclusively for the purpose of such business, profession or vocation.

(3) Where any building, machinery, plant or furniture in respect of which any allowance is due under clause (iv), clause (v), clause (vi) or clause (vii) of sub-section (2) is not wholly used for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation, the allowance shall be restricted to the fair proportional part of the amount which would be allowable if such building, machinery, plant or furniture was wholly so used.

(4) Nothing in clause (ix) or clause (xii) (xv?) of sub-section (2) shall be deemed to authorise the allowance of any sum paid on account of any cess, rate or tax levied on the profits or gains of any business, profession or vocation or assessed at a proportion of or otherwise on the basis of any such profits or gains; and nothing in clause (xii) (xv?) of sub-section (2) shall be deemed to authorise—

(a) any allowance in respect of a payment which is chargeable under the head 'Salaries' if it is payable without British India and tax has not been paid thereon nor deducted therefrom under section 18; or

(b) any allowance in respect of any payment by way of interest, salary, commission or remuneration made by a firm to any partner of the firm; or

(c) any allowance in respect of a payment to a provident or other fund established for the benefit of employees unless the employer has made effective arrangements to secure that tax shall be deducted at source from any payments made from the fund which are taxable under the head 'Salaries'.

(5) In sub-section (2), 'paid' means actually paid or incurred according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the profits or gains are computed under this section; 'plant' includes vehicles, books, scientific apparatus and surgical equipment purchased for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation; and 'written down value' means—

(a) in the case of assets acquired in the previous year the actual cost to the assessee;

(b) in the case of assets acquired before the previous year the actual cost to the assessee less all depreciation actually allowed to him under this Act, or any Act repealed thereby, or under executive orders issued when the Indian Income-tax Act, 1886, was in force;

Provided that in the case of a building previously the property of the assessee and brought into use for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation after the 28th day of February, 1946, 'written down value' means the actual cost to the assessee reduced by an amount equal to the depreciation calculated at the rate in force on that date that would have been allowable had the building been used for the aforesaid purposes since the date of its acquisition by the assessee and had the provisions of this Act relating to the allowance for depreciation been in force on and from the date of acquisition.

Provided further that where the provisions of the proviso to sub-section (2) of section 26 are applicable, the actual cost to the assessee referred to in clauses (a) and (b) shall be the actual cost to the person succeeded in the business, profession or vocation:

(6) A trade, professional or similar association performing specific services for its members for remuneration definitely related to those services shall be deemed for the purposes of this section to carry on business in respect of those services, and the profits and gains therefrom shall be liable to tax accordingly.

(7) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in section 8, 9, 10, 12 or 18, the profits and gains of any business of insurance and the tax payable thereon shall be computed in accordance with the rules contained in the Schedule to this Act.

General.—As a matter of convenience the section as a whole has been set out here; and the sub-sections and clauses have been repeated before the relevant notes and decisions relating to each sub-section and clause.

Previous law.—Before 1918, there were no provisions in this Act as to the method of computing income from business, the subject being governed by rules and executive instructions. The provisions introduced in 1918 did not undergo any radical changes till 1939, when very considerable changes were made; and further amendments were made after 1939 in respect of depreciation allowance. The details of all these changes are referred to in the notes relating to each sub-section and clause.

Section 11 which dealt with professional earnings was deleted (as from 1st April, 1939) and section 10 now deals with professional earnings also, the various sub-sections and clauses having been amended for this purpose.

United Kingdom Law.—This section roughly corresponds to a part of Schedule D and the Rules thereunder, and some of the General Rules.

Sub-section (1)—Assessee.—See notes under section 24 as regards the position of a partner in a firm carrying on business.

Where an assessee appointed certain managers to run his business for five years (without any right of interference on his part in regard to the executive control) and their remuneration was the net profits of the business after paying the proprietor a percentage of the gross takings and a fixed sum, and the agreement referred to the business as that of the assessee and permitted him to supervise and check bills and outstandings and the accounts it was held that the business was that of the assessee and not that of the managers, In re Nrisingha Chandra Nandy, 1936 I.T.R. 428 (Cal.).

Business.—As to what is meant by this word, see notes under sections 2 (4) (Business), 3 (Capital and Income and Mutual Concerns and Destination of Profits), 4 (3) (i) and (ii) (Charities), and 4 (3) (vii) (Casual Profits). There is no necessary inconsistency between 'agriculture' and 'business'; there can be a business in agriculture though income from such business is exempted by section 4 (3) (viii).

Profession and Vocation.—As to the meaning of the words 'profession' and 'vocation', see notes under section 4 (3) (vii)—Casual Profits, and under section 7—Salaries.

As to what constitutes a 'profession' as distinguished from 'business', see also the following Excess Profits Duty cases, in which the assessee was held to exercise a 'profession' or to carry on a 'business':—

Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. North (private school-master), (1918) 2 K.B. 705; 12 Tax Cases 41; Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Marse (a magazine editor), (1919) 1 K.B. 647; Barber & Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (a stock-broker), (1919) 2 K.B. 222; Burt and Reid v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (a commission agent), (1919) 2 K.B. 650; Smeeton v. A.G. (Engineer), 12 Tax Cases 166; (1920) 1 Ch. 85; Robbins v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (general sales manager), (1920) 2 K.B. 877; Currie v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (income-tax repayment agent), 12 Tax Cases 245. (1921) 2 K.B. 332; see also Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Marx, 4 A.T.C. 467 (C.A.), under section 2 (4).

Voluntary payments.—It is immaterial, for the purposes of taxation whether a payment is received on a voluntary basis or as of right; so long as it is the receipt of a business, profession or vocation, it is taxable. See notes under section 4 (3) (vii).

Illegal business or vocation.—The fact that a business or vocation is illegal or unlawful does not affect liability to tax. See Partridge v. Malandaine, 2 Tax Cases 179; 18 Q.B.D. 276 and other cases set out under sections 3 and 4 (3) (vii).

Company—Profession of.—A company cannot exercise a profession. It obviously can have no personal qualifications or activities which are necessary for the exercise of a profession. See Esplien (William) Son and Swainston, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1919) 2 K.B. 731, in which it was held that even though all the members of the company were professional men (naval architects) and the nature of the work was precisely the same as that done by individual professional men, the company could not exercise a profession. Also Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Hamilton & Co., 6 A.T.C. 342 (C. of A.) (commercial travellers) and Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Peter McIntyre, Ltd., 12 Tax Cases 1006 (auctioneers).

Carried on.—Implies a repetition of acts, but as to whether any such repetition is necessary, see the rulings set out under sections 2 (4), 3 and 4 (3) (vii) referred to above. 'Carry on' implies a repetition or series of acts, per Brett, L.J., in Smith v. Anderson, 15 Ch.D. 247. To carry on a business means primarily to carry on one's own business; therefore a salaried clerk does not 'carry on' business at the office of his employer, Lewis v. Graham, 20 Q.B.D. 784. A clerk in the Admiralty, for example, does not 'carry on business' at his office, Buckley v. Harrow, 19 L.J. Ex. 151.

As to the difference between 'trade exercised in the country' or 'business carried on in the country' on the one hand and 'business connection' on the other, see notes under sections 4 (1) and 42 (1).

(2) Such profits or gains shall be computed after making the following allowances, namely:—

Profits.—There is no definition of 'Profits or gains'. All that is stated in this section is that certain deductions alone are permitted in computing profits, and that the deductions would depend on the method of accounting adopted by the assessee. The section assumes that gross profit has been arrived at somehow. The gross profit will depend on the method of accounting in regard to Receipts, the exclusion of Receipts on Fixed Capital Accounts, the valuation of stocks, etc. In regard to these matters it would appear that, in the absence of any statutory provisions, the accepted principles and practice of commercial usage and accountancy should be followed, and that the accounts should represent facts with truth and accuracy. See notes under section 13.

Though the word 'income' has been dropped in this section as being less appropriate to a business than 'profits' or 'gains' the section in no way curtails or modifies the scope of sections 3 and 4 or alters the charge of income-tax, which is imposed by section 3, Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P. v. Shrimati Singari Bai, 1945 I.T.R. 224 (All.).

Whether section exhaustive.—Dicta, particularly those in earlier decisions, like In re Tata Industrial Bank, 1 I.T.C. 152 (Bom.); Howrah Amita Railway Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 2 I.T.C. 509; In re Raja Joti Prasad Singh, 1 I.T.C. 103 (Pat.), to the effect that the deductions referred to in the section are exhaustive are not of much significance, especially in view of the wide and comprehensive nature of clause (xv) [formerly clause (ix) of sub-section (2)].

In S. P. S. Ramaswami Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 53 M. 904; 59 M.L.J. 403 (S.B.), the Court observed that the deductions detailed in sub-section (2) are not exhaustive, and that all deductions permitted in commercial usage, e.g., Bad Debts, should be allowed. The Privy Council also ruled that Bad debts should be allowed even though not (then) mentioned in the section, Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. v. Sir S. M. Chitnaris, 59 I.A. 290.

Incurred.—The word 'incur' according to the Oxford Dictionary means "to become through one's action liable or subject to." The word is used here in contrast with 'paid'.

Several businesses.—The question whether particular businesses are entirely different from each other or merely branches of the same business is of importance in carrying forward losses under section 24, and if there is no right to such carry forward, in setting off losses in one business against the profits in another. The gain in a continuing business cannot be set-off against the loss in a closed business, see notes under section 24.

Whether a business is a single one with branches or is really made up of different businesses is a question of fact, Hiralal Kalyanmal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1943 I.T.R. 128; Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Ram Krishna Ramnath, 1944 I.T.R. 21.

'Any' business means 'each and every' business. Therefore, if the assessee carries on several businesses, the profits of each business should be calculated under this section and added together before any set-off is given under section 24. That section allows set-off between different heads of income as described in section 6, Mr. Ar. Ar. Arunachalam Chettiar's case, 1 I.T.C. 278; Karam Ilahi Muhammad Shafi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 456; 11 Lah. 38. In later cases, however, Siddha Gouder and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 55 M. 818; South Indian Industrials, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1935 I.T.R. 11, the same. High Court thought that the above construction of 'any' as equivalent to 'each and every' was needlessly strained, and that under section 24, an assessee could set-off loss (not capital loss) in one business against gain in another. See also notes under section 10 (2) (iii) as to the inadmissibility of set-off of losses of businesses not in existence during the year to which the income under assessment relates against profits of businesses then in existence.

Profits from foreign business.—See notes under section 4 regarding the circumstances in which foreign profits may be taxed and the method of computing such profits.

United Kingdom Law.—The following dicta relate to the United Kingdom law which, is practically the same in this respect as in India, though, in form, it differs, prohibiting all deductions except the specified ones. See also the dicta set out under section 3, as to what is 'income, profits or gains'.

"What a trader receives is a trading receipt; not a profit. The latter involves deductions on account of expenditure, adjustment on account of stocks, etc.", see per Rowlatt, J., and Lawrence, L.J., in Short Bros. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 955.

"The words 'profits and gains' are, where the context does not otherwise require, to be construed in their ordinary signification. I can see no reason for suggesting that this last-mentioned principle should not apply to the word 'Capital' when used in these statutes, that it too, where the context does not otherwise require, should be construed in its ordinary sense and meaning."—Per Lord Atkinson in Scottish North American Trust v. Farmer, 5 Tax Cases 693 at p. 705; (1912) A.C. 118.

"It cannot of course be denied that, as a matter of business, profits are ascertained by setting against the income earned the cost of earning it, nor that as a general rule for the purpose of assessment to the income-tax, profits are to be ascertained in the same way. . . . Unless the context requires a different meaning, or the words appear to be used throughout the Act in another sense, I think that they (the words 'profits or gains') must be construed according to their ordinary signification. When we speak of the profits and gains of a trade we mean that which he has made by his trading. Whether there be such a thing as profit or gain can only be ascertained by setting against the receipts the expenditure or obligations to which they have given rise."—Per Lord Herschell in Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Styles, 3 Tax Cases 185; (1892) A.C. 309, 321.

"The word 'profits,' I think, is to be understood in its natural and proper sense—in a sense which no commercial man would misunderstand."—Per Lord Halsbury (ibid.)

The Privy Council applied the above principle in the Pondicherry Railway Company's case, 5 I.T.C. 362, observing that the principle was of general application and not dependent on the peculiarities of the English tax system.

"In determining the amount assessable to the tax, deductions are to be made from the gross profits of all the expenses incurred by the owner for the time being for the purpose of earning the profits. This indeed is involved in the very idea of profits."—Per Lord Finlay in John Smith and Son v. Moore, (1921) 2 A.C. 13; 12 Tax Cases 266.

"You must find new money in order to pay the expenses year by year, but then you do find money to pay the expenses year by year, and you get the receipts year by year, and the difference between the expenses necessary to earn the receipts of the year and the receipts of the year, are the profits of the business for the purposes of the income-tax."—Per M. R. Esher in City of London Contract Corporation v. Styles, 2 Tax Cases 239.

"There can be no doubt that in the natural and ordinary meaning of language the income of a bank or trade for any given year would be understood to be the gain, if any, resulting from the balance of the profits and losses of the business in that year. That alone is the income which a commercial business produces and the proprietor can receive from it." Lawless v. Sullivan, (1881) 6 A.C. 373, 379, (P.C.).

On the other hand while following commercial practice,

"We must go . . . by the words of the Act of Parliament, and we must not allow any item in favour of the person who is taxed, merely because it is an item which would properly find its way into a loss and profits account, between a man and his partners or kept for himself. There are a great many things that a prudent trader might treat as deductions because he wished to make a fund to provide against future accidents and things of that kind which are not dealt with at all by the Income-tax Acts."—Per Baron Pollock in Rhymney Iron Co. v. Fowler, 3 Tax Cases 476; (1896) 2 Q.B. 79.

" . . . In making out the balance-sheet to show what profit a trader has made under Schedule D, it is not to be worked out in the same way that the trader would make out his balance-sheet for his own information showing what profit or loss he has made."—Per Smith, J., in Gillatt and Waiats v. Colquhoun, 2 Tax Cases 76.

" . . . As little are they bound . . . as the Income-tax Commissioners are bound . . . to take the balance-sheet of the company as the true measure of the income."—Per the Lord President in Edinburgh Southern Cemetery v. Kinnmont, 2 Tax Cases 516; 27 Sc.L.R. 71.

"But it is a very different question that is raised here as to whether, though that may be a very proper operation in a trader's balance-sheet, the sums which are received and which are proposed to be applied to redemption of capital can be properly regarded as profits under the Income-tax Acts. . . . The profits in a proper trader's balance are a very different thing from profits as these have been defined under the provisions of the statute."—Per Lord Shand (ibid.).

"But the statute refuses to take an ordinary balance-sheet or the net profits thereby ascertained as the measure of the assessment, and requires the full balance of profits without allowing any deduction except for working expenses and without regard to the state of the capital account or to the amount of capital employed in the concern or sunk and exhausted or withdrawn."—Per the Lord President in Coltress Iron Co. v. Black, 1 Tax Cases 287; 6 App. Cas. 315.

" . . . The law does not permit . . . all deductions which a prudent trader would make in ascertaining his own profits.

... —Per Stirling, L.J., in The Alianza Co. v. Bell, 5 Tax Cases 60; (1905) 1 K.B. 184.

"The phrase 'capital exhausted' does not occur anywhere in the Income-tax Acts. It is taken from a passage in Mr. McCulloch on Political Economy where he says 'profits must not be confounded with the produce of industry primarily received by the capitalist. They really consist of the produce or its value remaining to those who employ their capital in an industrial undertaking after all their necessary payments have been deducted and after the capital wasted and used in the undertaking has been replaced. If the produce derived from an undertaking after defraying the necessary outlay be insufficient to replace the capital exhausted, a loss has been incurred; if the capital is merely sufficient to replace the capital exhausted, there is no surplus, there is no loss, but there is no annual profit, and the greater the surplus is, the greater the profit.' I do not feel at all inclined to dispute the sufficiency of this definition. . . . But that is certainly not the scheme of the income-tax. . . ."—Per Lord Blackburn in Coltress Iron Co. v. Black, 1 Tax Cases 287; 6 App. Cas. 315, 329.

Taking the two groups of dicta together.

"It is plain that the question of what is or is not profit or gain must primarily be one of fact, and to be ascertained by the tests applied in ordinary business. Questions of law can only arise when . . . some express statutory direction applies and excludes ordinary commercial practice, or where, by reason of its being impracticable to ascertain the facts sufficiently, some presumption has to be invoked to fill up the gap."—Per Lord Haldane in Sun Insurance v. Clarke, 6 Tax Cases 59; (1912) A.C. 443. Accounts, however, need not be on a 'cash' basis.

"Of course the learned Master of the Rolls (Esher) does not mean there (in City of London Corporation v. Styles, 2 Tax Cases 239) by receipts, money which is actually received; he means debts which you will receive, and which therefore on their face value require an allowance for bad debts."—Per Sterndale, M.R. in Hall & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 382; (1921) 3 K.B. 152.

The question was considered at length in the leading case referred to below.

"Now in the case of a trade, it is well established that this balance (of profits and gains) is prima facie to be ascertained by deducting from the receipts of the trade the expenditure necessary to earn them. Until this has been done, it is impossible to determine whether there has been any balance of profits at all, Gresham Life Assurance Co.'s Case; (1892) A.C. 309, 323; and Ashton Gas Co. v. Attorney-General, (1906) A.C. 10, 12. However, deductions which on ordinary practice and principles might be deducted, are restricted (by Rules)."—Per Lord Atkinson in Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce, (1915) A.C. 433, 452; 6 Tax Cases 399.

"The expression 'balance of profits and gains' implies, as has often been pointed out, something in the nature of a credit and debit account in which the receipts appear on one side and the costs and expenditure necessary for earning these receipts on the other side. Indeed without such account it would be impossible to ascertain whether there were really any profits on which the tax could be assessed. But the Rule proceeds to provide that 'the duty shall be assessed, charged and paid without other deduction than is hereinafter allowed.' The difficulty is that nowhere in the Act is there any express allowance or enumeration of deductions, the scheme of the Act being to prohibit certain deductions with certain exceptions. It has been suggested that the difficulty can be overcome by treating the exceptions from the prohibitions as implicitly allowed deductions. The better view however appears to be that where a deduction is proper and necessary to be made in order to ascertain the balance of profits and gains, it ought to be allowed, provided there is no prohibition against such an allowance in any of the Rules applicable to the case, and the decision of your Lordships' House in Russell v. The Town and County Bank, 2 Tax Cases 321, and the speech of Lord Halsbury in Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Styles, 3 Tax Cases 185, clearly proceeded on this footing."—Per Lord Parker (ibid., p. 458.)

"If a subject engaged in trade were taxed simply upon 'the full amount of the balance of profits or gains of such trade' there can be no doubt that, upon the facts found in this special case, he would be entitled to deduct all the items which are now in debate before arriving at the sum to be charged. To do otherwise would neither be to arrive at the balance, between two sets of figures, a credit and a debit set, which balance is the profit of the trade nor to ascertain the profits of the trade, for trade incomings are not profits of the trade till trade outgoings have been paid or allowed for and deducted. . . . The effect of this structure, is, that, the direction to compute the full amount of the balance of profits must be read as subject to certain allowances and to certain prohibitions of deductions, but that a deduction, if there be such, which is neither within the terms of the prohibition nor such that the expressed allowance must be taken as the exclusive definition of its area, is to be made or not to be made according as it is or is not on the facts of the case, a proper debit item to be charged against incomings of the trade when computing the balance of profits of it."—Per Lord Sumner (ibid., p. 467, 468.)

The Indian Act does not use the expression 'balance of profits' but this make no difference in substance, for obviously 'profits' can only mean balance of profits. The provisions of the United Kingdom law are, in some cases, otiose. For example, notwithstanding the fact that the United Kingdom law prohibits deductions on account of expenditure not wholly or exclusively laid out for the business, it again explicitly prohibits the deduction of personal expenses, losses not connected with the trade, etc. As regards losses recoverable under an insurance or indemnity, see notes on section 10 (2) (iv) infra.

Onus on assessee.—The onus of proving that a deduction from taxable income is admissible under the Act falls on the subject. See Rowntree & Co. v. Curtis, 8 Tax Cases 678; Nopechand Magniram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 2 I.T.C. 146; Baldeodas Rameswar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 5 I.T.C. 476; Brijraj Hukumchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 5 I.T.C. 303 and R. N. Singha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 188. On the other hand, payments to known persons for admittedly trading purposes cannot be disallowed on mere suspicion, e.g., payment of royalty to a wife who holds the landlord right over her husband's colliery, Ram Kinkar Banerjee v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1936 I.T.R. 108. Deductions, in order to be admissible should fall under one of the clauses mentioned in sub-section (2).

Assessments made under section 23 (4).—It must be assumed that in assessments made under section 23 (4) "to the best of the judgment" of the Income-tax Officer (i.e., not based on the accounts of the assessee) that all admissible allowances under sections 10 and 12 have been given by the Income-tax Officer, Government Mail Motor Service v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 396; 136 I.C. 706.

Allowances not mutually exclusive.—The different sub-clauses in sub-section (2) are to be read disjunctively and cumulatively, and if an allowance falls within one of the sub-clauses, the Revenue is not at liberty to argue that the allowance is really covered by some other clause, Rathan Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 50 M.L.J. 157; 2 I.T.C. 107. See, however, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Haji Jamal Nurmuhomed & Co. 1 I.T.C. 396; 49 Bom. 362; A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 251 for a different view, see also notes under clause (xii) [now (xv)] of this sub-section.

(i) any rent paid for the premises in which such business, profession or vocation is carried on, provided that, when any substantial part of the premises is used as a dwelling-house by the assessee, the allowance under this clause shall be such sum as the Income-tax Officer may determine having regard to the proportional annual value of the part so used;

History.—The words "profession or vocation" and "annual value of the" were added in 1939.

The allowance referred to in this clause, is only in respect of that portion of the premises in which the business is carried on, and the same limitation applies to all allowances relating to premises or buildings in clauses (ii), (iv), (v), (vi) and (viii). Where premises are owned by the owner of the business, no allowance on account of rent is permissible since the owner is not liable to pay tax on the annual value of such premises, under section 9. Where the trader resides in a part of the business premises, the full rental cannot be set against the profits and the Income-tax Officer must, in each case, determine the portion of the rent that may so be set-off.

Meaning of words.—"Premises" have been nowhere defined; but see notes under section 10 (2) (ix) infra.

"Substantial" is a vague, relative word; its meaning can involve questions only of fact.

"Dwelling-house"—not necessarily a house actually dwelt in—"ordinarily comprises a building adapted for and capable of being dwelt in, and which is dwelt in whether by a care-taker or others although the larger part of it is used for trade or business", Lewin v. George Newnes, 90 L.T. 160.

Even "Inhabited dwelling-house" has been construed as equivalent to inhabitable dwelling-house, i.e., "Ready to be slept in . . . although on no single occasion during the year of assessment was it let or actually resided in", *Smith v. Daune*y, (1904) 2 K.B. 186; 5 Tax Cases 25.

Premises not in use.—While the redemption of an unexpired lease would be a capital payment [see rulings referred to under sub-clause (xii) now (xv) and in particular, Mallett v. Staveley Coal and Iron Co., 13 Tax Cas. 772 (C.A.); 1928 (2) K.B. 405; and Cowcher v. Richard Mills Co., 13 Tax Cas. 216], rent actually paid for premises once required for the business and used by it but no longer in use would be deductible. Expenditure need not be correlated to the profits of the year (see notes under clause (xv); nor can items leading to loss be ignored, items leading to a profit alone being taken into account, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Falkirk Iron Co., Ltd., 17 Tax Cases 625. The annual recurring loss in sub-letting premises acquired for the business and subsequently found unnecessary is a legitimate deduction from the profits of the business, Hyett v. Lemard, 1940 I.T.R. 133; 19 A.T.C. 180.

Rent of railway track.—In return for the grant of free land, a guaranteed income per mile and exemption from local cesses, a Railway Company agreed to share with a District Board in equal moieties the excess of profits over 4 per cent. of the capital. It was contended on behalf of the Railway that the payment of surplus profits to the Board was deductible from the taxable profits of the Railway either as the rent of the 'premises,' i.e., the track, which was laid on the free land, or as a local rate on the 'premises' or as expenditure necessary to earn that profits. Held, that payment to the Board was an appropriation of profits and not deductible from the Railway's taxable profits, Howrah Amta Light Railway Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 579; 2 I.T.C. 509.

United Kingdom law.—In the United Kingdom, certain kinds of rents for 'easements' in respect of mining leases, are taxed like patent royalties (under Schedule D, over and above the assessment of the land under Schedule A), and the payer of the rent must not deduct it from his taxable profits (though he can deduct tax when paying). There has been much litigation as to what kinds of rents fall in this class, but it is of no interest under the Indian law.

Rent paid to a partner.—In Heastie v. Veitch & Co., 12 A.T.C. 471; (1934) 1 K.B. 535; 18 Tax Cases 305, the Court of Appeal decided (overruling Finlay, J.) that rent paid by a firm to a partner for the use of business premises is deductible from the profits of the firm. The test always is whether the service for which payment is made, is made to the partner as such or in some other capacity. Under the Indian Act the payment of rent to a partner is not prohibited by sub-section (4), clause (b) which disallows only 'interest, salary, commission or remuneration made by a firm to a partner'.

Rent fluctuating with profits.—See Union Cold Storage Co., Ltd. v. Adamson, 16 Tax Cases 293, under clause (xii) [now (xv)] of this sub-section.

A landlord made extensive alterations to a building to suit a particular tenant and enable the latter to run a hotel, and the latter had to pay the cost in 50 equated half-yearly payments. It was held that the payments could not be deducted from the tenant's hotel-keeping profits and that merely calling the payments rent could not make it such, Ainley v. Edens, 19 Tax Cases 303. The expenditure was of the nature of capital. On the other hand, even if the lease says that the rent is not only in respect of the right of user but also in respect of reimbursing the cost of the building, the rent will not necessarily be of the nature of capital expenditure, for the reference to the cost of the building may be only a step in the method of fixing the rent. It has to be seen what in truth the payment represents. Race Course Betting Board v. Wild, 1944 K.B.D. (?)

Sub-letting.—If a person takes a lease of premises for his business and subsequently lets out a part of the premises which he finds to be surplus, that fact in itself will not convert the letting out into a separate trade and there is no reason why he should not be allowed to deduct the net rent paid by him from his taxable profits, Allied Newspapers, Ltd. v. Hindsley, 16 A.T.C. 410; (1937) 4 All.E.R. 677 (C.A.). This ruling however, does not mean that if a tenant develops the property for other purposes the expense of the development, even if a revenue item, can be debited to the profits of the main business for which he rented the property.

Where an Iron Company, rented certain premises which it was unable to use and let them out as far as possible to sub-tenants till the lease terminated, the difference between the rent paid by the company and the rent received from the sub-tenants was allowed as a deduction from the company's profits since the premises were rented for the business of the company and were available for it, Commissioner of Inland Revenue v. Falkirk Iron Co., 17 Tax Cases 625.

Taxes.—Even express words making a lessee liable for all public demands imposed on the owners in respect of a mine would not bring Income-tax within such a liability since the tax is not imposed on the mine as such but on the owner in respect of his income, Bengal Coal Company, Ltd. v. Janardan Kishorilal Singh Deo and another, 1938 I.T.R. 632 (P.C.). The tax therefore cannot be included in the rent.

Annual value.—The reference to proportional "annual value" of the part makes it clear that the Income-tax Officer must go by the share of annual value of the part in question and not by other considerations, e.g., share of floor area.

(ii) in respect of repairs, where the assessee is the tenant only of the premises, and has undertaken to bear the cost of such repairs, the amount paid on account thereof, provided that, if any substantial part of the premises is used by the assessee as a dwelling-house, a proportional part only of such amount shall be allowed;

Proportion.—The proportion need not be identical with that applied to (i); it will be a question of fact, for determination by the Income-tax authorities, how much of the expenditure should be attributed to each part.

It should be noted however that it is only if a substantial portion is used as a dwelling-house by the assessee, the Income-tax Officer can modify the allowance on account of rent.

(iii) in respect of capital borrowed for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation the amount of the interest paid:

Provided that no allowance shall be made under this clause in any case for any interest chargeable under this Act which is payable without British India, not being interest on a loan issued for public subscription before the 1st day of April, 1938, except interest on which tax has been paid or from which tax has been deducted under section 18 or in respect of which there is an agent in British India who may be assessed under section 43 or, in the case of a firm, for any interest paid to a partner of the firm.

Explanation.—Recurring subscriptions paid periodically by shareholders or subscribers in such Mutual Benefit Societies as may be prescribed, shall be deemed to be capital borrowed within the meaning of this clause:

History.—The proviso was added and the words “where the payment of interest thereon is not in any way dependent on the earning of profits” omitted in 1939.

Conditions to be satisfied.—While the condition about interest not being dependent on profits has been removed, stringent conditions have been imposed in other directions. These latter conditions are: (a) interest which is liable to tax but payable abroad is disallowed unless (i) it relates to a public loan issued before 1st April, 1938, or (ii) tax has been deducted at source, or (iii) there is an agent who can be assessed under section 43 (he need not have been actually assessed) and (b) interest paid to a partner in a firm is disallowed in all cases, however bona fide the nature of the interest. As to when interest payable abroad is taxable, see section 42.

Compare also sections 9 (1) (iv) and 12 (2) (b). It should be noted that the restriction in (b) applies only to interest paid to partners and not to interest paid to members of other associations.

Explanation.—This was inserted in 1922, primarily with reference to certain societies in Madras, but no rule has been made since the ‘explanation’, if applied, would give more trouble to the societies than the present procedure. The rulings of the Madras High Court in regard to the ‘mutual’ nature of some of these funds have also partly made a rule unnecessary (see notes under section 3). Where profits of such societies are taxable, interest paid by them will be allowed as a deduction and the recipients of interest will be taxed.

‘Periodically’ excludes uncertain intervals, Jones v. Ogle, 8 Ch. 192—(a case under the English Appropriation Act); see also Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Madhava Siddhanta Omnahini Nidhi, 1934 I.T.R. 427. Payments should be at fixed times and under antecedent obligation and not at variable periods and at the discretion of the payer.

The so-called share capital subscribed by members of Mutual Funds in Madras (a rupee or so per month for a fixed term re-payable thereupon with a guaranteed interest) is not share capital as contemplated by the Indian Companies Act, though these funds are registered under that Act. It is really capital borrowed for the purpose of the business and interest paid on it can be deducted from the profits of the fund if it is really mutual. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Madura Permanent Fund, 1933 I.T.R. 46; 56 Mad. 415; Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Trichy Tennore, etc., Fund, 1937 I.T.R. 702.

Interest, etc., paid to partners.—Prior to the amendment in 1939 disallowing unconditionally all interest paid to partners, there had been considerable litigation as to the circumstances in which interest paid to partners could be allowed as a deduction from the firm's profits; and the general trend of the decisions (which however have all become obsolete) was that interest on bona fide advances, made over and above the capital, for the purpose of the firm's business, all of which were primarily questions of fact, was a legitimate deduction, see A. L. S. P. P. L. Subramanian Chetti v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 3 I.T.C. 187; Bhola Singh Narsingh Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 4 I.T.C. 401; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. K. K. C. T. Chettyar Firm, 4 I.T.C. 388; Abdur Rahman & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1939 I.T.R. 602; Seth Kanhayalal Goenka v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P. and C. P., 1941 I.T.R. 70.

Where one or more partners leave the firm in the year of assessment receiving their capital with interest up to the date of their leaving, the surviving partners are not entitled to deduct from the profits of the firm, the interest so paid, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Karuppasami Moopantar, 1934 I.T.R. 284; Siddha Gowdar & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 6 I.T.C. 78. Apart from the fact that the amendment made to this clause in 1939 makes no difference between outgoing and remaining partners, the interest in question would not be in respect of capital borrowed for continuing the business.

Where the successor to the business of a dissolved firm paid interest to a partner of the old firm in respect of capital invested in the old firm, the interest was not allowed as a deduction, In re Kunjamal & Sons, 1941 I.T.R. 358.

United Kingdom Law.—Under this law no deduction is permitted on account of any annual interest or other payment payable out of profits and gains, but the assessee—payer—is entitled to deduct (and retain, subject to certain conditions) tax at the time of payment. The question what is an annual payment has therefore been of importance and there are several rulings on the subject, which are however of not much help in interpreting the Indian Statute.

Interest during construction.—In the United Kingdom where there is no provision corresponding to this clause it has been held that if interest, which is paid on debentures during construction, is debited in the assessee's accounts to capital, it cannot be claimed as a deduction from his profits, Central London Railway v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 20 Tax Cases 102; (1936) 2 All.E.R. 375; (1937) A.C. 77.

Interest dependent on profits.—Even though since 1939 the condition that the interest should not depend on the earning of profits has been removed, it does not follow that all interest depending on the earning of profits will be allowed as a matter of course. A distinction can readily be drawn between bona fide interest which takes the form of a share of profits and real sharing of profits described formally as interest. Compare the Pondicherry Railway, Indian Radio and Cable, etc., group of cases before the Privy Council referred to in the notes under clause (xii) [now (xv)]. The test will often be whether what is shown is the gross receipts or some ad hoc profits or the ultimate net profits. In a case in the United Kingdom in which a loan carried a fixed interest plus a share in the profits, it was held that the latter share was not deductible from taxable profits, A. W. Walker & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 297; (1920) 3 K.B. 648.

What is Interest.—It is the price of the use of money and should be distinguished from payments of the nature of compensation. See Simpson v. Maurice's Executors, 14 Tax Cases 591 and Hudson's Bay Co. v. Thew, 7 Tax Cases 206. There should be a capital sum and a contract to pay interest on it. A payment to a person as consideration for guaranteeing an overdraft will clearly not be interest. There is no element of interest when a guarantor of an overdraft pays up to the Bank. The liability to pay interest is that of the person guaranteed; and the liability of the guarantor is not to pay interest, but to make good the loss, on the whole, if any, Inland Revenue v. Holder, 16 Tax Cas. 540 (H.L.).

What is at first sight a premium on re-payment of capital may in truth be of the nature of interest, e.g., when the amount of premium varies with the time of re-payment and is so fixed as to form, together with a nominal low rate of interest, a reasonable aggregate rate of interest. The fact that the borrower need pay the premium only when he repays the capital makes the premium no more capital than the lender's waiving his right to receive interest every year would convert it into capital, Thos. Nelson and Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 17 A.T.C. 408 (C.S.).

Borrowing.—The capital should be borrowed: therefore, a company cannot be allowed interest on its capital. Interest paid to a partner, even on a bona fide debt due to him by the firm, has been expressly disallowed by the concluding part of the proviso.

The guaranteed interest or dividend paid by a company to its own shareholders is not deductible from the company's profits, Ahmadpur Katwa Railway v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1935 I.T.R. 277.

For the purposes of the business.—In the deed regulating the distribution of profits of an association of individuals it was laid down, inter alia, that each member would receive from the association interest on the capital which had to be invested by him for the purchase and sale of goods on behalf of the association; and it was held that this capital was not borrowed by the association for its business, Mian Channu Factories v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 203; 166 I.C. 150.

Different businesses.—"The business" referred to in this clause is the business the profits of which are under assessment, and the deductions claimable are restricted to what is necessary to earn the profits taxed. No deduction is therefore admissible from British Indian profits on account of capital borrowed—even in British India—for the purpose of business abroad, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. M. T. T. K. M. M. S. M. A. R. Somasundaram Chettiar, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 487; 2 I.T.C. 61 and 505; 54 M. L.J. 436 (F.B.). In the same case the Court suggested that "capital borrowed for the purposes of the business" meant capital borrowed and so used. This ruling was followed by the Bombay High Court in a case in which a finance company borrowed money in British India and invested it abroad retaining the income from the investments there. The company claimed that in the absence of equity in taxing statutes a literal construction of this clause permitted the deduction of the interest paid in British India from its taxable profits. The claim was disallowed on the ground that section 10 must be read with section 4. The fact that there were two separate businesses in the Madras case while in Provident Investment Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 94; 56 Bom. 92; 6 I.T.C. 21, the Bombay case the business was one, made no difference. An assessee, not a dealer in stocks and shares, borrowed money in British India and invested it abroad, income from such investments not being taxable in British India. It was held that the interest paid on the borrowings could not be deducted from his taxable income in British India, Macnabb v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 306. Similarly interest on money borrowed for the purpose of land revenue, etc., in respect of lands producing agricultural income which is not taxable cannot be deducted from other taxable income, Conville v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 137; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 595.

The position relating to investments in tax-free securities is more complicated. In Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand, (1938) A.C. 366; 17 A.T.C. 139 (H.L.), it was held that: (i) the exemption of interest on tax-free securities (e.g., British War Loans) could not be nullified by taxing the interest as part of trading profits; and (ii) the whole cost of getting funds (including interest paid to depositors) should be deducted from taxable profits. The ratio decidendi in the Court of Appeal was: (a) the Crown had no option as between different schedules (Schedule C applies to interest on securities and Schedule D to trading profits); and (b) the permissible deductions are in respect of expenditure for the purpose of the trade as a whole—and not necessarily for the purpose of the particular items of profit brought into charge. Before the House of Lords the Crown dropped its claim in respect of interest on War loans. As regards the other point, the House of Lords observed that since investments in securities were an integral part of a Bank's business, the corresponding expense was incurred for the purpose of the trade and therefore admissible in full. Expenditure incurred in the course of a trade, which is unremunerative is none the less a proper deduction; and it does not require the presence of a corresponding receipt on the credit side to justify the deduction of a particular item of expense so long as the latter is laid out for the purpose of the trade. See also Sinclair v. Cadbury Bros., (1933) 49 T.L.R. 208; 18 Tax Cases 156 (C.A.), in which land exempt from all taxes by a Statute of 1660 was used for business and it was held that the annual value of the land should be deducted from the profits of the trade in the usual course (under the United Kingdom Law); for otherwise the exemption would be nullified.

If the investments in securities are not an integral part of the assessee's business, interest can be deducted only under section 8 and in accordance therewith.

In Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. A. L. A. R. Bros., 3 I.T.C. 209; 52 Mad. 296; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1229, in which the assessee who were bankers and money-lenders started a piece goods business for financing which they borrowed money, and there were heavy losses in the piece goods business which was wound up, and the question arose in a later year whether the interest on the money originally borrowed for the closed piece goods business could be deducted from the profits of the remaining banking and money-lending business, the Madras High Court held, that on the facts the piece goods business was not a separate and distinct business from the other business of the assessee and the interest was therefore deductible. The case was more like that of branches in a multiple store, and the fact that separate accounts were kept to show whether the departments were profitable or not did not make the departments separate businesses. In a later case, South Indian Industrials, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1935 I.T.R. 11; 58 Mad. 433; A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 330, the same High Court considered that in the above ruling the Court ought to have accepted the finding of fact by the Commissioner that the businesses were separate, and that the ruling was wrong.

The later Madras decision was followed by the Lahore High Court who made it clear that an assessee cannot set-off the losses of a business which had been discontinued before the year of account against the profits and gains of a current business. Set-off can only be allowable if both the businesses are alive during the current year, British Cotton Growers' Association (Punjab), Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 279 at 304.

It has been held that interest paid in British India on capital borrowed in British India for the purpose of a foreign business can be deducted when the foreign profits are brought into British India, and that the deduction can be allowed even if all the profits of the year under assessment and the three preceding years are not brought in, provided that the actual amount brought in and taxed is not less than the deduction claimed, Harkishen Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 12 Lah. 297; 1930 Lah. 982; 4 I.T.C. 431.

The effect of some of these rulings has been altered as a consequence of the new basis of residence adopted in section 4; but the general principles underlying these rulings are still operative.

Fictitious payments.—In Nopechand Magniram v. Secretary of State, 2 I.T.C. 146, interest was paid to an unsecured creditor whom the Income-tax Officer found as a fact to be a partner. Interest was also paid to relatives of partners, mostly women; and the Income-tax Officer found that these were all fictitious payments. Held, that the Income-tax Officer was justified in his findings of fact, as no evidence to the contrary was adduced even though the assessee was given an opportunity.

A will made by a karta of a Hindu joint family referred to the credit of two sums in the books of the family business in favour of two girls and provided that the amounts "should under the control and supervision of (this son) be augmented and utilised for marriage, stridhanam, etc." No assets or funds were set apart or allocated for the purpose and the funds remained in the business. A claim to deduct interest credited to these accounts of girls was disallowed on the ground that the will was only precatory and contemplated contingent and future gifts by the son, and that the father was not competent, as a member of a joint family, to make a testamentary disposition of family property in favour of the ladies. E. V. Muthappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1945 I.T.R. 311.

Two brothers sold a cotton ginning business of theirs to a private company belonging substantially to them. The written-down value of the assets was about Rs. 5 lakhs, at which figure the assets stood in the books. The private company took over the assets for Rs. 15 lakhs which was paid for by shares for Rs. 5 lakhs and debentures for Rs. 10 lakhs. The debentures were issued in favour of two private companies registered in Canada and controlled by the brothers through their wives. These Canadian companies issued equivalent debentures to these ladies. It was held that the Income-tax Officer was justified in disallowing the interest on the debentures on the ground that they were colourable and illusory, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Harveys, Ltd., 1940 I.T.R. 307.

Guaranteed interest to Railway Companies.—The Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company was called upon to pay tax on the following items: (a) interest, debitable to the undertaking of the Secretary of State's operative capital. (b) The payment to the Secretary of State in rupee currency of the amount of the guaranteed interest payable by him on the share capital of the Company found by it and made over to the Secretary of State to be held by the latter absolutely as his property and re-payable only in the event mentioned in the agreement between the Secretary of State and the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company.

The contention of the Crown was that the Company should be taxed on its whole earnings save such sums as may be deducted under section 9 (2) of the Income-tax Act [now section 10 (2)]. Held, that the liability to tax must be determined with reference to the special agreement between the two parties and the nature of their relation to one another and that the tax should be levied on what was retained by the Company.

Per Woodroffe, J.—"In my opinion the principle applicable is that the Company should pay tax on what they get. . . .

In my opinion they are not liable in respect of sum (A). This is interest due to the Secretary of State on 15½ Million capital found by him. It is true that this capital has been the means whereby profits have been earned in which the Company share. But this is not the Company's property. . . . This interest is deducted before the profits in which the Company are entitled to share can be ascertained. It is this share of surplus profits which is income earned by the Company and so liable to tax. Sum (B) represents interest which the Company get for their three Million capital money and which has to be deducted before surplus profits can be ascertained. This is deducted in order that the Secretary of State may meet his obligations to the Company in respect of the three Million Pounds they have made over to him. It is stated that that money was borrowed in England and the liability is to pay interest in England and that the sum of Rs. 13,07,440 is payment to the Secretary of State in rupee currency of the amount of the guaranteed interest payable by him on the share capital of the Company. The guaranteed interest on the Company's share capital is payable and paid in London as in the case of a debenture obligation by the Secretary of State and is independent of the earnings of the Railway. . . . In effect the transaction is one in which the Secretary of State pays in London certain moneys to the Company which he recoups himself in this country out of the earnings of the Railway. In that view of the case I am of opinion that the Company is not liable for tax in respect of this sum", Bengal-Nagpur Railway Co. v. Secretary of State, (1922) 49 Cal. 815; A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 503; 1 I.T.C. 178.

On the other hand, in M. & S. M. Railway v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 5 A.T.C. 739; 12 Tax Cases 1111, a case relating to English Corporation Profits Tax, Rowlatt, J., held that the interest guaranteed by the Government of India is a distribution of the profits earned. The Madras High Court followed Rowlatt, J., and held in M. & S. M. Ry. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1940 I.T.R. 280, that the guaranteed interest is a part of the profits and therefore taxable in British India. The same view was also taken in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. B. B. C. I. R., 1943 I.T.R. 578. The so-called guaranteed interest was only a dividend, which was guaranteed. The recoupment of the Secretary of State's guarantee was not in respect of the undivided proceeds of the railway but fell on the company's share of the profits. If the company had been unsuccessful, the Secretary of State could not have got the recoupment beyond the company's share, i.e., if the company had no profits, the Secretary of State would have simply paid the guarantee. So, the case was one of distribution of profits in recoupment of a guarantee. If the profits were insufficient, the guarantor had to make good the balance. Subsequently, the contract between the railway company and the Secretary of State was amended, the payment of guaranteed interest inter alia, being referred to as one of the prior charges before calculating the divisible surplus; and the Railway Company claimed that the guaranteed interest was consequently deductible from the profits. The claim was disallowed. The change in the contract had made no change in the substantial position and related only to the method of account-keeping. The payment of guaranteed interest still remained a provisional payment, which the Secretary of State recovered out of the 'profits' made in British India; and the case was still one of distribution of profits in recoupment of a guarantor who guaranteed the profits, Commissioner of Income-tax v. M. & S. M. Ry., 1943 I.T.R. 380. The question what would happen if the profits of the company fell below the guaranteed limit was left open.

(iv) in respect of insurance against risk of damage or destruction of buildings, machinery, plant, furniture, stocks or stores, used for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation, the amount of any premium paid;

History.—The words "furniture, stocks or stores" were added in 1922 and the words "profession or vocation" in 1939.

Business.—Allowances in respect of insurance premia: The following Executive instructions have been issued:

Allowances in respect of insurance premia are restricted to insurance policies taken out against the risk of damage or destruction of buildings, machinery, plant, furniture, stocks or stores, used for the purposes of the particular business, profession or vocation under assessment and no allowance can be made on account of premia for other insurances. Any sums not actually expended on premia but merely set aside as a reserve for insurance cannot be allowed as a deduction.

The Act does not provide specifically for the deduction of premia on account of insurance against a loss of profit consequent on damage by fire but such premia should be allowed under section 10 (2) (xii) [now (xv)] without requiring the assessee to make a declaration in writing undertaking to declare and pay tax on any amounts received from an Insurance Company under any such policy or policies. Moneys received from an Insurance Company in respect of loss of profits caused by destruction of plant and premises by fire was held by the Privy Council in the Fir and Cedar Lumber Case, (101 L.J. P.C. 113; 1932 A.C. 441; 147 L.T. 1) to be income and liable to tax under the British Columbia Taxation Act, 1924, and the same principle holds good under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

Meaning of words.—As to what is meant by 'insurance', "there is no magic in the words 'insurance' or 'guarantee': whether the transaction is the one or the other, depends on the character of the contract itself"—per Romer, J., in Seaton v. Heath, (1899) 1 Q.B. 782. In the present context however, 'insurance' would include a guarantee.

As regards the meaning of 'damage' and 'destruction', see notes under section 9 (1) (iii).

As to 'buildings', see notes under section 9 (1).

Machinery.—"Machinery" implies the application of mechanical means to the attainment of some particular end by the help of natural forces (Stroud).

"The word 'machinery' must mean something more than a collection of ordinary tools. It must mean something more than a solid structure built upon the ground, whose parts either do not move at all or, if they do move, do not move the one with or upon the other in interdependent action with the object of producing a specific and definite result.

Their Lordships concur with Lord Davey in thinking that there is great danger in attempting to give a definition of the word 'machinery' which will be applicable in all cases. It may be impossible to succeed in such an attempt. If their Lordships were obliged to run the hazard of the attempt they would be inclined to say that the word 'machinery' when used in ordinary language prima facie means some mechanical contrivances which by themselves or in combination with one or more other mechanical contrivances by the combined movement and interdependent operation of their respective parts generate power or evoke, modify, apply or direct natural forces with the object in each case of effecting so definite and specific a result. But the determination in any given case, of what is or is not 'machinery' must to a large extent depend upon the special facts of that case". Corporation of Calcutta v. Cossipur Municipality, 49 Cal. 190 (P.C.).

"A bequest of 'Plant and Goodwill' passes the house of business held at rack-rent, also trade fixtures, benches, presses, and implements of trade; but not stock-in-trade or household furniture and effects of the ordinary kind", Blake v. Shaw, 8 W.R. 410; Johns. 732.

The Employer's Liability Act, 1880, contains no definition of "Plant", as therein used, "but, in its ordinary sense, it includes whatever apparatus is used by a businessman for carrying on his business,—not his stock-in-trade which he buys or makes for sale, but all goods and chattels, fixed or moveable, live or dead, which he keeps for permanent employment in his business", per Lindley, L.J., in Yarmouth v. France, 57 L.J.Q.B. 17; 19 Q.B.D. 647; 36 W.R. 281. In that case Esher, M.R. and Lindley, L.J., held that, a Wharfinger's horse was part of his "Plant"; so, of a Coal Merchant's ship, Carter v. Clarke, 78 L.T. 76. The carcass of a house is not part of a Builder's "Plant", Conway v. Clemence, 80 Law Times 44, 58; (1885) 2 T.L.R. 80, but scaffolding and ladders are, Cripps v. Judge, (1884) 13 Q.B.D. 583.

But (whilst recognizing Yarmouth v. France) a Cab Proprietor's horses were held not part of his "Plant" within section (2), Bills of Sale Act, 1882, because there the context,—e.g., "Trade Machinery" and "Fixtures",—indicates that "Plant", as there used, refers to something connected with the premises, London and Eastern Counties Loan Co. v. Creasy, (1897) 1 Q.B. 768; 66 L.J.Q.B. 503; 76 L.T. 612; 45 W.R. 497 (Stroud).

Qua, and by, section 104, Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, "'Plant' includes any gangway or ladder used by any person employed to load or unload or coal a ship."

"'Plant' and 'Machinery' are two quite different things", per Kekewich, J., in Re Brooke, 64 L.J.Ch. 27. On a contract for the sale of a Freehold Brewery which provided that its 'Fixed Plant and Machinery' should be paid for by valuation, Kekewich, J., held that, "speaking generally, 'Machinery' includes everything which by its action produces or assists in production; and that 'Plant' might be regarded as that without which production could not go on . . . and included such things as, brewer's pipes, vats, and the like"; and that therefore a Chimney Shaft, which was built just outside the boiler-house but formed no part of it, a double-boarded partition, forming a malt and grain store, and Staging, erected by placing joists on the stout bearers built into the walls, were not to be included in the valuation. (Stroud.), Re Nutley and Finn, W.N. (94) 64.

Plant.—It will be seen from sub-section (5) that for the purpose of sub-section (2) 'plant' includes vehicles, books, scientific apparatus and surgical equipment purchased for the purpose of the business, profession or vocation. The definition extends the ordinary meaning of the word which is as follows, viz., a set of machinery, tools, etc., necessary to conduct a mechanical business often including the buildings and grounds, or in the case of a railroad the rolling stock but not including material or produce; hence the permanent appliances needed for any institution as a Post Office. (Standard Dictionary.) So, the allowances under clauses (iv), (v), (vi) and (vii) are admissible in respect also of vehicles, books, etc., used for the purpose of the business, profession or vocation.

The following have been held to be 'plant':—Ships, Burnley Steamship Co. v. Aikin, 3 Tax Cases 275; 31 Sc.L.R. 803, a hulk which had formerly been a sailing ship and was used as a floating warehouse for coal, John Hall & Co. v. Rickman, (1906) 1 K.B. 311, railway engines, etc., and tools, Caledonian Railway v. Banks, 1 Tax Cases 487; 18 Sc.L.R. 85, and tramway rails, L. C. C. v. Edwards, 5 Tax Cases 383; 100 L.T. 444; 25 T.L.R. 319, but a stallion is not 'plant', Derby, Earl of v. Aylmer, 6 Tax Cases 665; (1915) 3 K.B. 374, nor the bed of a harbour, Dumbarton Harbour Board v. Cox, 7 Tax Cases 147; 56 Sc.L.R. 122, nor a ferro-concrete water tower, Margret v. Lowestoft Water and Gas Co., 19 Tax Cases 481; 14 A.T.C. 237 (K.B.D.).

In construing the word 'plant' for income-tax purposes especially under the Indian Act, regard must be paid to the grouping in which the word occurs. In clause (iv) of this sub-section the grouping is 'buildings, machinery, plant, furniture, stocks or stores'; in clauses (v) and (vi) it is 'buildings, machinery, plant or furniture'. Considering this grouping it would seem that the decisions under other Acts—e.g., Employer's Liability Act—declaring horses, etc., to be 'plant' will not apply to income-tax cases. In Derby v. Aylmer cited supra, though it was decided that a stallion is not plant, the question whether a traction horse was 'plant' was left open, but it is doubtful whether it is 'plant'. Similarly elephants, bullocks and other animals used in a business are not 'plant' for income-tax purposes. See clause (viii) infra inserted by Act III of 1928.

Furniture.—"It has not yet been declared what is meant by furniture"—Per Brett, M.R., in In re Parker: Ex parte Turquand, 14 Q.B.D. 636.

"A bequest of furniture may pass pictures (Cremarne v. Antrobus, 5 Rudd. 312) or fixtures; but not a library of books, Bridgman v. Dove, 3 A.I.K. 202, nor stock-in-trade, Re Presby, 92 Law Times 391" (Stroud).

But there is nothing under the Indian Income-tax Act to prevent the cost of insurance of a library of books being claimed as a deduction under section 10 (2) (xii) [now (xv)] if the library is necessary for the business.

Stocks or stores.—In commercial practice it is usual to refer to 'stocks' of the principal raw materials and of the finished goods and to 'stores' of incidental articles which are consumed in the course of manufacture. The cotton and the semi-finished and finished yarn and cloth form the 'stocks' of a cotton mill, the parts of machines, lubricating oil, coal, etc., being referred to as 'stores'.

'Stocks' exclude goodwill, Chapman v. Haym, 1 Times Rep. 397.

"The phrase comprises all such chattels as are acquired for the purpose of being sold or let to hire in a person's trade; and it probably includes utensils in trade (Seymour v. Rapier, Bunb, 28.)" (Stroud.) Utensils in trade, i.e., implements and tools would, however, in commercial practice be more often classed as 'stores' than as 'stocks'.

Used for the purpose of the business.—These words qualify all the words from "buildings" to "stores". "The business" obviously is the business under assessment. A building used by the assessee as his own residence would clearly not be covered by this clause.

Under executive instructions, where the owner of a business who also owns buildings, houses his employees in them, they are treated as being used for the purpose of the business if he charges no rent; otherwise they are dealt with under section 9.

When used.—Section 3 governs the whole Act, and in section 10, where an allowance has to be made covering a longer period than a year or ascertainable only at a later period, a definite proviso is inserted to meet the case [see clauses (vi) and (vii)]. It is therefore obvious that the buildings, etc., should have been used for the purpose of the business during the previous year, Radhakishen & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 73; Sree Gopaljee, etc., Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 267; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 376; C. P. Mangamese Ore Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1937 I.T.R. 734; Bhikaji Venkatesh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1937 I.T.R. 626, but the buildings, etc., need not have been actually so used throughout the year. 'Used' in this clause may, however, embrace passive as well as active user; machinery, which is idle, may well depreciate, particularly during the monsoon; and the ultimate test is whether, without the particular user of the asset relied upon the profits could have been made. Where, therefore, the asset has to be kept in reserve ready for use at a moment's notice (especially if so kept under covenant), it is 'used' within the meaning of this clause, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. V. B. Sathe, 1937 I.T.R. 621.

The above rulings apply equally to clauses (iv), (v) and (vi). Some of these conditions of admissibility being common under clauses (iv), (v), (vi) and (vii), the notes should all be read together. Note, however that in clause (vii), the word 'such' and not appear till the recent amendment of that clause in 1946.

Partially used.—See sub-section (3) which governs clauses (iv) to (vii) and allows deductions on a proportionate basis.

Plant, etc., leased or let.—See section 12 (3) and also notes below.

Livestock.—Insurance of livestock used in business might, arguably, be admissible, either as insurance of plant (which is doubtful) or as stocks—which presumably includes not only stocks of goods but both live and dead stock. In view, however, of the express reference to furniture which is the same as dead stock, the cost of such insurance would be more appropriately admissible under clause (xii) [now (xv)].

Sums recovered on insurance policies.—There is no doubt that sums recovered on insurance policies on account of loss of circulating capital, e.g., trading stocks, should be treated as revenue items and taxed, but recoveries on account of loss of fixed capital would be capital receipts just as the loss of such capital would be capital loss. The point is that it is part of the course of business of a prudent trader to insure stocks; and money received from insurance companies on account of loss of stocks stands on the same footing as the sale proceeds of such stocks, Green v. Glikston & Sons, (1929) A.C. 381. Or, to put it in another way, the business of a trader is to buy and sell stocks. When stocks are sold, they are converted into money. It is immaterial whether the conversion results from sales or from insurance; and it is irrelevant to argue that the business of an ordinary trader is not that of insurance.

Insurance of profits.—As regards insurance against loss of profits consequent on fire there is no difference between the provisions in the United Kingdom law and those in the Indian law. In either country if the cost of such insurance can be allowed at all it is only as expenditure incurred for the purpose of the business. Under the Indian law the expenditure cannot be allowed under section 10 (2) (iv), but, only under section 10 (2) (xii) [now (xv)]. In Usher's Wiltshire Brewery v. Bruce, 6 Tax Cases 399; [1915] A.C. 433, it was held in the United Kingdom that premia paid by a Brewery in order to provide against the loss of trade occasioned by the taking away of a licence from the defaulting tenant of a tied house was a permissible deduction from the profits of the Brewery. Similar considerations will apply to premia paid to insure against loss of profits. The test is whether the expenditure is incurred for the purpose of the business. The sum recovered under an insurance policy covering profits is not a 'capital sum' but a "profit" and therefore taxable as such in the year of receipt, R. v. B. C. Fir and Cedar Lumber Co., (1932) A.C. 441 (P.C.). Such a receipt arises from the business; it cannot be said to be a windfall, and is in fact provided for by the payment of premia every year. The fact that such a receipt will not recur every year will not make it any the less a Revenue receipt. See also Rhymney, Iron & Coal Co. v. Fowler, 3 Tax Cases 476; (1896) 2 Q.B. 79; Thomas v. Richard Evans & Co., 11 Tax Cases 790; (1927) 1 K.B. 33; Jones v. The South-West Lancashire Coal-owners' Association, Ltd., 11 Tax Cases 790; (1927) A.C. 827 and Thomas Merthyr Colliery Co. v. Davis, 17 Tax Cases 519; (1933) 1 K.B. 349 [all referred to under clause (xv), "Trade associations"]. In the last case it has been suggested that if the premium which is paid against loss of profits is not allowed, the indemnity when recovered could not be taxed as profits.

The executive instructions in the Income-tax Manual already referred to follow R. v. B. C. Fair Cedar & Lumber Co.

Insurance of Lives of Employees.—On the same grounds as premia paid to insure against loss of profits, a premium paid to insure the life of an employee who personally influences the business and whose death will cause a diminution of profits can be claimed as a deduction under section 10 (2) (xv) and the amount recovered under the insurance policy treated as profits in the year of receipt. A lump sum received by an employer from an insurance company in respect of an employee's liability policy with reference to the death of an employee is as much part of the employer's trading receipt as weekly receipts in respect of temporary disablement, Murphy v. Thomas Gray & Co., 19 A.T.C. K.B., see also in respect of insurance on the life of a director of a company, Inland Revenue v. William's Executors, 1943 I.T.R. 84 (Sup.) (C.A.) confirmed by the House of Lords. Per L. C. Simon "the question whether a particular item is to be regarded for income-tax and sur-tax as capital or income may involve questions both of law and of fact. But, in the present case, the Commissioner's determination does not disclose any conclusion of fact which would justify the view in law that the policy moneys were received by the company otherwise than as a receipt of income". Premia paid for the insurance of lives of employees for their benefit and not for that of the employer will stand on the same footing as a bonus or salary.

Insurance against accidents to employees.—Premia paid for such insurances as well as insurances against compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act will all fall under section 10 (2) (xv) and not under this clause.

Machinery, etc.—Leased.—An English company had some foreign cold storage business which it carried on either directly or through subsidiary companies. The foreign business was transferred to an American company for a term of years in consideration of certain annual payments to the subsidiary companies, whose shares the parent English company continued to own, receiving dividends therefrom. The American company also guaranteed sums necessary to meet the fixed charges of the English company and maintain its dividends. The premises, machinery and plant of the foreign business remained the property of the English company, but they were placed under the sole control of, and were used by, the American company for the purpose of carrying on the business as it thought fit. They were not demised or leased to the American company, and no rent was payable for their use, but the American company was to keep them in proper repair and working order, save as regards all ordinary wear and tear and damage by fire. The English company claimed that, in taxing its profits, deductions should be allowed for the fire insurance premiums paid by it in respect of the premises, and for wear and tear of the machinery and plant, of the transferred business. Held, that the fire insurance premiums did not represent money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade of the English company, that the machinery and plant in question was not used for those purposes, and that the deductions claimed were accordingly inadmissible.

Per Pollock, M. R.—" . . . the intention of the Legislature was not to make a broad general rule that whatever a subject likes to expend in his business could be deducted but only such sums were to be allowed to which the character could be assigned that they had been wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the subject's business. . . . The principle which is invoked is the principle, as I say, of the Usher's Wiltshire Brewery Company, Ltd., 6 Tax Cases 399; (1915) A.C. 433, and I think it is important that one should just see what rule was intended to be laid down in that case. Up to that time the ruling decision was the one in Brickwood & Co. v. Reynolds, (1898) 1 Q.B. 95; 3 Tax Cases 600. The decision there was that the repairs which were executed by brewers to their tied houses in which their beer was sold could not be allowed as a deduction from the profits and gains of their trade in arriving at the true figure to be returned for the purposes of Income-tax, and what Lord Justice Smith said there was this: It is true they incurred the expense upon these tied houses and it is true in one sense they are useful to the trade in respect of which the return to Income-tax is made, but he said, by doing the repairs to the tied houses they keep up and foster the trade of the publican which is a wholly independent trade, wholly independent of the brewers' trade, and he adds at the end of his judgment: the expense was incurred for many other things, one being the purposes of the trade of the publicans who occupy these houses. Brickwood v. Reynolds therefore took the view that this sort of expenditure, inasmuch as it was expenditure which incurred or might be considered to inure to the benefit of somebody else's trade and not the trade of the subject making the return, inasmuch as that was the case, no deduction could be claimed successfully in respect of money expended for that sort of trade, a trade which did not immediately concern the subject making the return.

The House of Lords in Usher's Wiltshire Brewery Company, Limited, overruled the case of Brickwood v. Reynolds, and they said that the deduction may be allowed in cases where the payment or expenditure is incurred for the purposes of the trade of the subject that has made the return, and it does not matter that this payment may inure to the benefit of somebody else, to the benefit of a third party; if it primarily inures and was incurred and laid out for the purposes of the trade of the subject making the return, then it is within the clause relating to deduction.

I think that it would be a very serious mistake and very misleading if the principle of the Usher's Wiltshire Brewery case was to be supposed to be this: if you can find that the expenditure has been made on commercial lines advantageously for the purpose of the business, if you are able to say that, then you are entitled to apply the rule in the Usher's Wiltshire Brewery case and to secure any deduction. I do not think that the rule was intended to be laid down so widely; you would have to scrutinise the expenditure very narrowly to find out whether it was laid out for the purpose of the subject's trade, and then ask the second question—was it laid out wholly for the subject's trade and exclusively for his trade?", Union Cold Storage Company, Ltd. v. Jones, 8 Tax Cases 725, 738; 129 L.T. 512.

If letting machinery, buildings, etc., on hire is a 'business' as defined in section 2 (4), the allowances under clauses (iv) to (vii) will apply; otherwise, the case will fall under sub-section (3) of section 12. See also notes under the latter section.

(v) in respect of current repairs to such buildings, machinery, plant, or furniture, the amount paid on account thereof;

Previous law.—The word 'furniture' was added in 1922.

Executive instructions.—The phrase "current repairs" includes minor replacements of parts provided that such replacements are not of such an extensive nature as to change the identity of the asset in question. Expenditure on any asset that would have increased its capital value if it had been done when the asset was new must be regarded as capital expenditure.

Repairs.—This is a word with an indefinite connotation. It ordinarily means "to make good defects including renewal where that is necessary". It will include patching, where patching is reasonably practicable and "where it is not you must put in a new piece", per Lord Blackburn, Inglis v. Buttery, 3 A.C. 552. But 'repairs' do not connote a total re-construction, R. v. Epsom, 76 J.P. 389.

"An agreement to keep 'in repair' a house out of repair means that the contracting party is first of all to put it in good repair having regard to its age and its class—a house in Spital-fields would not be repaired in the same style as one in Grosvenor Square—and (semble) you are to take into consideration the condition of the premises at the time of the contract", Stanley v. Towgood, 6 L.J.P. 129. (Stroud.).

'Repair' and 'Renew' are not words expressive of a clear contrast. 'Repair' is restoration by renewal or replacement of subsidiary parts of a whole. 'Renewal' as distinguished from 'repair' is re-construction of the entirety, meaning by the 'entirety' not necessarily the whole but substantially the whole subject-matter. In each case therefore you have to consider the entirety. Thus you repair a roof by putting new tiles in place of old, but if you replace the roof entirely, you are having a new one, Lurcott v. Wakeley and Wheeler, (1911) 1 K.B. 905; O'Grady v. Markham Main Colliery, Ltd., 17 Tax Cases 93.

The replacement of a water reservoir by a better and bigger one is not even partly of the nature of renewal; it is not like the replacement of lighter by heavier rails, and is really entirely of a capital nature, Margrett v. Lowestoft Water and Gas Co., 19 Tax Cases 481.

Current.—The word 'current' hardly adds to the connotation of the word 'repairs', as this word can never include total construction or re-construction on such a large scale as to make it 'capital' expenditure.

Repairs—Question of fact.—The question whether expenditure in a business—say, a shipowner's—is current as opposed to capital must essentially be one of degree and therefore one of fact. To elucidate the problem, a number of outside considerations may have to be taken into account in addition to the materials provided by the assessee, e.g., local conditions, the ordinary life of the type of boats used by the assessee and the normal cost of keeping them in serviceable condition. The assessee, however, cannot neglect to provide the Income-tax Officer with the information that is necessary and then take advantage of his own negligence to plead that the Income-tax Officer's conclusions are based on insufficient evidence, Ramanatha Reddi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 6 Rang. 175; 3 I.T.C. 10. To the extent that accountancy and business usage have a bearing, the question whether expenditure is on 'repairs' or on 'renewals' is one of fact, Fassett and Johnston v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 4 A.T.C. 89. Heavy repairs to a newly bought asset are, prima facie capital; but not necessarily; for example, if the assessee can show that the purchase price would have been the same even if the vendor had made the repairs, the cost of repairs might be revenue expenditure. See also Rhadesia Railways v. Income-tax Collector, 1933 I.T.R. 227 (P.C.) referred to under clause (xv).

Such buildings, etc.—That is, buildings, etc., used for the purpose of the business during the previous year. As to this qualification, see notes under section 10 (2) (iv).

Plant.—See sub-section (5) extending the meaning of 'plant' to books, etc., and notes under clause (iv).

(vi) in respect of depreciation of such buildings, machinery, plant, or furniture being the property of the assessee, a sum equivalent, where the assets are ships other than ships ordinarily plying on inland waters to such percentage on the original cost as may in any case or class of cases be prescribed and in any other case, to such percentage on the written down value thereof as may in any case or class of cases be prescribed; and where the buildings have been newly erected, or the machinery or plant being new has been installed, after the 31st day of March 1945, a further sum (which shall however not be deductible in determining the written down value for the purposes of this clause) in respect of the year of erection or installation equivalent—

(a) in the case of buildings the erection of which is begun and completed between the 1st day of April 1946 and the 31st day of March 1948 (both days inclusive), to fifteen per cent. of the cost thereof to the assessee;

(b) in the case of other buildings, to ten per cent. of the cost thereof to the assessee;

(c) in the case of machinery or plant, to twenty per cent. of the cost thereof to the assessee:

(a) the prescribed particulars have been duly furnished;

(b) where full effect cannot be given to any such allowance in any year not being a year which ended prior to the 1st day of April, 1939, owing to there being no profits or gains chargeable for that year, or owing to the profits or gains chargeable being less than the allowance, then, subject to the provisions of clause (a) of the proviso to sub-section (2) of section 24, the allowance or part of the allowance to which effect has not been given, as the case may be, shall be added to the amount of the allowance for depreciation for the following year and deemed to be part of that allowance, or if there is no such allowance for that year, be deemed to be the allowance for that year, and so on for succeeding years; and

(c) the aggregate of all such allowances made under this Act or any Act repealed hereby, or under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1886, shall, in no case, exceed the original cost to the assessee of the buildings, machinery, plant, or furniture as the case may be;

Written down value.—See sub-section (5), 'written down value' means—

(a) in the case of assets acquired in the previous year the actual cost to the assessee;

(b) in the case of assets acquired before the previous year the actual cost to the assessee less all depreciation actually allowed to him under this section or any Act repealed thereby or under executive orders issued when the Indian Income-tax Act, 1886, was in force.

Provided that in the case of a building previously the property of the assessee and brought into use for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation after the 28th day of February, 1946, 'written down value' means the actual cost to the assessee reduced by an amount equal to the depreciation calculated at the rate in force on that date, that would have been allowable had the building been used for the aforesaid purposes since the date of its acquisition by the assessee and had the provisions of the Act relating to the allowance for depreciation been in force on and from the date of acquisition:

Provided, further, that where the provisions of the proviso to sub-section (2) of section 26 are applicable, the actual cost to the assessee referred to in clauses (a) and (b) shall be the actual cost to the person succeeded in the business, profession or vocation:

The special initial allowances of 10, 15 and 20 per cent. in respect of assets created after 31st March, 1945 are not, it should be noted, to be deducted from the costs in determining the written down values.

Previous law.—The word 'furniture' was added in 1922. Under the 1918 Act the rates of depreciation were maxima; now they are fixed rates. Also under the 1918 Act no depreciation could be claimed unless it had been debited in the accounts. Further, that Act did not clearly permit unabSORBED depreciation being carried forward indefinitely until adjusted, as the present enactment does.

Recent changes.—The most important change made in 1939 was the adoption of the written down instead of the original cost ('straight line') basis except as regards ocean going ships; the other changes embodied either in this clause or in sub-section (5) are more or less consequential. The definition of 'written down value' in assets coming on from before 1939 was again changed in 1941, the basis being one of the depreciation actually allowed in the past instead of what was allowable. The position regarding cases of successors in business was also amended and clarified in 1939. Proviso (c) is probably intended to apply only to ocean going ships which are still given the allowance on the original cost; but, as a result of the omission to amend it consequently on the grant of the special initial allowances in respect of assets set up after March, 1945, the proviso [clause (c)] would seem to nullify, at a later stage, the concession of not deducting the allowance in determining written down value.

Special initial allowances.—It will be noted that these allowances relate only to assets set up after 31st March, 1945. The allowance for buildings is 10 per cent. and for machinery and plant 20 per cent.; but in the case of buildings begun and completed between 1st April, 1946 and 31st March, 1948, the rate is 15 per cent.

Unabsorbed depreciation.—Proviso (b) regulates unabsorbed depreciation in respect of periods after 1st April, 1939. As regards previous periods sub-section (5) provided that:

(i) the written down value was to be the actual cost to the assessee, less, for each financial year since acquisition, the amount of depreciation applicable (whether allowed or not) at the rates in force each year from 1st April, 1922 and at the rates in force on that date in respect of still earlier years;

(ii) but that if there was any unabsorbed depreciation in respect of any of these years, that amount shall not be taken off the written down value. These provisions were changed in 1941; and what is to be deducted from the cost is the sum of the allowances received whether under this Act or before.

Carry forward of losses.—Where an assessee is entitled under section 24 to carry forward a loss and also entitled under section 10 (2) (vi) to carry forward unabsorbed depreciation effect shall be given first to section 24; see proviso (b) [not (a) as inadvertently referred in clause (b) of proviso to section 10 (2) (vi)]. This point is of importance because while a loss can be carried forward only for six years, there is no limit of time for unabsorbed depreciation.

Actually allowed.—It must be assumed that in assessments made by estimate under section 23 (4) or even under section 23 (3) on 'flat' rates and so forth, that all admissible allowances have been given by the Income-tax Officer. The filing of the depreciation statement is only a matter of convenience and its absence does not mean that no allowance has been given, Government Mail Motor Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 6 I.T.C. 120; A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 396.

Succession (first proviso).—There had been difference of opinion under the old law (see below) as to whether 'original cost to the assessee' referred to the predecessor or to the successor, the Patna, Bombay and Rangoon High Courts holding the latter and the Madras High Court the former. The Privy Council overruled the Madras view but, the Bombay High Court (with a dissenting judgment) did not extend the Privy Council ruling to the first assessment on a successor under section 26 (2) (as it stood before 1st April, 1939) in respect of which he merely stepped, so to speak, into the shoes of the predecessor. This proviso makes an exception to the general rule, the latter merely following the decision of the Privy Council.

Rates of depreciation.—See Rule 8 which sets out the different rates to be allowed for the different kinds of assets.

The rates are fixed rates; and the Income-tax authorities have no discretion to alter them. The rates are also standard rates for the whole of India.

The Income-tax Officer will add back to the profits the amount, if any, written off by the assessee on account of depreciation and allow him instead this allowance as worked out under Rule 8.

Actual cost clearly includes cost of setting up, freight, etc., and all preliminary expenditure till the asset is in working order.

The fact that for some reason or other the assessee is reimbursed a part of the cost of the plant or machinery will not reduce the cost for the purpose of contributing depreciation, Corporation of Birmingham v. Barnes, 19 Tax Cas. 195; 1935 A.E.R. 92.

Wasting assets.—Depreciation is allowed only for these four items of wasting assets, viz., buildings, machinery plant and furniture; it is not admissible in respect of other wasting assets, e.g., mines, patents, and leases.

Railways and Tramways are allowed, under a notification under section 60, to claim either actual cost of renewals or the depreciation allowance; but the option once exercised cannot be changed in a later year except with the consent of the Commissioner.

Furniture, tools, etc.—This clause provides for the depreciation of furniture, etc., however petty its cost, and as a matter of convenience both to the assessee and to the Income-tax authorities such petty items are often kept out of the depreciation account and the cost of replacement allowed instead.

Rule 8.—Depreciation is allowable on the cost of installing, i.e., laying foundations, levelling, etc., as also on freight to site and similar items that are part of the cost of machinery or plant, e.g., pay of engineers, labour, etc.; the cost would also include the cost of experimental tests. Where railways are allowed the cost of renewals, no depreciation allowance will be given.

Business newly taxed.—Where a business of such a nature that the profits derived from it were not previously liable to tax owing to a special exemption conferred either by statute or by notification, or rule having the force of law (examples are Shipping Companies and Indigo Companies), is taxed for the first time, the assessee is not entitled to claim in the first year of taxation, under proviso (b) to section 10 (2) (vi), accumulated depreciation allowances for all the years during which the profits of the business were not liable to tax. That proviso clearly contemplates liability to tax in preceding years. But in such cases depreciation must be allowed year by year for the full period whatever it may be notwithstanding the fact that the value of the assets when the assessee is first taxed may be lower than the original cost.

Shares and Securities.—This clause does not apply to depreciation of shares or securities held by an assessee as part of its or his capital. If it is part of his investments, it will be fixed capital and any appreciation or depreciation thereof will not affect his Revenue account, on the other hand, if it is part of his circulating capital, it is part of his stock-in-trade and the gain by appreciation or loss by depreciation will enter his Revenue account as profit or loss. The manner in which and the extent to which such appreciation or depreciation will enter his Revenue account will depend partly on his method of accounting including that of valuation of stock-in-trade. See rulings referred to below; also notes under section 13.

Prescribed particulars.—These are set out in Part V of the form of Return of Total Income—See Rule 19 (formerly in a separate statement under Rule 9).

Onus of proof.—Unless the prescribed particulars (Part V of form of return under Rule 19) have been furnished to the Income-tax Officer no depreciation can be claimed, Pr. Al. M. Muthukaruppan Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1939 I.T.R. 76. The onus of proof as to the correctness of the particulars furnished will, as in almost everything else, rest upon the assessee. Depreciation allowances being on a percentage basis, the assessee should furnish the prime cost of each item, Ramanatha Reddier v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 6 Rang. 175; 3 I.T.C. 10; A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 152. On the other hand, a claim for the allowance cannot be summarily rejected. Even if the evidence produced is inadequate the Income-tax Officer should arrive at some finding as to the original cost, and for this purpose he should give the assessee a further opportunity if necessary, Bisheshwar Prasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 7 I.T.C. 74. Where the original cost can be ascertained, an estimated figure cannot be substituted for it. Under the present law, however, the original cost will be required only in certain cases or occasions.

The original cost is a question of fact and the mere production of documentary evidence alleging a contract is not conclusive. In Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Harveys, Ltd., 1940 I.T.R. 307, two brothers sold a ginning business of theirs to a private company, belonging mostly to them. The assets stood in the books at a value (gradually written down in the usual manner) of about rupees five lakhs but the private company took them over for Rupees fifteen lakhs and paid for them not in cash but by shares in that private company for Rs. 5 lakhs and by debentures for Rs. 10 lakhs (the latter being held by the High Court to be colourable and illusory). The Income-tax authorities declined to allow depreciation on the inflated figures of Rs. 15 lakhs and the High Court refused to interfere.

An arrangement entered into between the assessee and the Income-tax Officer as to original cost in the absence of adequate evidence does not estop the assessee from getting the figure altered if he can produce adequate evidence, Allahabad Milling, Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 6 I.T.C. 286 (All.). Where brothers partition an asset on a mutually agreed bona fide value, the original cost is not necessarily the mutually agreed value but may be the previous original cost. This was a peculiar case, and what it really did was to affirm the right of the Income-tax authorities to go behind the apparent facts, Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Seth Mathuradas Mehta, 1939 I.T.R. 160. Where property passes by bequest or inheritance, the real cost at the time of such passing, less the expenses in completing the title, is the original cost to the successor, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Solomon and Sons, 1933 I.T.R. 324.

Depreciation—Meaning of.—There is no definition of 'depreciation'. The word is used in practice by Accountants in varying senses, often including even obsolescence. Modern usage, however, confines the word to the sense of wear and tear, and even of this only that portion which cannot be made good by repairs. That is to say, depreciation represents the insidious and irreparable decay of the plant or machinery, obsolescence being used to signify the unsuitability of a machine or plant on account of its getting out of date while still fit for use.

In view of the special provisions to cover obsolescence in clause (vii) 'depreciation' as used in clause (vi) clearly excludes it. The expanded definition of 'plant' in sub-section (5) covers apparatus, books, etc., used in a profession.

The law in India in this respect has been for many years more liberal than in the United Kingdom, where, for example, neither depreciation nor obsolescence would be allowed for books, see Daphne v. Shaw, 11 Tax Cases 256; 42 T.L.R. 45. The decision in Sir Hari Singh Gour's case, 3 I.T.C. 333 is obsolete.

'Such' buildings.—That is, those used for the purpose of the business, profession or vocation which is being assessed, Sri Gopalji and Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 376; 5 I.T.C. 257; Bhikaji Venkatesh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1937 I.T.R. 626, and used during the previous year. The use of the words 'the' and of 'such' makes it clear that the asset should belong to the assessee and be used for his business, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Bosotto Bros., 1940 I.T.R. 41. See also notes under section 10 (2) (iv).

Law in the United Kingdom.—In the United Kingdom an allowance is made representing "the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year". This may mean on the one hand that no loss by depreciation shall be allowed unless expenditure has been incurred in making it good by repairs. On the other hand it may mean that after all damage by wear and tear has been made good by repairs, short of renewal, a further allowance may be made in respect of the imperceptible and irremediable deterioration due to age. That is to say, besides allowing for cost of repairs, allowance should also be made to an extent that should permit of the setting aside out of profits, of sums sufficient to provide funds to replace the instrument when by reason of physical deterioration through age it should cease to be worth repairing.

In Caledonian Railway Company v. Banks, 1 Tax Cases 487; 18 Sc. L.R. 85, the Scottish Court held that the depreciation allowance was "for diminished value as a means of earning income and not as a saleable subject" and held that no allowance could be claimed on newly added rolling stock which had not required any repair. As the law stands in the United Kingdom, the allowance for depreciation is determined entirely at the discretion of the Commissioners. In practice, however, standard rates of depreciation have been fixed in most cases by the Board of Inland Revenue for the guidance of the General and Special Commissioners. Though the Courts cannot interfere with the adequacy or otherwise of the rates, there is provision for the question to be referred to a Board of Referees if the representatives of a particular trade desire it [Rule 6 (7) of Cases I and II of Schedule D].

Cost of renewals and repairs.—Even in the United Kingdom where the allowance for depreciation is in the discretion of the Commissioners, the system of allowing the actual cost of Repairs and Renewals instead of a provision for wear and tear is not clearly provided in the law, and rests on the mutual consent of the Crown and the assessee and the convenience that it affords both. The Court, however, have generally approved of such an arrangement. In India option has been given to railways and tramways, by a notification under section 60, to claim either depreciation allowance or the cost of renewals. See notifications under section 60.

Successor to business—Unabsorbed depreciation.—In Massey & Co., Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 3 I.T.C. 302; 56 M.L.J. 431; A.I.R. 1929 M. 453, it was decided following Scottish Shireddim, Ltd. v. Lethem, 6 Tax Cases 91, that when a person succeeds to a business he is entitled to carry forward for the purpose of his assessment the unexhausted depreciation allowance of the predecessor. The depreciation allowance due to the successor should, therefore, be worked out on the original cost to the predecessor and not on the value at which the successor takes over the plant, etc. The Bombay High Court dissented from Madras, Saraspur Mills Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 56 Bom. 129; A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 216. According to that Court there is no similarity between the provisions in the English law and those in the Indian, depreciation allowance in England being based on diminished value due to wear and tear and the allowance in India being on a fixed percentage on the original cost to the assessee. The plain language of the Act cannot be ignored and the original cost to the assessee can only mean the cost to the person assessed and not that to his predecessor in business. The Patna High Court, Motiram Roshanlal Coal Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 12 Pat. 12; 6 I.T.C. 235; A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 28, followed the Bombay view; so also the Rangoon High Court, Solomon & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1933 I.T.R. 324; 11 Rang. 514; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 348. In the last case it was ruled that if a person acquires property otherwise than by purchase (e.g., inheritance), the original cost to the assessee is the real value of the property at the time he acquired it less the expenditure necessary to complete his title such as probate fees. The Madras High Court re-examined the ruling in Massey & Co.'s case and declined to go back on it, Buckingham and Carnatic Mills, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 7 I.T.C. 308. The Privy Council, however, overruled this decision, Buckingham and Carnatic Mills, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1935 I.T.R. 384; 59 Mad. 175; 9 I.T.C. 114. According to the Bombay High Court (Blackwell, J., dissenting) the ruling of the Privy Council does not apply to an assessment made under section 26 (2) (i.e., to the first assessment on the successor) in respect of which the assessee referred to is the predecessor in whose shoes the successor steps, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Mazagaon Docks, Ltd., 1938 I.T.R. 124. Both the Buckingham and Mazagaon cases related to transfers at the end of an accounting year.

In the view that the unabsorbed depreciation due to a successor on his first assessment (in which he can claim credit therefor) should be calculated as though he were in the predecessor's shoes and set-off against the successor's other income, it was held in In re Kamlapat Motilal, 1939 I.T.R. 374 (All.) (seeking to follow Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Mazagaon Docks, 1938 I.T.R. 124) but wrongly as will appear from the Privy Council decision in the Indian Iron & Steel Company's case, 1943 I.T.R. 328 that if the succession takes place in the middle of a year, the successor can claim depreciation for his part of the year also on the basis of original cost to the predecessor and also get credit for the unabsorbed depreciation of the predecessor.

In the Indian Iron & Steel Company's case, 1943 I.T.R. 328, the Privy Council pointed out that though the word 'assessee' must in certain parts of sub-section (2) be read as referring both to the predecessor and to the successor, it does not follow that the unabsorbed depreciation of the predecessor should be added on to that of or transferred to the successor. Section 26 merely deals with who is to be taxed, and once the person has been ascertained, section 10 comes into operation; and the profits of each i.e., predecessor and successor have to be computed in accordance with section 10 for the period he carried on the business, and the two added together, so that the successor pays tax as if he had been in business for the whole year (This was before the amendment in 1939). So long as the predecessor continues to own the assets, as in the Mazagaon Dock's case, the cost to the assessee may mean the cost to the predecessor, but where the property has passed to the successor, it is the cost to him that has to be adopted thereafter. See also In re Bengal Flour Mills, 1941 I.T.R. 568.

The right to carry forward unabsorbed depreciation is not a personal right which an assessee can continue to possess even after he has parted with the assets. The right automatically disappears when he has parted with the property. In re David Sassoon & Co., Ltd., 1940 I.T.R. 7 (Bom.).

Where there is a break-up of a business or an amalgamation, it should first be decided with reference to sections 25 and 26 whether the case is one of discontinuance or of succession, and then this section applied accordingly.

Depreciation—Computation of.—In respect of ocean going ships to which the basis or original cost applies is the original block of machinery, and each block constituted by a year's additions, should be treated as separate units on each of which depreciation should run independently so that block after block in chronological order is eliminated, each after its full value is written off, from the original cost on which depreciation is based.

Additions to plant during the year.—The law is silent as to the extent to which depreciation is to be allowed in respect of additions during the previous year. In the absence of any express provision to the contrary, the assessee is probably entitled to depreciation for the whole year. See also sub-section (3) which lays down a 'proportional' allowance when assets are not 'wholly' used for the business, etc. That sub-section would seem to contemplate cases of the use of the assets for more than one purpose and not to apply to cases in which the assets are in use only for the assessee's business but for a part of the year. See also notes ante and under clause (iv) as to what is meant by 'used for the purpose of the assessee's business'.

Buildings let to employees.—Under executive instructions, buildings let to employees on rent are assessed under section 9, while rent-free buildings are dealt with under section 10. It is, however, a question of fact whether a building is used for the owner's business, etc., or not, and the mere fact that rent is charged cannot be conclusive.

Unabsorbed depreciation—Partners of a registered firm.—In Ballarpur Collieries v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 255; A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 183, it was decided that a partner in a registered firm can, under section 24, set-off his share of unabsorbed depreciation against his own individual profits or income under other heads or in other businesses. The amount of loss will be increased by the admissible depreciation.

It follows that when the firm is assessed in the next year, it cannot claim to bring forward the unabsorbed depreciation the benefit of which has been already allowed to it or to the partners by way of set-off under section 24.

In Commissioner of Income-tax v. Suppan Chettiar, 4 I.T.C. 211; 58 M.L.J. 46; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 124, the Madras High Court observed that under the accepted principles of construction a proviso should not be taken by mere implication to withdraw any part of the main provision, West Derby Union v. Metropolitan Life Assurance Society, (1897) A.C. 647. The proviso in section 10 (2) (vi), therefore, gives only an additional alternative to the assessee and does not take away his right of deducting the depreciation even though such deduction will merely swell the loss under the business. Further, according to the construction put on the words 'any business' in section 10 (1) in Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. M. Ar. Arunachalam Chettiar, 1 I.T.C. 278; 47 Mad. 660; 46 M.L.J. 66, all the businesses of the assessee taken together should be taken as a single unit for the purpose of applying the provisions of section 10. The Punjab High Court went further and decided in Karam Ilahi Muhammad Shah v. Chief Commissioner of Income-tax, Delhi, 3 I.T.C. 456; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 556, that unabsorbed depreciation can be set-off under section 24 against profits under other heads of income.

Under section 24 as it stands to-day the net loss of an unregistered firm is carried forward, while that of a registered firm is apportioned among the partners, who have the right to carry forward the losses. So far as unabsorbed depreciation is concerned, in the case of an unregistered firm, only the firm as such and not the partners can carry it forward; while in the case of a registered firm, its net loss, after allowance for all 'set-offs', is apportioned among its partners, who alone have thereafter the right to carry forward the loss. But in all cases, where both loss and unabsorbed depreciation are carried forward, effect has to be given to the wiping out of the loss first, because it can be carried forward only for six years while the other can be carried forward until wiped out.

Profits earned partly outside British India—Depreciation—How computed.—Cases of assessee with profits accruing partly in British India and partly outside, when the foreign profits are not taxable under the Indian law. If the assessee furnishes annual accounts for the whole business, the second method of rule 33 could be applied. The 'world-profits' should evidently be calculated for the business under the Indian law, i.e., deductions not permitted in India but permitted in other countries should be added back and deductions admissible in India allowed. On this 'world-profits' depreciation should be allowed according to the Indian law, e.g., allowance being made for unabsorbed depreciation of pre-British India Receipts previous years, etc., and of the net income, the fraction —————

should be taken as the net taxable income in British India (without, of course, a further allowance for depreciation unabsorbed or otherwise). The same arrangement also applies to obsolescence. If shipping companies keep accounts not by the year but by 'trips', and the trade is entirely in Indian waters, the problem is simple. Otherwise some equitable method of computation has to be followed, the law not making any explicit provisions as to the computation, see section 10 (3) allowing a proportionate allowance in certain cases.

Bank—Securities held by—Depreciation of.—A banking concern claimed, in computing its profits, to deduct the amount of depreciation of war bonds and securities belonging to it arrived at by comparing the market rates at the time of closing the accounts with the original price paid for the bonds. Held, that the deduction was inadmissible.

Per Macleod, C.J.—"From the gross income only certain debits for depreciation are to be allowed, and this debit asked for by the Bank not being mentioned therein cannot be allowed. I think this was the obvious intention of the Legislature, since, while depreciation of machinery, plant and buildings can easily be calculated as provided in the Act, it would be a very different matter to have to enter into such calculations with regard to assets other than these. But this much is clear that if the profits of a business are to be calculated according to the legal definition of profits, that method of calculation must be continued from year to year, and an assessee would not be allowed to write down his assets in a year when market values had declined without writing them up when values had increased", In re Tata Industrial Bank, 1 I.T.C. 152; 46 Bom. 567.

A bank claimed to deduct the depreciation in certain securities held by it on the ground that the securities represented money lent to Government just like money lent to the bank's customers. As the bank held these securities not with the object of dealing with them as stock-in-trade from day to day in the ordinary course of business but as an emergency reserve in lieu of cash, it was held that the investments were part of the fixed Capital as distinguished from the floating Capital of the bank, and that therefore the deduction on account of depreciation was inadmissible, Punjab National Bank v. Emperor, 2 I.T.C. 184; 7 Lah. 227; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 373. This does not, however, mean that the securities held by a Bank are always of the nature of fixed capital, see In re Amritsar Produce Exchange, Ltd., 1937 I.T.R. 307 and notes under section (3) as to 'Capital and Income'.

A company is not ordinarily entitled to any allowance or deduction on account of capital lost by depreciation of its investments, Irish Catholic Church Property Insurance Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1918) 2 Ir. R. 510; 12 Tax Cases 13.

In Scottish Investment Trust Co. v. Forbes, 3 Tax Cases 231; 31 Sc. L. R. 219, it was held that the net profit made by an investment trust company during the year by realising investments at higher prices than they were bought for, should be taxed even though in the books this profit had been set-off against the depreciation of other securities which the company possessed.

In all such cases, if the business of the Bank or Company is to trade or deal in shares or securities, such depreciation would be automatically allowed, inasmuch as the shares or securities would be treated as stock-in-trade and valued at cost price or market price, whichever was lower.

Machinery let—Depreciation on.—It is a condition under this clause that the machinery, etc., should be the property of the assessee and used for the purpose of the business under assessment. In Commissioner of Income-tax v. Mangalagiri Sri Umamaheswara Gin and Rice Factory, 2 I.T.C. 251; 51 M.L.J. 360; A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1032, the assessee, who were a limited company, elected not to work their mill but to let it out to other persons who worked it. Held, by the Madras High Court, that the assessee used the factory for the purpose of the business—not of working it but of leasing it—and that deduction for depreciation was admissible. The Articles of Association contemplated the mill being let out if the company did not want to work the mill and this seems to have weighed with the Court.

Following the above, the Calcutta High Court have held that leasing out a jute press can be a business and that the lessor can claim depreciation allowance in respect of the plant so leased, In re Sadhucharan Roy Chaudhry, 1935 I.T.R. 114. The hirer of plant, etc., may be allowed the cost of repairs and minor renewals if it is necessary for earning his profits, i.e., as part of rent but he cannot claim depreciation allowance even if it is one of the conditions of his lease that he should bear the cost of depreciation; for he incurs no capital cost by way of purchasing the plant, etc., cf. Heyhoe v. Slough Theatre Co., 17 Tax Cases 488.

Where an Association composed of several firms each of which was separately assessed claimed depreciation allowance in respect of plant, etc., used by the constituent firms, the claim was rejected on the ground that the plant, etc., was not used for the business the profits of which were under assessment, Sri Gopalji & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 257.

There is no difference in principle between letting out a rice mill and machinery and letting out a building built and fitted for a hotel business, and in such cases depreciation is admissible under section 10, the case does not fall under section 9, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Bosotto Bros., Ltd., 1940 I.T.R. 41.

Sub-sections (3) and (4) of section 12 now provide in terms for allowances for insurance, repairs, depreciation and discarding of machinery, etc., let out, but that section applies only to cases where the letting out is not a business. If the letting out is a business, the case is automatically governed by section 10. Formerly it was necessary for the assessee to show that the letting out was a business; hence litigation; now the assessee can get the allowance any way.

Harbour—Silting up—Clearance of.—Where a Harbour Board charged by statute with the duty of maintaining a harbour, which included a part of a river bed deepened to give access to ships, claimed to deduct as 'wear and tear of machinery and plant' or 'repairs to premises', expenses incurred in dredging out accumulated silt. It was held, that (a) the harbour was not 'plant or machinery' nor was the silting "wear and tear"; (b) if the expenditure incurred on removing the silt was admissible at all as expenditure "on repairs of premises", it should be deducted from profits in the year actually incurred, and no part of it could be set-off against earnings in other years.

Per the Lord President.—"A Harbour bed is neither plant nor machinery. Nor is silt 'wear and tear'. . . . Next the deduction was sought to be justified as 'Repairs on premises'. For my part and speaking for myself alone I am equally unable to accept that view. According to the ordinary use of language, and we are not dealing here with technical phraseology, to dredge out silt from a harbour cannot be accurately or even intelligibly described as making 'repairs on premises'. The Revenue however considered that the outlay was 'applicable to maintenance'", Dumbarton Harbour Board v. Cox, 7 Tax Cases 147; 56 Sc.L.R. 122.

In the case, the Crown was prepared to concede that the expenditure in question could be charged to revenue, and the Court did not therefore give a decision, though the Lord President said, "It was . . . plainly capital expenditure just as much as the cost of originally making the harbour."

Renewals in lieu of depreciation cost of.—In the case of a railway, the Commissioners refused to grant an allowance for depreciation, on the ground that there was no diminution of value on account of wear and tear, the sums allowed in respect of repair, and renewals having been sufficient to meet the loss by wear and tear. They also refused to grant any allowance under the section for depreciation of new plant which had not yet been in need of repair. The decision of the Commissioners was confirmed.

Per Lord Gifford.—“The Company cannot get deduction for deterioration twice over, first by deducting the actual expense of repair and renewal, and then by deducting an additional estimate for the same thing. Nor will it do, as the Railway Company urge, to make a distinction between old and new plant, and to deal with the old plant in one way and with the new in another. I think the same principle must be applied to both”, Caledonian Railway Company v. Banks, 1 Tax Cases 487; 18 Sc.L.R. 85.

In this case it was obviously open to the Crown to have disallowed the deduction on account of renewals and allowed a deduction for wear and tear, but the Revenue, evidently as a matter of convenience, both to the assessee and to the Revenue, allowed the cost of renewals as a deduction.

The London County Council acquired some horse tramways, and reconstructed them for electric traffic. At the time of reconstruction only a part of the track was completely worn out, the average unexhausted life of the horse rails replaced being eight years. Under an arrangement agreed to by the Crown and the Council it had been the practice to allow as a deduction from profits the cost of the actual renewals in each year. The Council claimed that the deduction, under the practice, should not be restricted to the cost of renewal of the rails wholly exhausted (as conceded by the Crown), but should include an allowance for the partial exhaustion of the remainder of the track which had been reconstructed. Failing this they asked that the assessment should be amended by allowing the depreciation during the year. Held, that no question of law was involved, that, accepting the practice, the Council were not entitled to more than an allowance for renewal of the lines which had been completely worn out, and that they were not entitled to have the case re-heard on a different principle, London County Council v. Edwards, 5 Tax Cases 383; 25 T.L.R. 319.

See also Rhodesia Railways v. Income-tax, Collector, 1933 I.T.R. 227 (P.C.) referred to under clause (xv) ('Accumulated Repairs').

Live stock.—Per Rowlatt, J.—“Now those words authorise such deduction as the Commissioners may think just and reasonable as representing the diminished value by reason of wear and tear during the year of any machinery or plant. I do not know whether a horse used for traction comes within that or whether it does not, but I am clearly of opinion that the diminished value of a breeding animal, merely due to the fact that having lived a year it is a year nearer its end . . . is not within this section. You need not take only the case of an animal, you may take the case of the value of a prolific tree. You have here an article which you are not wearing out by use. You have got an article whether it be an animal or a vegetable article the life of which is only a limited term of years. As the years go on you take the produce and reproduction of the animal or the tree but when the years come to an end the animal or the tree or whatever it may be, dies or is killed because it is no longer worth keeping. The diminished value, of an animal or tree by the efflux of time is not diminished value by reason of wear and tear; it is simply diminished value because you have invested your money in a source of production which is a wasting source of production", Derby, Earl of v. Aylmer, 6 Tax Cases 665; (1915) 3 K.B. 374.

The Indian law, see clause (viii) below specifically allows for the cost of replaced dead and discarded livestock used in the business.

(vii) in respect of any such building, machinery, or plant which has been sold or discarded or demolished or destroyed, the amount by which the written down value thereof exceeds the amount for which the building, machinery or plant as the case may be, is actually sold or its scrap value:

Provided that such amount is actually written off in the books of the assessee:

Provided further that where the amount for which any such building, machinery or plant is sold exceeds the written down value, so much of the excess as does not exceed the difference between the original cost and the written down value shall be deemed to be profits of the previous year in which the sale took place:

Provided further that where any insurance, salvage or compensation moneys are received in respect of any such building, machinery or plant which has been discarded or demolished or destroyed, and the amount of such moneys does not exceed the written down value, the amount allowable under this clause shall be the amount, if any, by which the difference between the written down value and the scrap value exceeds the amount of such moneys:

Provided further that where any insurance, salvage or compensation moneys are received in respect of any such building, machinery or plant as aforesaid, and the amount of such moneys exceeds the difference between the written down value and the scrap value no amount shall be allowable under this clause and so much of the excess as does not exceed the difference between the original cost and the written down value less the scrap value shall be deemed to be profits of the previous year in which such moneys were received:

Provided further that for the purposes of this clause, the original cost of a building the written down value of which is determined in accordance with the first proviso to sub-section (5), shall be deemed to be the written down value so determined as at the date of its being brought into use for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation.

Recent Changes.—Three important changes were made in 1939.

- (i) The condition of obsolescence was given up; but
- (ii) the loss should be actually written off by the assessee; and
- (iii) excess sale proceeds will be deemed to be income when such excess arises.

In 1946, the concession was extended to buildings, and also so as to cover in all cases loss through demolition or destruction. Furthermore, the excess of sale proceeds over the original cost was exempted from tax as a capital receipt. Provisos were also added to ensure that insurance and other moneys for loss of machinery, etc., were deducted from the admissible allowance.

The rulings, both in the United Kingdom and in India as to what constitutes obsolescence are of no interest now.

Any machinery or plant.—Till 1946, the word 'such' did not find a place in this clause in the beginning words; so the questions that arise about user during the year in respect of clauses (iv) to (vi) did not arise under this clause. But any claim under any of these clauses can arise only in respect of a continuing business and not in respect of one which is sold as a whole or wound up. Similarly profits on the sale of machinery or plant in such circumstances could not be taxed under the proviso.

Buildings, Furniture, etc.—Note that neither the old nor the new clause (before 1946) applies to buildings or furniture, whereas clauses (iv) to (vi) (both old and new) so apply. See also Rao Bahadur Laxminarayan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 3 I.T.C. 269. In 1946, the clause was extended to buildings.

History.—The pre-1939 law is of little interest now. Secretary, Board of Revenue, Madras v. S. R. M. A. R. Ramanathan Chettiar, 1 I.T.C. 244, decided under the old law is of interest only in that it held that, as the statute was punctuated, it was open to it to take punctuation marks into account, and that the absence of a comma gave the clue to the correct interpretation.

Original cost—Succession to business.—The original cost to the assessee for the purpose of this clause would apparently be the same as for the purpose of clause (vi). See notes under that clause as regards the difference of opinion on the subject.

Second proviso.—This proviso as amended in 1946 results in the excess of the sale proceeds over the original cost being free from tax; but the excess up to this limit, and over the written down value is taxable as a receipt.

Third and fourth provisos.—These deal with cases other than sale. In these cases the estimated scrap value of the asset has to be taken into account, and the difference between the written down value and the scrap value has to be considered in making the allowance. If the insurance, etc., moneys do not exceed the written down value, allowance is given of the written down value minus the scrap value minus the insurance moneys; in the converse case, no allowance is given and the amount received minus the written down value plus the scrap value is taxed as a receipt in the year in which the money is received.

Fifth proviso.—This fills a lacuna and withdraws an unintended benefit. It has to be read with the first proviso to sub-section (3) which was inserted simultaneously. In the absence of these two provisos, obsolescence allowance would be allowed on the basis of an original cost relating to a time when the building was not used for the business and higher than its value when it first came to be used for the business.

Salable but not sold—When claim arises.—In respect of machinery and plant discarded but not sold, the claim for obsolescence (now for write-off) even if not obsolescent can be allowed only in the accounting year in which the machinery or plant is discarded. Radha Kishen & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 3 I.T.C. 73. If the discarding and sale do not take place in the same accounting year, there will be only one allowance viz., in the year of discarding and at the difference between the written-down value and the estimated scrap value; and there will be no further adjustment in a later year when the machinery, etc., may be sold, either by way of further allowance because it was sold for less than estimated scrap value or by way of addition to profit because the machinery, etc., fetched more than scrap value. An addition to profit will be made under the second proviso only if the selling price exceeds the written-down value, which is an entirely different thing from scrap value.

(viii) in respect of animals which have been used for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation otherwise than as stock-in-trade and have died or become permanently useless for such purposes, the difference between the original cost to the assessee of the animals and the amount, if any, realised in respect of the carcasses or animals;

History.—The clause was inserted by Act III of 1928. Draught animals and other live-stock are not 'plant', see Derby v. Aylmer, 6 Tax Cases 655; (1915) 3 K.B. 374 under section 10 (2) (vi); but they are analogous to 'plant' and it was therefore thought desirable to give some concession in respect of them. The allowance is independent of replacement. Note the word 'realised', not "realised or realisable".

The 'business', etc., referred to is the business the income of which is under assessment. Accordingly, where a dairy business had been closed in 1930 and the live-stock sold in 1932 and this loss was claimed in 1933-34 in an assessment of income from brick-kilns and property, the claim was disallowed, In re Ganeshilal Bhattarwala, (1938) I.T.R. 489 (All.).

Allowance on account of rates or taxes:—

The allowance under this clause covers only the land revenue and local rates or municipal taxes paid in respect of the portion of the premises used for the purposes of the business. Any other local rate or tax which is payable irrespective of whether profits are made or not, can be allowed only under clause (xv), if it is not prohibited by sub-section (4).

Previous law.—Under the 1918 Act, the whole tax was deductible even if only a part of the premises was used for the business. A proviso to clause (ix) [corresponding to present clause (xv)] of this sub-section inserted by Act III of 1928, prohibited the allowance of local rates on profits. The substance of this proviso was transferred in 1939 to sub-section (4).

Cesses based on Income.—In In re Raja Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo, 1 I.T.C. 103, the Patna High Court held that road, public works and similar cesses paid on income from royalties are not admissible deductions under section 12 the relevant condition in which was then identical with, and is now similar, to the corresponding condition in section 10. See clause (xv) of sub-section (2). The principle of the above division was reaffirmed in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Shiva Prasad Singh, 2 I.T.C. 57; 4 Pat. 752; A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 109 by the same Court. In Isabella Coal Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 87; 53 Cal. 76; A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 396, however, Calcutta High Court ruled that a cess paid in respect of a colliery to a local authority on the basis of the average income of preceding years is an admissible deduction under this clause, because the cess was paid in respect of the premises. A proviso to old clause (ix) was introduced in 1928 in order to counteract this ruling and this proviso, now embodied in sub-section (4), overrides both clause (ix) and clause (xv) of sub-section (2).

But cesses which have to be paid on output or despatches, whether profits are made or not, are an admissible deduction. In In re the K. M. Selected Coal Company, 1 I.T.C. 281—a case under section 10 (2) it was held,

“that such cesses—based on output and despatches—are not rates or taxes upon the premises of the business within the meaning of clause (2) (viii) [now clause (ix)] but that such expenses can be fairly said to come within the meaning of clause (2) (ix) [now clause (xv)], i.e., expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning the profits or gains.”

In Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Gurupada Datta, 1943 I.T.R. 499 confirmed by the Privy Council, 1946 I.T.R. 100, it was held that the rates imposed on business premises within village unions under the Bengal Village Self-Government Act are an allowable deduction not being rates based on profits but on the ‘circumstances and property’ of the assessee within the union; where the rate relates only partially to the premises, the rate would have to be apportioned.

See also Hourah Amta Railway v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 509; A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 579 referred to under section 10 (2) (i), as to share of surplus profits, in which such share was unsuccessfully claimed to be a local rate.

Owner's taxes.—In Inland Revenue v. Scottish Central Electric Power Co., 15 Tax Cas. 761, it was held (by the House of Lords) that owner's rates paid qua owner and not qua trader, were not incurred for the purpose of the trade, but in that case the assessee had already received an allowance under Schedule A and was refused a further allowance under Schedule D. Also, that case dealt with land within the United Kingdom i.e., within Schedule A. The ruling therefore is of limited application. Ownership of land may be necessary for the purpose of the trade, and the payments in respect of the land may therefore be qua trader.

The position in India is clear. Section 9 does not apply to premises used for the owner's business, profession or vocation; and while under section 9, no allowance can be given for owner's rates, such allowance is admissible under section 10 (2) (ix), which does not distinguish between owner's and occupier's rates and allows local rates and municipal taxes on such on the premises (if the allowance is not prohibited by sub-section (4)). This is one of the several differences that can arise when an allowance is given under section 10 instead of under section 9.

Municipal taxes—Licence fees—On companies.—In Commissioner of Income-tax v. Nedungadi Bank, 1 I.T.C. 355; 47 Mad. 667, it was held following Smith v. Lion Brewery Co., 5 Tax Cases 568 and Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce, 6 Tax Cases 399; (1915) A.C. 433, that a company tax levied by a Municipality, based on the capital, was an expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits or gains.

Per Coutts-Trotter, C.J.—"This is a tax or a toll not on profits or on income or on profession, since it is based not on the amount of profit or salary earned, but on the paid-up capital. It is, therefore, in no sense, an income or profession tax. It is a compulsory toll on such trading companies without which they are permitted to carry on their trade for more than 60 days in any half-year. It is not strictly a licence fee, but is nearer in analogy to that than it is to an Income-tax.

It is clearly not in the nature of capital expenditure, since it is not met out of capital, and does not diminish the capital. We are of opinion that it is not. It is not a tax on profits or income but a necessary condition precedent to any earning of profits. It is an impost without paying which the firm cannot trade within the Municipality."

Municipal taxes—Profession taxes.—Under the Madras City Municipal Act a tax is levied on professions, trades, etc. It was contended on behalf of an assessee that the tax was a licence fee, and therefore an expenditure that had to be necessarily incurred as a preliminary expenditure before any profession could be exercised and therefore deductible from the income under section 11. Held, that (a) the words "by way of a licence fee" in section 111 of the City Municipal Act do not imply that the tax is a licence fee but that it should be paid like a licence fee, as there is no provision which makes the carrying on of a profession illegal unless the fee has been paid, nor is any formal licence issued authorising the exercise of a profession; (b) professional men are taxed not because they carry on a profession but because they earn income. "It seems to us impossible to predicate that Government officers pay profession tax to enable them to earn their salary"; (c) being a payment out of income and not a preliminary expenditure necessary to the earning of income, the tax cannot be deducted under section 11, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. King and Partidge, 2 I.T.C. 142; 49 Mad. 296; A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 368.

Income-tax itself cannot be deducted from the profits.—"Now the profit upon which the Income-tax is charged is what is left after you have paid all the necessary expenses to earn that profit. Profit is a plain English word; that is what is charged with income-tax. But if you confound what is the necessary expenditure to earn that profit with the income-tax, which is a part of the profit itself, one can understand how you get into the confusion which has induced the learned counsel at such very considerable length to point out that this is not a charge upon the profits at all. The answer is that it is. The income-tax is a charge upon the profit; the thing which is taxed is the profit that is made, and you must ascertain what is the profit that is made before you deduct the tax—you have no right to deduct the Income-tax before you ascertain what the profit is. I cannot understand how you can make the Income-tax part of the expenditure," per Halsbury, L.C., in Ashton Gas Co. v. Attorney-General, (1906) A.C. 10.

See also the case of the Eastern Extension Australasian, etc., Telegraph Company, 44 Mad. 489; 1 I.T.C. 120, under section 42.

In Johnston v. Chestergate Hat Manufacturing Co., (1915) 2 Ch. 338, in which a manager was entitled, under an agreement, to a salary plus a share in the net profits, 'net profits' being defined in the agreement to mean 'the net sums available for dividends as certified by the auditors of the company after payment of all salaries . . . rent, interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the capital and after making such allowance for depreciation as the auditors may advise', it was held by Sargant, J., that income-tax was part of the profits, and could therefore not be deducted from the profits in settling the share due to the manager. If the agreement had expressly provided that the income-tax should be deducted before ascertaining the share due to the manager, the position would have been different.

In construing a lease deed of a colliery which ran thus, "the lessee shall also pay and discharge all taxes, rates, assessments and impositions whatever being in the nature of a public demand which shall . . . be charged, assessed or imposed upon the said mines," it was held that the lessor was not entitled to claim from the lessee the income-tax paid by the former, since the tax was not on the mine but on the lessor's income, Bengal Coal Co. v. Janardan Kishorilal Singh Deo, 1938 I.T.R. 632 (P.C.).

Foreign taxes.—As regards foreign taxes paid, the practice in the United Kingdom has been to allow such taxes as business expenses, though there is no express legal provision to that effect—see Stevens v. Durham Roodepoort Gold Mining Company, 5 Tax Cases 402; 25 T.L.R. 316, but not if there is an arrangement for Double Income-tax Relief. Rule 1 of Case I of Schedule D, however, provides for allowance of foreign income-tax in respect of foreign income from securities and it has been held that the allowance can be claimed only in respect of such part of the income as is taxed in the United Kingdom, Scottish American Investment Trust v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 17 A.T.C. 49 (C.S.). In India the position is as below. If the income is entitled to Double Income-tax Relief—whether under section 49 (United Kingdom) or under section 49-A—(Indian States and British Dominions) or under section 49-D—it should be computed in the manner laid down in this section, i.e., foreign taxes should not be deducted unless covered by clauses (ix) and (xv) and sub-section (4).

(x) any sum paid to an employee as bonus or commission for services rendered, when such sum would not have been payable to him as profits or dividend if it had not been paid as bonus or commission:

Provided that the amount of the bonus or commission is of a reasonable amount with reference to—

(a) the pay of the employee and the conditions of his service;

(b) the profits of the business, profession or vocation for the year in question; and

(c) the general practice in similar businesses, professions or vocations;

History.—This clause was inserted by Act XXIII of 1930. It renders the Madras High Court ruling in R. E. Mahammad Kasim Rowther's case, 2 I.T.C. 482, obsolete. The exemption from double taxation given by Notification No. 8, dated 24th March, 1928 (see section 60), however, still continues and applies to cases not covered by this clause.

Double taxation.—Under this notification, “the following class of income shall be exempt from the tax payable under this Act, but shall be taken into account in determining the total income of an assessee for the purpose of this Act :

(1) Sums received by an assessee on account of salary, bonus, commission, or other remuneration for services rendered, or in lieu of interest on money advanced, to a person for the purposes of his business.

Where such sums have been paid out of, or determined with reference to, the profits of the business, and by reason of such mode of payment or determination have not been allowed as a deduction but have been included in the profits of the business on which income-tax has been assessed and charged under the head ‘business’ :

Provided that such sums shall not be exempt from the payment of super-tax unless they are paid to the assessee by a person other than a company and have already been assessed to super-tax.

It will be noted that the above notification applies only to a ‘business’ and not to profession or vocation; and also only where the disallowance is because of the particular mode of payment or determination. It might seem therefore that if the disallowance is on other grounds, e.g., extravagance of remuneration, double taxation is permissible but this would not be correct because even in such a case the disallowance is ultimately based on the ground that the case is one of distribution of profit and not one of expenditure to earn the profit.

Scope.—The object of this clause is to allow only bona fide payments; and the various conditions laid down are intended to secure this object. The condition in the substantive part of the clause is intended to prevent partners of firms and dominant shareholders in private companies from abusing this concession. The conditions in the proviso are intended to prevent collusive deductions in combination with employees.

The ‘conditions of service need not be contractual’. The questions arising under this clause are mostly questions of degree and, therefore, of fact.

Where, under an agreement, the managers of an assessee were entitled to retain the net profits after paying the assessee-proprietor a percentage of gross realisations plus a fixed sum, it was held that the assessee was not entitled to deduct from his taxable profits the amounts retained by the managers, for, even if such amounts were bonus or commission they were not sums “which would not have been payable to him as profits or dividend if it had not been paid as bonus or commission” as stated in this clause. In re Nrisinga Chandra Nandy, 1936 I.T.R. 428 (Cal.).

(vi) when the assessee's accounts in respect of any part of his business, profession or vocation are not kept on the cash basis, such sum, in respect of bad and doubtful debts, due to the assessee in respect of that part of his business, profession or vocation, and in the case of an assessee carrying on a banking or money-lending business, such sum in respect of loans made in the ordinary course of such business as the Income-tax Officer may estimate to be irrecoverable but not exceeding the amount actually written off as irrecoverable in the books of the assessee:

Provided that if the amount ultimately recovered on any such debt or loan is greater than the difference between the whole debt or loan and the amount so allowed, the excess shall be deemed to be a profit of the year in which it is recovered, and if less, the deficiency shall be deemed to be a business expense of that year:

Bad debts.—This clause incorporates in the statute what had been originally included in executive instructions and what, in any case, was covered either by the Privy Council ruling in the Chitnavis case or by first principles of accountancy and commercial usage.

It will be noted that this clause contemplates the possibility of the accounts of a part of the business, profession or vocation being on a cash basis and the rest on a mercantile, i.e., accrued basis. But can the accounts of the same part of the business be on a cash basis in respect of certain items and on an accrued basis in respect of others? See notes under section 13.

Cash basis.—There is no definition of this expression but what is evidently meant is a basis under which debits and credits are made only when cash (or its equivalent) is received or paid instead of when a liability is created or extinguished. Under a cash basis, the problem of allowance for bad debts will not arise because ex hypothesi such debts will have been excluded in working out Profit and Loss.

Under the mercantile accountancy system an entry is made on the receipt side when a sale is concluded, although the money on account of such a sale has not been paid and in making up the accounts at the end of the year such entries are treated as receipts, and the tax is levied on these "book profits". It may happen that some of these "book profits" cannot be recovered; they are written off as "bad debts" when found to be irrecoverable: and since such "book profits" have been included in the income assessed to income-tax, the "bad debts" must be written off against the "book profits" in the year in which they are written off in the accounts as irrecoverable. Where the cash system is adopted, there can as already stated be no "bad debts".

Irrecoverable loans of money-lenders.—Money is the stock-in-trade of money-lenders and bankers and it is immaterial in their case whether the accounts are on a cash or on a mercantile basis. The claim can be made only in respect of losses in the ordinary course of money-lending or banking, i.e., not relating to transactions of a capital (i.e., fixed capital) nature or to other parts of the assessee's business if any.

Actually written-off—i.e., deducted as loss in preparing the Profit and Loss Accounts according to the assessee's system of accounting—See section 13. It is not necessary that the bad debt or irrecoverable loan should have been forgiven, or finally written off from all the accounts of the assessee.

Such sum . . . as the Income-tax Officer may estimate.—The question is one of fact to be determined by the Income-tax Officer with reference to the evidence. The Income-tax Officer is to make an estimate of the allowance each year on the facts before him.

Conditions.—A bad debt or irrecoverable loan will be allowed only if—

(a) the assessee has written it off his accounts,

(b) it has actually become bad or irrecoverable, and

(c) it actually became so in the "previous year"; but (d), any receipt in later years, in respect of the loss written off will be liable to tax as income.

Irrecoverable.—The word "irrecoverable" in the term "irrecoverable loan" should be given a wider sense than its technical legal meaning,—See rulings referred to below:

It is for the assessee to prove when an item became irrecoverable; and the fact that a suit became time-barred is not conclusive.

The contention that a debt or loan had been written off the books of the creditor and could therefore no longer be recovered by suit, will not be admitted by the Income-tax Officer because a creditor who has written off a debt or loan in his accounts as bad or irrecoverable is not in any way debarred from suing for its recovery unless the act of writing off is communicated to the debtor or it is agreed between the creditor and debtor that a certain amount shall be paid and accepted in full satisfaction. See Shyam Chamber, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1941 I.T.R. 224.

Excess recoveries.—Under the proviso, if a bad debt allowed for is afterwards recovered, it is treated as income and similarly if a debt originally considered good by the Income-tax Officer is finally lost, it is treated as an allowance in the year of loss. The word "ultimately" is evidently subject to no limitation of time. The words "business expense" which have nowhere been defined apparently mean revenue expenditure admissible under clause (xv).

There is no provision in the United Kingdom law corresponding to this proviso. According to Anderson and Halstead v. Birrell, 16 Tax Cases 200, once a debt has been valued, that value is final and cannot be reopened on the ground that the debt had grown either more or less in value. Also, according to Lawrence, J. in Lock v. Jones, 23 Tax Cases 749, " . . . in strictness, if after a debt has been valued, it is subsequently realised at a higher figure, then the excess is to be disregarded." See also the British Mexican Petroleum Co. case, 16 Tax Cases 570 (H.L.) referred to under section 13.

On the other hand, when referring to the practice of Revenue authorities in the United Kingdom allowing as bad debts in later years items considered good at an earlier stage, Lord Simon said in Absalom v. Talbot, 1944 (H.L.) 26 Tax Cases 166 that the practice of the Revenue "is not due to benevolence, but to statutory law."

The law in the United Kingdom on this subject is by no means clear, (see the dissenting judgment of Scott, L.J., in the above case) and practice seems to be to tax excess recoveries in later years and also to allow further deficiencies in such years.

Debts not connected with business.—These are of a capital nature, see Stott v. Hoddinott, 7 Tax Cases 85 and similar cases. The loss arising to a businessman out of his current account with his banker as a result of the latter's bankruptcy is a bad debt of the businessman, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Haji Abdul Gany Ayub, 1941 I.T.R. 339.

A debt due to a company on account of call of its capital is not a bad debt arising out of its business; and any eventual receipt on that account is a capital receipt, In re Multan Electric Supply Co., 1945 I.T.R. 457. Where a firm doing money-lending business and also holding the managing agency of a company advanced a large sum of money to the company and eventually write off the loan, it was held by the tribunal that the loan had not been made in the course of the money-lending business and was therefore not a bad debt. There was evidence for the finding by the Tribunal, Vissonji & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1946 I.T.R. 272 (Bom.). Evidently, the assessee did not seek to claim the deduction as expenditure necessary for the agency business; if he did it would have been disallowed a capital expenditure.

Debts of closed business.—The proviso applies only to a continuing business and recoveries of bad debts of closed businesses already allowed for when the businesses were carried on would be capital receipts. Losses arising in later years, in respect of the outstandings of a closed business are not bad debts of current businesses in those later years. See rulings under section 24 in respect of set-off of losses.

Where a money-lender starts a separate partnership business which he winds up on loss, he cannot convert that loss into a bad debt of the money-lending business merely by treating in his books as a debt due to that business from the partner of the defunct business, Mothay Gangarazu v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1939 I.T.R. 149.

Advances by professional men to clients.—Money advanced by a law agent to a client and lost will be deductible from the law agent's profits only if the making of loans of this kind is an ordinary incident in his professional trade or business. Loans, which are 'bald' advances to comparatively new clients, made by a solicitor and lost would not therefore be deductible. Lending money to clients may often be done by solicitors but it is not an essential and ordinary fact of their profession. The law is not concerned with the motives for such transactions; and no custom can rest on what an individual solicitor does. Hagar and Burn Murdoch v. Inland Revenue, 1929 A.C. 386; 45 T.L.R. 338.

A firm of solicitors, who also acted as insurance agents, factors and registered stock-brokers but did not hold itself out as financiers or money-lenders was, however, in the habit of lending money to clients, and a question arose as to the deductibility of bad debts arising out of such lending. The firm sought to distinguish its case from that of Hagar and Burn Murdoch, on the ground that its business was a composite one including money-lending but the Court of Session saw no difference because even in the other case, there was a finding that the assessee in addition to their other work as law agents carried on the business of lending money. The claim to deduct bad debts was therefore disallowed, W. A. & F. Rutherford v. Inland Revenue, 18 A.T.C. 273.

Bad debts.—Although the Act (as it stood before 1939) nowhere in terms authorised the deduction of bad debts of a business, such a deduction was necessarily allowable. What are chargeable to income-tax in respect of a business are its profits and gains of the year; and in assessing the amount of profits and gains of a year, account must necessarily be taken of all losses incurred. Otherwise you would not arrive at the true profits and gains. For the purpose of computing profits and gains, each year is a separate self-contained period of time in regard to which profits earned or losses sustained before or after it are irrelevant. It follows therefore that a debt which had in fact become bad before the commencement of a particular year could not properly be deducted in ascertaining the profits of that year. The assessee has no option as to when he should declare a debt to be bad. Whether a debt is bad, and when it becomes such, are questions of fact to be determined in cases of dispute, not by the assessee or by the exercise of any 'option' on his part, but by the appropriate tribunal on a consideration of all relevant and admissible evidence, Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. v. Sir S. M. Chitnavis, 59 I.A. 290; 36 C.W.N. 797; 63 M.L.J. 361 (P.C.). See also Lawless v. Sullivan, (1881) 6 A.C. 373 (New Burnswick case) and Gleaner and Co. v. Assessment Committee, (1922) 2 A.C. 169 (Jamaica case). In the latter the Privy Council held that once debts had been valued and allowance made for bad and doubtful debts, further alteration in later years could not be made. See also British Mexican Petroleum Co. v. Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cases 570 (H.L.) in which debts forgiven in a later year were not treated as trading receipts. The practice in the United Kingdom, however, appears to have been to allow a debt as bad in a later year even though in an earlier year it may have been treated as good and similarly to tax realisations of written-off debts. The correctness of the practice was considered by the House of Lords in Absalom v. Talbot, (1944) 26 Tax Cases 166; in which the soundness of the decision in Gleaner & Co's case was doubted, and Lord Simon observed that "the Revenue practice . . . is not due to benevolence . . . but to statutory law". The correct position, ultimately, it would seem, is that the badness of a debt is a question of fact and that, there being no estoppel or res judicata in such matters, changed circumstances would justify changed conclusions. See also Briston v. William Dickinson & Co., 1946 K.B.D. to a similar effect.

The finding, as to the nature of a specific item of debt however, operates only for the particular assessment, Ruliamal Rammall Ram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 7 I.T.C. 352, and can be set aside by the Court if it is not based on materials or is perverse, P. R. Ar. M. Muthukaruppan Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1939 I.T.R. 76; Hukamchand Jagadhar Mal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1935-I.T.R. 211; British Cotton Growers' Association v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 279. The form in which a question of law usually arises is whether the Income-tax Commissioner was, upon the evidence, obliged in law to allow the deductions and if not, whether in arriving at his decision, he has departed from or misapplied the principles which in law govern the matter, In re Binjraj Hukumchand, 5 I.T.C. 303; 58 Cal. 1446; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 683; Ditturam Idan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 502. The Income-tax Officer must be consistent in his findings. For example, having found that, in the accounts of a continuing business, a debt was good in 1931-32, he cannot find on the same evidence that it became bad before 1932-33.

Hanutram Bhura Mal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1938 I.T.R. 290. On the other hand, where, in the first year, the Income-tax Officer held that a debt had not then become bad, and in the next year held that it had already become bad, his action was not disapproved, because there was additional evidence before him justifying the contrary conclusion, Kaniram Ganpatari v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1941 I.T.R. 332.

The mere fact that a debt was incurred at a date beyond the period of limitation will not itself make a debt bad; still less will it fix the date at which a debt will become bad. A statute-barred debt is not necessarily bad; nor a non-statute-barred debt necessarily good, Sir S. M. Chitnavis case, supra. The age of the debt is, no doubt, a relevant matter to take into consideration. In every case it is a question of fact to be determined by the appropriate tribunal after consideration of all relevant circumstances. There is nothing wrong in the assumption that, so long as there is any ray of hope left, however, dim, to recover a debt and so long as the debt is in process of realisation the debt is not irrecoverable, British Cotton Growers' Association v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 279.

It makes no difference whether the debt is due from a human being or from a joint stock company; in either case it is a question of fact whether and when a debt becomes bad. There is no justification for treating all debts from companies as necessarily good, merely because the debtor company has not gone into liquidation, Dinshaw v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1934 I.T.R. 319 (P.C.); 61 I.A. 318; 58 Bom. 579.

The departmental practice of declaring a debt to be prima facie bad when it is barred by limitation is not unreasonable but this presumption is rebuttable, Bansidar Poddar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 7 I.T.C. 117; A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 46. Refraining from pressing a debt out of extra-business motives, e.g., friendship or relationship will not make the debt bad, Prag Narain v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P. (All.), 6 I.T.C. 110.

Where there is a default in respect of hire purchase payments, the question of an allowance for bad debts can arise only after the property recovered from the debtor had been properly valued, e.g., if a motor lorry, by attempting to sell it, Shamsher Ali Abdul Hussain v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1945 I.T.R. 240. A fair, expert valuation would doubtless be sufficient evidence of value.

When accounts are kept on the mercantile basis and interest is added to a debt from year to year and tax charged on such interest, it would not be ordinarily open to the Income-tax Officer to hold that the debt had become bad in an earlier year, Hanutram Bhura Mal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1938 I.T.R. 290. Similarly, if no interest has been added, it would not be open to the assessee to claim that the debt had not become bad when the interest ceased to be so added, Sheo Sahay Mal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 1938 I.T.R. 485.

Where an assessee took over the assets and liabilities of a debtor of his and paid off the latter's creditors, including himself, at 8 annas in the rupee, and claimed to deduct as a bad debt in a later year the debt still alleged to be due from the debtor it was held that, since the debtor had been absolved from all further liability when the compounding with creditors was made, the debt became bad then and not in a later year as claimed, Sheo

Sahay Mal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1938 I.T.R. 485.

Where a partnership is dissolved and a partner takes over outstanding debts as his share of the assets, such assets are ordinarily part of his capital and any bad debt arising out of them is a capital loss, Chimanlal Ramanlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1940 I.T.R. 408; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. S.P.K. A.R.M. family, 1941 I.T.R. 685; but if the debt was a trading debt, e.g., due from a customer or a loan due to a money lender from a borrower, and if at the time of dissolution the debt was not bad, loss due to subsequent badness of the debt is a trading loss, since trading debts are circulating capital and the loss arose after the dissolution. This is no doubt the underlying idea in Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Venkatasubbiah Chetti, 1946 I.T.R. 227 and Deokinandan & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1941 I.T.R. 202, though there are suggestions in the latter that even if the debt had been bad at the time of dissolution, this loss would still be allowable. Such an allowance could be claimed it is submitted, only if at the time of dissolution, the extent of badness of the debt could not be estimated or if full value had been placed on the debt, without any attempt to estimate its badness. The ultimate criterion in all such cases is whether the debts are circulating capital or fixed capital. In the Madras case, the interest on the debts taken over was regularly assessed. A partner in a firm cannot ordinarily single out a particular bad debt as his share; he can only take his share in the result of the firms getting an allowance for bad debts, Motilal Onkara Chandra v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 6 I.T.C. 16.

Bad debts due from ex-partners in a business cannot be set off against profits in any other business, they are not bad debts of the latter business, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Arunachalam Chettiar, 1934 I.T.R. 401 (P.C.). A partner in a continuing partnership making a loss is not a debtor, in respect of the business of the partnership, to his other partners, and the latter cannot claim an allowance for bad debts on the ground that the first partner was not solvent, and that therefore the other partners would have to bear the whole loss of the partnership Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Khemchand Ramdas, 1936 I.T.R. 173 (P.C.); see also notes under section 24 as to set off of losses.

A real debt must have been in existence if a claim for an allowance for bad debts is to arise. Therefore where a successor in a business had taken over among the assets the right to the refund of customs duties which the predecessor had paid under protest and in respect of which he had both petitioned the Government and sued in the Courts, and having lost the claims, the successor sought to deduct the amounts as bad debts, the claims to refund being his circulating capital for which he had paid the predecessor, the claim was disallowed. As subsequent events showed duty had been properly paid in the first instance and a mistaken belief that a refund was due cannot create a debt; and it was immaterial that the assessee chose to keep the item in a suspense account, National Petroleum Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 338.

Where a debtor had absconded and the Income-tax Department contended that the bad debt should have been claimed at the time of the debtor's absconding, it was held that such a claim would have been premature before three years had elapsed since, if the debtor had returned, it would have been possible for the creditor (assessee) to sue within three years, Harmand Rai Harbagat Rai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 366.

A debtor's insolvency does not by itself necessitate the conclusion that the debt is wholly or even partially bad; and in the absence of other stronger evidence, the date on which the Official Receiver announces the final dividend would be an appropriate date for declaring the debt to be bad finally, Deokinandan & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1941 I.T.R. 202; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Hajee Abdul Gany Ayub, 1941 I.T.R. 339.

A debtor of an assignee became insolvent in 1929 and there was litigation in respect of preferential claims against the insolvent, culminating in an appeal disposed of by the Privy Council in 1934. The assessee consulted the Official Assignee in 1936 as to the prospects of a further dividend and on receiving a discouraging reply, wrote off the bad debt in his accounts for 1936-37. The Income-tax department disallowed the write-off on the ground that the debt should have been written off earlier even in 1929, when it was possible to infer that hardly any dividend would be paid. It was held that there were no materials for the conclusion of the department, Alagunanda Mudaliar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1940 I.T.R. 69.

In December, 1921, an assessee obtained a mortgage-deed in his favour. In 1924, he sued for the usual mortgage decree which was made in December, 1925. The property was sold and there was a balance still due, for which he got a personal decree against the debtor in 1928. Against this decree there was an appeal which was dismissed in November, 1931. In the meantime, the creditor (assessee) had unsuccessfully attempted to enforce the decree. On his claiming the amount as a bad debt in the accounts of 1932-33, the Income-tax Officer held that the debt had become bad in 1929, while the Assistant Commissioner held that it had not become bad even in 1932-33. The Commissioner agreed with the Income-tax Officer. It was held that there was no evidence for the finding that the debt had become bad in 1929. The assessee would have been guilty of a fraud if he had attempted to claim it as a bad debt before 1932-33, since the personal decree had still been pending till November, 1931. Whether it became a bad debt in 1932-33 or later was a question of fact to be determined by the Income-tax authorities, Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Hukumchand Jagaddharmal, 1936 I.T.R. 380.

A firm consisting of two partners was dissolved at the end of 1939; and each partner took a half share of the assets and liabilities. One of the assets was a loan of $5,000 advanced on second mortgage and this debt had been written down to $5 as being worthless. So that each partner's share was $2.50. One of the partners started a new firm with his sons on the 13th April, 1940 and on this date the new firm showed the amount in its books at $2.50. The new firm claimed that it was entitled to deduct $2500 (half of 5000) plus expenses in its accounts for 1940-41 on the ground that it was not bound by the notional figure of $2.50. It was held that the correct criterion was the true value of the debt on the 13th April, 1940 when the new firm started. On that date its value was nil as subsequent events showed. The first mortgagee took steps to bring the property to sale, and there was not enough even to pay him. Therefore, the debt in question had become bad before 1940 and not during 1940-41, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Ar. M. M. Firm 1945 I.T.R. 290.

Burden of proof.—The burden of proving that a debt has become bad lies on the assessee, Binraj Hukumchand v. Commissioner of Income- tax, Bengal, 5 I.T.C. 303; Ditturam Idan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 502, Banimal Dalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1941 I.T.R. 222. So also, the burden of proving that what is claimed as a bad debt has already been taxed in an earlier year, In re Baldevdas Rameshwar, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 761; 135 I.C. 280.

Suspense accounts—Bad debts—Interest on.—If an assessee keeps a regular suspense account for interest on bad or doubtful debts, and if there is no reason to suspect the bona fide nature of the accounts, interest accruing on these debts would not be taxable profits till it was actually realised or otherwise adjusted. When, however, the bad debts are realised, the interest would automatically go into the profits as ex hypothesi the accounts are maintained on the commercial or mercantile system.

(xii) any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) laid out or expended on scientific research related to the business ;

(xiii) any sum paid to a scientific research association having as its objects the undertaking of scientific research related to the class of business carried on, and any sum paid to a university, college or other institution to be used for such scientific research ;

Provided that such association, university, college or institution is for the time being approved for the purposes of this clause by the prescribed authority ;

(xiv) in respect of any expenditure of a capital nature on scientific research related to the business, an allowance for each of the five consecutive previous years beginning with the year in which the expenditure was incurred or where the expenditure was incurred prior to the commencement of the business, for each of the five consecutive previous years beginning with the year in which the business was commenced, one-fifth of such expenditure :

Provided that no allowance shall be made for any expenditure incurred more than three years before the commencement of the business :

Provided further that—

(a) where an asset representing scientific research expenditure of a capital nature ceases to be used for scientific research related to such business—

(i) no allowance shall be made in respect of any previous year after the previous year in which the cessation takes place ; and

(ii) if the aggregate of the amounts allowed under this clause added to the value of the asset immediately before the cessation is less than the said expenditure, there shall also be allowed in respect of the previous year in which the cessation takes place an additional deduction equal to the difference ;

(b) where such asset is sold without having been used for other purposes, the sale proceeds shall be taken to be the value of the asset immediately before the cessation, and if an additional allowance or a greater additional allowance would have been made in respect of the previous year in which the cessation occurred on the basis of that value, an amount equal to the additional allowance which would have been made or as the case may be, to the difference between the additional allowance which would have been made and the additional allowance which was made for that year shall be made in respect of the previous year in which the sale occurs.

(c) where the proceeds of the sale plus the total amount of allowances made under this clause exceed the amount of the expenditure, the excess or the amount of the allowances so made whichever is the less, shall be treated as a receipt of the business accruing at the time of the sale ;

(d) where a deduction is allowed for any previous year under this clause in respect of expenditure represented wholly or partly by any asset, no deduction shall be allowed under clause (vi) or clause (vii) for the same previous year in respect of that asset ;

(e) where an asset is used in the business after it ceases to be used for scientific research related to the business, and a claim for an allowance under clause (vi) or clause (vii) is made in respect of that asset, the actual cost to the assessee of the asset shall be treated as reduced by the amount of any deductions allowed under this clause ;

(f) clause (b) of the proviso to clause (vi) shall apply in relation to deductions allowable under this clause as it applies in relation to deductions allowable in respect of depreciation ;

(g) if any question arises under clause (xii), clause (xiii) or this clause as to whether, and if so to what extent, any activity constitutes or constituted, or any asset is or was being used for, scientific research, the Central Board of Revenue shall refer the question to the prescribed authority, whose decision shall be final :

Explanation.—In clause (xii), clause (xiii) and this clause,—

(i) ‘ Scientific research ’ means any activities in the fields of natural or applied science for the extension of knowledge ;

(ii) references to expenditure incurred on scientific research do not include any expenditure incurred in the acquisition of rights in, or arising out of scientific research but, save as aforesaid, include all expenditure incurred for the prosecution of or the provisions of facilities for the prosecution of scientific research ;

(iii) references to scientific research related to a business or class of business include—

(a) any scientific research which may lead to or facilitate an extension of that business, or as the case may be, all businesses of that class ;

(b) any scientific research of a medical nature which has a special relation to the welfare of workers employed in that business, or as the case may be, businesses of that class ;

History.—These clauses, which are closely modelled on recent additions to the United Kingdom law, were added in 1946. The major part of the expenditure intended to be covered by clauses (xii) and (xiii) would, it is submitted, be allowable under clause (xv) even if these clauses did not exist and any way the new clauses remove doubt.

(xii) This covers cases of revenue expenditure on scientific research related to the business under assessment—not to the class of business; and in the former case, it is immaterial whether the expenditure is incurred by the business itself or through some other agency and if through another agency, the question of that agency being approved will not arise. If, for example, a specific problem in which the business is interested is referred to a scientific institution and the latter charges a fee or the actual expenses, the expenditure if of a revenue nature is allowable whether or not the institution has been approved.

(xiii) This relates to cases in which the research is related, not specifically to the business under assessment but to the class of business; the business may not benefit directly at all. Even so, the money paid to the association or institution is allowable; but (1) the association, etc., must be approved by the prescribed authority; and (2) though the point is not stated in terms, the sum paid to the association, etc., must not be of a capital nature;

(xiv) governs expenditure of a capital nature on research. Such expenditure will be allowed in five consecutive equal instalments and in respect of what was incurred not more than three years before the commencement of the business. The various elaborate provisions are intended partly to avoid double allowances once under this clause, and again under the obsolescence or depreciation clauses; and partly to provide for supplementary allowances under other circumstances. Broadly speaking, full allowance, but not exceeding the original cost less scrap value will be given under one clause or another.

Retrospective effect.—The Finance Act of 1946 gave retrospective effect to these three clauses by one year.

Prescribed authority.—The Central Board of Revenue will, by rules, announce the authority who will approve associations and institutions for the purpose of grants under clause (xiii) and the authority who will determine disputes generally under these three clauses as to whether particular activities constituted 'scientific research' or whether particular assets are or were used for such research. The two authorities need not be identical. The draft rules issued by the Central Board of Revenue prescribe the Council of Industrial and Scientific Research, the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research and the Indian Research Fund Association as the authorities for this purpose. Where doubt arises as to whether research relates to the business or class of business or not, no reference would seem to lie to the prescribed authority, which is concerned only with whether the research is scientific and whether the assets are used for it.

Explanation clauses—Sub-clause (i). The definition of 'scientific research' is wide; and where a doubt arises the prescribed authority will resolve it. Sub-clause (ii) excludes the cost of purchase of patent rights and the like. What restricts the concession is the condition that the research showed be 'related to the business'. This is obviously a question of fact to be determined by the revenue authorities. Sub-clause (i), liberalises the condition by allowing the concession even where the advantage is somewhat indirect, but even this sub-clause can give rise only to questions of fact. It should be noted that the research of a medical nature should be *special*ly related to the welfare of workers in the business or class of business.

(xv) any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure or personal expenses of the assessee) laid out or expended wholly and exclusively for the purpose of such business, profession or vocation.

History.—The main part of the clause has been coming on from 1918; a proviso which was introduced in 1928 has now been embodied in sub-section (4). The ruling in Isabella Coal Company v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 53 Cal. 76; 2 I.T.C. 87, was nullified by the proviso.

The wording of this clause, before 1st April, 1939, was as below:—

"Any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits or gains:

Provided that nothing in clause (viii) or clause (ix) shall be deemed to authorise the allowance of any sum paid on account of any cess, rate or tax levied on the profits or gains of any business or assessed at a proportion of or otherwise on the basis of any such profits or gains."

Personal expenses.—The reference to "personal expenses" inspired evidently partly by old section 11 and by section 12 and partly by the United Kingdom law, is otiose, for, ex hypothesi, such expenses would not satisfy the other conditions.

Death duties.—Expenditure on death duties or in resisting their payment or in obtaining probate or letters of administration cannot be deducted from the profits of a business, profession or vocation. Ramaswami Ayyangar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1943 I.T.R. 594; Arunachalam Chettiar v. Ibid., 1945 I.T.R. 183. Such expenditure is clearly of a 'personal' nature and is not laid out for the purpose of business, profession or vocation; perhaps, also, it is of a 'capital' nature. It is no argument to say that if the expenditure was not incurred the business assets would have been distrained; for the assessee does not incur such expenditure as the owner of a business.

Relation of clause (xv) to other clauses.—It will be seen that the allowance under clause (xv) which is the residual clause overlaps the allowances under some of the previous clauses, with the exception of depreciation which is not an actual but only a notional expense, and of loss which arises when machinery is discarded or sold; all the other expenses set out in the previous clauses are undoubtedly incurred, if not solely for the purpose of earning the profits at least wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the business profession or vocation. Nor can any of them be capital expenditure. It would seem therefore that this clause should be construed to refer only to those expenses—not being items referred to in the previous clauses, and not being capital expenditure—which are incurred solely in earning the profits. Otherwise the restrictions and conditions imposed in the previous clauses become a nullity, and the proper construction, it is submitted, is one that does not so make the previous clauses a nullity, see Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Haji Jamal Nur Mahomed, 49 Bom. 362; 1 I.T.C. 396.

In Rathan Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, A.I.R. 1926 M. 462; 2 I.T.C. 294; however, the Madras High Court held that the reliefs in the several clauses of sub-section (2) were disjunctive and cumulative, and that if a deduction falls expressly within the words of any one of the clauses, the Crown could not withhold the deduction on the ground that the assessee had already received a larger benefit under another clause. The Court accordingly held that the cost of certain renewals, which were neither current repairs under clause (v) nor capital expenditure, should be allowed as a deduction under clause (ix) [now (xv)], even though the depreciation allowance granted under clause (vi) is meant to cover such renewals. It is submitted that the distinction between repairs and renewals is one of degree, that according to commercial practice repairs are revenue expenditure and renewals capital expenditure, and that the difficulty contemplated by the Madras High Court cannot arise. If expenditure on renewals is not capital expenditure, it must be expenditure on current repairs, and therefore admissible under clause (v).

The cases referred to under this clause (xv) fall broadly into two classes raising the following questions: (a) what is capital expenditure? and (b) when is expenditure laid out for the purpose of the business, etc. Attention is also invited to the rulings set out under section 12 (other sources) in respect of which also the same two questions arise.

Capital expenditure.—As regards capital expenditure, see also the Introduction and notes under section 3. Broadly speaking, it is the deduction of expenditure on fixed capital that is prohibited, not that on circulating capital.

“Broadly speaking, outlay is deemed to be capital when it is made for the initiation of a business, or for a substantial replacement of equipment.”—Per Lord Sands in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Granite, etc., Steamship Co., 6 A.T.C. 678; 13 Tax Cases 1.

“It is according to the legitimate principles of commercial practice to draw distinctions, and sharp distinctions, between capital and revenue expenditure; and it is no use criticising these, as it is easy to do, upon the ground that if you apply logic to them they become more or less indefensible. They are matters of practical convenience, but practical convenience which is undoubtedly embodied in the generally understood principles of commercial accounting.”—Per L. P. Clyde in Lothian Chemical Co. v. Rogers, 11 Tax Cases 508.

“I know of no standard for making the vital, but often delicate, distinction between a revenue charge appropriate to form a deduction from trading receipts and a capital charge which ought not to enter into the ascertainment of trading profits, except the standard set up by the prudence and experience of merchants.”—Per L. P. Clyde in Roebank Printing Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1928) S.C. 701; 13 Tax Cases 864.

“Now what is capital and what is attributable to revenue account, I suppose, is a puzzling question to many Accountants, and I do not suppose that it is possible to lay down any satisfactory definition”, per Pollock, M. R., in Atherton v. British Insulated and Helsby Cables, Ltd., 10 Tax Cases 155; (1926) A.C. 205.

The question of allocation to capital or income runs on fine lines of distinction and the Commissioners have to direct themselves upon the questions of law involved. The question of allocation therefore is not a pure question of fact, Anglo Persian Oil Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cases 253; (1932) 1 K.B. 124.

From the large number of rulings on the subject, the following broad, but by no means conclusive tests can be gathered; viz. :

(1) Does the expenditure relate to the main framework of the assessee's business? Vanden Berghs v. Clark, 19 Tax Cases 390 (H.L.), a case relating to capital receipts;

(2) Is the expenditure incurred as trader or as owner of property? Inland Revenue v. Scottish Central Electric Power Co., 15 Tax Cases 761 (H.L.), a case of assessment relating both to Schedule A (like section 9 in India) and to Schedule D (like section 10 in India).

(3) Is the payment recurrent? Vallambrosa Rubber Co. v. Farmer, 5 Tax Cases 529; Ounsworth v. Vickers, 6 Tax Cases 671.

(4) Does the expenditure relate to fixed or to circulating capital? John Smith & Sons v. Moore, 12 Tax Cases 266 (H.L.).

(5) Does it bring into existence an asset for the enduring benefit of the trade? Atherton v. British and Helsby Cables, 10 Tax Cases 155 (H.L.).

Wholly and exclusively laid out for the purpose of the business, etc.

The words used in the United Kingdom statute and now since 1939 adopted in clause (xv) of the sub-section here are “wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade,” which are somewhat wider than the words “incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits” in the clause as it stood before 1939 and in section 12 (1) as it stands even now, but this difference is not as material as would seem at first sight, for various rulings had interpreted the words "for the purposes of the trade" as equivalent to "for the purpose of earning the profits"; see, for example, per Pollock, M.R., in Rowntree & Co. v. Curtis, 8 Tax Cases 678; per Lord Davey in Strong v. Woodfield, 5 Tax Cases 215; (1906) A.C. 448.

The Rangoon High Court (see per Dunkley, J., in Commissioner of Income-tax v. N. S. A. R. Concern, 1938 I.T.R. 194) was impressed by the wider terms of the United Kingdom (and since 1939, also the Indian) formula; and so, it would seem, was the draftsman of the amendment in 1939. Cases of expenditure, not being of a capital or personal nature, but yet wholly laid out for the purpose of a business, through not to earn the profits thereof are so rare and difficult to conceive of that the old rulings in India cannot be treated as obsolete. The real advantage in the new formula is that it creates no difficulties in respect of correlation in time or even otherwise between expenditure and profits, but this difficulty had been removed, even in respect of the old formula by various rulings, both in the United Kingdom and in India, negating the need for any such correlation whether in time or otherwise.

As regards what is meant by "incurred solely for earning the profits," it is impossible to define it, though it occurs in the Acts of other countries. It is clear, however, that counter-advantages of an indirect kind do not make moneys spent moneys incurred solely for earning the profits, see per Sargant, L.J., in Union Cold Storage Co. v. Jones, 8 Tax Cases 725.

On the other hand one must rid one's mind altogether of the idea that you cannot ask for a deduction of an expense laid out in good faith and exclusively for the purposes of your business unless you can show that it was a profitable expenditure of the business, per L. P. Clyde in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Falkirk Iron Co., 12 A.T.C. 239; Tax Cases 625. The statute does not require the party claiming the deduction to show that any profit was in fact earned by the expenditure in question, per Lord Pearson in Moore v. Stewarts and Lloyds, 6 Tax Cases 501; 43 Sc.L.R. 811.

"A sum of money expended, not of necessity and with a view to a direct and immediate benefit to the trade, but voluntarily and on the grounds of commercial expediency, and in order indirectly to facilitate the carrying on of the business, may yet be expended wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade."—Per Cave, L.C., in Atherton v. British, etc., Cables, supra.

"Mr. Justice Rowlatt, a Judge of great experience and learning in Revenue matters, has frankly said that he does not see his way to give a general definition of the true construction of the section, but that he is content to say about each case as it comes along whether, in his view, it falls within the section", per Coutts-Trotter, J., in Board of Revenue v. Muniswami Chetti & Sons, 1 I.T.C. 227; 47 Mad. 653; 45 M.L.J. 711.

"Their Lordships recognise the difficulty which may often exist in deciding whether expenditure, not in the nature of capital expenditure, has been incurred solely for the purpose of making or earning 'income, profits and gains', and they agree that it may be impossible to formulate a test which will always suffice to discriminate between expenditure which is and expenditure which is not allowable for the purpose of income-tax", Indian Radio and Cable Communications, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 270 (P.C.).

In the earlier English decisions, the tendency was to take an unduly strict view of what constituted expenditure for earning profits. Thus, in regard to advertisements:

"I am not aware that there is any authority whatever for any deduction of any expenses whatsoever incurred after the beer is produced, and really to promote or increase its sale. . . .", per Kelly, C.B., in Watney and Co. v. Musgrave, 1 Tax Cases 272; 5 Ex.D. 241.

It follows from this that expenditure on advertisements could not be allowed as a necessary expense for earning the profits. The Chief Baron imported the idea of 'necessarily' into the words "wholly and exclusively" (corresponding to 'solely' in the Indian Act). The word 'necessarily' occurs only in Schedule E in the United Kingdom [corresponding to section 4 (3) (vi) in India.]. In later decisions, however, culminating in Usher's Wiltshire Brewery v. Bruce, 6 Tax Cases 399; (1915) A.C. 433, this strict view was departed from though, Watney and Co. v. Musgrave, supra, has not been definitely overruled.

". . . . It seems to me that the question whether money is wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for purposes of a trade is a question of fact. Judges of the High Court may know, by the accident of their previous training, something about a particular trade. Merely to take a personal instance, I should be assumed to know something about shipping, but there are many trades about which I should know absolutely nothing whatever, and there are equally many trades about which any of my learned Brethren would know nothing whatever except what they were told by the Commissioners and in many cases the question whether the money was wholly or exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade must depend upon a knowledge of the facts of the trade, of the way in which it is carried on, of the effect of payments made in that trade, all of which are questions of fact. There may be cases where it is clear even to a Judge who knows nothing about the trade, that a particular payment could not be wholly or exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade. I do not desire to go into politics, but I take examples which seem to me fairly clear. Payments for political purposes might conceivably be for the purposes of trade. It might be that a payment by a company to the Tariff Reform League might be of great advantage to its trade. It might be that a payment by a company to a political party which was supposed to be identified with the interests of a particular trade might be to the advantage of the trade; but one can easily imagine cases such as payment by a company to the National Service League, where it would be impossible to conceive that anybody could find that such money was wholly or exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade. There may be cases in which the Court would have to say there is no evidence on which any tribunal could find that this sum was laid out or expended for the purposes of such trade, but in most cases, it appears to me that it depends on the facts of the trade of which the Court has no knowledge, and for which it must depend on the findings of the Commissioners" per Scrutton, L.J., in J.W. Smith v. Incorporated Council of Law Reporting for England and Wales, 6 Tax Cases 477, 484; (1914) 3 K.B. 674.

A somewhat different opinion was held by Sir Samuel Evans in the Court of Appeal in Usher's Wiltshire Brewery v. Bruce, 6 Tax Cases 399, (1914) in which he said that a finding of fact would by no means settle the question to be determined, and that when the facts are found, the proper inference to be drawn in order to determine whether the disbursements or expenses were wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade or concern within the meaning of the provisions referred to, is a question of law; but this was considered to be an obiter dictum by Scrutton, L.J., in Smith v. Incorporated Council of Law Reporting, cited supra. Sir Samuel Evan's judgment was ultimately reversed by the House of Lords; see per Lord Sumner—

"The effect of this structure, I think, is this, that the direction to compute the full amount of the balance of the profits must be read as subject to certain allowances and to certain prohibitions of deductions, but that a deduction, if there be such, which is neither within the terms of the prohibition nor such that the expressed allowance must be taken as the exclusive definition of its area, is to be made or not to be made according as it is or is not, on the facts of the case, a proper debit item to be charged against incomings of the trade when computing the balance of profits of it", Usher's Wiltshire Brewery Case, 6 Tax Cases 399, supra.

This was re-stated by Finlay, J., as follows:—"If you get the legislature dealing expressly with any subject-matter, if you get the legislature making a prohibition, authorising a deduction, authorising an allowance or doing anything of that sort, then you are bound by what the legislature has said. If there are cases where the legislation, so to speak, is blank, that is, where the legislature has neither given an allowance nor made a prohibition then you go on the ordinary principle of commercial trading", Sinclair v. Cadbury Bros., Ltd., 18 Tax Cases 156.

After reviewing various authorities, the Master of the Rolls said in, Morley v. Lawford & Co., 14 Tax Cases 299; 45 T.L.R. 30. "After looking at these cases with some care, it appears to me that the solution of the problem, (i.e., whether an expenditure is wholly and exclusively laid out for the trade, etc.) must in some cases be determined as a question of fact. On the other hand, there may be some cases in which it is a mixed question of fact and law, and it is in all cases a question of law whether there was any evidence at all on which the conclusion reached by the Commissioners or by another Court can be sustained."

The Bombay and Calcutta High Courts held that the question is primarily one of fact, Tata Hydro Electric Agencies, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, (1936) I.T.R. 92; In re Lakshmi Narayan Sen and Sons, Ltd., (1936) I.T.R. 225 (Cal.). But the Privy Council have ruled that the question on the facts found can be agitated before the court as a question of law. Tata Hydro Electric Agencies, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, (1937) I.T.R. 202 (P.C.).

Need not be compulsory expenditure nor directly remunerative.—"It was made clear in the above cited case of Usher's Wiltshire Brewery Ltd. v. Bruce and Smith v. Incorporated Council of Law Reporting that a sum of money expended, not of necessity and with a view to a direct and immediate benefit—but voluntarily and on the grounds of commercial expediency, and in order indirectly to facilitate the carrying on the business, may yet be expended wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade", per Viscount Cave in Atherton v. British Insulated and Helsby Cables, Ltd., 10 Tax Cases 155; see also Morley v. Lawford and Co., 14 Tax Cases 229; and Bourne and Hollingsworth, Ltd. v. Ogden, 14 Tax Cases 349.

"Expenditure in course of the trade, which is unremunerative is none the less a proper deduction if wholly and exclusively made for the purposes of the trade; and it does not require the presence of a receipt on the credit side to justify the deduction of an expense", per Lord Thankerton in Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand, 17 A.T.C. 139; 1938 I.T.R. 636 at 644.

Reasonableness of expenditure.—The tribunals of fact have the inherent right to question the bona fide nature of any item of expenditure and of its quantum; and the mere fact that the accounts of the assessee contain a debit and that the debit has been duly authorised by or on behalf of the assessee will not in itself make the debit deductible from taxable profits. Thus, though as between a company and its directors and shareholders, the directors may be paid such remuneration as the company's articles and regulations may lay down, and it is not for the commissioners to interfere with these payments, the commissioners are entitled to find in a proper case that the sums so paid are not wholly and exclusively laid out for the business, etc., of the company. In fact, it is their duty to apply their minds to this question; and they are entitled to disallow any sums which can reasonably be held not to be spent for the purpose of the business, e.g., payments in utter disregard of the value of the corresponding goods or services and without any satisfactory explanation for such disregard, Copeman v. William Flood & Sons, 1941 I.T.R. 85 (Sup.): In re Aspro, Ltd., 1932 A.C. 683; and In re Lakshmi Narain Sen, 1936 I.T.R. 255 (Cal.). In practice, however, the tribunals refrain from exercising this power except in cases which clearly show mala fide.

General principles.—Whether a particular expenditure has been laid out for the purpose of the business, etc., (or incurred solely to earn the profits) or whether it is capital expenditure, depends in each case on the nature of the business, commercial practice, the nature of the expenditure, and other circumstances. It is not therefore possible to enumerate what would or would not be admissible deductions under clause (xv). The following few examples are illustrative of the general principles. Thus, advertisement charges would be allowed if they were incurred for selling the goods in the ordinary course, but if a special campaign of advertisement was launched, say, for expanding the business or floating a new company or extending the activities of the business in new directions, the expenditure would be disallowed. Taking legal expenses, for example, expenditure on acquiring a patent or any new asset or goodwill or the like would not be an admissible deduction, whereas the same expenditure incurred in defending a patent, might be allowed. In Kangra Valley Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, (1934) I.T.R. 199, a contrary view was taken, but it was departed from Mahabir Prasad & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1945 I.T.R. 340, the Kangra Valley Case being distinguished on its facts. Legal and other similar expenses, e.g., arbitration costs would be allowed, if not for capital purposes, irrespective of whether the assessee won or lost on the action. Expenses for fighting the liability to income-tax need not be allowed, as the expenditure is by no means necessary for earning the income that is the subject of charge, but the Central Board of Revenue has authorised ex gratia the allowance of auditor's fees, including the fees for settling liability to tax, but not fees for appeal or revision. Bonuses to employees, pensions, salaries, boarding and lodging expenses for employees, clothing for them, would all be ordinarily allowed (always within reasonable limits only) as deduction. Fees paid to Accountants and Auditors would be allowed if paid for normal work, that is, the every day work of the business, but not if paid for special work by way of floating new capital, etc. Expenditure on development, prospecting, etc., would not ordinarily be allowed, as they are essentially of a capital nature. Similarly, in regard to expenditure on removal from one premises to another, alterations of buildings, plant, machinery, etc., expenditure on fixtures and fittings. The primary test would be whether the expenditure was unusual or non-recurring and whether it brought into existence a new asset or effaced a capital liability. Embezzlements stand in a peculiar position. Embezzlement by or through the carelessness of an employee in the course of business may be allowed as deduction, but not money lost through the person responsible for the business or money lost by theft in the business—see Curtis v. Oldfield, 9 Tax Cases 319; 41 T.L.R. 373 and other rulings, infra. Bad debts in the course of business would be allowed under clause (xi) but not lost money loans unless lending money was part of the business. Broker's charges would be allowed, if for selling goods or securing orders, but not for raising loans or underwriting the issue of capital. In India, royalties paid for patents are a permissible deduction. In England, they are not allowed to be deducted but the person paying the royalty is entitled to deduct tax from the person receiving the royalty.

Insurance premia on account of theft, accidents, etc., would all be allowed in most cases, and the loss when realised from the insurance company, should be taken into the profit and loss account. Damages paid by an assessee would or would not be allowed according as they were paid in the ordinary course of business or not. It is usually a difficult question to decide whether damages paid is capital expenditure or not.

Correlation of profits and expenditure with reference to time.—
The following dicta may be noted.

"Such profits refer to the profits earned by the business generally and not to the profits of a particular year, on which a particular assessment is levied. This is obvious because expenditure necessarily precedes the earning of the profits, and much of the profits of one year must be earned by the expenses incurred in the previous year or years", per Macleod, C.J.—In re Tata Iron and Steel Co., 1 I.T.C. 131; 45 Bom. 1306; A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 391.

"I do not feel any difficulty in rejecting the suggestion made by the learned Advocate-General that the 'profits' referred to in the clause must mean the profits of one particular year in which the expenditure in question is incurred. There is no such limitation in the section; and in the absence of any words indicating such a limitation, it is clear that the contention cannot be accepted."—Per Shah, J. (Ibid.).

The above was endorsed by the Calcutta High Court in Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1933 I.T.R. 129. These doubts which arose with reference to the words "incurred solely for the corresponding purpose of earning such profits or gains" (which appeared before 1939 in clause (xv) and the essential words in which still appear in section 12) do not arise now with reference to the words "laid out, etc., wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the business, etc."

See also the Vallambrosa case, 5 Tax Cases 529 [under section 2 (1)], in which it was held that expenditure on maintaining rubber trees was an admissible deduction even though the trees may not yield any profits in a particular year; also Ounsworth v. Vickers, 6 Tax Cases 671; (1915) 3 K. B. 267, Hancock case, 7 Tax Cases 358; (1919) 1 K.B. 25.

" The profits for income-tax purposes are the receipts of the business less the expenditure incurred in earning those receipts. Receipts include debts due and they also include, at any rate in the case of a trader, goods in stock. Expenditure includes debts payable and expenditure incurred. Repairs, the running expenses of a business and so on, cannot be allocated directly to corresponding items of receipts and it cannot be restricted in its allowance in some way corresponding, or in an endeavour to make it correspond to the actual receipts during the particular year. If running repairs are made, if lubricants are bought, of course no inquiry is instituted as to whether those repairs were partly owing to wear and tear that earned profits in the preceding year, whether they will not help to make profits in the following year and so on. The way it is looked at and must be looked at is this, that that sort of expenditure is expenditure incurred on the running of a business as a whole in each year and the income is the income of the business as a whole in each year without trying to trace items of expenditure as earning particular items of profits."—Per Rowlatt, J., in Naval Colliery Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 138 L.T. 593; 12 Tax Cases 1017.

Nevertheless there may be items which are clearly traceable to particular accounting periods, e.g., reconditioning the mines in the very case above; reserves to meet future expenditure. It is always a question of fact,

"It would be a fallacious view to take it that each particular year is to be treated as a water-tight compartment and each item of expenditure in that year is to be strictly correlated to the profit of that year. Every company carrying on business makes future contracts. It may turn out that one of these contracts is a source, not of profit, but, of liability. The company must fulfil its contract . . . fulfilment of (its) contract is a fulfilment of one of the purposes of the business", per Lord Sands in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Falkirk Iron Co., 12 A.T.C. 235; 17 Tax Cases 625.

"Nor do their Lordships agree that expenditure in order to form a permissible deduction must have been incurred in the production of the actual year's income which is the subject of the assessment if by this is meant that the benefit of the expenditure must not extend beyond the year of assessment, for very many repairs have the result of enabling income to be earned in future years as well as in the year in which they are effected", Rhodesia Railways, Ltd. v. Income-tax Collector, Bechuanaland Protectorate, 1933 I.T.R. 227 (P.C.).

" The question of law to be determined is whether the expenditure in question was or was not 'exclusively incurred in the production of the assessable income' derived by the appellants in the tax year 1918-19. In considering that question, their Lordships put aside the circumstance that the expenditure was not of such a nature as to produce income in the actual tax-year in which it was incurred. In every trade, much of the expenditure in each year, such as expenditure in the purchase of raw material, in the repair of plant or the advertisement of goods for sale, is designed to produce results wholly or partly in subsequent years, but nevertheless such expenditure is constantly allowed as a deduction for the year in which it is incurred" in Ward & Co. v. Commissioners of Taxes, New Zealand, (1923) A.C. 145 (P.C.).

On the other hand the assessee cannot claim to deduct expenditure not incurred in the year of assessment but several years before, Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P. v. Basant Rai Takhat Singh, 1933 I.T.R. 1917; A.I.R. 1932 All. 451 (P.C.). See also Naval Colliery v. Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cas. 1017 (H.L.) referred to above.

Where receipts not taxable.—No deduction is permissible in respect of expenditure related to income that is not brought into charge, e.g., agricultural income, or in certain circumstances, foreign income. Where expenditure relates partly to taxed and partly to the taxed income, an allocation should be made. See notes under section 10 (2) (iii) in respect of 'interest'. Whether such allocation can or, should be made in a given case and if so, on what basis, are all questions of fact.

Bad debts.—See the Income-tax Manual and notes under clause (xi) ante as regards the extent to which, and the time at which, bad debts can be claimed as a deduction.

Unexecuted contracts—Acquisition of—Price paid for—Whether 'capital' expenditure.—A part of the business acquired by a company consisted of unexecuted contracts. The company claimed that the price paid for such contracts should be deducted in assessing the profits arising out of the execution of the contracts. Held, that the price paid was capital expenditure and could not therefore be deducted, City of London Contract Corporation v. Styles, 2 Tax Cases 239; 4 T.L.R. 51 (C.A.). This was followed by the Court of Appeal in Alianza Co. v. Bell, 5 Tax Cases 172; (1906) A.C. 18, and approved by the House of Lords in John Smith & Son v. Moore, (1921) 2 A.C. 13; 12 Tax Cases 266 (Lord Finlay dissenting, who thought that the facts could be distinguished).

An assessee acquired as part of a business certain unexecuted contracts left by his father for the supply of coal to him at favourable prices. The value of these contracts was estimated by Chartered Accountants at £30,000 which the assessee actually paid for. Later on, the price of coal rose very high and the assessee made huge profits. The question arose whether the £30,000 should be deducted from the profits as the purchase price of the stock-in-trade and the House of Lords (by a majority) negatived the assessee's contention that the sum should be deducted, John Smith & Son v. Moore, (1921) 2 A.C. 13; 12 Tax Cases 266.

Per Viscount Haldane—" . . . profits may be produced in two ways. It may result from purchases on income account, the cost of which is debited to that account, and the prices realised therefrom are credited, or it may result from realisation at a profit, of assets forming part of the concern. In such a case a prudent man of business will no doubt debit to profit and loss the value of capital assets realised, and take credit only for the balance. . . . the appellant . . . had brought as part of the capital of the business his father's contracts. These enabled him to purchase coal from the colliery owners at what we were told was a very advantageous price. . . . He was able to buy at this price because the right to do so was part of the assets of the business. Was it circulating capital?"

My Lords, it is not necessary to draw an exact line of demarcation between fixed and circulating capital. Since Adam Smith drew the distinction in the Second Book of his Wealth of Nations, which appears in the chapter on the Division of Stock, a distinction which has since become classical, economists have never been able to define much more precisely what the line of demarcation is. Adam Smith described fixed capital as what the owner turns to profit by keeping it in his own possession, circulating capital as what he makes profit of by parting with it and letting it change masters. The latter capital circulates in this sense.

My Lords, in the case before us the appellant, of course, made profit with circulating capital by buying coal under the contracts he had acquired from his father's estate at the stipulated price of fourteen shillings, and reselling it for more, but he was able to do this simply because he had acquired, among other assets of his business, including the good-will, the contracts in question. It was not by selling these contracts, of limited duration though they were, it was not by parting with them to other masters, but by retaining them, that he was able to employ his circulating capital in buying under them. I am accordingly of opinion that, although they may have been of short duration, they were none the less part of his fixed capital. That he had paid a price for them makes no difference."

On the other hand Lord Finlay who was in the minority said:

"If the amount of coal, which they represented had been in stock in yards belonging to the coal-dealer, it could not have been disputed that the price paid for it would have been a proper deduction as against the price realised by the resale. It can make no difference for this purpose that the coal-dealer followed the more convenient practice of having contracts with the collieries and despatching it from the pit's mouth straight to his customers. There is not here any provision of coal for a long time ahead—there is no purchase of a colliery from which the coal is to be extracted—that is merely provision in the only convenient way for the stock required up to 31st December, 1915, from 7th March, 1915. There is nothing in the nature of capital expenditure in the purchase of the stock wanted for re-sale during the current year.

The coal represented by the contracts was circulating capital. It was bought for use in the business, and was so used. At one stage of the argument in this House, an attempt was made to distinguish the case of contracts for coal, from the case of coal already delivered and stored in a coal-dealer's yards, and the Lord Justice Clerk, in part, rests his judgment in favour of the Crown upon the distinction between "goods" and "choses in action", such as contracts for coal. This distinction seems to me to be for this purpose untenable. The contracts gave the means of getting coal, and there is no difference for this purpose between having coal stored in your yard and having a contract which enables you to get it from time to time as you want it. This, indeed, was admitted by the Lord Advocate in argument when he was asked the question specifically by Lord Haldane. If the Crown is entitled to disallow what the appellant had to pay for these contracts, it would be equally entitled to disallow as a deduction the price paid for coal actually in stock.

For the present purpose these coal contracts are not distinguishable from the coal which they represent. . . .

The contracts cannot be regarded either in whole or in part as a fixed asset like a coal mine; they are merely the machinery for getting coal, and the coal which they commanded is the article by the re-sale of which the applicant made his profit. A contract for delivery of certain quantities of coal at a certain price may be made in consideration of a bonus paid when the contract is entered into, in which case the price to be paid on delivery would be somewhat lower, or it may be constituted simply by the price to be paid on each delivery. In each case the whole amount so paid represents circulating capital, the coal which the purchaser means to re-sell. The purchaser does not re-sell the contracts; he uses them from time to time as he requires coal for re-sale. Where there is no bonus paid, it would not, I suppose, be suggested that there was any element of fixed capital in such contracts. How can the payment of a bonus affect the case? The only difference is that the price which the mine owner is content to take and the coal-dealer to pay, is in the first case made up by a bonus on entering into the contract, and the amounts paid on each delivery, while in the other case it consists simply in the payment of a large amount as the price payable on each delivery. . . ."

Viscount Cave, who was in the majority, put the case on different grounds.

"The £30,000 was not paid by the firm for coal, nor was it paid by the trading firm as such for coal contracts; it was paid by John Ross Smith out of his private pocket as part of an overhead transaction under which the business with its assets and future profits passed into his hands, and it left the trading profits of the firm unaltered.

If I buy the crop of an orchard in a particular year for £20 and sell it for £40, my profit is only £20. But the profit of the orchard is £40; and in comparing the produce of the orchard in that year with its produce in another year, it is the £40 and not the £20 that must be taken into account.

I may add that the contrary view would lead to strange results. If John Smith, jun., had lived until the end of 1915, it is clear that he would have earned the profits assessed, and would have had to pay the duty claimed. Can it be that, because he dies in March, and the business and business assets were transferred to his son upon terms involving a payment of £30,000 for one of the assets, the assessable profit was reduced by that amount? If so, then if John Smith, jun., had lived for another six months and had then died, the contracts being still unperformed, the contracts might then have been valued at £60,000, and the assessable profits would have been reduced by that sum. And upon the same showing, if John Smith, jun., instead of dying, had at some time in 1915 converted the business into a company, the company paying £30,000 or a larger sum for the coal contracts, the company would have been entitled to deduct the whole purchase-money paid for those contracts from its assessable profits; and John Smith, jun., if he had held all the shares of the company, would have received the whole profit freed to that extent from Excess Profits Duty. I cannot think that this is the true meaning and effect of the Act. . . .", John Smith & Son v. Moore, (1921) 2 A.C. 13; 12 Tax Cases 266.

Fixed capital and circulating capital.—The following dicta may be noted.

“ What is circulating capital and what is fixed capital is a question which in many cases may well embarrass the businessman and the accountant, as well as the lawyer. According to some of the definitions the same asset may be fixed capital in one company and circulating capital in another.”, The Ammonia Soda Co., Ltd. v. Arthur Chamberlain and Others (a case under the Companies Act), (1918) 1 Ch. 266 (C.A.).

“In one sense the words ‘capital asset’ are words of art, because you do not have one set of assets representing capital and another set of assets representing income but what is meant is that this is an asset which represents fixed capital as opposed to circulating capital; that is to say, that this is an article which is possessed by the individual in question, not that he may turn it over and make a profit by the sale of it to his advantage, but that he may keep it and use it and make a profit by its use For instance, if a bank or a mercantile company finds it is more expensively housed than it needs, and sells its country house and its offices, that is not part of the business of banking”, per Rowlatt, J., in Rees Roturbo Development Syndicate v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 6 A.T.C. 597; 13 Tax Cases 366; (1928) A.C. 132.

“ money may be capital expenditure of the person who pays it and the income of the person who receives it.” Per Rowlatt, J., in Thomas v. Richard Evans & Co., 5 A.T.C. 551; 11 Tax Cases 790; (1927) 1 K.B. 33; (1927) A.C. 827.

Thus the cost of machinery or plant purchased by a business would ordinarily be expenditure on its fixed capital; but the same machinery or plant would be part of the stock-in-trade, i.e., the circulating capital of the manufacturer of or plant machinery. For further examples, see the judgment of Rankin, C.J., in Anglo-Persian Oil Company (India), Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1933 I.T.R. 129; 60 Cal. 843; 6 I.T.C. 419. There is however, no overriding principle of law that income-tax can be levied at least once on every payment—either in the hands of the payer or in those of the payee; and the taxability of a particular item at each stage should be considered with reference to the circumstances of each stage, i.e., those of the payer and of the payee.

While a kennel of a breeder may be stock-in-trade, the kennel of a company supplying runners (greyhound racing) or running its own dogs, is not stock-in-trade; additions to it therefore constitute capital expenditure, and reductions therefrom capital reduction. The kennel is not to be valued as stock for the purpose of ascertaining profits, Abbott v. Albion Greyhounds, Ltd., (1945) 1 All.E.R. 308.

Whether to a given person, a particular thing is fixed or circulating capital would depend on the nature of his business and of the raw materials of the business. If a gas manufacturer buys coal, the cost of the coal can be deducted from his profits; if on the other hand he owns a colliery, he cannot get an allowance for the cost of acquiring the mine or for the depletion of the deposit. Similarly, the cost of dumps of tailings of gold ore can be allowed in the case of a refiner of gold to whom the ore is raw material but not to a miner of gold to whom it is not raw material, Golden Horse-shoe (New), Ltd. v. Thurgood, 18 Tax Cases 280: (1934) 1 K.B. 548 (C.A.).

Similarly the owner or lessee of a brickfield cannot deduct from his profits the value of earth or claim an allowance for depreciation, even though if he bought the earth from outside as necessity arose the cost of the earth could be deducted, Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Tikaram and Sons, (1937) I.T.R. 544 (All.). A fortiori the cost of purchasing land for extracting earth for bricks cannot be deducted. In re Ganeshilal Bhattawala, (1938) I.T.R. 489 (All.). The Chief Court of Oudh went even further in Sardar Singar Singh & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1944 I.T.R. 504, in holding that the cost of acquiring a lease of brickfields for a period of years is capital expenditure even if a part of the cost is described as advance payment of rent. If the rent had been payable annually and only for the period of occupation or with reference to the quantity of earth removed, the decision may have been different.

Where an assessee obtained the exclusive privilege of excavating lime shells in an area for three years in return for which he paid a sum in twelve quarterly instalments it was held that the payments were not of the nature of rent (though the area was leased) nor of that of cost of raw materials. The shells were not of the nature of raw materials since they had not already been excavated and dumped, and it was left to the lessee to quarry as much or as little as he chose. The fact that payment was made by instalments did not alter its true nature which was to start a new venture and not to carry on an existing business, Chengalvaroya Mudaliar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, (1934) I.T.R. 395. Nor would the mere use of the words "annual lease amount" in a lease of this kind convert the payments into revenue expenditure, Chengalvaroya Chestiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, (1937) I.T.R. 70. The payment for an exclusive right for a period to collect chanks from chank beds, the payment not depending on the quantity collected and not being an outlay in an already existing business was held to be of a capital nature even though the payment was made in instalments, Abdur Kayum Sahib Hussain Sahib v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, (1939) I.T.R. 652.

Where, however, in order to extract saltpetre and common salt an assessee acquired on short leases for a year or two plots of land containing saltpetre it was held that the expenditure was revenue expenditure. The raw material was the earth which was not a marketable commodity and according to custom could only be got by short leases. The consideration for each lease was not a separate investment for a separate transaction. The expenditure on the leases was therefore incurred for running the business and not for acquiring it, In re Parmanand Haveliram, (1945) I.T.R. 157 (Lah.), following the observations of Channell, J., in Alianza Co. v. Bell, 5 Tax 60.

It should be noted that the case where the assessee owns a mine or acquires it under long lease is essentially different from what he acquires on yearly or short term leases, in the former case, what is acquired is fixed assets and in the latter, circulating capital. What is a short lease and what is a long one is obviously a question of degree, and the more important test is whether the asset is of the nature of fixed capital or of that of circulating capital, In re Parmanand Haveliram, (1945) I.T.R. 157 was followed in In re Nandlal Bhojraj, (1946) I.T.R. 181 (Lah.) in which the cost of acquiring year after year leases of saltpetre lands for periods of about 5 to 10 years each, the periods varying with the available saltpetre in the land was allowed as revenue expenditure, In Commissioner of Income-tax v.

Bhojraj Harichand, 1946 I.T.R. 277, the same High Court went further and ruled that irrespective of the duration of the leases, the expenditure was revenue expenditure so long as in truth the transaction is one of selling the earth or the periodical saltpetre crop.

Money-lending.—A money-lender's stock-in-trade is his money, and if he has a money-lending business both abroad and in British India, the loss on account of exchange in respect of his remittances to and from British India, is a legitimate debit to his Revenue account, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. A. S. A. Concern, (1937) I.T.R. 456.

Goodwill—Fixed capital.—"It is necessary, however, to consider whether the depreciation in goodwill and leases is to be treated as loss of 'fixed capital' or of 'floating or circulating' capital . . . Depreciation of goodwill seems to me to be loss of 'fixed capital'. It closely resembles the loss which a railway company might be said to sustain if it were found that a line, which had been made, say ten years ago, at a certain cost, could now be made for a very much smaller amount and consequently would not yield, if it were sold, the price expended in making it," Wilmer v. M'Narma & Co., Ltd. (a case under the Companies Act), (1895) 2 Ch. 245.

Transfer of business—Consideration for.—When the Royal Insurance Company acquired the business of the Queen Insurance Company, it was also provided in the agreement of transfer that the manager of the latter company should be taken into the service of the former, at a salary. But liberty was reserved for the Royal Insurance Company to commute the salary by payment to the manager of a gross sum on the basis of the Company's Annuity Tables, subject however to the condition that he should not at any time accept office under any other fire or life insurance company. Shortly after the transfer of the business the Royal Insurance Company paid the manager the commuted value of his annual salary. The Company claimed to deduct this lump sum from the taxable profits. Held, that this payment formed part of the consideration for the transfer of the business, and therefore, being capital expenditure, could not be deducted, Royal Insurance Company v. Watson, 3 Tax Cases 500; (1897) A.C. 1. Similarly the consideration paid by one Bank to another in return for the transfer of a right to issue notes is not deductible, since it is capital expenditure, London Bank of Mexico v. Apthorpe, 3 Tax Cases 143; (1891) 2 Q.B. 378.

In a case in which the facts were complicated and peculiar but broadly speaking, a family company, which was involved in discord and paid the various members salaries for sinecure jobs and had a neutral manager who was allowed to have other pursuits, had to pay compensation to the above employees for terminating their services, such termination being required for the purpose of transferring control of the company to outsiders, it was held that the compensation was capital expenditure, Bassett Enterprise, Ltd. v. Petty, 17 A.T.C. 272 (K.B.). There was a partition between a Hindu father and his son under a Court's decree, and the father retained the old trade name, the goodwill of the old business and the card of membership of a stock exchange in the old name, while the son started a new business in a slightly different name. At the partition the son was given the right to recover a certain debt nominally about Rs. 1,13,000, but valued for the purpose of the partition at Rs. 22,000. Eventually the debt was settled for Rs. 12,000. It was held that the loss was of capital, the debt having been taken over as a part of the capital assets of the new business which was not a successor to the old one, and not as part of outstandings in a continuing business, In re Bissendoyal Doyaram, (1938) I.T.R. 165.

Tea Gardens.—See Vallambrosa case, 5 Tax Cases 529 and notes under section 2 (1) as regards expenses of cultivation.

Contracts—Cancellation of—Compensation for.—A company, which owned a ship, contracted for the construction and purchase of a new ship for the sum of £226,000 of which £30,000 was payable on the signing of the contract, and the balance of instalments as the building of the ship progressed. Before any substantial progress had been made a heavy slump in trade occurred, and the company cancelled the contract by payment, to the builders, of £60,000, including the £30,000 already paid. Held, that the payment of the whole of the £60,000 was in the nature of capital expenditure, and was not an admissible deduction in the computation of the profits of the company for income-tax purposes, "Countess Warwick Steamship Company, Limited v. Ogg, 8 Tax Cases 652; (1924) 2 K.B. 292.

If, on the other hand, the contract was one for goods or stock-in-trade (as distinguished from capital goods like a ship), the compensation might be an admissible deduction.

A Marine Insurance Company claimed to deduct from its profits a sum of money paid as compensation for cancelling contracts to build ships which it had ordered but did not require. The Commissioners were not satisfied with the explanation offered as to the object of the transaction. It was held that on the facts the loss was not a trading loss, i.e., that dealing in ships was no part of the business of the company, Devon Mutual Steamship Insurance Association v. Ogg, 6 A.T.C. 1010; 13 Tax Cases 184.

In all cases relating to the payment of sums in connection with cancellation of leases and the like, an important test is whether the payment is merely the commutation of what is clearly a revenue charge. See Smith v. Incorporated Council of Law Reporting, 6 Tax Cases 477; Noble v. Mitchell, 11 Tax Cases 372; or whether the payment is really not for the purpose of the continuing business, i.e., closing down of the business, Union Cold Storage Co. v. Ellerker, 17 A.T.C. 479 (K.B.D.).

See also the cases cited under section 3 as to when such compensation is a capital receipt and when not.

Preliminary expenses.—Such expenses are clearly of the nature of capital expenditure. A company formed to run a mill merely accumulated funds and invested them, and earned no profit as a mill, not fully functioning as such. Held, that only such expenditure could be deducted as related to the earning of the income from investments and that no expenditure on the mill proper could be claimed. The assessee's plea was that the disallowed expenditure was a necessary incident of the business and required to put the mill on a profit-earning basis, Mahalakshmi Textile Mills, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 6 I.T.C. 83.

Where a company formed inter alia for the purpose of searching for and winning mica stopped work because of a cyclone and incurred expenditure in prospecting some time later with a view to resuming production, it was held that the expenditure was deductible from other taxable income, General Corporation, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, (1935) I.T.R. 350. Whether business is actually being carried on is a question of fact and not of law.

Loss in winding up.—Such loss is necessarily of a capital nature; see Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Burrell, 9 Tax Cases 27; (1924) 2 K.B. 478; In re Armitage, (1893) 3 Ch. 377 and In re Crichton's Oil Co., (1902) 2 Ch. 86. See also notes under section 24.

Lease—Foreclosure of.—A Company whose business was not to trade in mining licences but to win coal got rid of an onerous licence involving the payment of a heavy dead rent and a minimum royalty by paying a lump sum to the lessor. Held, that the payment was capital expenditure, Mallett v. Staveley Coal and Iron Co., Ltd., (1928) 2 K.B. 405; 13 Tax Cases 772 (C.A.). Whether you acquire an asset by the expenditure, whether it is debited to Profit and Loss Account, whether it is recurrent or not—these, though helpful tests, are not conclusive. If you redeem an annual recurrent business expenditure by a commuted lump payment, such payment can be deducted (see Hancock's case, infra), but if you pay something now to avoid losses in future years, the payment is analogous to a loss of fixed capital. In this case what really happened was that the company disposed of a burdensome capital asset.

In Cowcher v. Richard Mills and Co., Ltd., (1927) 13 Tax Cases 216, it was held that the lump sum consideration paid to the landlord as compensation for the premature surrender of a lease of certain shops which had to be closed was capital expenditure.

Recurring capital expenditure.—Whether a recurring payment is merely an instalment of a Capital debt or a Revenue expenditure depends both on the form and on substance. An annual rent would be clearly a Revenue charge but if a contract is made under which the assessee secures the right to use the land for a certain number of years and a lump sum is fixed as the consideration for this right but payable in annual instalments, such payments would be Capital charges. See Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Adam (Lord Blackburn dissenting), 7 A.T.C. 397; (1928) 14 Tax Cases 34; also Ainley v. Eden, 14 A.T.C. 243 (K.B.D.) referred to under section 10 (2) (i). Where however a lessee of a coal seam, in return for the lessor's indemnifying him against liability for surface damage, paid the lessor so much per acre as each acre was worked, it was held that these payments were legitimate deductions from taxable profits, O'Grady v. Bullcroft Main Collieries, 17 Tax Cases 93.

Where a local authority arranged to take water from a colliery company and the latter erected wells in accordance with the designs, etc., of the former and received from it annually (a) fixed sum; (b) 1/30th of the capital cost of the works; (c) Interest on outstanding capital; and (d) a penny for every 1,000 gallons of water supplied, it was held that item (b) could not be deducted from the profits of the local authority, Coalville Urban District Council v. Boyce, 18 Tax Cases 655. See also Ostime v. Pontypridd and Rhodda Joint Water Board, 1944 C. A. referred to under section 4 (3) (iii).

A Colliery Company undertook either to restore to an arable condition all land occupied by the Company, etc.; or to pay the lessor for land not so restored, at so many years' purchase of the agricultural value of the land. The Company paid a lump sum under the option. Held, that the payment was capital expenditure.

Per the Lord President.—"It seems to me that on the question of the capital or revenue character of the cost of restoration, or of the compensation payable for land damaged or not restored it makes no difference whether the company had acquired the property or a servitude right at the commencement of the lease, in consideration of a price paid, or whether they merely acquired a personal right for the duration of the lease upon condition that they paid for it at the end of the lease by restoring the land to its original condition, or by paying the value of the land if it was not restored", Robert Addie & Sons' Collieries v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 8 Tax Cases 671.

If, however, instead of arranging in advance for such a lump sum payment the Colliery owner goes to arbitration each time damage on the surface is caused to the property of a person, the damage awarded by the arbitrator might be a revenue charge. In a case in which compensation was paid as each acre was broken, not on the basis of ascertained damage but at a pre-arranged rate of so much per acre, it was held that the expenditure was a revenue charge. The test applied—following the British Insulated Cables case, 10 Tax Cases 155—was whether by such a payment an asset or right was acquired or whether payments were made as the business progressed and necessitated by it, O'Grady v. Markham Main Colliery, Ltd., 17 Tax Cases 93.

A coal mining company was under a statutory obligation to remedy injuries to a drainage system caused by subsidence. The Drainage Commissioner prepared a comprehensive scheme by contributing to which the company was relieved of its statutory obligation. The contribution was payable in instalments. Macnaghten, J., allowed the contribution on the ground that the company thereby got rid of an annual liability, viz., of remedying the injuries to the drainage system from time to time, but the Court of Appeal disallowed it. Though the case was near the borderline, the company obtained an "enduring benefit" for it was enabled to work a large quantity of coal for several years. The case was therefore one of capital expenditure rather than expenditure to earn normal profits, Bean v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries, 1944 C.A.

Colliery—Restoration of seams.—If a seam is allowed to get into a non-profit-earning condition, expenditure incurred in getting it back into a working condition is capital expenditure; on the other hand expenditure on keeping up a seam continuously in a profit-earning condition is revenue expenditure. It is all a question of degree, United Collieries, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 8 A.T.C. 522; 12 Tax Cases 1248.

Repairs—Accumulated—Additions and improvements.—In re King's Lynn Harbour Moorings Commissioners, 1 Tax Cases 23, the Court upheld the contention of the Mooring Commissioners that money applied in the repayment of debts previously incurred in the renewal of works necessary for earning the income was deductible. Some of the later decisions about capital expenditure cited below are however against the view in this decision.

Where certain ships had been sunk by the Admiralty in the outer part of a harbour as part of a scheme of defence and later on when that part of the harbour was handed over to the Harbour Board, the latter claimed to deduct from their profits the cost of removing the sunken ships the Commissioners held as a fact that the removal of the sunken ships was of the nature of dredging and that the expenditure on removal was therefore a revenue charge which could be deducted from the profits. Both Finlay, J., and the Court of Appeal declined to interfere, Whelan v. Dover Harbour Board, 13 A.T.C. 123; 18 Tax Cases 555.

"The expense laid out in keeping a ship which is employed in trade, in proper repair, is certainly an expense necessary for the purposes of the trade. It is made for the purpose of earning the profits of the trade. Repairs may be executed as the occasion for them occurs; or if they are such as brook delay, they may be postponed to convenient season; but in either case they truly constitute a constant recurring incident of the continuous employment of the ship which makes them necessary. They are therefore an admissible deduction in computing profits", per the Lord President in Law Shipping Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 621. "But the accumulated repairs on account of purchasing a ship in disrepair are capital expenditure, and may not be admitted as deductions", per the Lord President (ibid.). In this case, a second-hand ship in bad repair was purchased by the assessee in circumstances not constituting succession to the seller's business; and repairs attributable to the period of use by the assessee were allowed as Revenue expenditure, and the only dispute was as to the repairs to make good initial defects. The cost of repairing a newly bought asset need not however always be capital expenditure; e.g., if the assessee can show that the price that he paid for the asset would have been the same irrespective of whether the vendor or purchaser made the repair.

A company owned a single steamship which was seized and used by the Germans during the War. The ship was returned to the owners after the War, and heavy repairs were found necessary for reconditioning it. The company received compensation from the German Government. Since the compensation was clearly of the nature of damages and not of the nature of freight for the period of use by the Germans, and the reconditioning was not in the course of the daily business of the company, it was held that the cost of reconditioning could not be deducted from the company's profits.

Per Lord Sands.—"It is clear that if the respondents had purchased another dilapidated ship and reconditioned her, the expense of such reconditioning would have been held to be capital outlay (Law Shipping Co., 12 Tax Cases 621). Does it make any difference that the ship which they so treated was their own old ship of which they had recovered possession after 4½ years? I come to the conclusion that it makes no difference and I do so on the grounds that the respondents had not been in possession of the ship for 4½ years, had not during that time handled or traded with the ship, and that the dilapidations which had to be made good were not dilapidations suffered by the ship in the course of the respondents' trading with her", Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Granite City Steamship Co., 6 A.T.C. 678.

The cost of reconditioning coal mines, pumping and restoring pit props as a consequence of damage resulting from the stoppage of work during a prolonged strike was held to be a capital loss by the Court of Appeal (Sargant, I.J., dissenting), since, during the period, the colliery had stopped work and was not trying to win coal, Naval Colliery Co., Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 6 A.T.C. 351; 12 Tax Cases 1017.

"The loss, even if made good out of revenue, is not a revenue loss . . . the injury to the mine is an injury to a fixed capital asset."—Per Hansworth, M. R.

"It was an existing loss chargeable against the profits of the period in which it was made, and liable to be defrayed in the ordinary course out of any moneys that might come to their hands in the succeeding period. It was throughout an income loss."—Per Sargant, L.J.

The periodical renewal by sections, of the rails and sleepers of a railway line as they were worn out by use is in no sense a reconstruction of the whole railway and is an ordinary incident of railway administration. The fact that the wear although continuous is not, and cannot be, made good annually does not render the whole cost of renewal when it comes to be effected necessarily a capital charge. Such expenditure is incurred in consequence of the rails having been worn out in previous years the income of which had been taxed without deduction in respect of such wear, and merely represents the cost of restoring the rails to the state in which they could continue to earn income. It does not create any new asset, Rhodesia Railways, Ltd. v. Income-tax Collector, 1933 I.T.R. 227 (P.C.). On the other hand, a railway is not entitled to deduct from its profits the cost of any improvements effected at the time of renewals such as increasing the weight or quality of the rails or that of the sleepers and chairs and anchors or introducing new types of points and crossings, signals, etc., Highland Railway Co. v. Balderston, 2 Tax Cases 485. See also Caledonian Railway v. Banks, 1 Tax Cases 487, set out under clause (vi) (Depreciation allowance), Notification under section 60, under which railways are allowed to claim cost of renewals as made in lieu of the depreciation allowance. In the Privy Council case from Rhodesia above referred to, the railway had been disallowed its claim for 'wear and tear' on the ground that the railway was permanent and not liable to wear and tear, and its claim for renewals on the ground that they were not 'repairs'. The Privy Council's decision in effect was that the renewals were merely accumulated repairs.

Reserves—Future repairs.—A corporation which purchased gas-works in a defective structural condition was held not to be entitled to deduct sums set aside annually to be expended in later years on restoring the plant and apparatus to its proper condition, Clayton v. Newcastle-Under-Lyme Corporation, 2 Tax Cases 416.

Accumulated Royalties.—The Patna High Court, in Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 283, allowed as a deduction from the taxable profits of a successor in a business, the accumulated arrears of royalties that had mounted up during the time of his predecessor. The royalties, it was argued, were not a personal liability of the predecessor, and further mining operations could not be effected except on the payment of these royalties. This view was not accepted by the Privy Council. If the assessee had known (what was concealed from him) that arrears of unpaid rent had accumulated which the assessee would have to pay to the superior landlord, he would have correspondingly diminished the purchase price of the colliery. Whether he could recover it or not, he had a claim against the vendor, and if it was recovered, it would go in reduction of purchase price and not as a credit to the Profit and Loss Account of the colliery. The arrears of rent therefore were not loss on the income account of the colliery but a sum payable to get possession of the colliery—not to carry it on. It was therefore not incurred to earn the profits and gains of the colliery business, Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Kameshwar Singh, 1933 I.T.R. 94; 12 Pat. 318; A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 108.

A mine was subject to a minimum dead rent but when the royalties exceeded this figure, the surplus could be retained until the company had recouped the excess in former years of the dead rent over the royalties. It was held that the mine was assessable on its full profit without deduction of the surplus royalties retained, although in earlier years the dead rent had been paid and assessed when the mine had not begun to work, Broughton & Plas Power Coal Company v. Kirkpatrick, 2 Tax Cases 69; 14 Q.B.D. 491.

Lease—Premium.—A premium for the renewal of a lease for five years was held to be capital expenditure in Mac Taggart v. Strump, 4 A.T.C. 455; 10 Tax Cases 17.

Per Lord Cullen.—"The distinction between capital and revenue expenditure is very elusive, and is more formal than real, and whether expenditure for a particular purpose is capital expenditure or revenue expenditure may depend, as has often been said, upon the mode in which the expenditure is made. Here . . . I think that (a trader) would regard it as a payment of capital which he had, in unusual circumstances, been forced to make, although as a matter of ordinary prudence, he would probably see to it that this depletion of his capital was made good gradually out of his profits when earned."

A brewer paying a premium for the lease of a public house, for the purpose of letting it to a tenant under covenant to buy beer brewed by him, is not entitled to a deduction on account of the gradual exhaustion of the premium, Knowles v. McAdam, 1 Tax Cases 161, distinguished; Watney & Co. v. Musgrave, 1 Tax Cases 272.

Where a company leased a cinema for a long period (21 years) in return for an annual rent plus a premium payable in quarterly instalments throughout the period of the lease, it was held that the premiums were capital expenditure, Green v. Favourite Cinemas, Ltd., 15 Tax Cases 390.

Where, however, an assessee acquired, in return for an annual payment, the under-lease of certain cinema premises and also the goodwill of the cinema business for the period of the lease, together with the option to acquire the headlease and goodwill on a further lump sum payment, it was held that the annual payment was a revenue charge—neither a capital outlay nor an appropriation of profits, Ogden v. Medway Cinemas, Ltd., 13 A.T.C. 473; 18 Tax Cases 691. The annual payment in this case was unrelated to any lump sum consideration for the purchase of the right; it was not an instalment of a lump sum.

It is not necessary that rent should be a constant figure from year to year. The mere fact that, in a renting agreement for a term of years, more than one half of the total rent is paid in the first year will not of itself convert the rent of the first year into a capital payment. On the other hand, if there are relevant facts, e.g., the total rent over the term being in truth the cost of machinery or other asset rented (it being of no value at the end of the term), it might be possible to hold that the entire rent—not merely that of the first year—is capital expenditure. Where, therefore, certain machinery and plant, leased for a term of years, remained the property of the lessor who had access to them to alter, adjust and repair them, and the machinery, etc., were eventually to revert to the lessor, and there was no evidence to suggest that the rent was really a payment by instalments for the machinery, etc., it was held that the rent should be allowed as a deduction, In re Hakim Ram Prasad, 1936 I.T.R. 104. See also section 10 (2) (i) and notes thereunder.

Colliery—Sinking new shaft or pit.—A call was made upon the shareholders of a Cost-book Mine, for the purpose of sinking a new shaft, and the concern claimed to deduct the amount expended on such sinking. The Commissioners allowed the claim, as they were of opinion that in the case of a Cost-book Mine there was no such thing as capital, and that there could be no profit in working such a mine until every expenditure had first been met. Held, that the Commissioners were wrong, and that the question, whether the expenditure in respect of which a deduction was sought was capital or not, was one of fact; and the case was accordingly sent back to the Commissioners to ascertain the facts. A 'cost-book' mine is one in which the owners, who form a common law partnership, run the mine jointly, without keeping any Capital Account, the excess of expenditure over receipts being borne by the partners as a capital loss and the excess of receipts over expenditure being distributed as profits.

Per Wright, J.—"The real question is: Is the expenditure in respect of which a deduction is sought to be made, capital or not? That must be to a great extent, or may be to a great extent, a question of fact. One can very well imagine in cases of mines where minerals lay at shallow depths, and where it was necessary to open them out from time to time, frequently, by shallow shafts, that in those cases, it might well be that the sinking of shafts would be properly treated as part of the ordinary working expenditure. On the other hand you have a case, such as I suppose the present case is, where a large area of ground has been worked from one shaft, and it is apprehended that it will soon become impossible to work any further from that shaft, and a new mine, so to speak, must be opened by a new shaft altogether."

Per Collins, J.—"It seems to me that on the authority of In re Addie & Sons, 1 Tax Cases 1; 12 Sc.L.R. 274, expenditure in sinking a shaft would be capital expenditure; and . . . it is possible to conceive of cases in which the making of a shaft, having regard to the lie of the minerals and the very small length of the shaft, might be described as working expenditure," Morant v. Wheal Grenville Mining Company, 3 Tax Cases 298.

A deduction is not ordinarily allowable for expenses of pit-sinking.

Per Earl Cairns.—"I am not prepared to say that . . . a mine-owner might not in some cases be entitled to an allowance in respect of the cost of sinking a pit by means of which the minerals are gotten which are the source of profit."

Per Lord Blackburn.—"I do not wish to lay down any general proposition either that money expended in sinking pits can never be in the nature of expenses incurred . . . in working the coal so as to be properly taken into account in estimating the profits made . . . or to say what, if any, the circumstances are under which it may be done," Coltness Iron Co. v. Black, 1 Tax Cases 287; 6 App. Cas. 315; overruling the decision in Knowles v. McAdam, 3 Ex.D. 23; 1 Tax Cases 161.

Per the Lord President in Addie's case.—"Now I am quite clear that the making of a new pit in a trade of this kind, is in every sense of the term, just an expenditure of capital. It is an investment of money of capital and must be placed to capital account in any properly kept books applicable to such a concern," In re Addie & Sons, 1 Tax Cases 1.

The cost of a new chimney has been disallowed as being capital expenditure, O'Grady v. Bullcroft Main Collieries, Ltd., 17 Tax Cases 93.

A mining company claimed as a deduction the cost of deepening a main shaft, the bodies of ore accessible from the original level having been practically worked out. Held, that there was no evidence on which the opinion of the Commissioners, that the expenditure was proper working cost, could be supported, and that the deduction could not be allowed, Bonner v. Basset Mines, Ltd., 6 Tax Cases 146; 108 L.T. 764.

Where a mining company first allowed its lower seams to be filled with water because it was not intended to work these seams and later on dewatered them in order to work them, it was held that the cost of dewatering was of a capital nature, United Collieries, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 1248.

Wasting assets.—An English Company owned nitrate grounds in Chile, which, with the factory, machinery, etc., would become useless when the nitrate was exhausted. The raw material from which the nitrate was produced was found in natural deposits on the grounds at or near the surface. The company claimed that a deduction should be allowed for the cost of the raw material worked up and exhausted each year. Held, that the deduction in question could not be allowed.

Per Lord Macnaghten.—"It appears to me . . . that it is money wholly and exclusively laid out and expended as capital."

Per Lord Robertson.—"First of all, is this capital which he proposes to obtain a deduction for? Now that, my Lords, seems to me to be entirely concluded by the findings in the case. There is no doubt whatever that the scheme of the enterprise of this Company was to invest their capital in the acquisition of this property, and then to proceed to work it as a mining concern.

My Lords, that being so, the Master of the Rolls seems to me to be abundantly justified in saying that this is merely another case where capital has been embarked in a wasting subject-matter," The Alianza Company, Ltd. v. Bell, 5 Tax Cases 172; (1906) A.C. 18.

In Kauri Timber Co. v. Commissioner of Taxes, (1913) A.C. 771—a New Zealand case—a company acquired certain forests mostly by purchase or by a 99 years lease. Under the New Zealand law no deduction may be made from taxable profits on account of loss of capital. The question, therefore, arose whether the value of the timber cut down every year could be deducted. The Privy Council held that the deduction was not permissible.

" . . . there is no obligation upon the company immediately to cut down and remove the timber, or indeed to do so at any specific date, their rights with regard to the timber being co-extensive in time with the currency of their leases. The case is thus removed in fact from an analogy with decisions in which a sale of standing timber was coupled with the duty of its instant removal from the ground . . . the transaction under which these timber rights were acquired was not one under which a mere possession of goods by a contract of sale was given to the appellant company, but was one under which they obtained an interest in, and possession of, land. So long as the timber, at the option of the company, remained upon the soil, it derived its sustenance and nutriment from it. The additional growths became ipso jure the property of the company. All rights of possession necessary for working the business of cutting or even for preserving uninjured the standing and growing stock of timber were ceded under the leases. All this, together with the business facilities for removal and sale, was granted to the company which thereby became invested with the possession of and an interest in the land. . . . It has long been the law of the United Kingdom that the exhaustion of capital, however it might be treated on strict actuarial principles or according to certain principles of economics, may for the purpose of taxation be treated as profit. The profit may be temporary, and so when it ceases the capital may be gone, and with the going of the capital there will also go the subject and the possibility of the tax. . . . The law—so clearly stated with regard to the working of coal and nitrates, and settled upon a broad general principle—is in no way different when it comes to be applied to timber-bearing lands. The principle as to the true reason for holding that such timber rights are of the nature of possession of, and interest in the land itself, has long been settled," Kauri Timber Co. v. New Zealand Commissioner of Taxes, (1913) A.C. 771.

Subsidiary and allied businesses—Losses arising from.—A Company carried on the business of zinc smelting, for which purpose it required large quantities of "blende". To supply the "blende" a new Company was formed, which from time to time, received assistance from the old Company in the form of advances on loan. The new Company proving unsuccessful, and going into liquidation, the amount due from it to the old Company, was written off as bad debt. Held, that the advances were an investment of capital, and that the loss was not deductible in arriving at the profits of the old Company for assessment.

Per Bray, J.—"What you have to see is whether . . . an expenditure which, on the ordinary profit and loss account, would not appear as a debit at all, but would appear as a debit when you are dealing with assets. . . . If this were an ordinary business transaction of a contract by which the Welsh Company were to deliver certain blende, it may be at prices to be settled hereafter, and that this was really nothing more than an advance on account of the price of that blende, there would be a great deal to be said in favour of the appellants. But it is quite clear that the Commissioners have not taken that view, and it seems to me rightly they have not taken that view. It is impossible to look upon this as an ordinary business transaction of an advance against goods to be delivered. It is really nothing of the sort. The Welsh Company were in this difficulty. They had great difficulties in opening their mine; they had to expend large sums of money for that purpose, and they applied to the appellant Company—the English Company, to lend them money, and they lent them money.

Now, I can come to no other conclusion but that this was an investment of capital in the Welsh Company, and was not an ordinary trade transaction of an advance against goods. . . ." English Crown Spelter Co. v. Baker, 5 Tax Cases 327; 99 L.T. 353.

In Jacobs Young & Co. v. Harris, 5 A.T.C. 735; 11 Tax Cases 221, where a principal company sank its money in a subsidiary company and the latter lost its money, it was held that the loss was, to the former, a loss of capital and not a deductible expense. The point is that it was not the "trade" of the principal company in which the loss occurred.

A company manufacturing fountain pens formed a subsidiary company for the manufacture of a low-grade pen. The issued capital of the new company was wholly subscribed for (except for one share) by the sole director of the parent company who also became sole director of the new company. The new company was suddenly required by Government to make aeroplane parts; and there was delay in the receipt of moneys from Government. The parent company went on making loans to the new company and eventually took over its business. A part of the advances was written off and the company also repaid the director the capital subscribed by him. The question arose whether these amounts could be deducted from taxable profits. Held, that there was no evidence to justify the findings of the Commissioners that the deductions were admissible, Baker v. Mabie Todd & Co., Ltd., 13 Tax Cases 235.

The taking over of a large stock of goods at an inflated price from a subsidiary company merely to avert the latter from disaster cannot cause a trading loss but only a capital loss to the parent company when the goods are ultimately written down; that is, the loss cannot be deducted, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Huntley and Palmers, Ltd., 7 A.T.C. 323; 12 Tax Cases 1209.

An oil producing and refining company which had regularly bought oil for a long time from another company which it largely controlled bought the plant and equipment of that company and also the oil estimated to be in its wells. A certain sum was paid for the oil in the shape of shares in the purchasing company, the cost of these shares being placed under "crude oil suspense" in its books, the suspense being cleared gradually as oil was produced. It was argued that the company had only bought stocks of crude oil, having accurately estimated the deposits underground and that the expenditure, being on circulating capital, was deductible from taxable profits. This was negatived on the ground that the wells were an 'enduring asset' in the words of Lord Cave in Atherton v. British Insulated and Helsby Cables, (1926) A.C. 192; 10 Tax Cases 155; Hughes v. British Burma Petroleum Co., 17 Tax Cases 286.

A Brewery Company granted loans to their customers on the security of Public-houses. If the security did not realise the amount of the loan, the Company wrote off the loss as a bad debt. Held, that in arriving at the profits of the Brewery Company, for assessment to income-tax, the Company was entitled to deduct the amount of such losses or bad debts, Watney & Co. v. Musgrave, 5 Ex. D. 241; 1 Tax Cases 272, distinguished; Reid's Brewery Co., Ltd. v. Male, (1891) 2 Q.B. 1; 3 Tax Cases 279.

In order to establish a new source of supply, a paper-maker in the United Kingdom advanced money to a wood pulp manufacturer in Canada, the money bearing interest and being repayable gradually when supplies were made. During the war the British Government stopped the import of wood pulp and the Canadian firm disclaimed all liability in respect of the advance. Held, that the advance was in the nature of capital expenditure 'since you do not pay in advance for goods simpliciter ten years in advance'. Charles Marsden & Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 217.

Three closely connected companies—two in England and one in India—entered into an elaborate arrangement under which certain shares sold by the English companies to the Indian company were allowed to remain with the former (in their own names) who received the dividends, sold the shares from time to time and retained the proceeds and in fact had the same dominion (including power to pledge for debts) over the shares as if they had not been sold. The shares were paid for, at rates higher than the true price, by the issue of fully paid-up shares of the Indian company.

The position therefore was that while in certain events the Indian company might have received the shares in specie, it might equally have received nothing more than a sum of money which might be and was less than the nominal fully paid-up value of the shares. The difference between this value and the sale proceeds of the English shares was eventually claimed by the Indian company as a loss. The Privy Council held, following Moffy v. Koffeyfontein Mines, Ltd., (1904) 2 Ch. 108, that in the circumstances of the case (the consideration having been manifestly less than the fully paid value of the shares) the issue of fully paid shares by the Indian company could not be justified, that the English companies were responsible to make good the discount and that the Indian company had therefore made no loss, Trustees Corporation (India), Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 57 I.A. 152; 54 Bom. 437; 59 M.L.J. 242; 4 I.T.C. 378 (P.C.).

A Company (A) had an agreement with another Company (B) carrying on a similar business, under which it obtained, in return for an undertaking to make up the yearly profits of Company (B) to a certain amount, a commanding interest in its management. Company (A) claimed to deduct in computing its yearly profits for income-tax purposes, the payment made to Company (B) under the terms of this agreement. The Commissioners found that the payment was made by Company (A) for the purpose of its trade so that it might sell its goods at a better price, and therefore allowed the deduction. Held, that the question was one of fact rather than of law and that the deduction had rightly been allowed, Moore v. Stewards and Lloyds, Ltd., 6 Tax Cases 501; 43 Sc.L.R. 811.

Per the Lord President.—“ . . . It all depended on whether this expenditure was really an outlay to earn profit, or was an application of profit earned. Well, that is a question of fact . . . ”
(Ibid.)

Per Lord McLaren.—“ . . . If the payment made to the affiliated Company could be regarded as charity, my opinion would be that it was a payment out of income, and that it was subject to income-tax. But mercantile companies are not in the habit of subsidising competing companies from motives of benevolence. Such a payment would not be a legal application of the shareholders' money, and, in the absence of evidence or an admission to the contrary effect, I think it is a just legal inference that the payment in question was a payment made for the advancement of the respondents' business, and with a view to augmenting its capital or its income. As this is an annual payment, it would, as a matter of accounting, be regarded as a payment made with a view to the increase of income, and would be properly entered in the annual accounts. The Commissioners have found, in fact, that the payment was with a view to earning larger profits. . . . ” (Ibid.)

Per Lord Pearson.—“ . . . But the statute does not require the party claiming the deduction to show that any profit was in fact earned by the expenditure in question. It is enough that it shall have been laid out for the purposes of his trade, as this expenditure clearly was. But then it must be laid out wholly and exclusively for these purposes; and it was argued that the agreement was, at least in part, for the benefit of Wilsons, Ltd. It may have operated to their benefit. But we have to do only with Stewarts and Lloyds' part of it; and even with that, not as a definite source of ascertainable profit, but as inferring the expenditure of the sum of money here in question for the purposes of their trade. I think it clear that from their point of view the expenditure was made for those purposes and for no other. . . ." (Ibid.)

As regards purchase of shares in allied concerns, see also Trenchard [as liquidator of the National United Laundries (Greater London), Ltd.] v. Bennett, 12 A.T.C. 1; 17 Tax Cases 420, in which the value of deferred shares issued in consideration of guarantee of a preference dividend was held not to be a trade receipt.

A land company, i.e., developing and selling building plots, arranged with a firm of builders to erect houses and find purchasers. The builders were reimbursed their costs as each house was sold, and the land company reserved a chief rent for itself. The firm took a loan from outside which the company guaranteed. Eventually the company had to pay a part of the guaranteed loan; and this payment was disallowed from its taxable profits on the ground that the payment was made for the business of the builder firm and not for that of the company. Homelands, Ltd. v. Margerison, 1943 K.B.D.; 25 Tax Cases 414.

A Company A did work for a subsidiary Company B in which it held all the shares and charged £10,118 for the year at current trade prices. Company B eventually made a loss of £2,927 in that year and company A wrote off this amount claiming it as a deduction either as a rebate of price or as a bad debt. The Special Commissioners held that in fact the payment was not laid out wholly for the purpose of the trade of company A (the assessee) and that it was capital expenditure. The House of Lords (agreeing with the lower Courts) held that on the first ground alone the claim of the assessee was inadmissible, and did not decide whether the expenditure was of a capital nature or not. Oldhams Press, Ltd. v. Cook, 19 A.T.C. 19; 1941 I.T.R. (Sup.) 92; see also Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Huntley and Palmers, Ltd., 12 Tax Cases 1209, supra.

A sum paid by a principal shareholder, promoter and Managing Director of an Insurance Company, as a gift to that company to enable it to get out of difficulties, was claimed by him as revenue expenditure because it was incurred to protect his shares, his salary as Managing Director and his business reputation. The claim which was made under section 7, section 10 and section 12 was wholly disallowed. The expenditure was of the nature of capital. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Sir Homi Mehta, 1943 I.T.R. 142.

Lump sums received in commutation of annual charges.—A cemetery company received lump sums in commutation of the annual charge for the keep of lairs in perpetuity, and invested such sums as capital. Held, that such sums are not a deduction in arriving at the profits of the company for assessment, Paisley Cemetery Company v. Reith, 4 Tax Cases 1; 35 Sc.L.R. 947.

Another commercial and dividend-paying Cemetery Company undertook, in consideration of lump sum payments, to maintain in perpetuity the repair of graves and monuments and the decoration of graves in one of its Cemeteries. The Company was assessed in respect of its profits under Schedule A (Property), and the Crown contended that, in computing the liability, the lump sum payments of each year should be included in their entirety in the gross receipts of the year, the expenses of the upkeep of the graves for the year being allowed as a deduction. Held, that in arriving at the profits assessable in respect of the lump sum payments the estimated future expenditure of the Company on the maintenance and repair of the graves and monuments should be deducted, (The Paisley Cemetery Company v. Reith, 4 Tax Cases 1, distinguished; Sun Insurance Office v. Clark, 6 Tax Cases 59; (1912) A.C. 443, followed). The London Cemetery Company v. Barnes, 7 Tax Cases 92; (1917) 2 K.B. 496.

Another Cemetery Company sold the use in perpetuity of grave spaces in the Cemetery to be used for burial purposes only. Held, that a deduction could not be allowed in respect of the estimated cost price of the grave spaces. The ratio decidendi was the same as in the Coltness Iron Company case, 1 Tax Cases 287, supra, i.e., that no allowance may be made for the depletion of capital, Edinburgh Southern Cemetery Co. v. Kinmont, 27 Sc.L.R. 71; 2 Tax Cases 516.

Reserve for Insurance.—A Company who were shipowners and importers of coal insured their ships at half their value and created a reserve fund for the balance. A ship valued at £15,000 was lost. It was insured for £8,000 and the Company claimed £7,000 as a deduction from profits. Held, that the loss was one of capital, Legg & Son, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 391.

A shipping company insured a ship partially with underwriters, and bore the remainder of the risk, itself. It set aside a portion of its profits to form an insurance fund, and was not allowed to deduct this portion of profits in computing its liability to tax every year. Later on, the ship was lost, and the Company claimed to deduct the amount which it transferred from the Insurance Fund to meet the loss. Held, that the deduction was inadmissible, the loss being a loss on capital account.

Per Lord McLaren.—"This is not insurance in the legal sense of the term . . . but only a reservation of the profits . . . to provide for future losses," Thompson v. The Western Steamship Co., Ltd., 44 Sc.L.R. 715.

Sinking fund—Payments into.—A Company was empowered by Act of Parliament to raise money upon mortgage for the purpose of carrying out a Government contract, but was required by the same Act to establish a sinking fund for the extinction of the mortgage-debt. A sum was to be set aside for payment into the sinking fund out of each quarterly payment received under the contract, or out of other moneys belonging to the Company. Held, following the decision in Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Lucas, 2 Tax Cases 25; 8 App. Cases 891, that the sums thus set aside are not allowable as a deduction in arriving at the Company's assessable profits, City of Dublin Steam Packet Co. v. O'Brien, 6 Tax Cases 101.

A Company undertook to construct a railway in Brazil under a Government guarantee of 7 per cent. It raised capital by means of debentures at 5½ per cent., and devoted the 7 per cent. to payment of debenture interest, and to the formation of a sinking fund to pay off the debentures. Held, that the whole of the sum paid, under the guarantee, during construction, i.e., including the portion paid into the sinking fund was liable to pay income-tax as interest, Blake v. Imperial Brazilian Railway, 2 Tax Cases 58; 1 T.L.R. 68. Under the United Kingdom law the interest paid on debentures could not be deducted and tax on such interest is recoverable by the payer from the payee at the time of payment.

Bonus—On repayment of loan.—A Company borrowed money to be employed in its business, and covenanted to pay annual interest thereon, and to re-pay the capital with an additional bonus of 10 per cent. Held, that the bonus paid could not be claimed as a deduction in computing the assessable profits of the Company, Arizona Copper Company v. Smiles, 3 Tax Cases 149; 29 Sc.L.R. 134.

Investment for securing custom—Loss of.—In order to secure contracts for the erection of mills, it was necessary for an Architect to take up shares of certain Milling Companies granting the contracts. The shares taken up were subsequently sold at various dates at a loss. The sale of the shares was necessary to provide funds for securing new contracts. Held that the loss was a loss of capital, and was not an admissible deduction in arriving at the profits for assessment, Stott v. Hoddinott, 7 Tax Cases 85.

As the result of a change in the system of sale of salt by Government which substituted a system of cash sales for a system of credit sales on the deposit of securities a trader had to sell his securities and incur a loss on the sale. It was held that the loss was one of capital, Hirani and Jayaram Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1935 I.T.R. 309; 8 I.T.C. 395.

Where, however, a firm guaranteed a part of the costs of an exhibition in the reasonable belief that the firm would be given preference in the allotment of contracts for work at the exhibition and had to pay a part of the guaranteed amount even though the firm received no opportunity to tender and did not receive any work, the amount paid by the firm was allowed as a deduction by the General Commissioners. The Court of Appeal held that the question was primarily one of fact and saw no reason to interfere with the finding of the Commissioners, Morley v. Lawford & Co., 14 Tax Cases 229; 45 T.L.R. 30.

Where an oil importer lent money to a foreign oil merchant in order to secure the sole selling agency of the oil of the latter's companies and the loan was not fully repaid, it was held, distinguishing Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Dale, 16 Tax Cases 253; (1932) 1 K.B. 124 and following the Atherton case, 10 Tax Cases 155; (1926) A.C. 205, that the loss was capital expenditure, Henderson v. Meade King Robinson & Co., 17 A.T.C. 241 (K.B.D.).

A railway company agreed to close down its own steel works (and not to allow them to be worked by others) for ten years and take during that period its requirements of steel from two steel companies who in return, were to pay to the railway £180,000 in 120 equal monthly instalments. These payments were held to be capital expenditure, because the extinction of the railway's own works constituted a capital asset to the company. If the sum had been paid once for all there would have been no doubt as to its capital nature, and the fact that it was paid in instalments could not alter its nature. United Steel Companies v. Cullington, 18 A.T.C. 311 (C.A.).

Removal, Rebuilding, etc.—A Company established for the buying and selling of granite moved its business to larger premises, and defrayed the whole cost of removal out of revenue. In calculating its profits, the Company claimed a deduction for the expenses of carting granite from the old yard to the new, and of taking down and re-erecting two cranes. Held, that these items were not allowable deductions.

Per Lord McLaren.—“I think that the cost of transferring plant from one set of premises to another more commodious set of premises is not an expense incurred for the year in which the thing is done, but for the general interest of the business. It is said, no doubt, that this transference does not add to the capital value of the plant, but I think that is not the criterion. There are costs that would not properly be set against the income of the year, and which yet may not add to the capital value. Suppose a person is imprudent enough not to insure his premises or his goods, which can be insured, and they are burned down, and he has to replace the building; he could not be allowed to charge the new building against the income of the year, although the putting up of it does not add to the value of his property, but merely enables it to maintain its original value. I agree, therefore, that the cost of re-erecting the cranes and the cartage of materials, being a thing not done for the benefit of the one year, is not a proper deduction from income," Granite Supply Association v. Kitton, 5 Tax Cases 168; 43 Sc.L.R. 65. In cases of this kind so much depends on the occasion and magnitude of the expenditure. For example, the cost of transferring stock from one branch to another is clearly of a revenue nature, so also, when stocks are removed during repairs.

This decision was approved by Cave, L. C. in Atherton v. British Insulated & Helsby Cables, 10 Tax Cases 155; (1928) A.C. 205.

In order to extend its business, a Company opened a manufactory and fitted machinery, but subsequently closed it, removed a portion of the machinery, and re-opened the manufactory on a smaller scale, and thereby lost a portion of the original expenditure. Held, that this was a loss of capital, for which deduction could not be allowed, Smith v. Westinghouse Brake Co., 2 Tax Cases 357.

The moving expenses of a travelling business, e.g., a circus or a travelling butcher, including the cost of closing up at the old and fitting up at the new place, can, however, be deducted from profits; but not if the business is a fitting (as opposed to a travelling) business. Accordingly, in the case of a firm of meat-importers and retailers who owned a very large number of shops and constantly opened new shops and closed old ones with the changing circumstances of their business as a whole, it was held that the cost of equipping new shops was capital expenditure, Eastmans v. Shaw, 14 Tax Cases 218 (H.L.); 45 T.L.R. 12.

The cost of wholly fittings in a new place of business is capital expenditure even though the renewal may be compulsory, Hyam v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 8 A.T.C. 275; 14 Tax Cases 479; Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Hemraj Khemji, 1933 I.T.R. 304; A.I.R. 1933 Sind 145; 145 I.C. 202.

An assessee, a wine merchant in Dublin, was lessee of premises which he was bound to keep in proper repair. The premises were burnt in a local rebellion. He could not recover the loss either from the insurance company or under the Criminal Injuries Act, and had therefore to spend money in rebuilding. He had also to spend money in salvaging his books, and in fitting up and adapting temporary premises elsewhere. In connection with the levy of Excess Profits Duty it was held that the expenditure in question was capital expenditure, and not an admissible deduction, Martin Fitzgerald v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 5 A.T.C. 414. The Privy Council refused leave to appeal in this case.

Electric Company—Change of current.—Where an Electric lighting and power Company changed over from Direct Current to Alternating Current and for this purpose replaced at its cost consumer's fans and other fittings and also renewed the Service mains, it was held that the expenditure was of a capital nature, Nagpur Lighting, etc., Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 6 I.T.C. 303.

Docks—Ship-building—Deepening of.—The works of a Company carrying on the business of Ship-builders and Engineers were approached by a channel. It was the duty of the Harbour Authorities to keep this channel dredged, but they neglected to do so, and the channel consequently began to silt up. As the Harbour Authorities were not in a position to find the funds necessary for the complete restoration of the channel, a cheaper scheme was devised, involving a lesser depth of dredging and the provision of a deep water berth, to which the Company and the Harbour Authorities contributed, the Company's contribution being the greater. If this expenditure had not been incurred by the Company, it would have been impossible for them to deliver a battle cruiser which was then in course of completion at their works. The Company claimed that this expenditure should be deducted in ascertaining their liability to tax. Held, that the expenditure was capital expenditure, and was not an allowable deduction in the computation of profits. After quoting the following dictum of the Lord President in Vallambrosa Rubber Company, Ltd. v. Farmer, 5 Tax Cases 529; 47 Sc.L.R. 488.

"Now I don't say that this consideration is absolutely final or determinative, but, in a rough way, I think, it is not a bad contention of what is capital expenditure—as against what is income expenditure—to say that capital expenditure is a thing that is going to be spent once and for all and income expenditure is a thing that is going to recur every year."

Rowlatt, J., said with reference to the above passage:

"... there is no stress on the words 'every year'. The real contrast is between expenditure which is made to meet a continuous demand for expenditure as opposed to an expenditure which is made once for all, to put it shortly. . . . Now Mr. Fate argued that the expenditure on any work might be revenue expenditure although the result of it endured beyond that year. Well, I do not know that I differ with that altogether, but it seems to me that it must always be a question of fact whether any particular expenditure can be put up against any particular work, or whether it is to be regarded as enduring expenditure to serve the business as a whole," Ounsworth v. Vickers, Ltd, 6 Tax Cases 671; (1915) 3 K.B. 267.

This was approved in Atherton v. British Insulated and Helsby Cables, 10 Tax Cases 155; (1926) A.C. 205, by L. C. Cave, who also referred to Smith v. Incorporated Council of Law Reporting, 6 Tax Cases 477; (1914) 3 K.B. 674 and Hancock v. General Reversionary, etc., Co., 7 Tax Cases 358; (1919) 1 K.B. 25, as instances in which payments which did not recur were rightly considered to be income expenditure.

Bills—Promotion of—Cost of.—In view of the unsatisfactory facilities given by a Railway Company, a firm of coal masters joined with some other traders in promoting two private Bills in Parliament for the construction of a railway line, which was intended to give them the necessary facilities, and to make them independent of the Railway Company. The Bills were ultimately dropped by agreement, under which the Railway Company undertook to grant the desired facilities. Held, (Lord Johnston dissenting), that the expenditure incurred by the firm in the promotion of the two Bills, constituted a capital outlay, and was inadmissible as a deduction in computing the firm's liability to income-tax, Moore & Company v. Hare, 6 Tax Cases 572; 52 Sc.L.R. 59.

This was also approved by L. C. Cave in Atherton v. British Insulated & Helsby Cables, 10 Tax Cases 155; (1926) A.C. 205.

Investments for the purpose of the trade.—"All money laid out by persons who are traders, whether it be in the purchase of goods, be they traders alone, whether it be in the purchase of raw materials, be they manufacturers, or in the case of money-lenders, be they pawnbrokers or money-lenders, whether it be money lent in the course of their 'trade' . . . is used, and comes out of capital, but it is not an investment in the ordinary sense of the word," per Pollock, B., in Reid's Brewery Co. v. Male, 3 Tax Cases 279; (1891) 2 Q.B. 1.

"A man speculating and building for himself not only a brewery but a couple of hundred houses, in order . . . that people who inhabited those houses might deal with the brewery. In such a case, the money could not be said to be money expended by the brewer upon the business of brewery." (Ibid.)

Loss in investments.—If an assessee not dealing in stocks and shares loses on their sale, such loss is a capital loss and cannot be deducted from his business profits, Ganga Sagar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 5 I.T.C. 458; 53 All. 451; A.I.R. 1931 All. 417. See also notes under section 10 (2) (vi) in respect of depreciation of securities. Similarly, the loss incurred in buying and selling land when it is not part of the assessee's business so to deal in land cannot be deducted from his business profits, Hemraj Kanji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind., 6 I.T.C. 354. So also the loss incurred by a mortgagee (whose business is not to take such mortgages) who buys property in part satisfaction of the mortgage decree and sells later and loses, Himalal Motilal, etc. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 6 I.T.C. 159.

On the other hand, when a money-lender had to take over agricultural lands from his debtors, he was allowed by the Madras High Court to deduct not only the interest on borrowed capital locked up in the land but the management and cultivation charges of the land and the cost of obtaining conveyance of the lands, S. A. S. Chettiappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1937 I.T.R. 97. This ruling however has been dis-sented from by the Rangoon High Court, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. N. S. A. R. Concern, 1938 I.T.R. 194 (Rang.). The main point in the Madras case was the question of interest and it was conceded by the Crown in it that the claim under section 10 (2) (ix) [now clause (xv)] rested on the same footing as that under clause (iii). Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand, (1936) 3 A.E.R. 975 cannot be followed in India because the Acts are not in pari materia; and it has to be remembered that agricultural income is entirely outside the Indian Income-tax Act, see Darbhanga case, 14 Pat. 623 (P.C.). Therefore, no expenses incurred in respect of agricultural income can be deducted from non-agricultural income. The position is comparable to that of expenditure incurred in respect of foreign income, cf. Provident Investment Co., 135 I.C. 810 and other cases referred to under section 10 (2) (iii).

An assessee purchased shares in a company which went into liquidation. A new company was formed to acquire the assets and it agreed to allot a certain number of shares and debentures to the members of the old company. The debentures were not issued, and the new company also was liquidated. It was held that in the absence of a finding that the assessee's business was to deal in stocks and shares the loss was of capital, Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1938 I.T.R. 681.

An assessee, a money-lender, to whom Rs. 8,503 was due from a firm purchased land from it for Rs. 18,000 while insolvency proceedings were pending against it. He paid Rs. 9,497 in cash and adjusted the debt against the balance. The Insolvency Judge converted the sale into a mortgage for Rs. 8,500 and made the assessee an unsecured creditor for Rs. 9,497. The assessee who received his Rs. 8,500 and another Rs. 3,097, leaving a deficit of Rs. 6,403 claimed to deduct this deficit from his money-lending profits. The claim was disallowed on the ground that purchasing lands was not his business and that, if his idea was merely to realise his dues, he could have bought a part of the land instead of the whole, Badrishah Sohanlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 303.

A money-lender lent money from time to time to a building contractor; and at a certain date, viz., July, 1928, accounts were made up between the two and it was agreed that the debt was to be discharged out of the cheques received by the contractor from Government for whom he was working, and that the excess or deficiency of these cheques over or from the debt was to be divided equally between the two. After paying a few small amounts, the contractor, an Afghan, left British India; and the Commissioner held that the loss sustained by the money-lender was a loss of capital in partnership. It was held that there was no evidence to support this finding, Harnand Rai Harbhagat Rai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 366.

It is a question of fact in each case whether a particular transaction of a money-lender is part of his business of money-lending or a capital investment unconnected with that business. There is nothing to prevent his investing his capital or accumulated profits in forms of investment which are in law loans, e.g., Government loans, or debentures and mortgages, and this in itself would not make the investments a part of his money-lending business. Any loss therefore in such investments cannot be deducted from his business profits either under this section or under section 24, in the absence of a finding that the investments are an integral part of the money-lending business, Sir Chinubhai Madhavlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 211.

An assessee, who was inter alia a moneylender, made a deposit with an oil selling company under a contract appointing him sole organising agent for an area. He was to recommend selling agents and to recoup himself from the deposits made by the latter. The deposit bore interest at 7 per cent. per annum while his money-lending earned 15 per cent. on the average. He also received a commission on sales in the area whether through the selling agents or by the company. The company went into liquidation and the assessee lost a part of his deposit. It was held in the High Court that the loss was a trading one and not of capital.

This decision was overruled by the Privy Council. The deposit was a condition of the agency, and its purpose was to obtain an enduring benefit of a capital nature. It was not a loan in the course of carrying on the business of organising the agencies or in the course of business as a money-lender, Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Motiram Nandram, 1940 I.T.R. 132.

If a money-lender has two mortgages on the same property and chooses to sue only in respect of the first and the property does not cover the principal and interest thereof he is entitled to claim the entire principal of the second mortgage as a loss. It is not open to the Revenue to lump the two mortgages together and say that the difference between this sum and the value of the property (or the limit to which the creditor restricted his claim) is all that can be allowed as a loss, Chockalingam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1941 I.T.R. 278.

Option to purchase—Consideration for.—In order to obtain railway wagons for the conveyance of coal from their collieries to their customers, a Coal Company entered into agreements with a Wagon Company under which a certain annual sum was paid for a period of years for a certain number of wagons. By the terms of the agreements the Coal Company, during the period of the payments, used the wagons at their own risk, and were bound to keep them in repair, and at the end of the period, they had the option of purchasing the wagons at the nominal price of one shilling for each wagon. Held, that the annual payments under the agreements were divisible into (i) consideration paid for the use of the wagons, and (ii) payments for an option at a future date to purchase the wagons, at a nominal price; and that, in so far as the payments represented the consideration for the use of the wagons during the period of agreement, they were admissible as a deduction in the computation of the Coal Company's profits, Darnaganil Coal Company, Limited v. Francis, 7 Tax Cases 1; 50 Sc.L.R. 427.

Rebates as Compensation.—A company which intended to set up its own chlorine plant for the manufacture of magnesium was induced by a chlorine producing company not to set up such plant but to take chlorine from the latter. The price of chlorine was to be £10 per ton but the first company was to receive simultaneously £7½ per ton as compensation for loss of profit in not setting up its own plant. The Court of Appeal held that the £7½ per ton was a trade receipt in the hands of the first company, Thompson v. Magnesium Elektron Co., C.A. The rebate was clearly deductible from the profits of the chlorine company.

Where a rebate is received in respect of revenue expenditure, only the net expenditure can be allowed, i.e., the rebate should be brought in as a trade receipt. See Westcombe v. Hadnock Quarries, 16 Tax Cases 137.

Salaries of partners.—Sub-section (4) inserted in 1939 forbids the deduction of salaries, interest, commission or remuneration paid to partners. Before 1939, the deductibility of such items depended on the facts of each case and there was considerable litigation. Those rulings are of no interest now. See notes under sub-section (4), which however applies only to firms and not to other associations.

Employees—Commission.—A father was sole partner, and employed his two sons on salaries plus a commission on profits, varying from year to year. The commission was raised from 5 to 10 per cent., and then to 33 1/3 per cent., the last, when the father broke down in health, and threw the entire responsibility on the sons. Later on, the firm was reconstituted, the father and each of the sons possessing equal shares. The Special Commissioners decided that the 33 1/3 per cent. commission was not on a commercial basis. Held, that the amount deductible in respect of the commission, as money wholly and necessarily laid out for business expenditure, was one of fact on which the High Court could not interfere, Stott and Ingham v. Trehearne, 9 Tax Cases 69.

See also section 10 (2) (x) and notes under it.

Employees-perquisites.—Boarding expenses of servants, and payment to a servant of his expenses incurred in going to his home from the place of employment, in so far as they are not charitable payments, but part of the servant's wages, should be considered to be incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits or gains, Babu Jagannath Therani v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 2 I.T.C. 4; 4 Pat. 385; A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 408. Expenses in the nature of increment to salaries such as perquisites or free food, etc., in lieu of cash can be treated as trade expenses; but they must have been made without any intention of recovery from the servants and be claimed as deductions in the year in which they are incurred, Chittarmal Ramdayal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 54. A loan given to a servant cannot be deducted from the profits if and when it is written off as irrecoverable. It is not a trade debt. Whether gifts can be deducted or not will depend on the nature of the gifts. If they are given as a mere act of charity, they cannot be deducted; but if they are intended to be perquisites for the employees in return for their services, they can be deducted, even though the employees could not legally claim such gifts, ibid. Gifts to employees at retirement have been allowed in the United Kingdom, in the view that the gifts are bonuses, Weston v. Hearn, 1943 K.B.D.

Entertainment.—Dewali and Holi expenses have been held to be inadmissible, Ganga Sagar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 5 I.T.C., 458; 53 All. 451; A.I.R. 1931 All. 417. Though presents to customers such as cakes, sweets, fruits, etc., are not ordinarily admissible deductions they may be allowed if such presents are necessary for the purpose of securing business, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Hemraj Khanji, 1933 I.T.R. 304 (Sind).

Welfare schemes—Expenditure on.—It is one thing to spend money on welfare schemes for employees in order to secure a contented staff that would earn profits for the employer, and quite a different thing to contribute to welfare schemes which happen to cater for employees. The difference is clear though somewhat fine. Held, accordingly in a case in which the employer maintained private nursing homes for his staff but also paid subscriptions to a Hospital which also attended to his employees, and paid unusually large subscriptions to the Hospital in certain years, that the subscriptions to the Hospital were not deductible from taxable profits, Bourne & Hollingsworth v. Ogden, 45 T.L.R. 222; 14 Tax Cases 349.

Shares at concession rates.—Where a company issued shares to its employees at less than the market value of such shares it was held that the difference in value was not deductible from the company's profits as an item of payment of remuneration to employees, Lowry v. Consolidated African Selection Trust, 1940 I.T.R. (Sup.) 88 (H.L.). The decision (Lords Wright and Romer dissenting) which reversed that of the Court of Appeal rested on the form of the transaction, rather than on its substance. Obiter dicta in the judgments indicate that if the company had paid cash to the employees and replenished itself by issuing shares in the open market the payment would have been deductible. The point is that the company should have discharged an ordinary trading obligation or debt due to the employees in order to claim an allowance. In this case, the employees gave up nothing and the company parted with no asset. The fact that the difference between the market value and the issue price may be taxable as 'money's worth' in the hands of the employees is irrelevant.

If the shares had been issued at a premium, the premium would not have been taxable; and by merely electing not to get something, you cannot claim it as an actual deduction, even though if you had received it, it would not have been part of taxable profit.

Employees' share of profits.—See clause (x) and notes thereunder. The law in the United Kingdom is governed by the following rulings:

When employees are remunerated by a share of the profits, in computing the profits of the business, allowance should be made for the work and labour done by people who charge nothing expressly because they have got their share of the profits which is a sufficient inducement to them to do the work. See per Rowlatt, J., in Johnson Bros. & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 147; (1919) 2 K.B. 717. Bonuses paid to directors at a certain percentage of profits after the distribution of dividends to shareholders are not an expense of the business but an appropriation of profits. It is in every case a question of what is the real effect of the transaction, Pegg & Ellam Jones, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 82. In this case even though the bonuses may have taken the place of salary or commission, the bonuses were treated in the resolution and the accounts as an appropriation of profits, and had not been claimed as a deduction for income-tax purposes, the deduction being claimed only in respect of Excess Profits Duty. See also Stott and Ingham v. Trehearne, cited above, in which the Revenue conceded such an allowance, and Eyres v. Finnieston Engineering Company, 7 Tax Cases 74.

In Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. George Thompson & Co., 9 A.T.C. 965; 12 Tax Cases 1091, Rowlatt, J., suggested that while no payment which depended on the assessee's profits as a whole could be deducted from his taxable profits, deductions should be allowed of payments depending on the profits made on individual transactions. Thus, if the assessee hired a ship on condition that he would pay a part of the profits of that particular ship, the hire was deductible, but not if it depended on the profits in the assessee's business as a whole. The Court also held that hire which represented depreciation was deductible even if it depended on the ship's earning profits. The distinction between this case and that of Walker & Sons, 12 Tax Cases 297 is that while, in the latter what was shared was the profits of the business, in this case, what was shared was the profits of certain ships which did not constitute the whole of the business. If the particular ships had made profits and even if the business as a whole had made a loss, a share of the profits on the particular ships would have been payable. The assessee in this case, claimed not to deduct the share, since he desired to realise his standard profits for excess profits duty.

In India, before clause (x) [formerly clause (viii-a)] was introduced, a different view had been taken. In Commissioner of Income-tax v. R.E. Mahomed Kassim Rowther, 3 I.T.C. 482; 54 M.L.J. 249; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1053, the Madras High Court held that no deduction may be made on account of the wages paid to an employee in so far as such wages take the form of a share of profits. This decision is practically ineffective now partly because of the subsequent insertion of clause (viii-a) [now clause (x)] in this sub-section and partly because of the relief from double taxation given by Notification No. 8, dated 24th March, 1928, under section 60.

Where a proprietor had his business run by managers who retained as their remuneration the balance of the net profits of the business after paying the proprietor a fixed sum plus a share of the gross takings, it was held that the net profits of the entire business belonged to the proprietor because he retained the power to check bills, accounts and outstandings and to supervise even though he had no right to interfere in the executive control. What was retained by the managers was a share of profits and not salary, In re Nrisingha Chandra Nandi, 1936 I.T.R. 428 (Cal.).

Payments represented by a share of profits.—Under the Articles of Association of a Company the dividends on the shares held by Directors were to be regarded as part of the remuneration of the Directors. The shares held by the Directors had been acquired by them for valuable consideration and were held unconditionally. Held, that the dividends on the shares held by the Directors were not an admissible deduction in computing the profits of the Company.

Per the Lord President.—" . . . The question really resolves itself into this, whether the right of the (Directors) to receive their dividends was granted to them by way of remuneration for their services. The answer . . . is, of course, that it was not. . . ."

It was held by the Madras High Court, and approved by the Privy Council, following Gresham Life Society v. Styles, 5 Tax Cases 185, that the share of the net profits given by a railway company to the French Colonial Government in return for a subsidy and certain concessions from them was not deductible from the company's taxable profits, the payment being a distribution of profits, Pondicherry Railway Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 54 Mad. 691; A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 165. The principle of this case was wrongly extended to two cases, in the first of which [Commissioner of Income-tax v. Macdonald & Co., 1935 I.T.R. 459 (Bom.)] the assesseees were under legal obligation to pay a portion of their gross income to third parties and in the second of which [Tata Hydro Electric Agencies, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Income-tax, 1936 I.T.R. 92 (Bom.)] the assesseees who were managing agents of a Company and received as remuneration a commission of 10 per cent. of the profits of the company were simultaneously under obligation to share this commission with others, the entire arrangements being integral. In the Pondicherry case, the profits of the railway had to be first ascertained and then a share thereof was paid to the French Government, whereas in the Tata Hydro Electric case what was paid was not a share of the profits but a share of a particular item of receipt irrespective of there being profits. Such an item is not a profit by itself but only an item or factor in the computation of profits; so also in the case of Macdonald & Co. though the commission there which was shared was the sole source of income of the assesseees. The Privy Council, however, confirmed the disallowance in the Tata case on entirely different grounds, viz., that the payments were not made in the process of earning profits nor arose out of transactions in the course of business but were undertaken in consideration of the right and opportunity to earn the profits, i.e., to conduct the business, Tata Hydro Electric Agencies, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1937 I.T.R. 202 (P.C.).

Where an assessee acquired a business of a partly competitive nature and certain assets thereof and agreed to pay as consideration a half-share in his net profits, it was held that the share was not of the nature of rent for plant, etc., placed by the competitor at the disposal of the assessee but a distribution of profits and therefore not deductible, Indian Radio & Cable Communications, Ltd. v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1936 I.T.R. 90. The Privy Council who confirmed this judgment, (1937 I.T.R. 270,) made it clear that the case was not governed by the decision in the Pondicherry Railway case, though that case threw light on the nature of the problem to be solved. It is not universally true to say that a payment the making of which is conditional on profits being earned cannot properly be described as an expenditure for the purpose of earning profits. The typical exception is that of a payment, to a director or a manager, of a commission on the profits of a Company. In the case under consideration, the agreement did not describe the payment as a rent and did not contain clauses usual in a lease. The sum payable in the particular case may be small or great or nothing, a most unusual feature in the case of rent; and the sum was in truth a payment for a number of different advantages. The agreement was really one for a joint adventure and it was not immaterial that the assessee Company was partly controlled by the payee Company.

An assessee was a managing agent of a company and entitled as such to a commission based on profits subject to a minimum payment. The assessee arranged with an outsider D to lend a crore of rupees to the company on a certain rate of interest and security. An agreement was further entered into between the assessee, the company and D, under which the assessee assigned to D a share of the commission and other remuneration the assessee was entitled to from the company. It was held, that the assignment became the income of D and ceased to be that of the assessee and was consequently deductible from the taxable income of the latter. Moreover, the share of commission paid out to D was incurred for the purpose of earning the remainder of the commission, for, but for the loan given by D, the company would have got into difficulties and the assessee's source of income, viz., the commission, would have been endangered. Therefore, the payment to D was expenditure incurred for earning the profits of the assessee. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Tata Sons, Ltd., 1939 I. T. R. 195. This case should be distinguished from the Tata Hydro Electric Agencies Case, supra, because in the latter, the Tata Hydro Electric Agencies acquired a new asset, though they had not been managing agents whereas in the present case the assessee had to spend the money, i.e., share of commission, in order to safeguard his source of income.

Where a company paid a share of its profits to two others (before adjusting depreciation) in return for advice and supervision it was held by Finlay, J., following the Pondicherry case, that the payments could not be deducted. In overruling this decision the Court of Appeal pointed out that there is a dividing line between a contract for a share of profits simpliciter and a payment of remuneration which is in truth deductible before profits are ascertained, though the line may often be difficult to draw, e.g., in Last v. London Assurance Corporation, 2 Tax Cases 100, in which bonuses were not allowed to be deducted since the policyholders were treated as having purchased a share in the profits. On the other hand, an employee is not on that footing, though the performance of service is not in itself a conclusive criterion, as, for instance, when a person contributes services in a joint adventure. The absence of a salary in addition to commission is also not conclusive, and a payment of commission alone might well be deductible.

In the Pondicherry case, Lord Macmillan was referring to the 'real net profit' when using the word "profits"; and in that case the question was simple. As Lord Maugham pointed out in the Indian Radio & Cable case, 1937 I.T.R. 270, the word 'profits' can be used in more than one sense and as Mackinnon, L.J., observed in this case, it is as much a truism to say that "a payment necessarily made in order to earn profits cannot properly be described as a payment out of profits" as to say, with Lord Macmillan in the Pondicherry case, that "a payment out of profits and conditional on profits being earned cannot be accurately described as a payment made to earn profits." The facts of each case have therefore to be examined. In this case the payment was on a basis of profits ascertained ad hoc (before allowing for depreciation), and not of profits divisible between the company and anybody else interested in them; and it was therefore a payment precedent to the ascertainment of the real net profits of the company, British Sugar Manufacturers v. Harris, 16 A.T.C. 421 (C.A.).

A payment to Secretaries, Treasurers and Managers at a certain percentage of the net profits and not exceeding another percentage of gross proceeds was held to be expenditure incurred for earning the profits and not a distribution thereof, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Bombay Burma Trading Corporation, 1941 I.T.R. 155, following British Sugar Manufacturers v. Harris.

A trading company leased premises for its business at a fixed rent payable quarterly from which however the lessor was to allow at the end of the year such abatement as may be necessary to enable the lessee company to meet its obligations and pay certain fixed rates of dividend on its shares. It was held by the House of Lords that in so far as the transaction was bona fide, the rent was not a payment out of profits of the company or dependent upon it but expenditure incurred for the purpose of earning, and antecedent to the ascertainment of, profits. The Pondicherry Railway's case was distinguished. In that case the profits had to be first ascertained and then a share of profits paid to the French Government while in this case the profits could not be ascertained until the rent had been first paid. The rent actually borne therefore was deducted from taxable profits, Union Cold Storage Co. v. Adamson, 16 Tax Cases 293; 146 L.T. 172.

A agreed to get all his raw cotton ginned by B who, in turn, agreed not to gin for any one else. B received in addition to his ginning charges on a certain tariff a share in the net profits (but not the losses) of A. It was held that the profits paid to B were not of the nature of rent nor were incurred to earn the profits, but were an appropriation of profits, Gapinath Vir Bhan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 243.

A company, in which half the shares were held by Government, bought crude resin from Government at a price which involved the payment of royalty in the first instance at a certain rate and also the payment of a further royalty in the following year based on the net profits of the company during the previous year. The Allahabad High Court held that the second payment of royalty was deductible under section 10 (2) (ix), [now clause (xv)] for the following reasons:—(1) The payment was analogous to the payment to a Managing Director of a share of the profits. (2) The money was not available for distribution to shareholders. (3) The cost of production of resin by the company clearly included the second royalty. (4) The second royalty was not part of the consideration for which Government sold the factory to the company but consideration for the resin supplied. (5) The primary object with which Government formed the company was to obtain a market for its resin. (6) The charging of a nominal royalty in the first instance and then a further payment was because there were no data on which the royalty could be fixed, Indian Turpentine & Resin Co., Ltd., Cawnpore v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 219.

Royalties on patents.—Even though a royalty may be paid to a patentor on the basis of output, the expenditure would still be capital if the royalty was one of the considerations paid by the user of the patent to acquire it outright from the patentor, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Minsararasam, Ltd., 63 M.L.J. 11; 6 I.T.C. 65; A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 437.

As regards payments on account of patents generally, see the group of cases referred to under section 3. It should be noticed, however, that a payment which is capital or income, as the case may be, to the receiver is not necessarily of the same nature to the payer. See also Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Adam, 14 Tax Cases 34.

Buying out partners or competitors.—Payments made in purchase of the share or rights of a deceased or retiring partner are of a capital nature even though the payments may be assessed in terms of profits and for a comparatively short period, Rutherford v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 10 Tax Cases 683; Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Ledgard & Pymins, 16 A.T.C. 68 (K.B.). Any loss that may arise from revaluing a business as the result of reconstructing a partnership is a capital loss, K. A. R. K. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 7 I.T.C. 44; 11 Rang. 462; A.I.R. 1934 R. 1. Similarly, the write-off of debts due from old partners at the time of disruption is not a proper revenue charge against a new firm; Amar Chand Madhoji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 8 I.T.C. 224.

Where, according to a statement recorded by the Income-tax Officer in the following words of one of the partners of a firm: "M would get Rs. 16,000 a year for five years irrespective of the firm's trading results and S would get Rs. a year on the same conditions as in M's case and I would be in sole charge and owner of the firm's profits and losses", it was unsuccessfully claimed on behalf of I that the firm was still a going concern and that the payments to M and S were for the use of goodwill, premises and staff for the five years in question. This claim was disallowed as being payments for buying out the rights of M and S and therefore capital expenditure. In re Ramji Das Jaini & Co., 1945 I.T.R. 430 (Lah.).

Where, in order to ensure that a retiring director and manager in a private company did not set himself up in opposition after retirement the company bought up the assets of the retiring director and also remitted a debt due from him, it was held that the expenditure was not trading, but capital expenditure, Deverel Gibson and Hoare v. Rees, 25 Tax Cas. 467 (K.B.D.).

Similarly, lump sums paid to a retiring director and a retiring managing director respectively in order to restrain them from competitive activities have been held to be capital expenditure, Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers v. Kerr, 1945 K.B.D. (C.A.). The case was held to be nearer to Collins v. Joseph Adamson & Co., 21 Tax Cas. 400 than to Southern v. Borax consolidated, 23 Tax Cas. 597, but the distinction is by no means clear.

Where a firm of money-lenders carried on a business in yarn in a particular year jointly with certain other persons, and disputes started after some time between the firm and the others ending in litigation and the decree of a Court in favour of the others in respect of their shares wrongly withheld by the firm it was held that the payment of the decree was not deductible from the firm's profits, being merely an allocation of profits already earned and in the nature of payment of a capital debt. Nor did the payment arise out of transactions in the course of trade but out of wrong allocation of profits in the past; and the expenditure was therefore not incurred for earning the profits, Rayalu Iyer & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1937 I.T.R. 727.

In Alagannan Chetti v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 44; 55 M.L.J. 66; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 902, the Madras High Court held, following City of London Contract Corporation v. Styles, 2 Tax Cases 239; 4 T.L.R. 51 and John Smith & Sons v. Moore, (1921) 2 A.C. 13; 12 Tax Cases 266, that a lump sum paid to a rival in order to induce him to abstain from competition (bidding for certain contracts) is capital expenditure, and therefore not deductible from the profits. See, however, Guest Keen and Nettlefolds v. Fowler, 5 Tax Cas. 511, referred to later under "Trade Associations-payments to". Following the above it was held in R. S. Munshi Gulab Singh & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1946 I.T.R. 66, that payments made to competitors, from time to time, of a share of estimated profits in each contract irrespective of actual profit or loss (in return for the competitors agreeing to tender at the same rates as the assessee) were revenue expenditure. Such payments were neither capital expenditure nor a share of profits, but expenditure incurred for earning the profits. So also subscriptions paid to schools which agreed to prescribe books printed by the assessee (ibid).

See however Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cases 253; 145 L.T. 529 and Van Den Berghs, Ltd. v. Clark, 19 Tax Cases 390; (1935) A.C. 431. The former is referred to infra in the group of cases relating to compensation to employees on termination of employment. In the latter case, in which a pooling arrangement was closed and compensation paid, it was held by the House of Lords that the payment related to the entire structure of the assessee's profit-making apparatus and was therefore of the nature of capital.

In a case in which the assessee paid a lump sum to his agent on the termination of his agency who inter alia agreed not to compete for some time, the payment was held by the Calcutta High Court to be deductible from the assessee's profits, In re Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd., 1935 I.T.R. 21. The payment did not create a new asset or add to fixed capital but merely secured facilities for the future. See also Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cas. 253.

Buying shares in allied concerns.—If a company, substantially a holding company, acquires control over another by purchasing blocks of its shares, what it acquires is a capital asset, especially if it is in the line of business of the 'acquiring' company to secure such capital assets and the 'acquired' company is one which but for the control might be a competitor with other 'held' companies of the holding company. It is immaterial for this purpose that the shares are not paid for in cash but by a guarantee from the purchasing company to pay certain dividends on some of the shares of the other company, Trenchard, [as Liquidator of the National United Laun- dries (Greater London), Ltd.,] v. Bennet, 12 A.T.C. 1; 17 Tax Cases 420; 49 T.L.R. 226.

Loss from embezzlements.—Where the loss from embezzlement is allowed as an expense, any subsequent recoveries in respect of the embezzlement should be brought in as taxable revenue. In re Union Bank of Bijapur & Sholapur, 1942 I.T.R. 21 (Bom.).

The Managing Director of a Company was for many years, up to his death, in sole control of the Company's business. An investigation after his death showed that many payments and some receipts not relating to the Company's business but to his private affairs, had been passed through the Company's books, and it was calculated that some £14000 was due from his estate to the Company. The debt was valueless, and was written off as bad in the Company's accounts for the sixteen months to the 30th June, 1920. The General Commissioners, on appeal, allowed the Company's claim to deduct the amount in question in computing its profits for assessment to income-tax, holding that the loss was a bad debt that had arisen in the course of the Company's trading. Held, that there was no evidence to support the Commissioner's findings; that the loss was not a trading loss; and that it was not an admissible deduction from the Company's profits for income-tax purposes.

Per Rowlatt, J.—"When the Rule speaks of a bad debt, it means a debt which is a debt that would have come into the balance sheet as a trading debt in the trade that is in question, and that it is bad. It does not really mean any bad debt which, when it was a good debt, would not have come in to swell the profits. What the Commissioners have been misled by, in my judgment, quite clearly is this. They have allowed themselves to act under the impression that they were taxing the Company on what the Company, in a loose way, had made and secured. In point of law, they were engaged in assessing the profits of the Company's trade, not of the Company itself but of the Company's trade, and I have to consider whether there is the least ground for supposing that losses of these sums, resulting in this bad debt, were losses in the trade. I quite think, with Mr. Latter, that if you have a business (which for the purposes of to-day at any rate I will assume) in the course of which you have to employ subordinates, and owing to the negligence or the dishonesty of the subordinates, some of the receipts of the business do not find their way into the till, or some of the bills are not collected at all, or something of that sort, that may be an expense connected with and arising out of the trade, in the most complete sense of the word. But here that is not the case at all. This gentleman was the Managing Director of the Company, and he was in charge of the whole thing, and all we know is that in the books of the Company, which do exist, it is found that moneys went through the books into his pocket. I do not see that there is any evidence at all that there was a loss in the trade in that respect. It simply means that the assets of the Company, moneys which the Company had got and which had got home to the Company, got into the control of the Managing Director of the Company, and he took them out. It seems to me that what has happened is that he has made away with receipts of the Company dehors the trade altogether in virtue of his position as Managing Director in the office, and being in a position to do exactly what he likes," Curties v. J. & G. Doldfield, Ltd., 9 Tax Cases 319; 41 T.L.R. 373.

A payment made by a director of a company to the Official Liquidator thereof in settlement of misfeasance proceedings started against the former is capital expenditure and also not laid out for the business, etc., of the director. In re Executors of Sardar Narain Singh, 1943 I.T.R. 478 (Lah.).

Loss through embezzlement by an employee was held not to be a loss in the nature of capital expenditure but a loss incidental to the conduct of the business, and allowance was made on this account, Babu Jagannath Therani v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 2 I.T.C. 4. But this judgment, was dissented from by the same High Court in a later case, Mulchand Hiralal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1938 I.T.R. 151; and it was held that a theft by a cooly who stole money from an employee of the assessee that was taking the money to the Bank was not an admissible deduction, not being incurred for the purpose of earning the profits.

Whether loss of valuables by theft can be allowed as a deduction depends, according to another ruling, on whether the loss was incidental to the business. If a person receives his profits and is robbed on his way home or after he has placed the profits in his strong room or some other place of safety such a loss is not incidental to business. If, on the other hand, the nature of the business requires the handling of valuables by servants and such servants misappropriated what was entrusted to them or were robbed, the loss would be incidental to the business. The proper test to apply is whether in view of the nature of the business there is a reasonable likelihood of the loss in the ordinary course of business. (S. P. S. Ramaswami Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 53 Mad. 904; 59 M.L.J. 403; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 808.) Anantakrishna Iyer, J., dissented and held that all losses due to theft in business premises should be allowed.

An assessee who carried on business in piece-goods accepted deposits for that purpose and paid interest thereon. He was not a banker or money-lender, and cash was not part of his stock-in-trade. There was a dacoity and the cash in the shop was looted. Held, that the loss was of capital, In re Gadodia & Co., 1934 I.T.R. 322. The correctness of this ruling was doubted in Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Haji Abdul Gany Hyub, 1941 I.T.R. 339, where it was held that the loss of a businessman's money in his current account at his bank, as a result of the bankers' insolvency, is a deductible loss.

It has also been held that shortage found in cash when making up the accounts of a money-lending business is not a capital loss, Bansilal Abir Chand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. 6 I.T.C. 318.

Director—Overpayment to.—Whether the overpayment of commission to a Managing Director who subsequently became bankrupt and could not repay the advance was a trading loss or a capital loss was considered in Roebank Printing Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue. 7 A.T.C. 406; 13 Tax Cases 864. It was held that it was a question of fact to be determined by the Commissioners on the evidence before them.

Cost of alteration of capital.—The premia received by a company on issue of shares are capital receipts and, as such, not chargeable to tax. In the same way the cost of issuing shares is capital expenditure and cannot be allowed as a deduction for income-tax purposes. (Income-tax Manual, As to premia of the nature of interest, see notes under section 10 (2) (iii).)

In Montreal Coke, etc. Co. v. Minister of National Revenue, 1945 I.T.R. (Sup.) 1 (P.C.) the company had incurred certain expenses in replacing debentures on onerous terms (including, inter alia payment in gold) by debentures on less onerous terms and spread this expenditure over several years, in the accounts. The Supreme Court of Canada held (two Judges dissenting) that the expenditure was neither for earning the profits nor of a revenue nature. In confirming the judgment, the Privy Council remarked as follows: "The justification for upholding the deductions claimed could not be more attractively presented than it is in the (dissenting) judgment of Rinfret, J.—there are two ways of increasing the profits either by increasing the earnings while the expenses remain the same or by decreasing the expenses while the earnings remain the same. Of course, if the expenses diminish at the same time as the gross earnings are increased, the profits will be correspondingly larger and the proposition just mentioned is only made more evident In order to pay a lower interest and to get rid of the exchange rates, it was necessary to redeem the old bonds; and therefore the expenses required to achieve the result were wholly, exclusively and necessarily laid out or expended for the purpose of decreasing the fixed interest and exchange charges and accordingly for the purpose of earning the income. Down to the last nine words, the statement is unexceptionable, but their Lordships are unable to accompany him in leaping the last fence. If the statute permitted the deduction of expenditure incurred for the purpose of increasing income, the appellants might well have prevailed. But such criterion would have opened a very wide door. It is obvious that there can be many forms of expenditure designed to increase income which would not be appropriate deductions in ascertaining annual net profit or gain. The statutory criterion is a much narrower one. Expenditure, to be deductible, must be directly related to the earning of income. The earnings of a trader are the product of the trading operation which he conducts. These operations involve outgoings as well as receipts and the net profit or gain which the trader earns is the balance of his trade receipts over his trade outgoings. It is not the business of either of the appellants to engage in financial operations. The nature of their businesses is sufficiently indicated by their titles. It is to these businesses that they look for their earnings. Of course, like other business people, they must have capital to enable them to conduct their enterprises, but their financial arrangements are quite distinct from the activities by which they earn their income expenditure incurred in relation to the financing of their business is not in their Lordships' opinion, expenditure incurred in the earning of their income within the statutory meaning. it was conceded and it is clear that the expenses incurred in originally borrowing the money represented by the bonds were properly chargeable to capital and so were not incurred in earning income. If the bonds have subsisted to maturity, the premiums and expenses then payable on redemption would plainly also have been on capital account. Why then should the outlays in connection with the present transactions . . . also not fall within that category?"

Where a Joint Stock Company increases its capital by the issue of new shares for which it pays commission to the underwriters of the shares, the commission so paid cannot be allowed as a deduction. In re Tata Iron and Steel Company, 1 I.T.C. 125. (The Texas Land and Mortgage Company v. Holtham, 3 Tax Cases 255 and Royal Insurance Company v. Watson, 1897 A.C. 1; 3 Tax Cases 500, followed.)

A mortgage Company raised money by the issue of debentures, and lent it at a higher rate of interest. Held, that the commission paid to brokers, and the other expenses incurred in raising the money cannot be deducted, Texas Land and Mortgage Company v. Holtham, 3 Tax Cases 255. Even if the money raised by debentures is used in the assessee's own business, the brokerage and legal charges in raising debentures are capital expenditure, Nagpur Electric Lighting, etc. Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 6 I.T.C. 28.

A Company had made losses in trading, and carried forward a debit balance from year to year in its balance-sheet. The existence of this debit balance stood in the way of the payment of dividends when the Company entered on a period of profit earning. To enable dividends to be paid, the Company applied to the Court to have its capital reduced, and for the purpose incurred legal and other expenses. The Company claimed to deduct these expenses in computing the balance of profits and gains for the assessment to income-tax. Held, that the expenditure in question was not expenditure for the purposes of the trade of the Company, but for the purposes of distributing the profits of its trade, and was not a proper deduction in computing the profits for the purposes of assessment to income-tax, Archibald Thompson, Black & Co., Ltd. v. Batty, 7 Tax Cases 158.

The sole proprietor of a business also owned the premises in which it was carried on, but the premises were subject to certain mortgages. One of the mortgagees died and his executors called up the money due. A part was repaid and one of the beneficiaries took over the balance of the bond. The mortgagor incurred legal expenses in connection with the transfer of the bond. Held, (Lord Salvesen dissenting), distinguishing Usher's case, 6 Tax Cases 399 and following Strong v. Woodfield, 5 Tax Cases 215; (1906) A.C. 448 and similar cases, that the legal expenses were capital expenditure and not deductible from profits, Small v. Easson, 12 Tax Cases 351.

Legal expenses.—Expenses incurred in connection with litigation relating to the partition of a Hindu undivided family cannot be allowed as a deduction from the taxable income of the members, Jagmohandas Rastogi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Oudh, 3 I.T.C. 274; A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 125; 112 I.C. 201; nor evidently, from that of the family.

Expenses of a law suit in connection with the purchase of a house by a professional person are clearly not deductible, Smith v. Eden, 13 A.T.C. 623 (K.B.D.); 19 Tax Cases 110. Expenses incurred by a purchaser of property in completing his title and entering into possession is not deductible. In re Lackhmandas Brijballabhdas, 1942 I.T.R. 186 (All.). It follows that if the purchaser knowingly buys property with defective title and makes a further payment to perfect the title, the payment is capital expenditure. If the property was the stock-in-trade of the purchaser, i.e., if he is a dealer in property or a money-lender who frequently takes over property in settlement of debts and then sells the property the expenditure would be deductible.

Legal expenses incurred in presenting the assessee's case to the Revenue authorities are not deductible, since the profits are not altered by this expenditure, Allen v. Farquharson Bros., 17 Tax Cases 59; Board of Revenue v. Munisami Chetty, 1 I.T.C. 227, but fees paid to Accountants for preparing accounts in the ordinary course of business and not specifically for contesting liability or conducting proceedings before tax authorities are an ordinary business expense and allowable as such, Worsely Brewery, Ltd v. Inland Revenue, (C.A.) 17 Tax Cases 349. The point is that expenditure antecedent to the ascertainment of profits is allowed, not that relating to the appropriation of profits, by the Crown. In practice however, Accountant's and lawyer's fees are allowed for appearance before the Income-tax Officer, but not on appeal or revision.

Legal expenditure incurred in order to avoid a business liability is revenue expenditure and will be allowed in the year in which it is incurred, Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Mathradas Mannalal, 1942 I.T.R. 95.

A landholder, carrying on, inter alia, a money-lending business lent Rs. 10 lakhs to a cotton mill company, the shareholders of which at a later stage, sued him for a large sum, alleging that he had agreed to finance the mill and broken the contract. He died when the suit was pending and his son was substituted in his place. Eventually the suit was dismissed, and the son (the assessee) claimed that the cost of defending the suit should be deducted from his profits from money-lending. The Income-tax authorities refused the claim on the ground that the suit did not relate to the money-lending or other business of the assessee but was a suit for damages against the father personally and that the son defended the suit merely to save the reputation of the father who, according to the department, was liable to attack with a view to "relieve him of his surplus cash". This view was not accepted by the High Court. There was no essential difference between a money-lender's taking over a debtor's property for the purpose of preventing the loss of the sums advanced (as in fact the assessee's father had done in several cases) and his taking over the management of the debtor's business for the same purpose, and therefore the transaction with the mill was not foreign to the money-lending business. If expenditure incurred for securing the assessee against possible loss of his stock-in-trade (in this case loans, the trade being money-lending) is allowable, expenditure incurred for repelling an actual attack on such stock ought to be allowable; for otherwise while a trader could deduct premia paid for fire insurance, he could not deduct the cost of actually fighting a fire. The decision was confirmed by the Privy Council, Commissioner of Income-tax B. & O. v. Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga, 1942 I.T.R. 214 (P.C.).

Expenditure incurred to protect the good name of a person is not necessarily incurred for the purpose of his business, nor is it a loss, especially if he succeeds in vindicating himself. A fortiori a firm cannot deduct expenses in defending its partners from criminal charges against them, even though the charges may be connected with the business of the firm, e.g., Excise offences against liquor merchants. Gasper & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1940 I.T.R. 100.

Expenditure incurred in defending a suit for payment of rent and royalties as assignees of the original grantees of certain mining leases was held not to be deductible in In re Magniram Bungar & Co., 1941 I.T.R. 573 (Cal.). The facts of the case were peculiar and showed that the object of the expenditure was merely to protect the assessee from future losses. See also Scammell and Nephew v. Rowles (C.A.), 22 Tax Cases 479 in which legal expenses were allowed in respect of a compromise between the assessee and certain others, the assessee company having been allowed to pay the legal costs to the other party as compensation and debit the expenditure to revenue account. As for the facts of the case, see post under the heading 'employee's compensation'.

Following the observations of Lord Dunedin in the Vallambrosa Rubber Co., case, 5 Tax Cases 529, the Lahore High Court have held that the expenses incurred in defending an action brought against a company questioning the monopoly held by it in respect of quarrying in an area was capital expenditure because it was spent once and for all, Kangra Valley State Co., Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 7 I.T.C. 375. This ruling, however, is against the trend of authority.

Costs incurred in defending the title to land held for the purpose of a business are revenue expenditure for the expenditure does not create a new asset, but only maintains an existing one. The fact that it maintains only the title, and not the value, makes no difference Southern v. Borax, Ltd., 1942 I.T.R. (Sup.) 1 (K.B.D.). Following this ruling, it was held in Central India Spinning and Weaving Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1943 I.T.R. 266 that the expenditure incurred in restraining the infringement of a trade mark belonging exclusively to the assessee is revenue expenditure. In Jatharam Jankidas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1944 I.T.R. 344, it was held that litigation expenses incurred to recover capital and profits due from a partner in a discontinued business (for which the new financing partner of that partner had held himself responsible) were deductible the ratio decidendi being that the assessee's business was that of money-lending, and that the discontinuation of the old partnership business made no difference. In Mahabir Prasad & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1945 I.T.R. 340, the Lahore High Court did not follow Kangra Valley State Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1935 I.T.R. 324 and decided that expenditure incurred in defending a suit for pre-emption of a property purchased and used by him for the business was allowable as revenue expenditure. It is as necessary for a businessman to protect his fixed capital as to protect his circulating capital, and in neither case does the protection create a new asset. Sale, J., distinguished the Kangra Valley case.

Where an action to recover remuneration was compromised on the footing that no part of the payment was to be allocated to costs, it was held that the whole of the payment was remuneration and that costs paid by the plaintiff (assessee) could not be deducted from his remuneration for the purpose of tax, Eagles v. Sir Albert Levy, 19 Tax Cases 23.

Damages.—A Brewing Company, which also owned licensed houses, in which it carried on the business of inn-keepers, incurred damages and costs on account of injuries caused to a visitor staying at one of its houses, by the falling in of a chimney. Held, that the damages and costs were not allowable as a deduction in computing the Company's profits for income-tax purposes.

Per the Lord Chancellor.—" It does not follow that if a loss is in any sense connected with the trade, it must always be allowed as a deduction; for it may be only remotely connected with the trade, or it may be connected with something else quite as much as or even more than with the trade. I think only such losses can be deducted as are connected with it in the sense that they are really incidental to the trade itself. They cannot be deducted if they are mainly incidental to some other vocation, or fall on the trader in some character other than that of trader. The nature of the trade is to be considered. To give an illustration, losses sustained by a railway company in compensating passengers for accident in travelling, might be deducted. On the other hand, if a man kept a grocer's shop, for keeping which a house is necessary, and one of the window-shutters fell upon and injured a man walking in the street, the loss arising thereby to the grocer ought not to be deducted. Many cases might be put near the line, and no degree of ingenuity can frame a formula so precise and comprehensive as to solve at sight all the cases that may arise. In the present case, I think that the loss sustained by the appellants, was not really incidental to their trade as inn-keepers, and fell upon them in their character not of traders but of householders. . . ."

Per Lord Davey.—". . . . It is not enough that the disbursement is made in the course of, arises out of, or is connected with the trade or is made out of the profits of the trade. It must be made, for the purpose of earning the profits. . . ." Strong and Company, Ltd. v. Woodifield, 5 Tax Cases 215; (1906) A.C. 448.

On the other hand, there is little doubt that damages which really represent the sharing of profits with others, e.g., paid for the infringement of patents or trade marks are deductible. Such damages would also be undoubtedly taxable in the hands of the recipients. See Constantinesco v. R., 11 Tax Cases 730; 43 T.L.R. 727 and Short Bros. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 955, set out under section 3.

Expenses paid, voluntarily and without any legal obligation, by the proprietor of a newspaper to his Editor and Printer, reimbursing them their expenses in defending themselves in proceedings against them for contempt of Court have been disallowed. It is not enough that expenditure is incurred in the course of, or arises out of, business and is met out of the profits; it must be incurred for the purpose of earning the profits, if it is to be allowed; and it could not be said in this case that the expenditure was incurred with a view to increase the profits of the proprietor, In re Amrita Bazaar Patrika, 1937 I.T.R. 648 (Cal.).

In Mask & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1943 I.T.R. 454, the High Court disallowed the deduction of damages paid for breach of contract, on the ground that the breach was not an act of negligence but one of dishonesty, and it was not necessary for the purpose of the trade so to be dishonest.

On the other hand, where an assessee compromised litigation against him for infringement of trade mark, his own legal expenses and what he paid to the other party under the compromise were allowed as revenue deductions, Appellate Tribunal v. Chhaganmal Mangital, 1946 I.T.R. 206 (Nag.). The correctness of the decision in Gaspar & Co.'s Case, 1940 I.T.R. 100 was doubted.

Penalties.—Penalties levied for the infringement of customs or any other laws, cannot be allowed as deductions from profits; nor the costs incurred in defending proceedings started by the Crown in regard to such penalties, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Warnes & Co., (1919) 2 K.B. 444; 12 Tax Cases 227; Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Von Glehn, (1920) 2 K.B. 553 (C.A.); 12 Tax Cases 232. The point is that sums in question are not a 'trading loss,' and are not spent in order to enable the assessee to 'earn the profits'. The Income-tax Act however is not necessarily restricted to lawful business only. Reference may also be made to the observations of Scrutton, L.J., that he reserved his opinion as to the deductibility of damages given in civil proceedings arising out of negligence, etc.

In Spofforth and Prince v. Golder, 1945 K.B.D. where the Revenue authorities wished to interview certain employees of a firm of Chartered Accountants in order to ascertain whether an offence had been committed and the firm took legal advice, the cost of such advice was allowed as a deduction from the profits of the firm: but when one of the partners was prosecuted the cost of his defence and the cost incurred by his partner to watch his interests were both disallowed on the ground that the cost was not incurred for the purpose of the firm's business or profession. See also Canadian Minister of Finance v. Smith, (1927) A.C. 193 and other cases set out under sections 3 and 4 (3) (vii).

Propaganda—Anti-prohibition—By Brewer.—In Ward & Company v. Commissioners of Taxes, (1923) A.C. 145, the expenditure incurred by a brewer on an anti-prohibition campaign was disallowed. The relevant statute (in New Zealand) was “no deduction is to be made in respect of expenditure not exclusively incurred in the production of the assessable income”; and the argument that the expenditure was incurred to keep alive the profit-making business was not accepted.

Letting house—Profits from.—A person assessed in respect of the profits derived from letting her house furnished, claimed to be allowed as a deduction the amount of rent paid by her for another furnished house in which she lived while her own was let. Held, that the deduction claimed was inadmissible.

Per the Lord President.—“This particular expenditure on a house elsewhere has nothing necessarily to do with the letting of her own house. It only represents the necessity of her living somewhere. So far as letting her house is concerned no doubt it is a necessity that she should go out, but it is not a necessity of the situation that she should take a house elsewhere. She might get put up by friends. She might go to a hotel. . . .”, Wylic v. Eccott, 6 Tax Cases 128; 50 Sc.L.R. 26.

Tied houses.—A brewer claimed to deduct from his profits the excess of the cost of the repairs of a tied house over the one-sixth allowed under Schedule A, i.e., in respect of the value of the building. Held, that the deduction was inadmissible.

Per Smith, L.J.—“It is impossible to allege that the whole of this money for repairs of this public house, was laid out exclusively for the trade of the brewer; it was laid out for many other things too,” Brickwood & Company v. Reynolds, 3 Tax Cases 600; (1898) 1 Q.B. 95. But this was overruled—see decisions below.

Magistrates licensing public houses required the surrender of licences before granting new licences for new houses; and brewers claimed to deduct sums paid for “call of licences” and other expenses of unsuccessful applications for new licences in arriving at profits for assessment. Held, that such deductions were not admissible.

Per Phillimore, J.—“(Counsel for the Company) says, in fact, they are none of them in respect of successful applications, but are wholly in respect of unsuccessful ones. . . . They are not to be supposed . . . in respect of successful applications, because they are not part of the annual expenditure of the brewer in the course of the year; they are sums which, either out of capital or out of savings or realised profits he applies in extending his business. Why is it not the same thing if he applies those sums in attempts to extend his business, and fails?

. . . . That money is spent before the licensing day comes round. At that moment, after it has been paid and before the licensing day comes round, where is it to go? If it succeeds, it is to go into the expenditure of capital, but if it fails, it is to go to some other way. I want to know, in between, where it is to stand . . . it can only stand, in between, as it will at the end, and if it may not at the end stand as an ordinary deduction from the annual profits, as an annual trade expense, neither can it so stand at the moment when the option is on it . . . it seems to me that this sum is—perhaps it is not right in one sense to say—an expenditure of capital in the sense of the original capital of the concern; but it is an expense out of savings or realised profits. . . .” Southwell v. Savill Brothers, Limited, 4 Tax Cases 430; (1901) 2 K.B. 349.

This decision was approved by L. C. Cave in Atherton v. British Insulated and Helsby Cables, 10 Tax Cases 155.

When the principle of the above decision was applied by the General Commissioners on the understanding that there was no difference between a ‘removed’ licence and a ‘new’ licence, Rowlatt, J., declined to interfere on the ground that the question was one of fact, Morse v. Stedford, 13 A.T.C. 68; 18 Tax Cases 457.

A Brewery Company were the owners or lessees of a number of licensed premises which they had acquired as part of their business as brewers and as a necessary incident of its profitable exploitation. The licensed premises were let to tenants, who were “tied” to purchase their beer from the Company. Under the Licensing Act, Compensation Fund Charges were levied in respect of the Excise “on” licences held by the tenants, who paid the charges and recouped themselves by deduction from the rents which they paid to the Brewery. It was claimed by the Company that in computing its profits for assessment to Income-tax, it should be allowed to deduct the amounts ultimately borne by it in respect of the Compensation Fund Charges. Held, in the King’s Bench Division that the deduction claimed was inadmissible. This decision was, however, reversed in the Court of Appeal (Kennedy, L.J., dissenting); and the opinions in the House of Lords being equally divided, the judgment of the Court of Appeal was sustained.

Per Channel, J.—“If a brewer sets up a depot at a distance from his main brewery, for the purpose of increasing his sales, the annual expense of that depot is to my mind clearly an expense deductible as exclusively incurred for the purpose of his business of selling beer. . . . Then again if in order to sell his beer he has to employ an agent and pay the agent, the payment of that agent is an expense of selling the beer. . . .”

Per Lord Atkinson.—“Again it is urged that the landlord pays his contribution as landlord, and because of his proprietary interest in the premises, and not as trader, since he would be equally liable to it whether he traded or not. That, no doubt, is so, but in the present case the Company have become landlords and thus liable to pay the charge for the purpose solely and exclusively of setting up the tied-house system of trading. If the Company took under lease a plot of land to enlarge their brewery, or took similarly premises in which to establish a depot to sell their beer through an agent, the same criticism might be applied with equal force to the payment of the rent reserved by the lease. They would pay it as lessees; not as brewers. They would pay it whether they continued to brew or not. Yet under the provisions of the very rule relied upon in this case, they would be entitled to deduct the rent from the profits earned, and that too, utterly irrespective of whether the receiver of the rent used it to pay for his support or for his pleasure, or even to set up a rival brewery.

Indeed, even in a contract made for the purchase of material, such as hops or malt, the Company would have to pay for the commodity supplied, not because they are brewers, but because they were contracting parties, utterly irrespective of whether they carried on their trade or had abandoned it. Yet it can hardly be suggested that the price paid for the hops or malt under the contract should not be deducted from the receipts. There is, therefore, in my opinion nothing in this objection.

Lastly, it was objected that the licence, which draws after it the liability to pay the compensation contribution, authorises trading in several articles in addition to beer, and that the payment of the compensation or any part of it could not be held to be made wholly and exclusively for or in the interest of the trade in beer alone, and no doubt as far as the publican is concerned, that possibly may be so, but as far as the respondents are concerned, they deliberately set up, wholly and exclusively for the purposes of their trade in beer, a system which necessarily subjects them to a liability for the share of the compensation contribution they claim to deduct. It matters not to them in respect to what trading, in addition to the trading in beer, the liability for the entire contribution is incurred. They deliberately assume the liability for the landlord's share of it solely to get a market for their beer, and therefore the payment of it is a disbursement made wholly and exclusively for the purposes of their trade as vendors of beer."

* * * *

On the other hand,

Per Lord Shaw of Dunfermline.—" . . . this appears to me to demonstrate that a payment made by an owner, irrespective of whether he is in trade or is dealing as a trader with the premises, is a payment for the purpose of preserving the owner's rights as such, and cannot be said to be exclusively devoted to the purpose of some business in which the owner happens to be engaged. In short, it seems to be difficult logically to affirm, and were it not for the opinion of some of your Lordships and some of their Lordships in the Court below, I should deem it impossible to affirm, that a payment is exclusively devoted to the purpose of the wholesale brewing trade carried on by the owners of premises when the same payment to the same amount, and in respect of the same premises, would fall upon the owners, although they stopped the brewing business to-morrow, or although they had never at any time been engaged in any business transactions with the licensee. I have, as I say, difficulty in seeing how an owner's payments can be said to be exclusively for the purpose of a brewer's trade when the payment would fall upon the owner, whether he was a brewer or not.

"While the payment is not, in my opinion, 'exclusively' for the brewing trade purpose, it appears also to be equally clear to me that it is not 'wholly' for such a purpose. I may point out that even if it were maintained that the payment was to secure the continuing value of a brewery asset, still that asset was a value in a licence which was for wine, beer, and spirits. The payment undoubtedly was for the continuance of that licence as a whole, although the trading interest of the appellants with the premises had no reference to anything but beer. It is not difficult to figure cases in which, if an 'on' licence in the full sense were reduced to a beer house licence, the value of the premises would be greatly reduced, while the trade in beer therein with the wholesale brewer might not be reduced, but increased. It is, to my mind, fairly plain, therefore, that the payment by the owner, who happens to be a brewer, is a payment not exclusively devoted to the purposes of his brewing trade, but devoted to the purposes of a trade in wine and spirits as well as beer, and the deduction under the statute cannot accordingly apply," Smith v. Lion Brewery Co., Ltd., 5 Tax Cases 568; (1911) A.C. 150.

A Brewery Company were the owners or lessees of a number of licensed premises which they had acquired solely in the course of and for the purpose of their business as brewers, and as a necessary incident to the more profitable carrying on of their business. The licensed premises were let to tenants who were "tied" to purchase their beer, etc., from the Company alone. The Company claimed that in the computation of their profits for assessment, the following expenses incurred in connection with these 'tied' houses should be allowed:—

(a) Repairs to tied houses; (b) differences between rents of leasehold houses or assessment of "property" of freehold houses on the one hand and the rents received from the tied-tenants on the other; (c) fire and licence insurance premiums; (d) rates and taxes; (e) legal and other costs.

Held, that all the expenses claimed were admissible as being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purpose of the trade of the Brewery Company.

Per Lord Loreburn.—"In my opinion this point was practically decided by the Lion Brewery Company case, (5 Tax Cases 568), supra. . . . The brewers were there allowed . . . to enter upon the debit side an allowance which they had to make for their share of the compensation charge in respect of their tied houses. That compensation levy became payable by them, because it was necessary for the levy to be paid in order to save the licences which were in the names of their tenants. It was held to be a proper debit because it was paid to keep going another business the success of which was essential to their own. That was the principle of the decision and not the narrow point that the compensation was payable by statute

On ordinary principles of commercial trading such loss arising from letting 'tied' houses at reduced rents is obviously a sound commercial outlay. Therefore the item (difference between the rent paid by the landlord and the rent recovered from the tenants) must be deducted.

Per Lord Atkinson.—"I think that the doctrine (i.e., in the Lion Brewery case) amounts to this that where a trader bona fide creates in himself or acquires a particular estate or interest in premises wholly and exclusively for the purpose of using that interest to secure a better market for the commodities which is a part of his trade to vend, the money devoted by him to discharge a liability imposed by statute on that estate or interest or upon him as the owner of it, should be taken to have been expended by him wholly and exclusively for the purpose of his trade. I use the word 'creates' advisedly in order to meet the case of a trader who lets premises he has, for instance, inherited, to a tenant who covenants to vend his goods in them and buy from him and none other, the goods vended.

The trader in such a case, by the letting, creates in himself the estate or interest of a lessor wholly and entirely for the purpose of his trade, viz., to promote a better market for his goods. I am bound to say that I cannot see any difference in principle between a liability imposed on such a lessor by statute, and a liability imposed on him by the reasonable requirements of his trade. . . .

I now turn to the case of Brickwood & Co. v. Reynolds, 3 Tax Cases 600; (1898) 1 Q.B. 95. The decision is based upon two propositions . . . that a trade of a publican in a tied house is altogether independent of the trade of the brewer, and therefore the entire expenditure of money on the repairs of the (tied) house could not be held to be expenditure wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the brewer's trade, since it was, in addition, expended for the trade of the publican.

With infinite respect for the Lord Justice (A. L. Smith) I think . . . the publican's trade is the vending of the landlord's beer and none other. . . . The brewer takes the house, ties it to his brewery and puts the publican into it for the very purpose of having his beer sold . . . through the efforts of this salesman, the tied tenant. The two trades are . . . almost, if not altogether, the same enterprise seen from different sides . . . and I confess I am unable to see upon what principle money designedly spent by the brewer with the sole and exclusive object of maintaining the market for his own goods, and promoting through the action of this salesman the sale of those goods therein ceases to be an expenditure wholly and exclusively for his (the brewer's) trade, because incidentally it may benefit the salesman. . . ." Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce, 6 Tax Cases 399.

A Brewery Company, in the course of and for the purpose of their business, acquired licensed houses which were let to tenants subject to the usual 'tie' terms. The Company claimed that in reckoning their profits as brewers, the following expenses incurred in connection with these 'tied' houses should be allowed:—(1) Compensation Levy on tied houses; (2) Premiums paid by the Company for insuring tied houses against fire; (3) The difference between the assessment to Income-tax, Schedule A, in respect of freehold tied houses or rents of leasehold houses on the one hand, and the rents received from the tied tenants on the other; (4) Replacement of fixtures and fittings of tied houses; (5) Repairs to tied houses. Having regard to the findings in the case, Counsel for the Crown consented to an order reducing the assessment by the amount of the deductions claimed, Youngs, Crawshay and Youngs, Ltd. v. Brooke, 6 Tax Cases 393.

In computing (3) above, each tied house should be considered separately and the premium, if any, received from the tenant should also be taken into account, the premium being spread over the period of the lease, Collyer v. Hoare & Co., Ltd., 17 Tax Cases 169; (1932) A.C. 407 (H.L.). This principle was extended in a later case, Lucas v. Charles Hammerton & Co., 1945 K.B.D., so as to apply even when the tied house is sold, the successor being deemed to receive, every year during the currency of the lease, the part of the premium allocable to that year, though the premium had been received by the predecessor. On the other hand while premia paid by tenants should be spread over in order to reduce the deficiency in rent, premia paid by the brewer (and other capital expenditure, e.g., cost of alterations to premises, cost of purchase of previous leases or debts foregone from previous tenants) cannot be spread over to increase the deficiency, Collyer v. Hoare & C Co., Ltd., 16 A.T.C. 289. This follows from the position that its acquiring such premises is of a capital nature while its letting them out is a part of the trade of brewers.

A payment in respect of the 'monopoly value' (fixed by the Licensing Justices) is capital, even if paid in instalments. Such a payment is like a premium on a lease or the cost of structural alterations imposed as a condition precedent to the grant of a licence, Henrikson v. Grafton Hotel, Ltd. (C.A.), 1943 I.T.R. (Sup.) 10.

Advertisements.—"Some trades possibly may be founded very much upon advertisements, and there may be a trade of advertising which is founded upon the value of such advertisements. It is a question of degree, and I do not at present go the length of saying that in no case can advertisements ever be deducted. But there must be a limit to the principle, and I do not think that a person who has made a bad bargain, and has given a sum utterly disproportioned to the value of the thing, as the original premium, is to be entitled to deduct it as an annual expenditure."—Per Grove, J., in Gillatt and Watts v. Colquhoun, 2 Tax Cases 76.

Sec., however, the dictum of Kelly, C.B., in Watney v. Musgrave, 1 Tax Cases 272; 5 Ex.D. 241. Broadly speaking, ordinary advertisements would be allowed as expenses by the Income-tax Officer, but special advertisements, e.g., in connection with the increase of capital or reconstructing a company, etc., would not be allowed.

In Southern v. Aldwych Property Trust, Ltd., (1940) K.B.D. the cost of advertisement was allowed as a necessary expense of managing the property. It may be taken broadly that, if the profits arising out of the advertisement are taxable, the cost of the advertisement is admissible.

Pension—Employees—Commuted value of.—A Company sought to charge as a trade expense a lump sum which it had paid for the purchase, for the benefit of a former actuary and secretary of the Company, of an annuity equal in amount to the pension which had been awarded to him by resolution of the Company. Held, that the lump sum paid to purchase the annuity was an expense incurred in the business not in the nature of capital expenditure, and was an admissible expense in computing the Company's profits assessable to income-tax.

"In Royal Insurance Co. v. Watson, (1897) A.C. 1; 3 Tax Cases 500, the Company took over the business of another insurance company, and it was a term of the agreement that they should take the manager of that other company into their service at his existing salary with power to commute such annual payment by payment of a certain gross sum. They took him into their service, but subsequently dismissed him, paying him the agreed sum. The Court of Appeal held that money so expended, not being expended as remuneration for services rendered, could not be treated as money expended for purposes of the trade or business. The decision was affirmed in the House of Lords, but on an entirely different ground. The ground there was that the bargain between the parties necessarily involved the expenditure, which was part of the consideration for the transfer of the business; "part of the purchase-money for the concern" as Lord Halsbury said, and that, therefore, it was a capital expenditure. Having regard to that decision, and to the observations of the learned Law Lords, particularly Lord Shand, it is impossible to regard the decision of the Court of Appeal as a binding authority in support of the view that, unless money is expended as remuneration for services rendered in the trading year, it cannot be an expense incurred for the purposes of the trade. I do not think that the Court of Appeal intended to lay down such a proposition as of universal application. The Court was dealing with the facts of that particular case. The contrary principle has frequently been acted on. The facts in Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Ltd. v. Bruce, (1915) A.C. 433; 6 Tax Cases 399, are no doubt very different from those in the present case, but the decision and the grounds on which it was based, appear to me to be inconsistent with any such view. In Smith v. Incorporated Council of Law Reporting, (1914) 3 K.B. 674; 6 Tax Cases 477, Lord Justice Scrutton, when a Judge of first instance, held that the Commissioners were justified in treating a lump sum of £1,500 paid to a gentleman on their staff of Law Reporting, on his retirement, as an expense incurred in the business carried on, and as such an admissible deduction. In Ounsworth v. Vickers, Ltd., (1915) 3 K.B. 267; 6 Tax Cases 671, Mr. Justice Rowlatt, following a judgment of the Lord President in Vallambrosa Rubber Company v. Farmer, 5 Tax Cases 529; 47 Sc.L.R. 488, said that the proper test to apply is this: was the expenditure incurred in order to meet a continuing business demand, in which case it should be treated as an ordinary business expense and an admissible deduction, or was it an expenditure incurred once for all, in which case it should be treated as capital outlay? I agree with that view, and, applying that test, I think that it necessarily follows, on the facts found by the Commissioners, that the £4,994 should be treated, as the pension was treated, as an ordinary business expenditure, and that the deduction should be allowed. It is the pension in another form: it is actuarially equivalent in value, and it is identical in character. It was paid to meet a continuing demand which was itself an ordinary business expense, as the Surveyor had treated it. It was no part of the bargain between the two companies that it should be paid as in Watson's case (supra). It was paid as the Commissioners state, 'entirely as a matter of domestic arrangement'. It seems to me as impossible to hold that the fact that a lump sum was paid instead of a recurring series of annual payment alters the character of the expenditure, as it would be to hold that, if an employer were under a voluntary arrangement with his servant to pay the servant a year's salary in advance instead of paying each year's salary as it fell due, he would be making a capital outlay," Hancock v. General Reversionary and Investment Co., Ltd., 7 Tax Cases 358; (1919) 1 K.B. 25.

Pension—Employees—Contribution for—Lump payment.—A Company claimed as a deduction, in computing its profits for income-tax purposes, a lump sum of £50,000 which it had set aside in the hands of trustees as a fund, for the relief, out of the income therefrom, of invalidity, etc., amongst its employees. Held, that the sum in question was not an admissible deduction in arriving at the Company's profits for assessment to 'Income-tax, Hancock v. General Reversionary and Investment Co., Ltd. (supra), distinguished.

Per Pollock, M. R.—" . . . it is clear that in order to justify a deduction being made from what I will call the gross profits, it has to be shown—and I think, on this the onus lies upon the subject—that what is sought to be deducted is money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade, that is, for the purpose of earning the profits.

Now, that being the rule, there are a number of cases which illustrate that. (Refers to the Vallambrosa Rubber Co., Ltd. v. Farmer, 5 Tax Cases 529 and Ounsworth v. Vickers, Limited, 6 Tax Cases 671). There are many other illustrations which may be given indicating, that you are not to pay meticulous attention to what has happened in the particular period of charge. What you really have to attempt to ascertain is whether or not from the business point of view the expenditure has been wholly and exclusively laid out in the earning of the profits.

Then we come to another class of cases, cases in which an expenditure is made on business grounds of a sum, apparently a capital sum but really to comprise and compress what is an annual charge. Where you find that there is a continuous business demand you may on business principles summarise that continuous demand and on prudent grounds you may make a payment which covers more than the particular year, and you may be able to show that that sum has been spent prudently in order to obviate the continuous business demand, and, hence, that is a sum wholly and exclusively laid out in the earning of the profits.

The case that perhaps illustrates that as well as any is the case of Hancock v. General Reversionary and Investment Society, Ltd., 7 Tax Cases 358, which we have been discussing. Upon the facts found Mr. Justice Lush determined that in paying down the actual actuarial value of the annuity to which Mr. Hancock was entitled, the Company were doing no more than making a payment in order to save themselves the continuous demand which would otherwise fall upon them, and that therefore it was a sum wholly and exclusively laid out in the earning of profits, although no doubt the effect was to cover more than the period of charge under the Income-tax Act. I think that that case must be treated as one which depends to some extent upon the actual facts found. It might have been possible to deal with it from a different point of view if there had not been the definite and clear facts found as they were.

On the other hand, and taking the illustration on the other side, it has sometimes been attempted to say that what is really a capital outlay ought to be treated on the same principle; and I can give an illustration of a claim which could be made which could not be allowed. Take the case of where a company had certain premises for which they had to pay rent. If they expend a certain amount of their capital in the purchase of the freehold of those premises, then the expenditure is not an expenditure to be deducted from their profits as having been wholly and exclusively laid out for that purpose, but it is to be a capital charge, and it falls on the other side of the rule, and cannot be treated as a proper deduction. That again is illustrated by the actual decision in Ounsworth v. Vickers, Limited, 6 Tax Cases 671; (1915) 3

K.B. 267, where it was held that what had been done in that case in securing a better channel and a better berth alongside the premises of the Respondents was capital expenditure, and that the Respondents in that case were not entitled to deduct it from their gross profits for ascertaining their taxable profits.

Now I have indicated under the Income-tax Statute what is the rule, and I have indicated, by two illustrations which I have given, what may be taken to be, I will not say definitions, but illustrations of the sort of cases which fall on the one side or the other. And now I come to the present case, and I confess that I have found it a difficult one and my mind has fluctuated in the course of the case very considerably. The Commissioners have found, and it is for them to find the facts, that the payments for the maintenance of their work-people during invalidity constitute a continuous business demand upon Messrs. Rowntree and Company's business, having regard to the manner in which that business is conducted. So far they have found therefore a fact which justifies Messrs. Rowntree in dealing with this matter which is prima facie a business demand upon them. Then they held that the primary object of this payment of £50,000 to trustees was to establish a fund by setting aside a capital sum, the income of which would be available to meet this demand; and perhaps some emphasis ought to be put upon the fact that they believed that the income would be available. I have pointed out that although in certain special circumstances an inroad could be made upon the capital, the original intention was that the income alone should first of all be used to meet this continuous demand upon them. Then, thirdly, the Commissioners found that the actual amounts paid away for invalidity had not been ascertained at the time the payment was made, and were contingent and not capable of ascertainment. Now I think that is a very important finding of fact which is binding upon us. It cannot be said that the matter then could be dealt with actuarially, or that it was a clear business proposition as to whether or not they would continue to pay the sums as and when the demand was made upon them, or whether they would meet that ascertainable and ascertained demand by an immediate payment as was done in the case of Hancock. In Hancock v. General Reversionary and Investment Society, Ltd., 7 Tax Cases 358, at p. 372, Mr. Justice Lush said: 'It seems to me as impossible to hold that the fact that a lump sum was paid instead of a recurring series of annual payments alters the character of the expenditure, as it would be to hold that, if an employer were under a voluntary arrangement with his servant to pay the servant a year's salary in advance instead of paying each year's salary as it fell due, he would be making a capital outlay.' In this particular case those attributes cannot be given to this particular payment. It is wholly uncertain what claims for invalidity would be made upon Messrs. Rowntree. No business proposition of the same nature as in Hancock's case would be proposed to them by any insurance office, and the provision they have made may be wise or may not, but it is not a business proposition in the narrower sense that the proposition in Hancock's case was. The Commissioners came to the conclusion in applying the law, that it was impossible to say that this was invalidity in another form, in the sense in which Mr. Justice Lush had described the actuarial payment made in Hancock's case, as a pension in another form. I think it more closely approximates to the case of the purchase of a freehold in order no longer to have the demand for rent than it does to a prudent business payment in order to be rid of what was an ascertained demand likely to continue over a series of years.

Lord Parker states the principle in the case of Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Limited v. Bruce, 6 Tax Cases 399 at p. 429. He states the principle as to deductions in this way: 'The better view, however, appears to be that, where a deduction is proper and necessary to be made in order to ascertain the balance of profits and gains, it ought to be allowed.' Now it seems to me upon the findings of fact before us that it is impossible to determine that this deduction was proper and necessary to be made in order to ascertain the balance of profits and gains. It may prove to be good business; the payment was certainly dictated by charitable motives and in the best interest of their employees, but whether or not it could be said to be proper and necessary is quite another question.

On the whole I have come to the conclusion that this payment does not satisfy the Rules, and cannot be said to have been made as wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade," Rowntree & Co., Ltd. v. Curtis, 8 Tax Cases 678; 40 T.L.R. 363.

Pension fund—Initial lump contribution.—A company established a Pension Fund—under a trust deed—for its employees to which both the company and the employees subscribed every month. In addition, the company paid as a lump contribution to the fund a sum—actuarially determined—to provide pensions for the previous service of the employees. It was held by Rowlatt, J., that the lump sum contribution was an admissible deduction in computing the company's profits, Atherton v. British Insulated and Helsby Cables, 10 Tax Cases 155.

Per Rowlatt, J.—"It is clear that expenditure which in its nature is a Revenue expenditure does not cease to be deductible because it is not made strictly annually. . . . It was conceded that dredging a water passage which is continually silting up is an income expense, and does not cease to be deductible . . . because you may dredge very efficiently in one year and thereby save yourself from having to dredge in the next two years. . . . On the other hand, I suppose if the (owners) were minded by concreting the bottom of their water passage to make it a channel that never required dredging. . . . I apprehend it would not be argued that was income expenditure. . . ."

This was however upset by the Court of Appeal which distinguished the case from Hancock's case on the ground that in the latter there was a pre-existing liability. That is to say, there were two elements in Hancock's case, (1) a pre-existing liability, and (2) an actuarial calculation: (1) was absent in this case; and (2) was absent in the Rowntree case. The Court of Appeal also suggested that if the Commissioners had found as a fact that this expenditure on account of the contribution was a necessary expenditure of the business, the expenditure would have been admissible on the analogy of Usher's Wiltshire Brewery v. Bruce, 6 Tax Cases 399. But as a matter of fact the Commissioners merely held the item to be an admissible deduction, i.e., decided on a point of law on the facts before them.

The case went to the House of Lords who by a majority of three to two affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal, (1926) A.C. 205.

Lord Cave approved of the Hancock case, but thought that in this case a capital asset had been created and that the Hancock case did not apply. Lord Atkinson agreed that the expenditure created a capital asset, but did not approve of the Hancock decision. Lord Buckmaster offered no opinion as to the correctness of the Hancock decision, and rested his judgment on the ground that the payment was not a proper trading expense, i.e., not a proper debit in the Profit and Loss Account. Lord Carson approved of the Hancock case, and thought that the case exactly covered the present case also. Lord Blanesburgh not only approved of the Hancock case but would have allowed this claim to deduct from profits even if the Hancock case had been decided otherwise.

The following extracts are from the judgments in the House of Lords. . . .

Per Lord Chancellor.—"But there remains the question . . . whether it is in substance a revenue or a capital expenditure. This appears to me to be a question of fact which is proper to be decided by the Commissioners upon the evidence brought before them in each case; but where, as in the present case, there is no express finding by the Commissioners upon the point, it must be determined by the Courts upon the materials which are available, and with due regard to the principles which have been laid down in the authorities. . . . When an expenditure is made, not only once and for all, but with a view to bringing into existence an asset or an advantage for the enduring benefit of a trade, I think that there is very good reason (in the absence of special circumstances leading to an opposite conclusion) for treating such an expenditure as properly attributable not to revenue but to capital. For this view there is already considerable authority. . . . The object and effect of the payment of this large sum was to enable the Company to establish the Pension Fund, and to offer to all its existing and future employees a sure provision for their old age, and so to obtain for the Company the substantial and lasting advantage of being in a position throughout its business life to secure and retain the services of a contented and efficient staff. . . ."

(It should be noted that in the above judgment the word "enduring" is used in the sense that fixed capital endures, not in the sense that a benefit endures for some years by relieving the trade of a revenue payment. See per Rowlatt, J., and Romer, L.J., in Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cases 253.)

Per Lord Carson.—" . . . Indeed it is under modern views and conditions not only a proper but essential expenditure for carrying on any properly organized business. . . .

"It is clear from the terms of the trust deed, as already pointed out, that in no sense was the sum an investment, that it would be eventually exhausted in payment of the pensions, and that in the event of a winding up of the Company it could never form any part of the assets of the Company. I cannot, under these circumstances, conceive any system of commercial accountability under which this sum could ever appear in the capital accounts of the Company. Nor is it capital withdrawn from the business as it was admittedly paid out of the earnings of the year. It is not disputed that an annual sum contributed to the Pension Fund on an actuarial basis for the purposes of making the Fund solvent for paying the pensions of the older members of the staff, would be a proper deduction in arriving at the balance of profits and gains; it would be an ordinary business expense. Nor, I think, can it be disputed that if at any time the Fund threatened to become insolvent after it was started, a sum paid to prevent such insolvency would be a proper disbursement in arriving at the balance of profits and gains. Why, therefore, should the payment of the sum in question, which by an actuarial calculation represents the sum equal to the annual payments which would be necessary, to be considered as in the same position? . . .

"I notice that my noble friend on the Woolsack agrees with the decision in Hancock's case as I also do, but I fail, as Mr. Justice Rowlatt failed, to see how it can in principle be distinguished from the present case. . . ."

Per Lord Blanesburgh.—" . . . It is, I apprehend, now well settled that in the Income-tax Act, unless the context requires a different meaning to be placed upon them, such words as 'profits', 'gains', 'capital', are to be construed according to their ordinary signification in commerce or accountancy. It will accordingly not be amiss if, remembering the nature of the present controversy, an attempt be made to ascertain from the statements or accepted implications of the stated case, but in the first instance, merely as a business proposition, what was the precise nature and purpose of the payment now in question, and, as consequent thereon, its proper place in this Company's accounts. . . .

"I do not myself see how any of these payments could properly be charged to Capital Account by any company which keeps its accounts on the double account system. And as the Income-tax Acts contemplate that accounts will be so kept, no other system need here be considered. Under that system, as is well-known, the two accounts, Capital and Revenue, or Trading Accounts, as in business language it is usually termed, are separate accounts. The Capital Account is concerned with the Company's fixed capital and its applications. The Revenue Accounts is concerned with the Company's trading or circulating capital and its application. Dividends may lawfully be paid, although, it may be, the whole of the company's fixed capital has disappeared. No profits available for dividend are, however, existent, unless the Company's trading capital would remain intact after they had been distributed as such. If what I have so far said be correct, it follows that for this Company to have charged any of these payments, to Capital Account would have thrown on that account a revenue charge; would have enabled the Company to ascertain profits and distribute dividends without taking it into account; would have introduced a system of facilitating in the case of a company, less prosperous, the concealment, more or less successful, of the truth that the dividends declared during a period of depression were in whole or in part being paid out of capital.

"My Lords, on the facts of this case there were, as it seems to me, only three funds from which any of these payments could, by such a company as this, legitimately have been taken. The first was its undistributed profits—the payments, if thence derived, being no more than a series of bonuses to its employees out of the realised profits of good years. The second was its gross receipts before profits were struck. The third, merely another aspect of the second, and not applicable to this prosperous Company, was working capital to which recourse might properly be had on any occasion when the gross receipts after these payments had been charged against them were less than the outgoings by at least an equivalent amount.

"Applied to this Company, on the facts found, there is, as to the first of these, no suggestion of any intention on its part to make these payments out of realised profits. The unqualified covenant into which it entered with regard to them would have effectively disposed of such a suggestion, had it been made.

"As to the third, the gross receipts, as I have indicated, were more than adequate to meet the payments, and still leave a large surplus.

"The Revenue Account, therefore, strictly so called, alone remains as the place in which they can properly appear. . . . In no sense of the word 'capital', circulating, working or fixed, did this expenditure involve any withdrawal. It was made out of gross receipts in a year in which working capital and, a fortiori, fixed capital remaining intact, a large surplus still emerged. Nor, in my judgment, did the expenditure in any relevant sense create a new asset of the Company of the nature of a fixed capital asset or any other. The learned Lord Justice does not more closely describe this so-called asset nor, fixed though it was, did he attach it to a name by which it could be recognised. He did not suggest that it resulted in an enhanced goodwill. He could not, in my judgment, have done so with reason, because it has never, I think, even been suggested that a contented personnel, is an element in goodwill, whatever else it may be. In that state of things, it has occurred to me, my Lords, that the existence or non-existence of this so-called asset might fairly be submitted to the prosaic test of asking what, in a liquidation, would be forthcoming in respect of it when a liquidator essayed his statutory duty to realise the Company's assets, and divide the proceeds amongst his constituents. Certainly no part of the Fund. That, in its entirety, is completely alienated. And I can myself think of nothing else. Moreover, my Lords, a reference to the authorities shows, it seems to me, clearly that it is by reference to no such shadowy conceptions that the words of the statute 'employed as capital' have to be interpreted. Such things as a purchase of goodwill involving a capital expenditure might come within them, Smith v. Moore, (1921) 2 A.C. 13; 12 Tax Cases 266. The expense of making a new channel to the sea essential or convenient for approach to a shipyard would be such expenditure, notwithstanding that the channel when constructed would not be the property of the trader, and that others jointly with himself would have the right to use it on their lawful occasions, Ounsworth v. Vickers, Ltd., (1915) 3 K.B. 267, 276. The expenses incurred in the promotion of a private Bill, the capital object of which was ultimately obtained by agreement, Moore & Co. v. Hare, 6 Tax Cases 572; 52 Sc.L.R. 59. These advantages are real and definite. I can see nothing comparable here. Moreover, in this connection also the observation already made is true that the principle expounded by the Lord Justice would equally apply to the annual payments to be made by the Company and admittedly properly chargeable to revenue. . . . I think with the Lord Chancellor that the Hancock case was correctly decided, but I should myself have been prepared to decide this case as I do even if I were of opinion that the Hancock case, could not be supported—so much more compelling in a relevant respect are the facts and circumstances here . . .”, British Insulated and Helsby Cables, Ltd. v. Atherton, 10 Tax Cases 155; (1926) A.C. 205.

Rowntree's case, 8 Tax Cases 678, related to a Provident (not a Superannuation) Fund and Atherton's case to a period before 1921, before Rules had been made in the United Kingdom Act in regard to such funds.

The lump sum cost of a policy of insurance to cover pensions payable to servants who had no right to them and were no party to the purchase of the policy was disallowed by Rowlatt, J., in Morgan Crucible Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 1933 I.T.R. 26. The Hancock case, 7 Tax Cases 358; (1919) 1 K.B. 25, was distinguished on the ground that in that case an annual expense was liquidated by a lump sum payment while in this case the annual liability (such as there was) was not got rid of, though the payments from the insurance company would countervail future pensions to be paid. The employer had merely acquired a capital asset in the contract with the insurance company. It belonged to him and not to the employees, for he could surrender the policy and at the same time, not pay pensions to the employees.

Employees—Compensation.—The following dicta may be noted:—

“The point as to the deductibility of a payment made upon the termination of a person's employment was glanced at in the House of Lords in Royal Insurance v. Watson, 3 Tax Cases 500; (1897) A.C. 1. Lord Herschell reserved his opinion upon it without expressing any view. Lord Shand said that he thought damages paid to a dismissed servant—dismissed, I suppose, in the interests of the company, or the supposed interests of the company; and I also suppose he would include a sum paid by way of agreement to get rid of the claim for damages—might be (and I think it was said with a good deal of force in the argument that that would be) a deductible expense. I . . . think, that in the ordinary case a payment to get rid of a servant, when it is not expedient in the interests of the trade to keep him, would be a deductible expense . . . a person has to employ an efficient staff . . . and also to cease from employing an inefficient staff . . . and if he has to pay for that cessation . . . there is no reason why that should not be an expense incurred for the purposes of the trade. He has to facilitate people going when they reach the age of retirement, in their own interests and in the interests of their employer . . . at least he has to deal with the situation and provide in some way as Lord Cave says ‘on grounds of commercial expediency’ for people who . . . leave his employment. . . .”—Per Rowlatt, J., in Noble v. Mitchell, 11 Tax Cases 372; (1927) 1 K.B. 719.

Rowlatt, J., also distinguished Strong & Co. v. Woodfield, 5 Tax Cases 215; (1906) A.C. 448 on the ground that in that case the expense was only collateral to the actual trade, that in any case it was a case near the line, that Lord James of Hereford thought so and that it could not apply to expenses incurred on a staff who earn the profits of the trade.

As regards the Revenue nature of the expenditure, Rowlatt, J., said:—

“This gentleman being there as an unsatisfactory servant was not a permanency. He was no doubt there for his life but I do not think you can say ‘By the expenditure of capital I will get rid of this nuisance affecting my business, and have his room rather than his company by making this capital expenditure . . . although the largeness of the figures and the peculiar nature of the circumstances perplex one . . . this is simply a payment to get rid of a servant in the course of business and in the year in which the trouble comes."

The expenditure was incurred, not to secure an asset but merely to enable the business to continue its course as before,—only to remove a difficulty in carrying on the business as before.

Rowlatt, J.'s judgment was approved on both points by the Court of Appeal, though Lawrence, L.J., felt doubts whether the expenditure was not capital.

Following Mallett v. Staveley Coal & Iron Co., 13 Tax Cases 772; (1928) 2 K.B. 405, Hancock's case, 7 Tax Cases 358, and Noble v. Mitchell, 11 Tax Cases 372; (1927) 1 K.B. 719, it was held that the compensation paid by an oil company to its agents for the termination of their agency is revenue expenditure. The test is whether the transaction relates to fixed or to circulating capital. An oil company's concessions constitute its fixed capital while its contracts for delivery are its circulating capital. Contracts with selling agents are not fixed capital in any sense. Expenditure in terminating an agency merely brings back into the hands of the principal a necessary ingredient of the existing business and is therefore debitable to circulating capital. The resumption of the agent's work by the principal does not create a new asset even though the agent may agree not to compete with the principal afterwards. The re-organisation of methods of business does not create a new asset merely because it may lead to economies and the termination of agency is only a method of re-organisation. Further the compression of revenue payments of several years into a single year does not alter the nature of the payment, Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cases 253. The fact that a certain expenditure is incurred in order to obtain an enduring benefit will not by itself make the expenditure capital expenditure. The true test is whether the enduring benefit is of a capital nature.

On the other hand, where a private company composed of three persons decided to transfer its control to another concern and in doing so voted a substantial sum to the old directors as compensation for loss of office, it was held that the compensation could not be deducted from the taxable profits of the company. Noble's case was distinguished on the ground that in that case the company had an inducement to get rid of the retiring director while there was no such inducement in this case, Overy v. Ashword Dunn, Ltd., 12 A.T.C. 102; 17 Tax Cases 497.

Where a business consists merely of agency work for others the whole scheme of the business, i.e., the organisation for buying and selling might well be the fixed capital of the business Cf. Venden Berghs, Ltd. v. Clark, 19 Tax Cas 390 (H.L.) referred to under section 3 and compensation for the loss of the agency would be a capital receipt, while payment for acquiring the agency would be capital expenditure.

There were two companies with close trading relationship and a largely common directorate. Disputes arose among the directors resulting among other things, in an action for slander by a director against some of his colleagues. The quarrels were eventually terminated by one of the companies surrendering its holdings in the other to one of the non-common directors of the latter in return for cash; but one of the directors of the first company refused to agree to the arrangement unless he was paid £7,500 by the first company in consideration of his agreeing to withdraw the slander action against the director of the second company. The first company claimed to deduct the £7,500 from its profits and was allowed to do so on the ground that the payment was made in order to avoid future losses—whether pecuniary losses or commercial inconveniences—and that, therefore, it was incurred as much for the purpose of the trade as the making or carrying out of a trading agreement. The mere fact that something is paid for terminating a trading arrangement will not by itself make the payment capital expenditure, Scammell & Nephew, Ltd. v. Rowles, 18 A.T.C. 10 (C.A.), [following Noble v. Mitchell, 11 Tax Cases 372 and Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cases 253].

A Company which used to grant voluntary pensions to its employees on retirement, decided to close down, and when doing so, provided ex gratia annuities and compensation for loss of office to the employees. Held, that the expenditure on the annuities, etc., was not a business expense as it was not required for keeping the trade going nor was it a contractual obligation previously incurred, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. The Anglo-Brewing Company, Ltd., 12 Tax Cases 803. Further, in this case, the payments were made after the accounting year in respect of which the deductions were claimed for Excess Profits Duty.

In Lowe v. Peter Walker (Warringtons), Ltd., 20 Tax Cases 25, the company had created a trust for an employee's benefit fund and set aside some of its own shares for the purpose. The trust was revokable. The Revenue authorities did not 'approve' the fund. Later on, the company revoked the trust and transferred the sale proceeds of the assets of the old fund to a new fund which was 'approved'. On this occasion, the company also made a substantial addition to the fund. The Revenue disallowed both the amounts, but the Court of Appeal allowed both of them. It should be noted that there is no provision in the United Kingdom laws corresponding to section 58-K of the Indian Act. Section 58-K, however applies to provident funds only.

Miscellaneous business deductions.—The following executive instructions in the Income-tax Manual may be noted:—

(a) contributions to private provident funds by an employer are allowable if the fund is constituted as an irrevocable trust, and if no part of the employers' contributions can be recovered by him. If the fund remains in the hands or under the control of the employer no contributions by him would be allowed as a deduction; but actual payments made to employees leaving the service would be allowed in the year in which such payments are made, so far as such payments relate to the employees' contributions only.

(b) Contributions to private superannuation funds by an employer are also allowable if the fund is constituted as an irrevocable trust and if no part of the employer's contribution can be recovered by him. If such a fund remains in the hands of, or under the control of, the employer, no contributions by him will be allowed as a deduction but actual payments of pension to ex-employees or to their widows or children should be allowed as a deduction where the pensionary payment is a fixed or recurring one. No claims on account of "pensions" will, however, be entertained where the "pensions" are paid to persons who have or who at any time had a share or interest in the business, profession or vocation.

(c) Premia paid by an employer to cover the risk of liability to compensate any of his employees for injuries under the Workmen's Compensation or Accident Insurance Act (VIII of 1923) are allowable under section 10 (2) (xii) [now (xv)].

(d) Bona fide expenditure of a revenue character is allowable for the welfare of employees.

(e) Indian traders and business men charge their customers or clients a small fee on each transaction—for example so many pies her bag of some commodity sold—the proceeds of which are supposed to be devoted to various religious, charitable or educational purposes. Such customary receipts, and the corresponding expenditure should be left out of account altogether for income-tax purposes.

(f) Audit and other accountancy expenses incurred annually, including the expenses of settling the income-tax liability of an assessee will ordinarily be allowed. But expenses connected with subsequent proceedings before the higher authorities in appeal, revision or before the Courts will not be allowed.

(g) The premiums received by a company on issue of shares are capital receipts and the cost of issuing shares is capital expenditure.

Provident Funds.—Those governed by the Provident Funds Act or recognised under Chapter IX-A of the Income-tax Act are necessarily irrevocable trusts; and contributions made to them by employers from year to year are allowable deductions from the employer's profits. By a special provision—section 58-K—where a new fund is created and the employer transfers accumulated funds to it, such transfers are deemed to be capital expenditure, and allowances are given as employees leave service and receive payment.

In the Nedungadi Bank v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 49 Mad. 910; 2 I.T.C. 243, it was held that no deductions were admissible on account of contributions made by the Bank to the provident fund of the employees. The case of the Commissioner was that the Bank which credited the accounts of the employees with the contribution still retained some control over the money which it could resume in certain circumstances. The liability of the Bank to its employees therefore was not unconditional.

In Burma Corporation, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 7 Rang. 608; A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 193; 4 I.T.C. 49, it was held that the employer is entitled to deduct from his profits the contributions made by him to his employees' provident fund when he has parted with the money or lost control over it. The fact that, according to the deed of trust of the provident fund and the rules of the fund, it is open to the employer to recover certain amounts in certain eventualities does not affect the above claim to deduction. When money is recovered from the fund by the employer, such recovery will go to swell his income.

In the case of The Bombay Burma Trading Corporation, 1933 I.T.R. 152; 11 Rang. 172; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 45 in which the employer had power to employ the monies of the provident fund in his own business and, or invest them, it was suggested by the High Court that the employer's contributions could be deducted from his taxable profits only when he paid them over to the employees.

It has been held in the United Kingdom that when a balance is transferred from an unapproved superannuation fund to an approved one, the balance is deductible from the employer's profits, Lowe v. Peter Walker (Warrington), etc., 20 Tax Cases 25 already referred to. As regards the position in India, see sections 58-K and 58-R respectively.

Future Losses.—The prices at which an assessee had entered into contracts to purchase esparto and pulp had proved to be much higher than the prices ruling in the market at the end of the accounting period in question. The assessee wanted to provide for the losses involved in the fall in prices, and accordingly placed to reserve a part of the profits earned during the accounting period. Held, that he could not deduct the amount so taken to reserve in computing his profits. Though, if goods are actually received into stock and then fall in value, loss is allowed to enter into the year's account (even if the loss has not been actually realised in the year by sale) no loss can be allowed in respect of stock not received, even though the assessee may be under obligation to buy it at prices above the market-value at the close of the year and even though the goods may be reserved for him, and further, even if invoiced to him before the close of the year.

Per the Lord President (Clyde).—"It is a general principle in the computation of the annual profits of a trade or business under the Income-tax Acts, that those elements of profit or gain, and those only enter into the computation, which are earned or ascertained in the year to which the inquiry refers; and in like manner, only those elements of loss or expense enter into the computation which are suffered or incurred during that year. . . . It is a common place that, subject always to the observance of the rules and general principles of the Income-tax Acts, no particular method of computing profits is a part of the law universal. . . . The appellants drew our attention to a recent decision in the House of Lords, Sun Insurance Office v. Clark, 6 Tax Cases 59; (1912) A.C. 443. It seems obvious that the character and position of a fire insurance business—depending as it does on the character of accidents, and involving payment of the annual premiums in advance—are different from the character and position of an ordinary commercial business. . . .", Collins & Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 773.

On the other hand, where an assessee, at a time when prices were falling, declined to take delivery of goods contracted for and there was litigation, a settlement being arrived at eventually under which the assessee took delivery at lower prices but still involving him in a loss, the question arose as to when the loss arose. There was difference of opinion in the King's Bench and the judgment of the lower tribunal that the loss occurred at the time of refusal to take delivery stood. Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Barrie, Ltd., 12 Tax Cases 1223.

A Company whose business consisted of hiring on time charters and carrying goods and merchandise as they offered, and whose charters extended beyond the accounting period, claimed to debit the account with the rates payable for the unexpired portion of the charters and credit per contra with the probable rate for hire for new charters in the next year. That is, in view of probable reduction in freights, the company attempted to write down the future losses. Held, that such writing down was not admissible.

Per the Lord President (Clyde).—"They (appellants) figured the time charters as being part of the trading capital of the company. . . . But it is not really possible to regard the time charters as stock-in-trade, for in point of fact the company never dealt with them as such. They did not deal in time charters and neither bought nor sold them. All they did was to hire the services of a ship at so much a month for so many months and use them for a profit; much as a man might hire omnibuses and horses or motor conveyances and either himself employ them in carrying passengers at a profit or sub-let them to others. In all such cases the periodical payment of hire is just one of the incidents inevitable to the marking of profits. . . . "although a balance-sheet and profit and loss account may show favourable results at their date, the trader may be aware of circumstances affecting his line of trade, which make the outlook for the immediate future pregnant with loss. The circumstances . . . may be in anticipation only or they may have already occurred, but their marketable effect has not had time to reflect itself in the returns of his business. . . . He may, for instance prefer to carry his profits forward or put them to reserve rather than consume or divide them. But they are none the less profits of the year or accounting period to which the accounts relate. After all, it is inevitable that profits should be ascertained at intervals of time more or less fixed," Whimster & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 813.

A firm of muslim manufacturers bought yarn from the spinners on forward contracts. The price of the undelivered yarn to be delivered after the close of the accounting period was £9,000; but owing to fall in prices its value would not be more than £3,000. The firm accordingly arranged that the difference of £6,000 should be treated as a debt due to the spinners, and that the undelivered yarn should be subject to a new contract at the prices prevailing, the debt being cleared generally as deliveries were made. Held, that the £6,000 could not be deducted from the profits.

Per the Lord President.—"Anticipated loss in a future year or period—however inevitable it may be thought to be—is not, and cannot be a loss on the trading of the present year upon which it has not in fact fallen. If the appellants had found themselves unable to complete the forward contracts, and had had to pay a sum of damages to the spinners in order to get quit of their obligations under them, the case might possibly have been different. . . .", J. H. Young & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 827.

In the Naval Collieries Case, 12 Tax Cases 1017, already referred to under 'Accumulated Repairs', the cost of reconditioning a coal mine consequent on a prolonged strike and complete stoppage of work was held to be capital expenditure. The expenditure was not actually incurred in the accounting year in which it was claimed, though it was inevitable soon after, and could be foreseen at the time of closing the accounts. Sargant, L.J. (dissenting) considered that the accrued liability for repair should be treated like liability for unpaid surface rent, and that the crucial date was the date of incurring the liability and not that of incurring the expenditure. The House of Lords considered the analogy to be wrong since, while in the case of rent there is a real, accruing liability, in this case, if the owner had been a free-holder, there would have been no real liability at all.

See also notes under section 13 as to how far future losses can be included.

Surety—Loss from standing as.—The loss incurred by standing as surety in a matter unconnected with the business of the assessee is not deductible, In re Ishardas Daramchand, 2 I.T.C. 12; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 168. It does not follow from this that if the surety was given in connection with the business it would have been allowed. That would have depended on whether the expenditure was of a capital nature and also whether it was incurred solely for the purpose of earning the profits of the business.

Assessee, a firm of three partners, had a 9/16th share in M & Co., a firm who were Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents of certain companies running cotton mills. In June, 1920, certain Mills which belonged to M. & Co. were sold to a company in return for fully paid-up shares allotted to them. The firm continued to be Secretaries and Agents of the company. One L. agreed to buy 750 ordinary shares from the firm; and to enable him to pay for the shares, the assessee who were also partners in the firm who were managing agents of an Industrial Bank, obtained an advance of Rs. 2,43,750 from the Bank by M. & Co. giving verbal guarantee. L. became insolvent and the Bank recovered the money from M. & Co. and handed back the shares. Assessee paid to M. & Co. 9/16ths of the money recovered by the Bank and received 422 shares. The assessee claimed to set-off under section 24 (1) the difference between this 9/16ths (Rs. 1,38,231) and the market value of the shares as a trading loss against their other profits.

Held, that the loss was merely a capital loss arising out of M. & Co. trying to sell their shares, and that it did not arise out of trading since standing surety was not part of the business, Girdhardas Harivallabhdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 83.

Whether a payment for guaranteeing a debt is of a capital or of a revenue nature will depend on whether the debt relates to circulating capital e.g., current transactions of purchase and sale of goods or of manufacture or to fixed capital, e.g., additional capital for development, cost of buildings, machinery, etc., Ascot Gas Water Heaters, Ltd. v. Duff, 1942 K.B.D.; European Investment Trust v. Jackson, 18 Tax Cas. 1 (C.A.).

Where a moneylender guaranteed a loan granted by a Bank to a fellow moneylender, and it was the custom among the particular class of moneylender to stand surety for each other's loans, it was held that amounts made good under this guarantee were revenue losses of the guarantor, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. S. A. S. Ramaswamy Chettiar, 1946 I.T.R. 236.

Duplicand—Feu-duty.—A Company was assessed to income-tax in respect of profits which it derived from carrying on business as proprietors of a school. The properties in which the school was carried on were owned by the Company, and consisted inter alia of playing fields which, together with other lands owned by the Company, were subject to an annual feu-duty payable to the superiors of the ground. The feu-charter provided that, in addition to the annual feu-duty, a duplicand of feu-duty over the ground was payable by the Company at intervals of twenty-one years. The Company claimed to deduct as a trading expense a payment representing the duplicand which under the terms of the feu-charter it had made to the ground superiors. Held, that the payment of the duplicand was made by the Company as a condition of the ownership of land, and not as an expense of carrying on its business, and that the payment in question was therefore not admissible as a deduction in arriving at the profits of the Company for the purpose of assessment under Case I of Schedule D, Dow v. Merchiston Castle School, 8 Tax Cases 149; 58 Sc.L.R. 585.

Travelling expenses—Clerk to Justices.—A solicitor residing and carrying on his profession at Worcester was Clerk to the Justices at Bromyard. Held, that he was not entitled to deduct from the emoluments of his office the cost of travelling between Worcester and Bromyard, as the expenses were not incurred in the performance of the duties of the office as solicitor, Cook v. Knott, 2 Tax Cases 246; 4 T.L.R. 164.

Travelling expenses—Directors of a Company.—The Directors of a Company had to travel from their residence to the place of meeting of the Company. Held, that the travelling expenses were not an allowable deduction from their income, Revell v. Directors of Elworthy Brothers & Co., Ltd., 3 Tax Cases 12. See also Ricketts v. Colquhoun, 10 Tax Cases 118 (H.L.), and other cases set out under section 4 (3) (vi).

Motor car—Lawyer.—Expenditure incurred by a lawyer in maintaining a motor car is not an admissible deduction from his professional earnings unless he can show that the car was required solely for his professional purposes. Sir Hari Singh Gour v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 3 I.T.C. 333.

Voluntary payments to subordinates.—Voluntary contributions made by a minister towards the stipend of his assistant minister were held to be not an allowable deduction. The Court considered, though there were no words in the English Act to this effect, that the deduction was allowed for expenditure incurred by the personal performance of the duty, and not for getting help to relieve him of this personal duty, Lothian v. Macrae, 2 Tax Cases 65.

Subscriptions to professional societies.—Subscriptions to professional societies or purchasing professional journals are not wholly or necessarily incurred for the performance of the office or exercise of the profession—in the case of a doctor, for instance.

Per Rowlatt, J.—"He does not belong to the society in order that he may get the journals and read them to the patients. . . . He is (only) qualifying himself in order that he may continue to hold his office", Simpson v. Tate, 9 Tax Cases 314.

Money advanced to clients.—Money advanced by a law agent to a client and lost will be deductible from the law agent's profits only if the making of loans of the kind is an ordinary incident in the law agent's professional work or business. Loans which are bald advances to comparatively new clients would, therefore, not be deductible. Lending money to clients may often be done by solicitors but it is not an essential and ordinary part of their profession. The law is not concerned with the motives for such transactions; and no custom can rest on what an individual solicitor does, Hagart & Burn-Murdoch v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 45 T.L.R. 338; (1929) A.C. 386.

Notional deductions—Not permissible.—An inventor and consulting engineer earned fees as a Consulting Engineer, and royalties as an Inventor. In addition he obtained orders for machinery, and supplied them at his own cost, making a profit. In connection with Excess Profits Duty, the question arose whether a deduction could be made from these profits on account of (1) the royalties—which he would have got if others had made the machines, (2) the work done by him as Engineer in drawing up specifications, etc. Held, that the case could be distinguished from Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Marx, (1919) 1 K.B. 647; 12 Tax Cases 41, and that it was impossible to deduct a notional sum to represent the skill contributed by the owner of the business, or to allow royalties which were in fact not paid to any one, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Marx, 4 A.T.C. 467.

Dual capacity.—If a professional man, e.g., solicitor, receives income in that capacity from a firm in which he is a partner in another capacity, the whole of the income is taxable. No deduction can be made on the ground that since under the law a person cannot sue himself, the portion payable to himself is not income, Watson and Everitt v. Blunden, 18 Tax Cases 402; 12 A.T.C. 496 (C.A.). This question cannot arise in the Indian Law which expressly provides for the method of taxation of partners in firms according as whether they are registered or unregistered.

Special allowances.—See section 4 (3) (vi). A profession or vocation though not an “office” is certainly an employment of profit; and out-of-pocket expenses received by professional men from their clients are to be excluded from the income, as being ‘expenses wholly and necessarily incurred in the performance of the duties’ of the profession. But even if that section does not cover such expenses, clause (xv) of sub-section (2) will cover such expenses being set off against the receipts.

Trade Associations—Payments to.—A Company claimed that levies paid to a Trade Association, of which they were members, should be allowed as a deduction in the computation of their profits. The objects of the Association were to raise and keep up prices and thus enable its members to earn larger profits. The Company’s appeal was heard by the Special Commissioners who required the production of the Association’s accounts for the three years forming the basis of the Company’s assessment in order to see how the sums received by the Association had been spent. The Company did not produce these accounts, alleging that the said accounts were not in their possession or under their control. In the absence of this evidence, the Commissioners refused to admit the Company’s claim. Held, that the Commissioners were entitled to require the production of the accounts of the Association, without which the Company’s claim could not be properly determined and could not therefore be admitted, and that the case be remitted to the Commissioners to consider the same with such evidence as might be obtained from the accounts, Grahamston Iron Company v. Crawford, 7 Tax Cases 25; 52 Sc.L.R. 385.

A similar course was adopted also in Adam Steamship Co. v. Matheson, 12 Tax Cases 399; 58 Sc.L.R. 168. In that case, the Company not only pleaded inability to produce the evidence, but contended that it was irrelevant as the subscription paid by them was really for insuring the Company’s ships. The argument of the Crown was that the Association had other objects than the mere insurance of ships belonging to its members, and that it was necessary for the Commissioners to be satisfied that the subscriptions paid to the Association were spent on objects the expenditure on which would have been allowed as a deduction if spent directly by the individual member. This is an important criterion.

A Company who were members of a Coal-owners' Association, claimed to deduct certain contributions representing levies made by the Association and expended (1) in defraying expenses of the Conciliation Board in Scotland, (2) in paying subscriptions to the Mining Association of Great Britain, and (3) in experimenting with coal dust. Held, that, so far as applied in defraying the expenses of the Conciliation Board, the levies were an admissible deduction in arriving at the liability of the Company; but that, so far as applied to the other two purposes, they were not admissible.

Per the Lord President.—"The Conciliation Board is a machinery by which disputes between the workmen and the employer may be settled, and by that means expenses kept down and more profits earned, and although of course there may not be in any one particular year work for the Conciliation Board to do, it was a machinery which the Coal-owners were entitled to keep, just as one might, as proper expenses, have a legal Secretary, although fortunate in having no law expenses or litigation in a particular year. The next item is subscription to the Mining Association. . . . That I think is an expense that cannot be deducted, because the Mining Association is an Association of a particular definite character, to keep a watchful eye on the proceedings, no doubt in the interest of mining interests generally, but without that character of particular service which I think is prominent in a Conciliation Board. Last of all, there comes £59 which was expended in experiments in coal dust. It is explained that the experiments were made on the explosive properties of coal dust at the instigation of the Home Secretary who wished certain experiments made before embarking on new legislation. It was a voluntary and very proper act of the Company to help him in the matter, but not an expense they undertook for the purpose of earning more profits than of any other year—just a helping hand to the legislature of the country. It was paid out of profits, and not with a view to earning profits." Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co., Ltd. v. Crawford, 6 Tax Cases 267; 50 Sc.L.R. 597.

The rulings as regards (1) and (2) in this case were re-affirmed in Thomas Merthyr Colliery Co. v. Davis, 17 Tax Cases 519.

A Company, who were colliery owners, were members of an Association which consisted of coal-owners, and the object of which was to indemnify the members against claims under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The Association consisted of twenty members. It made calls on members based on the amount of wages paid by them, and also had a reserve fund. The risks were partly reinsured. Members could retire from the Association after giving six months' notice; and a member who retired was entitled to his proportion of the reserve fund minus his proportion of the expenses and liabilities of the Association, up to the date of his retirement. The question arose whether the amounts paid by the assessee Company to the Association could be deducted from the assessable profits of the Company, having regard to the fact that a part of the money was eventually returnable to the Company. Held, that the expenditure was an admissible deduction, Thomas v. Richard Evans & Co., 11 Tax Cases 790; (1927) 1 K.B. 33 (H.L.).

A Colliery Company were members of a Coal-owners' Association, to which they paid a subscription based on their output of coal. The object of the Association was to pay its members an indemnity in the event of deficiency or stoppage of output being caused by strikes, etc. Held, that the subscription was not money laid out for the purposes of the trade, and was therefore not admissible as a deduction in arriving at the profits assessable, Rhymney Iron Company, Ltd. v. Fowler, 3 Tax Cases 476; (1896) 2 Q.B. 79.

The question whether the Rhymney case, was not superseded by later rulings and more particularly by Thomas v. Richard Evans & Co., 11 Tax Cases 790, supra was considered by the Court of Appeal and answered in the negative, in Thomas Merthyr Colliery Co. v. Davis, 17 Tax Cases 519; (1933) 1 K.B. 349. In the last-mentioned case the payments were deductible solely because they were for insurance and such insurance was part of the system of carrying on business. Payments on the other hand to secure indemnity against loss of profits in the event of stoppage of work or reduction of output are not wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade, being in relation to the absence of the trade rather than to its presence. The Court also suggested that the indemnity when received would not be taxable as profits of the trade. Romer, L.J., while agreeing that the Rhymney case was rightly decided could not agree to certain suggestions in it, for example, disallowing the cost of preventing the deterioration of a mine when not worked or the cost of maintenance of machinery when the business is in abeyance.

A Company was a member of the Steel Hoop Manufacturers' Association, which was mainly formed for the purpose of keeping up prices. Under the rules and pooling arrangements of the Association, the members were entitled to certain proportions of the orders received by the pool as a whole. A member invoicing more than his proportion of orders had to pay 10s. per ton on the excess, to the Pool Account which was distributed among those members who had invoiced less than their proportions. Held, that the net payments made by the Company to the Association in excess of those received from the Association by the Company were an admissible deduction for the purpose of arriving at the Company's assessable profits.

Per Bray, J.—" The trade includes not only the manufacture but the selling; and indeed the selling is very often the most important part; the whole of the profits depends upon the price. What does the selling consist of? It consists of two things: the finding of the customer and making a bargain with the customer as to the price, the object being, of course, to get the highest possible price. I do not think this arrangement that is made between the three firms has anything to do with finding the customer. I think it all relates to the fixing of the price, and it is obvious that if the appellants can make an arrangement with their competitors that their competitors will not sell below a certain price, they will be able, or may be able at all events, to get that price or a higher price for their goods. That is part of the business, part of the trade they are carrying on, to get the highest price they can for their goods" Guest, Keen and Nettlefolds, Ltd. v. Fowler, 5 Tax Cases 511; (1910) 1 K.B. 713.

Payments of two kinds were made by a member firm to a trade protection association of boiler makers (formed for keeping up prices): (a) to extinguish a possible competitor; and (b) to bring into the association another competitor; and both payments were held to be of a capital nature, following, Atherton's case, 10 Tax Cases 155. Even if the advantage secured is "unpalpable, intangible and incalculable" and is not represented by any special asset, the expenditure is still of a capital nature if it is intended to secure an enduring advantage; and even if the result was unsuccessful, it would still be capital expenditure, since productivity is not an essential element in such expenditure, (cf. Southwell v. Sackville Bros., 4 Tax Cases 430). In Noble v. Mitchell, 11 Tax Cases 372, the problem was one of getting rid of a bad servant which is an ordinary incident in a business, while in this case the problem was one of extinguishing or conciliating competitors which was not such an incident, Collins v. Joseph Adamson & Co., 16 A.T.C. 355 (K.B.D.).

A Trade Association purchased on behalf of its members certain goods which it sold to them at a profit. The 'profit' was held at the credit of the common fund of the Association. The question arose in assessing one of the member companies whether the full cost of the goods purchased by it from the Association should be debited in its accounts or only the nett cost after deducting the Company's share of profit in the Association. Held, that inasmuch as the profit retained by the Association in the common fund could not be considered to belong to individual members until actually distributed the full cost of the goods should be debited in the member company's accounts. Charles Clifford and Son v. Puttick, 14 Tax Cases 189.

See, however, Westcombe v. Hadnock quarries, 16 Tax Cases 137, in which a rebate received on railway freight was deducted from the freight and only the net freight allowed to be treated as expenditure.

(3) Where any building, machinery, plant or furniture in respect of which any allowance is due under clause (iv), clause (v), clause (vi) or clause (vii) of sub-section (2) is not wholly used for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation, the allowance shall be restricted to the fair proportional part of the amount which would be allowable if such building, machinery, plant or furniture was wholly so used.

Notes.—This sub-section, inserted in 1939, makes it clear that building, machinery, etc., used only partly for the business, etc., under taxation is entitled to a proportion of the allowances under clauses (iv) to (vii) of sub-section (2). What is "a fair proportional part" must obviously be a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case. See also notes under clauses (iv) to (vii) of sub-section (2).

It was held in Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Dalmia Cement Co., 1945 I.T.R. 415 and Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, v. Motors and General Stores, 1946 I.T.R. 31, that 'not wholly used' in this sub-section does not refer to time but to the purpose; consequently even if the machinery is idle for a part of the year (following Viswanath Bhaskar Sathe v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 621) depreciation allowance for the whole year is admissible. Similarly, where an assessee ceases to own the assets in the middle of a year, he is entitled to allowance for the whole year, Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. S. K. Sahana & Sons, 1946 I.T.R. 106.

(4) Nothing in clause (ix) or clause (xii) of sub-section (2) shall be deemed to authorise the allowance of any sum paid on account of any cess, rate or tax levied on the profits or gains of any business, profession or vocation or assessed at a proportion of or otherwise on the basis of any such profits or gains; and nothing in clause (xii) of sub-section (2) shall be deemed to authorise—

(a) any allowance in respect of a payment which is chargeable under the head 'Salaries' if it is payable without British India and tax has not been paid thereon nor deducted therefrom under section 18; or

(b) any allowance in respect of any payment by way of interest, salary, commission or remuneration made by a firm to any partner of the firm; or

(c) any allowance in respect of a payment to a provident or other fund established for the benefit of employees unless the employer has made effective arrangements to secure that tax shall be deducted at source from any payments made from the fund which are taxable under the head 'Salaries'.

History.—This sub-section, which was inserted in 1939 incorporates the proviso to old sub-section (2) and further prohibits three specific deductions, viz.:

(a) salaries payable without British India unless tax has been deducted at source;

(b) payments to partners of firms; and

(c) payments to employees' provident funds unless effective arrangements have been made to deduct tax at source.

Consequent on the amendments in 1946, the references to clause (xii) should read as references to clause (xv).

Cesses and taxes on income.—See notes under clause (ix) of sub-section (2). If a Provincial Government levies such a tax, whether rightly or wrongly, no deduction can be claimed on that account in respect of income-tax; and if the assessee feels that the levy by the Provincial Government is wrong, he should seek relief from that Government and not by deduction of the tax from the taxable income for income-tax purchases. See Province of Bihar v. Dalip Narayan Singh, 1945 I.T.R. 37.

Excess Profits Tax.—Section 12 of the Excess Profits Tax Act 1940 provides that Excess Profits Tax shall be deducted from taxable profits for the purpose of income-tax and super-tax. It would have been more appropriate if this provision had been included in the Income-tax Act.

Foreign taxes.—As to prohibition of deduction of such taxes from total income, see sections 49, 49-A, and 49-D.

Payments abroad.—Clause (iii) of sub-section (2) and clause (a) taken together prohibit the deduction of certain items which are chargeable under sections 4 and 42 in the hands of the recipient.

Cases of royalties, rent or guarantee for overdraft may not sometimes be covered by section 42 and so long as these items are not chargeable under section 4, allowances of the items must be permitted if they satisfy the other conditions.

Payments to partners.—It should be noted that the bar against deduction of payments to partners of firms does not apply to similar payments, if any, to members of other associations of persons. Such payments are admissible deductions if bona fide and reasonable. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Jainaram Jagannath, 1945 I.T.R. 410.

'Effective arrangements'.—The Income-tax authorities are evidently to be the judges of the effectiveness of the arrangements. Apparently, however, they should exercise their judgment with reference to the fund as a whole and not with reference to each item of payment, though it would be open to them with reference to varying circumstances from time to time to change their opinion in regard to the fund as a whole. At the same time, it would seem that the question is a mixed one of law and fact, and that the opinion of the Income-tax authorities can be challenged before the High Court.

Provident or other fund.—'Other' must be read ejusdem generis, so as to include similar funds though not called by that name.

As regards payments from these funds, see explanation to section 7 (1).

(5) In sub-section (2), "paid" means actually paid or incurred according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the profits or gains are computed under this section;

History.—The above part of the sub-section comes on from 1922; the rest of the sub-section which defines 'plant' and 'written down value' has been set out under clause (vi) of sub-section (2) and discussed in connection with clauses (iv) to (vii) of that sub-section.

References.—See section 13 and notes thereunder as to methods of accounting; see also notes under sub-section (1) of section 10.

(6) A trade, professional or similar association performing specific services for its members for remuneration definitely related to those services shall be deemed for the purposes of this section to carry on business in respect of those services, and the profits and gains therefrom shall be liable to tax accordingly.

History.—This sub-section was inserted in 1939. Its object is to make liable to tax the profits of a trade, professional or similar association performing services for its members for remuneration. The rulings referred to in the notes under clause (xv) of sub-section (2) deal with the deductibility of payments to trade associations from a member's taxable profits, while this sub-section deals with the taxability of the association.

'Or similar'.—These words clearly exclude social clubs, which are not 'similar' to trade or professional associations.

Specific services.—The services should be (1) specific and (2) for remuneration definitely related to them; then to the extent of these services, the association will be deemed to carry on business.

For the purposes of this section.—It will be seen that section 2 (6-C) refers to profits of a mutual insurance association but not to this sub-section.

Section 10 being a rule of computation, and not a charging section, a more appropriate place for sub-section (6) would have been section 2 (definitions) or section 3 (charge to tax).

See, however, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Cornish Mutual Assurance Co., (1926) A.C. 281; 12 Tax Cases 841 (H.L.), according to which business may be carried on by a mutual concern without there being any income. If so, the fact that the earlier part of the sub-section deems business to be carried on will not in itself avail the Crown unless the latter part is read as equivalent to "shall be deemed to be income and liable to tax accordingly." Section 6, however, to which the Privy Council on one occasion referred as the charging section (Barua case 57 I.A. 228) refers to 'business' and it may therefore be held that if something is deemed to be 'business', income therefrom is necessarily taxable unless expressly exempted under section 4 (3) or some other provision.

It will thus be seen that to the extent that this sub-section aims at taxing what is essentially not of a mutual nature ('specific services, etc.'), it is unnecessary, while in attempting to tax what is mutual, it gives rise to certain difficulties.

(7) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in section 8, 9, 10, 12 or 18, the profits and gains of any business of insurance and the tax payable thereon shall be computed in accordance with the rules contained in the Schedule to this Act.

THE SCHEDULE.

RULES FOR THE COMPUTATION OF THE PROFITS AND GAINS OF INSURANCE BUSINESS.

1. In the case of any person who carries on, or at any time in the preceding year carried on, life insurance business, the profits and gains of such person from that business shall be computed separately from his income, profits or gains from any other business.

2. The profits and gains of life insurance business shall be taken to be either—

(a) the gross external incomings of the preceding year from that business less the management expenses of that year, or

(b) the annual average of the surplus arrived at by adjusting the surplus or deficit disclosed by the actuarial valuation made for the last inter-valuation period ending before the year for which the assessment is to be made, so as to exclude from it any surplus or deficit included therein which was made in any earlier inter-valuation period and any expenditure other than expenditure which may under the provisions of section 10 of this Act be allowed for in computing the profits and gains of a business; whichever is the greater:

Provided that the amount to be allowed as management expenses shall not exceed—

(a) $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the premiums received during the preceding year in respect of single premium life insurance policies, plus

(b) in respect of the first year's premiums received in respect of other life insurance policies for which the number of annual premiums payable is less than twelve, or for which the number of years during which premiums are payable is less than twelve, for each such premium or each such year $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of such first year's premiums received during the preceding year, plus

(c) 90 per cent. of the first year's premiums received during the preceding year in respect of all other life insurance policies plus

(d) 12 per cent. of all renewal premiums received during the preceding year.

3. In computing the surplus for the purpose of rule 2,—

(a) one-half of the amounts paid to or reserved for or expended on behalf of policy-holders shall be allowed as a deduction:

Provided that in the first such computation made under this rule of any such surplus no account shall be taken of any such amounts to the extent to which they are paid out of or in respect of any surplus brought forward from a previous interval-valuation period:

Provided further that if any amount so reserved for policy-holders ceases to be so reserved, and is not paid to or expended on behalf of policy-holders, one-half of such amount, if it has been previously allowed as a deduction, shall be treated as part of the surplus for the period in which the said amount ceased to be so reserved;

(b) any amount either written off or reserved in the accounts or through the actuarial valuation balance-sheet to meet depreciation of or loss on the realisation of securities or other assets, shall be allowed as a deduction, and any sums taken credit for in the accounts or actuarial valuation balance-sheet on account of appreciation of or gains on the realisation of the securities or other assets shall be included in the surplus:

Provided that if upon investigation it appears to the Income-tax Officer after consultation with the Superintendent of Insurance that, having due regard to the necessity for making reasonable provision for bonuses to participating policy-holders and for contingencies, the rate of interest or other factor employed in determining the liability in respect of outstanding policies is materially inconsistent with the valuation of securities and other assets so as artificially to reduce the surplus, such adjustment shall be made to the allowance for depreciation of, or to the amount to be included in the surplus in respect of appreciation of, such securities and other assets, as shall increase the surplus for the purposes of these rules to a figure which is fair and just;

(c) interest received in respect of any securities of the Central Government which have been issued or declared to be income-tax free shall not be excluded but the whole amount of such interest received during the inter-valuation period shall be exempt from income-tax under the second proviso to section 8 though not from super-tax.

4. Where for any year an assessment is made in accordance with the annual average of a surplus disclosed by a valuation for an inter-valuation period exceeding twelve months, then, in computing the tax payable for that year, credit shall not be given in accordance with sub-section (5) of section 18 for the tax paid in the preceding year, but credit shall be given for the annual average of the Income-tax paid by deduction at source from interest on securities or otherwise during such period.

5. For the purposes of these rules—

(i) “preceding year” means that year for which annual accounts are required to be prepared under the Insurance Act, 1938, immediately preceding the year for which the assessment is to be made or until the commencement of the Insurance Act, 1938, the previous year as defined in section 2 of this Act;

(ii) “gross external incomings” means the full amount of incomings from interest, dividends, fines and fees and all other incomings from whatever source derived (except premiums received from policy-holders and interest and dividends on any annuity fund) and includes also profits from reversions and on the sale or the granting of annuities, but excludes profits on the realisation of securities or other assets:

Provided that incomings, including the annual value of the property occupied by the assessee, which but for the provisions of sub-section (7) of section 10 would have been assessable under section 9 shall be computed upon the basis laid down in the last named section, and that there shall be allowed from such gross incomings such deductions as are permissible under that section;

(iii) "management expenses" means the full amount of expenses (including commissions) incurred exclusively in the management of the business of life insurance, and in the case of a company carrying on other classes of business as well as the business of life insurance in addition thereto a fair proportion of the expenses incurred in the general management of the whole business. Bonuses or other sums paid to or reserved on behalf of policy-holders, depreciation of, and losses on the realisation of, securities or other assets and any expenditure other than expenditure which may under the provisions of section 10 of this Act be allowed for in computing the profits and gains of a business are not management expenses for the purposes of these rules;

(iv) "life insurance business" means life insurance business as defined in clause (11) of section 2 of the Insurance Act, 1938;

(v) "securities" includes stocks and shares.

6. The profits and gains of any business of insurance other than life insurance shall be taken to be the balance of the profits disclosed by the annual accounts, copies of which are required under the Insurance Act, 1938, to be furnished to the Superintendent of Insurance, after adjusting such balance so as to exclude from it any expenditure other than expenditure which may under the provisions of section 10 of this Act be allowed for in computing the profits and gains of a business. Profits and losses on the realisation of investments, and depreciation and appreciation of the value of investments shall be dealt with as provided in rule 3 for the business of life insurance.

7. The profits and gains of companies carrying on dividing society or assessment business shall be taken to be 15 per cent. of the premium income of the previous year, or in the case of non-resident companies 15 per cent. of the British Indian premium income of the previous year.

8. The profits and gains of the British Indian branches of an insurance company not resident in British India, in the absence of more reliable data, may be deemed to be the proportion of the total world income of the company corresponding to the proportion which its British Indian premium income bears to its total premium income. For the purpose of this rule, the total world income of life insurance companies not resident in British India whose profits are periodically ascertained by actuarial valuation shall be computed in the manner laid down in these rules for the computation of the profits and gains of life insurance business carried on in British India.

9. These rules apply to the assessment of the profits of any business of insurance carried on by a mutual insurance association.

History.—This sub-section and its schedule which were both inserted in 1939 substantially modify, and include in the Act itself, provisions which were formerly contained in Rules made under section 59. Several minor changes have been made since 1939. The schedule covers all kinds of insurance business.

Scope.—The schedule applies only in so far as it overrides the general provisions of the Act and the latter apply in full vigour to profits from insurance in so far as there is nothing to the contrary in the schedule.

Rules 1 to 5 deal with life insurance, Rule 6 with all other insurance (except "dividing" or "assessment"), Rule 7 with 'dividing' and 'assessment,' Rule 8 with non-resident concerns both life and non-life and Rule 9 with mutual insurance both life and non-life.

As regards the limited exemption from tax to certain Provident Insurance Societies dating on from before 1924, see notes under section 4 (3) (iv).

Rule 1.—'Preceding year'—See Rule 5 (i).

'Life Insurance business'—See Rule 5 (iv).

'Person', i.e., as defined in the General Clauses Act.

Rule 2.—(a) "Gross external incomings"—See Rule 5 (ii); 'management expenses'—See Rule 5 (iii).

(b) A part of this rule counteracts the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in In re Himalaya Assurance Co., Ltd., 1938 I.T.R. 277 (confirmed by the Privy Council, 1939 I.T.R. 402) which is of little interest now. The rest of the rule corresponds to old Rules 25 and 26, but there is a material change—See Rule 3—as to deduction of half the profits paid to or reserved for policy-holders.

The words "last inter-valuation period ending before the year for which assessment is to be made" avoid the difficulty which arose with reference to "the last preceding valuation" in the Andhra Insurance Case, 1937 I.T.R. 697.

Proviso.—(a) "Premiums" are evidently gross premiums.

If the number of years is twelve, the case will fall under (c).

Premia payable throughout life will presumably be considered as payable for not less than twelve years.

(c) and (d) These two clauses cover all cases in which the number of annual premia is twelve or more or premia are payable throughout life.

Annuity policies are evidently to be dealt with on the same footing as ordinary insurance policies, i.e., if the consideration is paid in lump sum as a single premium policy; if payable for less than twelve years, under clause (b), otherwise under clause (c) or (d).

In so far as annuity, capital redemption or reversion business involves transactions contingent on human life, they would be of the nature of 'life' insurance; otherwise the profits therefrom should be dealt with under Rule 6 dealing with other insurance, or under the other sub-sections of section 10.

Rule 3.—(a) "Paid to" "Reserved for" and "Expended on behalf of" cover the different possibilities of disposal.

The first proviso is consequential on the exclusion in Rule 2 of carry forwards from earlier periods.

The second proviso cancels the concession in the main part of this clause when the conditions cease to be operative.

(b) The main part of this clause corresponds to old Rule 30.

A "figure which is fair and just" would be a question of fact, and it would be open to the Court to examine whether there are materials for the Income-tax Officer's finding. It would therefore be necessary for him to disclose in his order the nature and result of his consultation with the Superintendent of Insurance. The responsibility for the estimate however would be primarily that of the Income-tax Officer.

(c) This clause incorporates the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in In re North British and Mercantile Insurance Company, Limited, 1937 I.T.R. 349 and in In re Phoenix Insurance Co., 1937 I.T.R. 397.

Rule 4.—This rule applies only when assessment is made on basis (b) of Rule 2, not when made on basis (a) of that Rule or when the intervalation period does not exceed twelve months. In the latter events the case is covered by the provisions of the Act, i.e., by sections 18 (5) and 48.

This Rule renders obsolete a part of the decision in In re North British and Mercantile Insurance Co., supra Rule 5.—(i) This rule gets over the difficulties that arose with reference to "preceding valuation" under old Rule 25—See Andhra Insurance Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1937 I.T.R. 697.

(ii) Gross external incomings include all items (not of a capital nature) including profits from reversions and annuities, but excepting (a) premia received from policy-holders, (b) interest and dividends on annuity funds and (c) profits on realisation of securities or other assets (which expression under clause (v) includes also stocks and shares). Losses on realisation of securities or other assets are evidently also to be excluded, i.e., not deducted.

Property.—It will be noted that the notional value of an assessee's property including that occupied by him is to be taxed on the basis of section 9; therefore the annual value of the part of the property occupied for the assessee's business will not be taxed, and consequently no deduction is to be made of the notional rent for the property occupied by him for the business; see definition of "management expenses" in clause (iii).

(iii) Management expenses.—Barring the prohibited items, all items of a revenue nature incurred exclusively for the business including a share of 'overheads' incurred in composite business are allowable. Items that cannot be allowed under section (2) of section 10 cannot be allowed here.

(iv) The definition in the Insurance Act (IV of 1938) is as follows:—

"Life insurance business" includes annuity business, that is to say, the business of effecting contracts of insurance for the granting of annuities on human life, and if so provided in the contract of insurance, disability and double indemnity accident benefits.

(v) See notes under section 8 as to the meaning of the word "securities". In addition to this meaning, for the purpose of these Rules, the word includes stocks and shares.

Rule 6.—This Rule corresponds to old Rules 28 and 29. The differences are as follows:—

(a) The annual accounts submitted to the Superintendent of Insurance are now to be taken as the starting point; and can be departed from only to the extent that items not admissible under section 10 can be added back. Profits and losses from fluctuations in the value of investments have to be consistently treated, the one being taken into account if the other is.

(b) Old Rule 29 left it to the assessee to decide the proportion to be taken to reserve. No express provision has now been made for amounts taken to reserve, evidently in the belief that such provision is not necessary, the deductions being admissible on the authority of Sun Life Insurance Co. v. Clark, 6 Tax Cases 59 (H.L.). It would appear at first sight that to the extent that the items validly appear in the annual accounts submitted to the Superintendent and are not questioned by the latter, they are apparently allowable, but the more correct view would seem to be that the estimation of proper allocation to reserves is a question of fact to be determined by the Income-tax Officer on evidence, including, if necessary, the opinion of the Superintendent of Insurance.

The following executive instructions are found in the Income-tax Manual:—"In dealing with non-life insurance business (fire, marine, motor car, burglary, etc.) a fair and proper reserve for unexpired risks are to be allowed with proper safeguard to prevent manipulation of accounts. And where, as not infrequently occurs, the reserve is divided into two parts the first of which is intended to cover normal unexpired risks and is generally reckoned at a fixed percentage of the premiums and the second is intended to cover exceptional losses from widespread calamities, such a reserve may also be allowed. The following points have to be borne in mind:—

(1) All sums on account of unexpired risks, which a company wishes to have treated as expenditure for income-tax or super-tax purposes, must actually be credited to a fund in the accounts of the company;

(2) They must also be specifically appropriated to meet liabilities under existing contracts; and

(3) The contracts must be with policy-holders.

This rule gives no clear indication as to whether the profits and gains are to be based with reference to the "preceding year" as defined in Rule 5 (i) or with reference to the "previous year" as defined in section 2 (11).

Rule 7.—Same as old Rule 31.

It should be observed that, while under Rule 5 (i) the expression "preceding year" has been specially defined, Rule 7 refers to the "previous year," which has to be construed with reference to section 2 (11).

"Dividing society" obviously refers to dividing insurance societies in which the sum payable as benefit is not fixed beforehand but depends on the division of actual results during a period of account, Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Central Popular Assurance Co., Ltd., 1939 I.T.R. 293.

The following note is from the Income-tax Manual:—

"Companies carrying on Dividing Society or assessment business are in a different position from these of insurance companies proper in that they have not to build up funds similar to the Life assurance fund of ordinary Life assurance business, and their profits are not ordinarily ascertainable by actuarial valuations. Some arbitrary method of determining the taxable income companies transacting these kinds of business has been fixed and under Rule 7 of this Schedule this is done by taking 15 per cent. of the premium income in the 'previous year'."

Rule 8.—Corresponds to old Rule 35, the oversight, in the old rule, of the use of the word 'Indian' instead of the word 'British India,' having been corrected. It was unsuccessfully contended by the Crown in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Great Eastern Life Insurance Co., 1945 I.T.R. 141, that Rule 2 was the paramount rule and that Rule 8 could be applied only if there were no data to enable an assessment under Rule 2. Rules 1 to 6, it will be noted, deal with methods of computation, while Rules 7 to 9 deal with status and applies to particular classes of assessee, viz., Rule 7 to companies, Rule 8 to branches of non-resident companies and Rule 9 to mutual associations. Rule 8 therefore overrides Rule 2, et seq; and the more 'reliable data' referred to in Rule 8 is the data necessary to assess the profits and gains of a branch business by some recognised business methods appropriate to the case, e.g., separate actuarial statement for the Indian business or the consolidated statement of the Indian Fund.

It is a question of fact whether other data are more reliable or Rule 8 should be applied. The Income-tax Officer should apply Rule 8 only if other more reliable data are not available. He cannot however apply Rule 8 to one or more items in the profit and loss account and resort to other data in respect of the remaining items, Motor Union Insurance Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 272.

This rule cannot be applied for the first time by the Appellate Tribunal of its own motion without any appeal from the Commissioner or the assessee, (ibid.)

Rule 9.—This should be read along with section 2 (6-C) which deems such profits of mutual concerns to be income. In 1940 the word 'association' was substituted for 'company'.

Decisions in India under old rules.—All the Indian rulings referred to below were given under the pre-1939 law.

Even though the rules may have statutory authority, they are governed by the provisions in the statute itself; and a privilege or exemption conferred by the Act cannot be ignored, irrespective of the part of the Act under which tax is assessed. (The rules are now part of the statute itself.) So, when an assessment is made under Rule 25 (or Rule 35 where it applies) the company is entitled to credit under section 18 (5) for the tax deducted on securities at source; and also entitled to deduct from its assessable income interest on tax-free securities, In re North British and Mercantile Insurance Co., 1937 I.T.R. 349 (Cal.). (Present Rule 3 (c) and Rule 4 have partly codified this ruling, and partly modified it.) Further where Rule 35 (now Rule 8) applies, the company can deduct from its taxable income the same proportion of its income from tax-free securities (free under section 8) as the Indian premia bear to the world premia, In re Phoenix Insurance Co., 1937 I.T.R. 397 (Cal.). In a case under Rule 35, Manufacturers' Life Insurance Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1938 I.T.R. 321, the Bombay High Court however while doubting the correctness of the decision in the North British and Mercantile case, 1937 I.T.R. 349 (Cal.), followed it for the sake of uniformity and excluded from the world income interest on tax-free securities. The average annual profits should be calculated with reference to the particular period of valuation by itself and without reference to the unappropriated surplus or unadjusted deficiency brought forward from previous periods, In re Himalaya Assurance Co., 1938 I.T.R. 227 (Cal.). (This has been nullified by present Rule 2 (b).)

In applying Rule 35 (now Rule 8) in ascertaining the world income you should include not merely the Indian income-tax but all income-tax payable by the company, Manufacturers' Life Insurance Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1938 I.T.R. 321.

The word 'may' in Rule 30 [corresponding to new Rule 3 (b)] was construed to give the option to the assessee and not to the Income-tax Officer. The question does not arise now, the corresponding word being 'shall'. There is also nothing in it to compel an assessee, who has exercised the option, to bring back, in a later year, when assets appreciate, sums properly set aside to credit of Reserve funds or written off to cover depreciation in the earlier year, In re Western India Life Insurance Co., 1938 I.T.R. 44. While the total income of a non-resident life insurance company is to be worked out under Rule 25 (corresponding to Rules 1 to 5 now), the proportion locally attributable is to be worked out, not with reference to the premium income of the period to which the actuarial valuation relates, but to the premium income of the 'previous year', Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Lakshmi Insurance Co., 1941 I.T.R. 517.

On the following grounds, viz., (a) the law distinguishes chargeability to tax and assessability, the latter requiring machinery which is absent until the first actuarial valuation has been made, and (b) having made a mandatory rule under section 59, the Crown cannot use the ordinary provisions of the Act as an alternative, it was held by the Lahore High Court that no assessment can be made on an insurance company until the first valuation has been made, Lakshmi Insurance Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 12 Lah. 757; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 441; 5 I.T.C. 24. According to the Rangoon High Court, however, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Lakshmi Insurance Co., 1941 I.T.R. 517. the company would not be immune from tax till its first valuation has been made. Till then, the return of income made by the company must necessarily be incomplete, and the Income-tax Officer would doubtless extend the time for the delivery of such returns under the proviso to section 22 till the first valuation has been made.

The position under the present law is as follows: Under Rule 1 the assessee is taxable on the higher of the two alternatives set out in it. Till an actuarial valuation is made, only one basis is operative; and when the valuation has been made, the assessee, if in time, can claim refund under section 48.

The assessment of the company must, however, be completed under section 34, within the time limit referred to there.

The 'last preceding valuation' in Rule 25 refers to the last valuation made before the date of the return and not to the valuation relating to the last accounting period ending before the financial year of assessment, Andhra Insurance Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1937 I.T.R. 697. Present Rule 2 (b) is clear on this point.

Since the Income-tax Officer can resort to Rule 35 (now Rule 8) only in the absence of more reliable data, it follows that: (a) the data supplied by the assessee should be examined; and (b) the reliability of the data should be considered with reference to section 13. A mere return of British Indian income with a revenue account and a balance sheet, even if coupled with the actuarial valuation of the whole business, does not give more reliable data than the method laid down in Rule 35. The interest on investments, though an element in the ascertainment of profits, is not in itself a reliable data for such ascertainment, and the periodical actuarial valuation is the most reliable method of computation in the case of life insurance companies, National Mutual Life Association of Australasia v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1936 I.T.R. 44 (P.C.).

Which of two (or more) sets of data is more (or most) reliable is a question of law. A Profit and Loss Account in the form of the usual Revenue Account of a Life Insurance Company, even if giving actuarial estimates of the liabilities at the beginning and end of the year but without giving details of the Insurance Fund, is not more reliable data than the formula in Rule 35, Manufacturers' Life Insurance Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1938 I.T.R. 321.

The word 'data' in Rule 35 (now Rule 8) refers to facts and materials from which conclusions have to be drawn, and not to the assumptions from which inferences are to be drawn. Where a non-resident life insurance company has a separate actuarial valuation for its British Indian business, even if any of the items in the accounts be wrong, the Income-tax Officer has ample materials before him on which to rest an assessment; and he is not justified in resorting to an assessment on the basis of proportion of premium income, In re Royal Insurance Co., 1941 I.T.R. 589 (Cal.).

Deductibility of bonuses in India.—The Privy Council who followed the Last case and held that bonuses cannot be deducted in ascertaining actuarially the profits of an insurance company, said that even if the Last case was not available as a precedent, their own ruling in the Pondicherry Railway case, 54 Mad. 691, was decisive of this case, the profits allotted to policy-holders standing on the same footing as the half of the profits of the railway company payable to the French Colony, Bharat Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 46; 1934 I.T.R. 63. The law was changed radically in 1939, and under Rule 2 now alternative bases are allowed and under one of them, Rule 3 allows half the bonus to be deducted.

In England.—The history has been as follows:

The position regarding bonuses given to policy-holders was considered in Last v. London Assurance Corporation, 2 Tax Cases 100; 16 App. Cas. 438, the leading case on the subject. The London Assurance Corporation was a Proprietary life office in which a proportion of the life "profits" was allocated to the participating policy-holders. The following questions arose, viz.: (1) whether the bonuses in question were 'profits' at all, i.e., whether it was not a case of setting aside a necessary expense of making the income; (2) whether the whole expenses were deductible from the profits; (3) how the life 'profits' were to be determined; and (4) whether the business should be assessed as a whole, i.e., including participating and non-participating policies. The Commissioners held (1) that the bonuses were not 'profits'; (2) that the whole expenses should be deducted; (3) that the 'profits' should be ascertained 'actuarially' (the law in the United Kingdom did not contain any special rules for the ascertainment of 'profits' of Life Assurance Companies as the law in India now does); and (4) that the business should be assessed as a whole and not in parts. The case which eventually went up to the House of Lords elicited considerable difference of opinion, and was finally decided in favour of the Crown, the bonuses being considered to be 'profits', i.e., the grant of bonuses being considered to be appropriation of profits and not a necessary expenditure for earning the profits.

This decision was followed in Equitable Life Assurance Society of United States v. Bishop, 4 Tax Cases 147; (1900) 1 Q.B. 177.

The London Assurance case, 2 Tax Cases 100, was the subject of discussion again when the Styles v. New York Life Assurance Co., 2 Tax Cases 460 (cited under section 3) was decided. In this case, again, which went up to the House of Lords, there was a sharp difference of opinion as to whether the case was distinguishable at all from the London Assurance case. The majority in the House of Lords distinguished the case, and in doing so, reaffirmed the London Assurance decision. The point of the distinction was that the New York company was 'mutual' whereas the London one was proprietary.

The London Assurance decision, however, was not of much consequence to Insurance Companies in the United Kingdom. As under the United Kingdom law the Crown has the option to tax either the interest on investments (less expenses of management) or the profits and in this respect Insurance Companies stand in the same position as other businesses—the decision did not place the Crown at any real advantage except in respect of "Industrial" companies. In ordinary Life Insurance Companies the 'profits', i.e., actuarially determined, are not, except during the infancy of the companies, likely to be greater than the interest on investments. On the other hand, in Insurance Companies operating amongst the poorer classes, the cost of collection and management is quite heavy; and the 'profits' of the business are taxed. On the recommendation of the Royal Commission of 1920, the law was altered in 1923 in order to assist these 'Industrial' companies; and bonuses allocated to policy-holders are by statute now deducted from the profits. The new arrangement does not, in practice, affect the majority of the regular Insurance Companies, i.e., those not doing 'Industrial' business.

The decisions in the United Kingdom as to what do or do not constitute 'expenses of management' in respect of which a repayment of tax is allowed when the company is taxed on the interest on investments and not on its actuarial profits furnish no guidance in interpreting the Indian law. Anyway, clause (1-a) of present Rule 5 clearly defines 'management expenses'.

United Kingdom rulings—Profits—How computed.—A Company carried on the business of fire insurance and life insurance. Held, (1) that the net profits of the two branches were assessable as one undivided income, and (2) in the life branch, the excess of the receipts of any year over the payments and expenses of that year, affords no criterion of the amount of profit. This can only be ascertained by actuarial calculation.

Per Inglis, L.P.—" Life policies are contracts of most variable endurance, and the premiums are in many cases not annual payments. The contracts may endure for the policy-holder's life, or for a certain number of years stated, or till the holder attains a certain age; and the company may be bound on the expiry of a fixed number of years, or on the attainment of a certain age by the policy-holder, either to pay a lump sum or an annuity for the remainder of the policy-holder's life. The premiums paid for such insurance may be paid all in one sum or by instalments within a fixed number of years, or annually during the holder's life, or during the subsistence of his policy. The premiums, therefore, do in no sense represent the annual profits and gains of the company. In like manner, the amount of claims in one year arising on the death of persons insured, or as a deduction from the company's receipts for the year cannot afford any criterion for the ascertainment of profits. A recently established company will receive a large amount of premiums, and have few or no claims to meet. The profits and gains can be ascertained only by actuarial calculations, and this actuarial calculation may be obtained by taking the result of the quinquennial investigation prescribed by statute, or the periodical investigation in use in companies established before the statute, or by an investigation covering the three years prescribed by Schedule D of the Income-tax Acts", Scottish Union and National Insurance Company v. Smiles, 2 Tax Cases 551; 26 Sc.L.R. 330.

Annuities.—A life insurance society in the course of its business sold annuities, covenanting that its capital stock, funds, and property shall be liable in respect of the payment of such annuities. Held, unanimously reversing the decisions of the Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal, that the annuities were not payable out of profits and gains of the society, and that the amount of the annuities paid may be taken into account as a disbursement in computing the taxable profits.

Per Halsbury, L. C.—"You can no more refuse to take that cost (the payment of annuities) into your consideration, when ascertaining the balance of profits and gains than you could the cost of the coals or the corn to the coal merchant and to the corn merchant, in ascertaining what are the profits from his trade", Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Styles, 3 Tax Cases 185; (1892) A.C. 309.

This point, however, will not arise under the Indian law, for there is no prohibition against the deduction of annuities as in the United Kingdom.

Insurance—Fire—Reserves.—In the Imperial Fire Insurance Company v. William Wilson, 1 Tax Cases 71; 35 L.T. 271, it was held that in computing the profits of a Fire Insurance Company, no deduction could be made from profits on account of "unearned premiums".

A Company carrying on the business of fire insurance, used to carry forward annually, in its published accounts, as a reserve, 40 per cent. of the yearly premium receipts, representing estimated losses on unexpired risks, and claimed to be assessed on this basis. It was found, as a fact, by the Commissioners that 40 per cent. was a reasonable and proper allowance, and the Company's claim was admitted. The Crown contended that the Company was not legally entitled to the allowance. Held, that there is no rule of law as to the admissibility of an allowance for unexpired risks in estimating profits, but the question is one to be decided by reference to the facts in each case; and that, on the facts found in this case, the allowance claimed was a proper allowance to be made. The previous cases were reviewed, and it was held that they laid down no principle of law though in many cases the Courts (including the House of Lords in General Accident, etc., Co. v. M'Gowan, 5 Tax Cases 308; (1908) A.C. 207) had declined to interfere, when the Commissioners had refused to allow any deduction for unexpired risks.

Per Lord Alverstone.—"The question of what are profits or gains within the meaning of the Income-tax Act, is prima facie a question of fact, and if the cases from The Imperial Life Insurance Company v. Wilson, 35 L.T. 271; 1 Tax Cases 71 in the year 1876, down to The General Accident Insurance Company v. M'Gowan, 5 Tax Cases 308; (1908) A.C. 207 in the year 1908, be examined, it will be found that in every case the Courts have treated the question as one of fact and have merely decided whether upon the facts before them, the claim of the tax-payer to make a deduction in a particular way, was justified."

Per Loreburn, L.C.—"I am equally anxious that your Lordships should not be supposed to have laid down that the method applied by the Commissioners in the present case has any universal application. If the Crown wishes in any future instance to dispute it, they can do so by evidence, and it is not to be presumed that it is either right or wrong. A rule of thumb may be very desirable, but cannot be substituted for the only Rule of Law that I know of, viz., that the true gains are to be ascertained as nearly as it can be done. There is no rule of law as to the proper way of making an estimate. There is no way of estimating which is right or wrong in itself. It is a question of fact and figure whether the way of making the estimate in any case is the best way for that case."

Per Lord Haldane.—"It is plain that the question of what is or is not profit or gain must primarily be one of fact, and of fact to be ascertained by the tests applied in ordinary business. Questions of law can only arise when (as was not the case here) some express statutory direction applies, and excludes ordinary commercial practice, or where, by reason of its being impracticable to ascertain the facts sufficiently, some presumption has to be invoked to fill the gap," The Sun Insurance Office v. Clark, 6 Tax Cases 59.

12. (1) The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head "Income from other sources" in respect of income, profits and gains of every kind which may be included in his total income (if not included under any of the preceding heads).

Other sources.

(2) Such income, profits and gains shall be computed after making allowance for any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of making or earning such income, profits or gains, provided that no allowance shall be made on account of—

(a) any personal expenses of the assessee, or

(b) any interest chargeable under this Act which is payable without British India, not being interest on a loan issued for public subscription before the 1st day of April, 1938, or not being interest on which tax has been paid or from which tax has been deducted under section 18, or

(c) any payment which is chargeable under the head 'Salaries', if it is payable without British India and the tax has not been paid thereon nor deducted therefrom under section 18.

(3) Where an assessee lets on hire machinery, plant or furniture belonging to him, he shall be entitled to allowances in accordance with the provisions of clauses (iv), (v), (vi) and (vii) of sub-section (2) of section 10.

(4) Where an assessee lets on hire machinery, plant or furniture belonging to him and also buildings, and the letting of the buildings is inseparable from the letting of the said machinery, plant or furniture, he shall be entitled to allowances in accordance with the provisions of clauses (v), (vi) and (vii) of sub-section (2) of section 10 in respect of such buildings.

History.—In the 1886 Act, there was no similar provision. The section first appeared in 1918 and was amended in 1922 and again in 1939.

The following changes were made in 1939: In sub-section (1) the words "income from" were put in before "other source", and the words "which may be included in his total income" for "and from every source to which the Act applies"; in sub-section (2) items (b) and (c) were added. Sub-section (3) was also added. Sub-section (4) was added in 1941.

The changes in sub-section (1) which are primarily drafting improvements are consequential on the changes in sections 2 (15), 4 and 6. Items (b) and (c) are new provisions on the lines of amended proviso to section 8 and provisos to sections 9 (1) (iv), 10 (2) (iii) and section 10 (4) (a). Note, however, that there is no reference in item (b) of sub-section (2) to an agent who can be assessed under section 42, unlike the corresponding provisions in sections 8, 9 and 10; and also that till 1946 there was no reference in sub-section (4) to clause (vii) of sub-section (2) of section 10, viz., loss on sale or discarding of machinery, etc.

United Kingdom Law.—This section corresponds very roughly to Case VI of Schedule D of the English Act; which is, so to speak, a residuary section. In computing income under Case VI, no deductions can be claimed expressly under the law but it appears that deductions are allowed in practice; for example, if a person lets his house furnished, he is allowed to deduct, from his profits of letting, the rent of the house, rates, wages, depreciation, etc., on furniture, repairs, agent's fees and advertising charges. Similarly a person earning fees from lectures would be allowed travelling expenses to and from the place of his lectures.

Method of accounting.—As to how profits should be computed, see section 13.

Deductions.—See notes under section 10 (2) (ix)—Taxes and Cesses; also about 'Capital expenditure' and laid out or expended for the purpose of the business, etc., under clause (xv) of sub-section (2) of that section.

It should be noted that, while under (xv) of sub-section (2) of section 10, the words used are "laid out or expended wholly and exclusively for the purpose of such business, etc." the words used in this section are "incurred solely for the purpose of making or earning such income, profits or gains". It will be seen, however, from the notes under the former clause that there is not as material a difference between the two phrases as might seem at first sight. It may be assumed generally that the test of deductibility under section 12 is the same as under section 10 except where special provisions have been made under section 10. In fact, most of the items referred to under section 10 are 'incurred solely to earn the profits'. In order to claim a deduction it is not necessary that the whole of a particular item of expenditure should be incurred solely to earn the profits; a part of the item can be considered so to be solely incurred, Sachindra Mohan Ghosh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 11 Pat. 47; A.I.R. 1936 I.T.R. 164 (Cal.).

Nature of income included under "other sources".—Income derived by an assessee from dividends of a company or from his share in a firm or from royalties, minerals or other natural deposits would all fall under income from 'other sources' so far as he is individually concerned. It is not possible to exhaust by enumeration the categories of income that can fall under this head. As examples, however, may be given income from royalties and rents, In re Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 81; 1 I.T. C. 103, interest on Bank deposits or loans, illegal cesses levied by landlords, income from fisheries, market-places (other than property under section 9), etc. Examiner's fees, rewards, and director's fees, would more often fall under 'salaries' or 'professional earnings' than under 'other sources'. Most agricultural income will fall under this head, though qua agricultural income, it is exempt from tax by section 4 (3) (viii).

Capital expenditure.—It is not merely sufficient that there is an intention to provide a sum expressed as a capital sum, and then to pay it in instalments. There should be a real existing capital sum, not necessarily pre-existing, but existing in the sum that it represents some kind of capital obligation. Therefore where an assessee undertook to pay to another person, without consideration, a certain sum by instalments and later on covenanted to pay in instalments the balance of the sum due on the earlier undertaking, it was held that the payments by instalments were capital payments and therefore not deductible from the payer's income, Inland Revenue v. Mallaby Duley, 17 A.T.C. 503; 55 T.L.R. 293 (C.A.). See also notes under section 3 'Capital and income' and under section 10 (2) (xv) 'capital expenditure'.

Interest on borrowings.—It should also be noted that unlike section 9 (1) (iv) which permits the deduction of interest on mortgages and charges on property irrespective of the purpose of borrowing, this section does not permit such deduction unless the purpose of the borrowing is to earn the profits under assessment, In re Amulyadhan Addy and others, 1936 I.T.R. 164 (Cal.).

Where money is borrowed for purposes of investment in 'securities'—as defined in section 8—interest on such borrowings may be deducted from taxable income subject to the conditions laid down in that section; if borrowed for a business, interest may be similarly deducted subject to the conditions in section 10 (2) (iii); and if for investing in house property subject to those in section 9 (1) (iv). In all other cases, e.g., investment in shares, interest on borrowings can be deducted only if it is incurred "solely for the purpose of" making or earning the income that is being taxed and subject to the conditions in section 12 (2). Ordinarily the Income-tax Officer before giving the allowance will require proof that the money borrowed was for the purpose of the particular investment.

Land Revenue.—Where non-agricultural income from land, e.g., coal royalties is taxed, an allowance should be given for the land revenue on the land. The ascertainment of this allowance is a question of fact. Tax under section 12, it should be noted, is not on gross receipts. See Emperor v. Prokhat Chandra Barua, (1930) 57 I.A. 228; 58 Cal. 443; and Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O. v. Raja Sri Sri Kalyani Prasad Singh, 1945 I.T.R. 17 (Pat.).

Interest on outstandings after business is wound up.—When a trader or a professional man dies or stops his business or profession, and outstandings have to be collected in respect of goods supplied or services rendered during the life of the business or profession, such receipts are not ordinarily assessable. They represent money earned during the life of the business or profession and are covered by the assessments made during the life of the business or profession. It is immaterial for this purpose whether the assessment were made on the basis of bookings or on the basis of receipts. But, interest stands on a special footing. It is payment by time for the use of money. Though, when a business lasts, interest may be a part of trade receipts, it does not follow that interest ceases to be earned after the ending of the trade. The interest-bearing debts which remain produce an income which is liable to tax, see dicta of Rowlatt, J., in Bennett v. Ogston, 15 Tax Cases 374; 9 A.T.C. 182.

Annuities.—A clergyman received an annuity from a Charitable Fund on retiring through ill-health. The annuity was conditional on his completely resigning the parish. The income of the Fund as a charitable fund was exempt from tax. Held, that the annuity was taxable not as profits of office but as annual profits under Schedule D, Duncan's Executors v. Farmer, 5 Tax Cases 417; (1909) Sess. Cas. 1212; 46 Sc.L.R. 857. In 1922 the law in United Kingdom was altered bringing such income under Schedule E.

(In India also this would be taxable not as profits of office, i.e., salaries under section 7 or professional earnings under section 10 but under 'income from other sources'—section 12.)

A payment by a former employer to an ex-employee at a certain percentage over a basic minimum of receipts from a particular source with which the employee had been connected is not a receipt from the profession or employment of the ex-employee, even though the agreement to pay the percentage was by way of quid pro quo for the termination of the employment. The employment having expired, the income is from 'other sources', Asher v. London Film Productions, 1945 I.T.R. (Sup.) 6 (C.A.). The point may be of importance in India because when rates of tax are changed by the Finance Act, the rate on 'Salaries' lags behind by a year.

Annuities.—Annuities not of the nature described in section 7, i.e., annuities not paid by Government, etc., or by an employer fall under this section.

An annuity is taxable in full although capital may have been sunk in purchasing it, nor is any difference made between terminable and perpetual annuities, Coltress Iron Company v. Black, 1 Tax Cases 287; 6 App. Cases 315.

To ascertain whether a so-called annuity is really an annuity for income-tax purposes, the substance of the transaction must be looked to, and not merely the name, Nizam's Guaranteed Railway v. Wyatt, 2 Tax Cases 584; 24 Q.B.D. 548; Scoble v. Secretary of State, 4 Tax Cases 618; (1903) A. C. 299.

Deed of separation—Payment to wife.—In Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, (1902) 4 F. 545 it was held that a payment made to a wife under a deed of separation was taxable, as it was payable as a personal debt or obligation in virtue of a contract as distinguished from a gift, and that the husband was entitled to deduct tax. In India, the tax could not be deducted at source on such payments, as they are not annuities paid by employers, but such payments are evidently taxable in the hands of the recipient as income from other sources under section 12.

Trustee—Income of.—The remuneration of a Trustee would be income from 'other sources'. A trustee has no 'employer' and his income cannot be 'salary'. Nor can it be income from a 'profession or vocation'. See Baxendale v. Murphy, 9 Tax Cases 76; (1924) 2 K.B. 494.

Depreciation.—No allowance can be claimed on account of depreciation except in cases falling under section 10 or under section 12 (3) or (4). See dicta in In re Gooptu Estates, Ltd., Calcutta, 4 I.T.C. 146; 57 Cal. 910; A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 1. Sub-sections (3) and (4) apply to cases not constituting a business of letting. In such cases clauses (iv) et seq of sub-section (2) of section 10 will apply directly. In the United Kingdom, the law is more complicated, and difficult questions arise as to the liabilities to keep the asset in repair, see Union Cold Storage Co. v. Simpson, (1939) 2 All. E. R. 44 (C.A.).

Hire purchase.—Where the true nature of a hire-purchase agreement is that of a sale or of an agreement to sell, with an extended period of instalments for payment of the price, there is no letting on hire and sub-section (3) of section 12 does not apply, Shamsher Ali Abdul Hussain v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 1945 I.T.R. 240.

Impartible Hindu family.—The question has been raised, but not decided, whether income derived by the holder of an impartible Hindu estate from house property belonging to the family can be taxed as the income of the holder as an individual under 'other sources', even though with reference to section 9, the tax could be levied only on the owner, viz., the family. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Diwan Kishan Kishore, 1941 I.T.R. 695 (P.C.).

Expenses incurred in purchasing mortgaged property.—The mere giving of security by a mortgagee-purchaser of property in a Court auction is not deductible expenditure. When eventually the security is forfeited on the indemnity paid—assuming the accounts to be on a cash basis—the payment might be deductible. So also, probably, the interest on borrowing if the security money is borrowed. Expenses incurred by the purchaser over Mutation fees and the like when taking possession are not deductible. In bidding for the property the purchaser must be presumed to have anticipated such expenses. Payment in satisfaction of a decree in favour of a prior creditor cannot be deducted especially if at the time of bidding the possibility of such a claim is known to the bidder, Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh and another v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 12 Pat. 305; 64 M.L.J. 544; A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 101; 1933 I.T.R. 144 (P.C.). Loss incurred in selling such property (bought by mortgagee) afterwards is a capital loss, Himat Lal Motilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 76 I.T.C. 159.

Cost of probate and sradh and funeral expenses.—Such costs cannot be deducted from the taxable income of executors even though the will expressly directs them to meet such costs from the income of the estate. These are not cases of a portion of the income being diverted, by an overriding title, from the person who would otherwise enjoy it (as in the Dudhuria case) but cases of expenditure by persons who, having received the whole income, spend a part of it in accordance with the wishes of the testator in whose shoes they stand, In re P. C. Mallick and another, 1938 I.T.R. 206 (P.C.).

Buildings, etc., leased.—Income to a lessee from property which will revert to the lessor is taxable under this section. The Allahabad High Court allowed a deduction to be spread over some years to represent the cost of erection of buildings which would be lost to the lessee. But this was overruled by the Privy Council on the ground that expenditure not actually incurred during the year of assessment could not be allowed, Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Basantraï Takhat Singh, 1933 I.T.R. 197; 60 I.A. 307; 55 All. 452; A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 180.

Where an assessee purchased a decree carrying interest (by assignment) and paid for it by a usufructuary lease of certain immovable properties for a term of years, the term being so fixed that the principal and interest on the purchase money would be wiped off during the period by the enjoyment of rent and profits, and claimed that the interest on the purchase money should be set-off against the interest accruing on the decree, the claim was disallowed. The assessee was not legally liable to pay interest on the purchase money and there was in fact no payment of interest. All that he had done was to purchase the assignment (decree) with a taxable income and had parted in return with a source of untaxable income, Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O. v. Raja Dhakeshwar Prasad Narain Singh, 1938 I.T.R. 476.

Firms.—There is no specific disallowance in this section, as in section 10, of payments made to partners of firms, because the income of firms can only arise from business, profession or vocation. See the Indian Partnership Act, 1932.

Provident Funds—Payments from.—Before section 7 was amended in 1939 (see Explanation 2 to that section) so as to make receipts from provident funds 'salaries' under section 7, where a trust had been created in respect of a Provident Fund and the employer paid his contributions into the Trust Funds, the contributions actually received by the employee were taxable under section 12 and not under section 7 as salaries, since the trust was not his employer. Tax on all payments under section 7 is deductible at source under section 18, whereas payments taxable under section 12 could only be taxed after assessment under section 23 (and section 34). These remarks do not apply to 'recognised' provident funds as to which see section 58-H.

12-A. Where a managing agent of a company is liable under an agreement made for adequate consideration to share managing agency commission with a third party or parties the said agent and the said party or parties shall file a declaration showing the proportion in which such commission is shared between them, and on proof to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer of the facts contained in such declaration such agent and each such party shall be chargeable only on the share to which such agent or party is entitled under the agreement.

History.—This section was inserted in 1939. To quote the Select Committee "this introduces into the Act a new provision for the special case in which managing agency commission is shared among two or more recipients and provides a means by which each of the recipients may be charged only on the share which he is actually entitled to receive".

This section partly counteracts the decision of the Privy Council in Tata Hydro-Electric Agencies v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 64 I.A. 215; (1937) A.C. 212; 1937 I.T.R. 202 (P.C.), and also seeks to remove doubts, for as will be seen from the rulings referred to under section 10 (2) (xv), it is often difficult to determine whether a payment represented by a share of profits is made in order to earn such profits or is only a distribution thereof.

It will be noted that the section applies only to managing agents of companies. There must be an agreement to share the commission with a third party or parties and there should be adequate consideration for the agreement. The agent should file a declaration showing the details of sharing and the Income-tax Officer should be satisfied of the facts in such declaration.

There is no penalty under section 52, apart from that under the Indian Penal Code, for a wrong declaration.

Adequate consideration.—In the context the words will presumably not cover affection or love. The consideration, however, need not be cash consideration. Adequacy of consideration is evidently a question of fact, being a question of degree.

Other cases.—Cases not covered by this section will have to be dealt with in accordance with the principles expounded by the Privy Council in the Pondicherry Railway Case, 58 I.A. 239; 54 Mad. 641; and in the Indian Radio and Cable Case, I.L.R. 1937 Bom. 591; 1937 I.T.R. 270; by the Court of Appeal in British Sugar Manufacturing Co. v. Harris, 16 A.T.C. 421, and by other Courts in the several rulings referred to under section 10 (2) (xv) as to the deductibility of payments represented by a share of profits.

13. Income, profits and gains shall be computed, for the purposes of sections 10 and 12, in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed by the assessee:

Method of accounting.

Provided that, if no method of accounting has been regularly employed, or if the method employed is such that, in the opinion of the Income-tax Officer, the income, profits and gains cannot properly be deduced therefrom, then the computation shall be made upon such basis and in such manner as the Income-tax Officer may determine.

History.—Difficulties had been experienced in regard to the assessment of business profits under the Act of 1918, owing to the ruling of the Madras High Court in Board of Revenue v. Arunachalam Chetti, 1 I.T.C. 75; 44 Mad. 65; A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 427, that the word 'income' in section 3 of that Act [corresponding to section 4 (1) of the present Act] meant 'income actually or constructively received', and that the use of the word in that sense in section 3 restricted and limited any interpretation to be placed upon the following sections of the Act which specified the income liable to tax. Had this interpretation been strictly followed, considerable inconvenience would have been caused to assesseees who kept their accounts not on the basis of sums actually received and sums actually paid out, but on the principles of mercantile accountancy, by the preparation of a Profit and Loss Account and the comparison of the value of the stock in hand at the beginning and end of each year, since such assesseees would have been required to recast the whole of their accounts on a cash basis for income-tax returns. The provisions of sections 3, 4 and 6 to 12 of the Act were, therefore, re-worded in order to make it clear that the tax is chargeable not on 'income' calculated on actual receipts and expenditure, but on the "profits and gains" as set out and defined in those sections; while section 13 makes it clear that no uniform method of accounting is prescribed for all tax-payers, and that every tax-payer may, so far as possible, adopt such form and system of accounting as is best suited for his purposes. The word "in respect of sums paid, or, in the case of depreciation debited", which occurred in section 9 (2) of the Act of 1918, were also omitted, and sub-section (3) of section 10 of the new Act was inserted, so that there may be no doubt that the assessee may adopt either a cash basis or a mercantile accountancy basis as his regular system of keeping accounts. It should be particularly noted that these provisions apply under section 13 of the Act only to the income, profits and gains mentioned in sections 10 and 12 of the Act. Under section 9, the income is notional based on the 'annual value' of the property, under section 7 tax is payable when salaries are due, and under section 8 tax is on interest receivable. Both under section 7 and under section 8, tax is deducted at the time of payment.

The reference to section 11 in this section was omitted in 1939 as a consequence of the deletion of section 11 and its merging in section 10.

In the Madras case, Board of Revenue v. Arunachalam Chetti, 44 Mad. 65; 1 I.T.C. 75; A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 427, which gave rise to this section, the point in issue was whether interest that had accrued in the year, but neither been received nor adjusted in the accounts, could be taxed. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court decided against the Crown, Sadasiva Aiyar, J., dissenting. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., held that the interest would be taxable, though not realized, if it came so completely under the assessee's control that by an act of his will he could receive it in cash without greater trouble than is involved in drawing money from his bankers.

Method of accounting "regularly employed".—The following executive instructions have been issued.

It is the practice amongst certain merchants to prepare their accounts on the basis of the mercantile accountancy system in respect of transactions between themselves and members of their own community, but on a cash basis in the case of transactions with their other customers. If the same system is continuously employed, and if, taking one year with another, the full income is shown on a consistent basis, it may be followed for income-tax purposes.

Scope of section.—Broadly speaking, the law is as below:—If the assessee files a proper return of his income, he will be assessed on his income computed (with, or without examination of his accounts, according to circumstances) according to the method of accounting that he has regularly employed. If he regularly employs the cash method of accounting, his income will be computed on the cash basis. If he regularly employs the mercantile system, his income will be computed according to the mercantile system. If he regularly employs some reasonable and consistent combination of the cash and mercantile systems, for example, following the one system for some kinds of transactions and the other for other kinds of transactions, his income will be computed accordingly. It must not be forgotten, however, that if an assessee has not produced his accounts regularly before the Income-tax authorities it may be difficult or impossible for him to prove that he has regularly employed any method of accounting. If he has not regularly employed any method of accounting, the Income-tax Officer has to determine upon what basis, and in what manner, the income shall be computed. The Income-tax Officer has the same discretion if, in his opinion, the method regularly employed is such that the income cannot properly be deducted therefrom.

Where an assessee closes his accounts, whether in part or as a whole, only periodically, i.e., once in a few years, the proviso to the section comes automatically into operation, and it is for the Income-tax Officer to make the best estimate he can on the materials before him as to the profits of each year. Common cases of this kind are contracts requiring several years to complete and accounts of branches when branch managers who are given shares of profits are appointed for a term of years.

If an assessee has not made a return substantially fulfilling or purporting to fulfil the requirements of section 22 of the Act, and Rule 19 of the Rules under the Act, it is the duty of the Income-tax Officer under section 23 (4) to determine the income to the best of his judgment. He is then not bound to call for the assessee's accounts. If he does call for them, he has full discretion as to the use that he should make of them, and whether he calls for them or not, the assessee has no appeal against his decision.

See Rule 33 and Rule 8 of Schedule, regarding special methods of estimation of income in certain cases.

United Kingdom Practice.—The principle of section 13, (viz., that the assessee is bound by his own acts of book-keeping,—unless the book-keeping itself is at variance with facts, about which see Craig v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1914) Sess. Cases 338; 51 Sc.L.R. 321;) has been laid down in various English rulings. On the other hand, an assessee cannot reduce his liability merely by juggling with his books.

The law in the United Kingdom merely says that the tax shall “be computed on the full amount of the balance of profits or gains”; and it is for the commissioners to decide in each case whether the accounts do disclose the full amount of profits, but there is a reluctance, especially in cases of trade, to accept accounts on a cash basis, and the Courts have generally thrown their weight against accounts on a cash basis. Also, the words used, for example, in Schedule D are ‘accruing or arising’, and the word ‘received’ is not used at all; and emphasis has been laid on this omission in In re Kamdar, 1941 I.T.R. 10 (Bom.), which seeks to compare Indian and English law in this respect.

“The balance-sheets, of course, do not serve to alter the liabilities of the tax-payer; they are not used for the purpose of constituting some admission of liability or something which would stop them from having the Act properly administered; but they are of some use as showing what, as a matter of fact, is the true and proper way of dealing with these receipts”. Per Hamilton, J., in Liverpool and London and Globe Insurance Co. v. Bennett, 6 Tax Cases 327; (1913) A.C. 610.

“One of the learned Judges in the Court of Appeal seems to have thought that the case might have been different if the County Council had made some appropriation of their funds, though it is difficult to see how any account-keeping by the debtor could alter the rights of the Crown.” Per Lord Davey in Attorney-General v. London County Council, 4 Tax Cases 265; (1901) A.C. 26.

“This argument would seem to make the rights of the Crown depend on the book-keeping of the company; but this cannot be, nor do I think the liabilities of the company can be made to depend on their system of accounts”, Per Lord Gorell in Edinburgh Life Assurance Co. v. Lord Advocate, 5 Tax Cases 472; (1910) A.C. 143.

“I cannot think that income-tax is due or not according to the manner in which the person making the profit pleases to deal with it. Suppose for example, a seller made profit on a trade transaction but leaves the price (including the profit) in the hands of the buyer at so much per cent. interest. That he so deals with it, rather than take the cash into his own pocket, would not affect the claim of the Revenue for the tax payable on the profits.” Per Lord Trayner in Californian Copper Syndicate v. Harris, 5 Tax Cases 159.

Basis of accounting.—Each year is a self-contained period; and profits earned or losses sustained before it or after it are not relevant, Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. v. Sir S. Chitnavis, 59 I.A. 290; 63 M.L.J. 361.

As to 'receipts' not being confined to cash receipts, see Hall & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 382; (1921) 3 K.B. 152 (C.A.), the dictum from the judgment of Esher, M.R., in City of London Corporation v. Styles, 2 Tax Cases 239; 4 T.L.R. 51 and Sterndale M.R.'s comments thereon—see notes under section 10. Tax is leviable not on receipts but on profits, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Thava Bros., 1934 I.T.R. 230.

As to how far accounts should represent facts, it is obviously not possible to lay down any general principles. Like all questions of fact, such questions depend for their answers partly on the facts of each case and partly on commercial usage and the practice of the assessee. Difficult questions may arise in respect of which the law furnishes little guidance, and in many cases an equitable solution is likely to rest on what is logically a compromise. So long as the same income is not taxed twice over and so long as income is not taxed before it arises, except with the consent, either express or implied, the latter often resting on the method of accountancy regularly employed, of the assessee, it is presumed that no Court will interfere. These are all questions about which the law is silent and the courts will presumably apply 'equity, justice and good conscience' in settling them.

As Lord Loreburn said in Sun Insurance Office v. Clark, 6 Tax Cases 59; (1912) A.C. 443.

"A rule of thumb may be very desirable but cannot be substituted for the only rule of law that I know of, viz., that the true gains are to be ascertained as nearly as it can be done."

First, as regards stock which also includes in this connection consumable stores, George Thompson, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 1091. The closing balance (both quantity and value) of the previous year must agree with the opening balance of the year under consideration. In the face of this Commissioner of Income-tax v. Chengalvaraya Chetti, 2 I.T.C. 14; 48 Mad. 836; A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1242 the assessee claimed to value the stock in the closing balance of the previous year at the market price and in the opening balance of the current year at cost price, which was much higher. Needless to say, the claim was not allowed by the High Court. As Coutts-Trotter, C.J., put it—

"The question is not so much of law but of business commonsense." And as Krishnan, J., put it—

"Having been allowed to treat his loss as one on the stock in hand in the previous year he cannot be allowed again to treat it as a loss on the sales in respect of the same stock next year."

The next point is whether an assessee should take his closing stock at market-value or cost price, and, if the former, whether he is entitled to estimate it as he likes. As regards the first part of the question, there would apparently be nothing wrong in the assessee choosing whichever alternative he prefers, provided always of course that the next year's opening balance is taken at the same value. Actual commercial practice varies, and it is most common to follow the practice of valuing on which-ever is the lower basis. It is also not uncommon to value at the same point of time certain item of stock at market-value and others at cost price; it is all a question of custom and usage. But it would not be open to the concern to under-estimate the market-value. Whether all items or groups of items forming 'stocks' should be valued on an identical basis—all at cost or all at market-value, or on different bases some at cost and some at market-value, would seem to be a matter of business usage rather than of law; and the only essential condition would seem to be that in respect of the same items, the same basis should be adopted every year, and that the closing balance of each item should be identical with the opening balance of that item next year. The question, however, has not yet been before the Courts, either in India or in the United Kingdom.

'Market-value' is a matter of fact, and like all other questions of fact it is entirely for the Income-tax Officer to decide what is a fair market-value. In deciding this question of fact, the relevant evidence would be (1) Invoices, (2) Sales, (3) Transactions of other assesseees doing similar business, (4) Government statistics, etc.

It is usual to value stock of half-finished or finished goods at raw material plus labour; but this is not necessary when finished goods can be valued with reference to the market. The 'cost' price of raw materials would be valued so as to include freight, etc., when the 'cost price' basis of valuation is adopted in respect of the closing stocks. Whether the valuation is on a 'cost price' basis or on the 'market-value' basis, an assessee cannot put any valuation he likes on the stock. In either case the valuation should accord with facts.

Perishable goods and goods that improve in value with age and rare things like curios, gems, collections, etc., require special treatment; so also stocks and shares in the case of a stockjobber in respect of which the usual stock exchange quotations do not necessarily offer reliable guidance when large blocks of shares are involved, In Craddock v. Zero Finance, Ltd., 1943 C.A., the courts declined to interfere with a finding of the commissioners (against the Crown) that there was nothing unreasonable or suspicious in a large block of shares being bought at a price much higher than the Stock Exchange quotations. The stock exchange quotation itself may be more or less than the real value of a share and where there is a voluntary sale or purchase, and the purchaser is willing to pay an extravagant price, the transaction cannot be questioned except on grounds of fraud or collusion. The valuation is a question of fact and not of law.

Where an assessee keeps his stock in different places, e.g., partly in his factory and partly with agents at the nearest port of export, and issues his stock at the market price at the port, it is not open to him to deduct from the value of his stock freight and other charges not actually paid by him and his agents, Balakram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 759; 135 I.C. 597.

It is obvious that when the accounts do not show the opening and closing stock balances, the profit or loss account cannot be ascertained from the books whether the accounts are on a cash or on an accrued basis. See also Radhakissan Ramnarain's case, 3 I.T.C. 366.

The United Kingdom Finance Act of 1938 specially provides broadly speaking that, where a business, etc., is discontinued, the closing stocks shall be taken at sale value if the business, etc., is sold; and otherwise ad hoc expert valuation shall be made. There are no similar provisions in India but, since the value of stocks is a question of fact and since the tests laid down above are reasonable ones, it is presumed that they can be applied in India also. On the other hand the United Kingdom Law in effect treats the profits on sale of stocks on closing down as income, whereas in India the result would depend on the facts of the case, viz., whether the sales on closing down were themselves of the nature of trading operations.

Trading stock in hand—Valuation of.—"Trading stock in hand" means stock in which property has passed to the assessee, Benjamin Smith & Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 7 A.T.C. 135 or that which is in the actual possession or under the sole control of the trader, Greene & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 6 A.T.C. 461 and Benjamin Smith & Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 7 T.T.C. 135.

The Excess Profits Duty Acts referred to 'trading stock in hand' and also referred in other parts to stock 'which had not come into possession', etc. Under these Acts it was held that goods not in actual possession of assessee or agents, no bills of lading, invoices or insurance policies or certificates in relation to such goods having been tendered or delivered to assessee or agents, is not 'stock'. Even the passing of property in goods or the acquisition of disposing power is not enough to make it 'trading stock', in the absence of delivery, Greene & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 6 A.T.C. 461. If, however, the goods though brought forward have been sold before the last date of the accounts, such goods should obviously be brought into account. Also, quite apart from the special provisions of the old Excess Profits Duty Acts, if the assessee has the legal ownership of the goods, they should obviously be brought into account. Delivery of bills of lading, etc., for example, is equal to delivery of goods for the purpose of passing property; but 'stock-in-trade' as decided in Wills, etc., is not the same as 'trading stock in hand' for calculating profit and loss, Biddell Bros. v. Clemens Horst & Co., (1912) A.C. 18.

At the same point of time the same stock could not belong both to the purchaser and to the seller. Till the property passes to the purchaser it is obviously the stock of the seller. To say that a person had grain 'in hand' merely because by business arrangements which were in course of performance he had put himself in a position to deal with purchasers in the security of being able to perform in his turn is merely a figure of speech like 'having 10 minutes in hand to catch a train' or finishing a race with several lengths in hand at the winning post, per Lord Sumner in Benjamin Smith & Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 7 A.T.C. 135 (H.L.).

Per the Lord President in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Marshall, 11 Tax Cases 319:—

"It is not for the Court to fix principles of valuation for a principle of valuation is not a part of the law universal at all; but of course it is necessary sometimes to ask the Court whether a particular principle of valuation, if adopted, would or would not accord with the prescription of the Income-tax Acts. . . ."

In a case in which (1) there was no actual market—either for purchase or for sale—for the goods on the date of closing the accounts and (2) defective goods were to be replaced by the suppliers, it was held by the Special Commissioners (a) that the stock should be valued as though the stock had been ordered from the suppliers and supplied on the date of closing accounts, due allowance being made for adjustments in wages, etc., and (b) that cloth found to be defective should be written up if already written down, because the supplier was bound to replace the goods. Rowlatt, J., confirmed the action of the Special Commissioners, Brigg Neumann & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 7 A.T.C. 269; 12 Tax Cases 1191.

Property taken over by a money-lender in settlement of debts is not part of his stock-in-trade; and he cannot therefore value the property at the end of each year to ascertain his profits, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. P. L. S. M. Concern, 1934 I.T.R. 417. In that case, the valuation had no reference to a real market value and was merely an estimate made by the money-lender himself. The Court considered that the account should be adjusted when the property was sold. Where such property is valued for the purpose of reconstituting the money-lending partnership the valuation cannot be used for the purpose of adjusting taxable profits; such adjustment can be permitted only when the property is finally disposed of, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. K. A. R. K. Firm, 1934 I.T.R. 183. The facts in the above cases were peculiar, and it cannot be said that in no case will such property be the stock in trade of the money-lender.

Running contracts.—If the accounts are so kept that the profits in any given period can be ascertained, naturally the Income-tax Officer will accept such accounts; otherwise he will assess under sections 23 (3) and 13 unless owing to some default of the assessee, the assessment is made under section 23 (4).

"It would be wrong to carry into the accounts as profits of one year the estimated profits which would accrue in subsequent years that might perhaps never be made at all"—Per M. R. Sterndale in Hall & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 1 A.T.C. 271; 12 Tax Cases 382; (1921) 3 K.B. 152.

"No person . . . would dream of including profits in his yearly balance-sheet, which would not be made until the goods had been actually delivered, in respect of some contract which was to run over a period of two years and possibly more"—Per Atkin, L.J. (Ibid.).

" . . . The only proper way in which the profits arising from the working out of this contract ought to be brought into account, is to ascertain them as and when realised, as if they were not preceded by any contract at all."—Per Younger, L.J., (Ibid.)

"Realised" here does not mean realised in cash or by set-off; in this case the lower Court held that the profits on the running contract should be brought into account when the contracts are made, and this judgment was overruled by the Court of Appeal.

Contractors and stock jobbers and the like may have accounts running into several years, Profit and Loss not being struck every year but only finally after the completion of a group of transactions; see Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. v. Bansilal Abhirchand, 3 I.T.C. 57; A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 102; 108 I.C. 805 and Gour's case, 3 I.T.C. 333. At the same time where, as among stock brokers and jobbers, there are periodical settlements—with actual payments, the possibility of further settlements within the lifetime of the contracts would not justify the exclusion of already accrued profits until the contracts had run their course. The profits should be taxed as adjusted at the settlements, losses being dealt with similarly, Ballabdas & Son v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 5 I.T.C. 371.

Consignment accounts.—If the assessee keeps suspense accounts for each consignment or 'venture' till it is closed, it follows that until the profit is transferred from 'suspense' to 'profit and loss' no income arises for taxation. Otherwise the Income-tax Officer would have no option except to take into account the net balance of the consignment account or estimate as best as he can under section 23 (3) and section 13, or as a result of some default on the part of the assessee, under section 23 (4).

Debits and credits—When to be entered.—Under the mercantile system of accounting, when a debit note is presented the debt should appear in the accounts. A debit note means a debt in praesenti. Similarly if a contract is cancelled and compensation received for the breach in instalments, the compensation should appear as a receipt when the compensation is settled, Robinson & Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 8 A.T.C. 125; 12 Tax Cases 1241. In Excess Profits Tax cases, the date on which an item should be brought into account is a matter of great importance, and many of the English rulings referred to on this point relate to the old Excess Profits Duty. It is not open to an assessee to bring into account stocks not received by him, and reduce his profits for the accounting period by debiting himself with the cost of stocks ordered at high prices but not received by him and writing down the value of stock to current market value, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Huntley and Palmers, Ltd., 12 Tax Cases 1209.

Where an assessee, into whose account at a Bank a sum of money had been paid by a lessee on account of mining royalty and who had a dispute as regards the quantum of royalty and sought to recover more from him, did not decline the receipt of nor refund the money but retained it and used it, while crediting it, however, to a 'suspense' head in his own accounts, it was held that the receipt became his income in the year of receipt by the bank and not when the 'suspense' was cleared after settlement of the dispute, Maharaja Kamakshya Narayan Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 1942 I.T.R. 177.

Stock values—Alteration of.—It is a cardinal rule of book-keeping—whatever the method adopted—that the opening balances of stock in one year should be the same as the closing balances of the preceding year, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Chengalvaraya Chetti, 2 I.T.C. 14; 48 Mad. 836; A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1242.

At the same time if the opening and closing stocks of a business in a given year are both undervalued, the real profits of the business in that year cannot be ascertained by merely raising the valuation of the closing stock, without taking into consideration the similar undervaluation of the opening stock. The method of introducing stock into each side of a profit and loss account for the purpose of determining the annual profits does not necessarily depend upon exact trade valuations being given to each article of stock that is so introduced. The one thing that is essential is that there should be a definite method of valuation adopted which should be carried through from year to year, so that in case of any deviation from strict market values in the entry of the stock at the close of one year it will be rectified by the accounts in the next year. It may, of course, be that in so adjusting the figures of stock there may be special cases in which the valuation is so treated as justly to cause it to be open to dispute. But whatever the correct position about such cases, it is clear that if the method of altering both valuations is not adopted the profit which is brought forward is not the real one, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. The Ahmedabad New Cotton Mills Company, Ltd., 57 I.A. 21; 54 B. 213; 58 M.L.J.

204 (P.C.). So, where an assessee, a firm dealing in shares, had shown certain shares at cost price in their accounts for some years, and when the firm was dissolved, the shares were allotted to the partners at a reduced valuation (alleged to be the market price) and the difference between the cost price and the alleged market price was claimed as a loss during the accounting year of partition the claim was disallowed. The partition did not amount to a sale of the shares and if shares were put into the accounts at cost, they must be taken out of them at cost. Every year is a self-contained period and the profits or losses in other periods are irrelevant. There was nothing in this case to show that the loss occurred during the year of partition. In re Messrs. Chouthmal Golapchand, 1938 I.T.R. 733 (Cal.). An assessee cannot, however, argue that the Income-tax Officer should not have accepted the return of income without examination because if he had examined it he would have detected a mistake in the method of stock-valuation which resulted in overstating the income, Asoka Mills, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 6 I.T.C. 339.

Where a German Jew who desired to remove his property outside Germany formed a company in England and exported goods to it at prices lower than market value, but not so low as to be detected by the Nazi authorities, and claimed later on, for income-tax purposes in England, that the profits of the English company should be computed as if the goods had been imported at true market-value, it was held that there had been no error in invoicing and that as in fact the English company had received the goods at invoiced prices, it was liable to pay tax on that footing, Julius Bendit, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, 1945 K.B.D.

The view that, if there is a regular method of accounting employed by the assessee the Income-tax Officer is entitled prima facie to accept the profits as shown in the accounts is not correct. It is the duty of the Income-tax Officer, even if there is a regular method of accounting, to consider whether the true income can be deduced therefrom and then to proceed according to his judgment. The method of accounting referred to in this section relates to the method used by the assessee for his own purposes and not to that of making the return of income. Even though the profit as shown in the accounts is not true profit for income-tax purposes, it may be possible to deduce it from the accounts and the judgment of the Income-tax Officer must therefore be properly exercised under the proviso. It is misleading to describe it as discretionary power. Where, therefore, an assessee had built up a secret reserve by systematic undervaluation of stocks over a period of years and the Income-tax Officer, instead of examining whether the true profits for income-tax purposes could be deduced from the accounts deliberately shut his eyes to the undervaluation, both in the opening and in the closing stocks and merely took the profit as shown in the assessee company's profit and loss account and balance sheet by which he held it to be bound, the Income-tax Officer was directed by the Privy Council to make a re-assessment. Obviously, he could not conclude that the true profits could be ascertained on the basis of a gross undervaluation, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Sarangpur Cotton Co., 1938 I.T.R. 36 (P.C.). Following this ruling, in a case in which there was a regular method of accounting but closing stocks had been undervalued and the Income-tax Officer merely acted under section 23 (3) without applying the proviso to section 13, the Nagpur High Court directed the Income-tax Officer to apply his mind with reference to that proviso, Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Achrulal, 1938 I.T.R.

255. An assessee in a particular accounting year valued his opening balance at cost price and the closing one at market price. The Income-tax Officer overlooked this change but in the next accounting year assessed him on the basis of cost price both for opening and closing balance; but at the same time agreed to revise the assessment of the preceding year on the basis of cost price for the closing balance (so as to benefit the assessee). His action was supported, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Sri Viswesvardas Gokuldas, 1946 I.T.R. 110 (Mad.).

Opening balances.—Three banks went into liquidation, and three companies were formed to realise and distribute the respective assets. Later on a new company took over, to nurse, develop and realise, the assets of these three companies, who were paid for in the shape of debenture stock and paid-up shares in the new Company. The amounts allotted to each company were in accordance with the book values of the assets of each company. The new company sold the assets gradually, and bought off or paid off the debentures. It also declared a bonus on the shares and gave debenture stock as bonus. Under the articles of association, no dividend could be paid except out of profits. Held, by the Privy Council that (1) the profits of the company were taxable; (2) the company was entitled to hold in suspense some reserve to meet losses; (3) the profits were earned when distributed to shareholders.

Per Lord Dunedin.—“It does not seem to their Lordships that the mere fact that an investment standing in the books at x pounds realises on sale x plus y pounds settles that a profit of y pounds has been made. It is not that their Lordships doubt that the initial figure in the books may be taken. These figures represent in their Lordships' view, real values, for so the parties have treated them. It was argued that they were mere valuations. In one sense, that is true, for, not being put to the test of the market at the moment, the only way to affix a value was by valuation. But that they represent real value seems certain because unless they did, it would have been impossible to regulate justly the share which each member of the three assets companies was to get in the new mixed mass of assets—or, in other words, what shares and debentures he should get in the new Company. But it is possible that other investments on realisation may show loss instead of profit; and it is obvious that it is in the totality of the transactions that the question of profit comes to be fixed. . . . Their Lordships are, however, of opinion that the company may well be held bound by its own actions. . . .”, Commissioners of Taxes v. Melbourne Trust, (1914) A.C. 1001 (P.C.); 30 T.L.R. 685.

Accruals of debt.—Section 13 cannot make the mere accrual of a debt income unless the method of accounting adopted by the assessee is such that all accrued debts enter into his profit and loss account. Even if he does not prepare a formal profit and loss account, does he so keep his accounts as though the income had been received? In commercial practice, and under a strict system of double entry book-keeping, though it is true that the profit or loss is really a notional figure represented by the balancing of certain debits and credits, it is not every account in the ledger that enters into the Profit and Loss account. Receipts which are due but which cannot be realised and even receipts realised in special circumstances might be taken to a “suspense” head which would not enter into the Profit and Loss account, See Melbourne Trust Case, (1914) A.C. 1001 and Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga's case, 4 I.T.C. 283 (on appeal to P.C., 1933 I.T.R. 94). It is not open to an assessee, however, to adopt a method which would defeat the claim of the Crown to tax and which is not in accordance with his regular methods of accounting. If he changes his methods of accounting it would clearly be open to the Income-tax Officer to declare that the assessee does not regularly adopt any method of accounting and to compute the profits according to his own discretion. Where no method of accounting has been regularly employed, it would be open to the Income-tax Officer to compute the profits partly on a cash basis and partly on an accrued basis, Gobardhandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 382.

A mortgagee who kept his accounts on mercantile basis appropriated certain receipts towards the amount due and debited the balance due, which included interest, to the mortgagor's account and then transferred the interest to 'suspense' excluding it from the profits. He had made a similar entry on a previous occasion in an earlier year. It was held that there was evidence before the Income-tax Officer to justify the inclusion of the interest item in profits it not being the assessee's regular system to keep such item in suspense, British Cotton Growers' Association v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 279.

Adjustments.—Where interdepartmental or interbranch adjustments are made in the accounts of an assessee, and it is necessary for the purpose of assessment to examine the propriety of these adjustments, e.g., as between agricultural income and other income, the reasonable debit for supplies and services from one department or branch to another is not the cost price but the market-value. Cf. Rule 23 and see also Watson Brothers v. Hornby, 1942 K.B.D.

Reopening of old accounts.—The question to which accounting period a transaction relates being one of importance for excess profits tax, several cases went before the Courts in connection with the old Excess Profits Duty, of which a few are referred to below. In Newcastle Breweries v. Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 927 (H.L.), rum was commandeered by Government in 1918 and a payment then made 'on account'. There was litigation as to the balance due, thereafter, legislation as to war compensations and finally the balance was paid in 1922. It was held that the payment in 1922, related to 1918 for which an additional assessment was made. The ratio decidendi was that the right to payment arose in 1918, though its determination and quantification were postponed.

The case is even stronger for the Crown when such additional payment is expected from the outset. See Isaac Holden & Sons v. Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 768.

In Ford & Co v. Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 997, an assessment was re-opened where an anticipated liability ultimately turned out to be smaller than was expected. The point is that an estimated liability is not the same as an ascertained debt. In the same way, when a buyer was unable to meet the bill and the bank, to whom the seller was responsible, was eventually induced to accept a smaller amount, additional assessment was made on the seller for the year in which the buyer had failed, Bernard v. Gahan, 13 Tax Cases 723.

In British Mexican Petroleum Co. v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cases 570 (H.L.) it was held that where accounts were kept on a mercantile basis and the transactions were bona fide, past transactions may be reopened in the accounts because of errors or omissions or because the transactions had been provisional but they should not be reopened because a debt due by the assessee originally entered in his accounts correctly and finally and expected to be paid in due course was later on forgiven under changed circumstances. The release from debt in that particular case was not a trading receipt, the release having been made in order to save the assessee from a crash; on the other hand it is clear that a totally unexpected debit (unconnected with day to day trading) would be capital expenditure. If the incurring of the debt and its condonation relate to the same accounting period, only the net debit, if any, would, it seems, appropriately figure in the accounts of the period assuming the transactions to be trading ones.

On the other hand it has been held that when material was paid for provisionally in the expectation that the prices then arranged for would be increased, the additional price paid for later should be referred back to the time of the original rate and delivery, Frodingham Ironstone Mines v. Stewart, 16 Tax Cases 728, following Isaac Holden & Sons, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 768 (H.L.).

The criterion to be deduced from all these cases is as follows: The position should be examined with reference to the expectations at the time of closing the earlier account; if a definite claim or title to a receipt had arisen then that receipt and any alterations therein should be related back to the year in which the title arose even though money may be received in later years; similarly in respect of liabilities. Where, however, the case is not one of estimated liability but a definitely ascertained debt subsequent changes in it (as in the British Mexican Petroleum case) will not be related back to the earlier year; nor a subsequent windfall of a receipt, which could not be foreseen in the earlier year. In other words, in the British Mexican Petroleum case, the original entry in the books was correct and final with reference to the then circumstances, and no change could have been anticipated there. A fair test in such cases is whether if a partner, if there was one, could claim a share of the items as relating to a particular year. See per Lord Cave in the Newcastle Breweries Case, 12 Tax Cases 927.

In New Conveyer Co. v. Dodd, 1946 K.B.D., additional receipts in later years were related back (for income-tax) to earlier years when the contracts were performed and the receipts became due.

See, however, Gray v. Lord Penrhyn; 16 A.T.C. 221, in which compensation received from an auditor for non-detection of embezzlements in earlier years was included in trading receipts in a later year.

See also notes under section 10 (2) (xi)—Allowance for Bad Debts.

Unclaimed balances.—Where a partnership did business which frequently resulted in its coming into possession of balances belonging to constituents but not claimed by them and such balances were transferred to the accounts of partners (subject to certain conditions inter se between them), it was held by the Court of Appeal (overruling the High Court) that the credits to the partner's accounts were not trading receipts of the partners, Morley v. Tattersall & Co., 17 A.T.C. (C.A.). According to the British Mexican Petroleum Co., case, if a liability properly entered in the accounts in an earlier year is released by the creditor in a later year, the release cannot be taken as a trading receipt in the later year. So, the fact that the debtor thinks that the debt may not be claimed is no reason for treating the item as a receipt when he thinks so. All that happened in this case was that the liability for repayment of unclaimed balances was transferred from the firm to the partners, and mere book-keeping entries cannot convert into a trading receipt what was initially not one.

Book-keeping—Not conclusive.—An assessee cannot be held liable for what he is clearly not taxable upon, even though his book-keeping may, at first sight, point to such liability. In Craig v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1914) 51 Sc.L.R. 321, a company purchased a going concern for £25,000. For book-keeping purposes, £5,625 was taken as stock-in-trade. On the basis of actual stock-taking, stock was found to be £12,798. The difference £7,173 (subsequently altered to £6,635) between the assumed and real values of stock was carried to a stock suspense account. In the balance-sheet, the sum of £6,635 was shown as a Reserve Fund. The Commissioners held that this sum of £6,635 was taxable profits. Held, that the real value of stock should be taken into account in computing the profits, and that mere book-keeping is not conclusive. For a similar view, see also Pandurang Ramchandra v. Commissioner of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 180; 2 I.T.C. 69; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. P. L. S. M. Concerns, 1934 I.T.R. 417.

The partners trading as wholesale soft goods merchants and drapers formed a private company of themselves. In transferring the business to the company, the value of stock was written up by £15,000, and the question arose whether the share of each partner of this £15,000 was taxable. Held, by the Privy Council that there was no sale, there being only a book-keeping entry out of which the partners did not make any real profits, and that if there was a sale, the receipt was capital and not income. The decision in Craig v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1914) 51 Sc. L. R. 321, viz., that by merely over-estimating or under-estimating assets profits cannot be made where in fact there are no profits, was approved, Doughty v. Commissioners of Taxes, 1927 A.C. 327 (P.C.).

- See also the case of Trustees Corporation v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 151; 3 I.T.C. 105, referred to under section 10 (2) (xv) and Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Sarangpur Cotton Co., 1938 I.T.R. 36 (P.C.).

Where a private company sold materials to an allied private company—with the same shareholders and management—at a price below the market price, and the second private company which had heavy unabsorbed depreciation at its credit and thus escaped tax, sold the materials in turn at higher prices, the Income-tax department was allowed to add, to the profits of the first company, the difference between the price at which the second company sold the materials and the price at which it bought them, East Khas Jharria Colliery v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1943 I.T.R. 299.

Where a new company took over all the assets of an old company together with stocks, paid for the assets a sum in cash and the balance in its own shares (for which it did not receive cash or any other consideration), it was held that the cash paid plus the face value of the shares in the aggregate—should be allocated—but not necessarily proportionately between the various assets including the stocks. The claim of the company that the market-value of the stocks which exceeded the total cash paid should be taken as the book value of the stocks was disallowed; so, also, the claim of the Crown that the true value of each asset should be ascertained and the sum of the cash and the value of the shares allocated proportionately between each item. The latter would have been all right if the commissioners had materials before them as to the true value of the other items which they did not have. They could only decide on the materials before them and they valued the stocks at a little less than the cash paid. Their conclusion was one of fact and the Court declined to interfere, Osborne v. Steel Barrel Co., 1942 C.A.

Foreign income—Constructive receipt of.—An assessee cannot keep accounts in one way for his own convenience and claim to have his profits computed in a different way for assessment to income-tax Commissioner of Income-tax v. A. T. K. P. L. S. P. Subramaniam Chettiar, 50 Mad. 765; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 841; 2 I.T.C. 365. An assessee had a business of his own in Rangoon and a business, in partnership, at Penang. Money was transferred from Rangoon to Penang, and interest was adjusted in the books at Rangoon as having been received from Penang. He claimed on the authority of Gresham Life Assurance v. Bishop, 4 Tax Cases 464; (1901) 1 K.B. 153, that the money representing the interest had not in fact been received in British India. The claim was not upheld. The ratio decidendi was that according to the assessee's own method of book-keeping it was clear that there had been a constructive receipt, and that according to the method of keeping accounts it was immaterial whether the creditor was in British India or abroad. Following the above ruling it was held by the same High Court, S. V. L. L. Lakshmanan Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 58 M.L.J. 68; 4 I.T.C. 200, that even if the debtor is outside British India and the interest is not physically brought therein, the interest is taxable if it has fallen due and been credited in the accounts of the assessee as received. Where an assessee had for many years treated as profits, and paid tax thereon, amounts credited by a foreign branch to headquarters in British India but claimed in a later year that these book entries did not represent any actual bringing into British India—especially in view of the headquarters books showing no corresponding entries—it was held that, as the books were on the mercantile system, the profits were taxable even if not brought into British India and that under section 13 the method of accounting regularly employed could not be altered so as to prejudice the revenue, Kanwalnen Hamir Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1938 I.T.R. 675 (All.). In none of these cases does it seem to have been considered whether a rule of computation of income (section 13), i.e., as to when profits arise can be used to extend a rule (section 4) which regulates the nature of income liable to tax with reference to where the income arises.

Though it is common among Chetti firms, while purporting to charge interest on loans to branches from the head office and showing such interest in the accounts, never in fact to recover such interest, which is calculated pro forma only in order to settle the commission payable to the branch agents, yet, if it is found that, in fact, interest is paid by a foreign branch to the head office or a branch in British India, such interest is taxable, A.R.A.R.S.M. Somasundaram Chettiyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 2 I.T.C. 61; 54 M.L.J. 436; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 487.

Profits—When arising.—The following dicta on the question when profits arise may be noted.

"As regards the question of when a profit is earned, their Lordships' view is that a profit can be said to be earned when it is dealt with as a profit. In ordinary cases, this synchronises with the realization of the sums which swell the assets of the person or company, and which, entering the account (whether on the creditor or debtor side, will depend on the particular account in view), go to bring out the balance which is deemed profit. But, for the reasons already given, their Lordships think that in a case like this, the company are entitled to hold at least a part of their realizations in suspense—as indeed they have done in their accounts—and that it is only when finally the same is given to the shareholders that the final impress of profit is, so to speak, stamped upon it, and that therefore, for the purposes of the Act, that is the time at which it is earned", per Lord Dunsedin in Commissioners of Taxes v. Melbourne Trust, (1914) A.C. 1001.

The above was followed by the Patna High Court in the case of Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga, 4 I.T.C. 283; 9 Pat. 240; A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 81.

"The words 'income arising or accruing' are not equivalent to the words 'debts arising or accruing'. To give them that meaning is to ignore the word 'income'. The words mean 'money arising or accruing by way of income'. There must be a coming in to satisfy the word 'income'. . . . If the tax-payer be the holder of stock of a foreign Government carrying say 5 per cent. interest, and the Government is that of a defaulting State which does not pay the interest, the tax-payer has neither received nor has there accrued to him any income in respect of that stock. A debt has accrued to him but income has not. It does not follow that income is confined to that which the tax-payer actually receives. Where income-tax is deducted at the source the tax-payer never receives the sum deducted but it accrues to him. It is said and truly that a commercial company in preparing its balance-sheet and profit and loss statement does not confine itself to its actual receipts—does not prepare a mere cash account—but values its book debts and its stock-in-trade and so on and calculates its profits accordingly. From the practice of commerce and of accountants and from the necessity of the case that is so. But this is far from establishing that income arises or accrues from (as above instanced) an investment which fails to pay the interest due". The Privy Council in St. Lucia Usines and Estates v. Colonial Treasurer of St. Lucia, 4 A.T.C. 112; (1924) A.C. 508.

The above judgment was followed in Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh's case, 4 I.T.C. 123, by the Patna High Court who saw no material difference in this respect between the Indian Statute and the law as laid down in St. Lucia's case.

In understanding Lord Wrenbury's words above that "there must be a coming in to satisfy the word 'income'", it should be noted that profits and gains, i.e., from a business, etc., are taxable though they do not exactly come in but are only estimated; so also, the value of property. But there is one essential feature in all taxable income, viz., it is in the enjoyment of the subject who could use the money if he so chose.

The question, when an assessee comes within the ambit of tax, cannot affect the date when a particular item of income arose; the latter must be ascertained independently, being the date on which it first arose to him as income irrespective of whether he was at that point of time liable to tax or not. Back v. Whitlock, 16 Tax Cases 727.

The question is what income a person has received and not what he might have received but for his own default. No one owes a duty to the State to maintain his assessment at the highest figure; and any one can give up his income—along with or without the source of that income—and till he receives that income (not necessarily in cash) he cannot be taxed on it. Still less can he be taxed if during the accounting year under assessment the income is not due to the subject (as a debt due to him) or if the sum may never be paid or received at all. A legatee, therefore, who could have claimed but did not claim, interest on his legacy from a year after the testator's death was held not to be taxable on the interest, Dewar v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1935) 2 K.B. 351; 19 Tax Cases 561 (C.A.). Similarly, an annuity not received at all in any form, i.e., over which the recipient exercised no dominion, cannot be treated as received merely because he could have asked for the money if he had chosen, Woodward v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 20 Tax Cases 673 (K.B.).

"For income-tax purposes, receivability without receipt is nothing. Before a good debt is paid, there is no such thing as income-tax upon it", per Rowlatt, J., in Leigh v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 11 Tax Cases 590; (1928) 1 K.B. 73. An unrealised decree therefore, is not taxable income even if entered in the accounts, Jagmandardas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 57 All. 737, unless the assessee's method of accounting, i.e., of computing profits takes credit for such unrealised amounts.

The St. Lucia case, however, it should be noted, was not a case of assessment of a business in respect of which an unpaid debt may be profits or gains if so treated in the assessee's system of accounting, Ramkumar Kedarnath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 261. Under the mercantile system of accounting, an item may be taxed even if not under the assessee's control in such a way as to be convertible into cash at any time, British Cotton Growers' Association v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 279.

An assessee, who had advanced (in 1913) money on simple mortgage on land, sued (in 1925) for the money, and obtained (in 1928) a compromise decree under which he was to receive a certain amount by a certain date (1931) failing which the lands were to become his. A receiver was also appointed under the decree, and the net rents collected by him were to be given to the assessee (in reduction of the amount due under the decree), who was to receive the balance from the debtor. There was default on the part of the debtor and the assessee received possession of the lands in 1933, but there was further litigation in respect of the title to the lands which was settled only in 1936. Until then, the assessee's account books showed the debt as still due from the debtor. From 1926 onwards the assessee had objected to any assessment on the interest on the ground that the profit could not be ascertained until the transaction had concluded. The Income-tax authorities assessed him on the footing that the entire profits arose in 1936 and the High Court declined to interfere. AL. VR. ST. Veerappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1941 I.T.R. 56.

See also Smyth v. Stretton, 5 Tax Cases 36; 20 T.L.R. 443 referred to under section 4 (3) (vii); Walker v. Reith, infra and cases of income from trusts referred to under sections 3 and 41 as to when a particular item becomes income of a person.

Where an employer handed over to trustees for the benefit of an employee an annual bonus from each year's profits and such bonuses were payable to the employee only on his death or on the termination of his service by the employer but not if he was dismissed for misconduct or if he assigned his interest to others, it was held by the High Court following Smyth v. Siretton, that notwithstanding the forfeitability of the bonus in certain events, the bonus became the income of the employee each year as it was paid to the trustees. Walker v. Reith, (1906) 8 F. 381; 43 Sc.L.R. 245, was distinguished because in that case the grantor desired to keep the control of the business under the trustees. This view, however, was not accepted by the Court of Appeal, Edwards v. Roberts, 19 Tax Cases 618. In Smyth v. Siretton, the masters received a salary from which a contribution was compulsorily recovered; so, the contribution was treated as part of the salary. In this case, on the other hand, the additional payment (bonus) was contingent on many events and could be taxed only when paid.

Receipts in kind and valuation of assets.—In Scottish and Canadian General Investment Company v. Easson, 8 Tax Cases 265; 59 Sc.L.R. 248, a company held certain mortgage bonds the coupons on which were not paid. The debtor company gave place to a new company, and the creditor company surrendered its bonds and received debentures in the new company, a part of which were assumed by the Commissioners to represent interest on the old bonds. Held, that no objection having been raised before the Commissioners, the Court had no materials on which to question the finding of the Commissioners.

" the price took form of fully paid-up shares in another company but if there can be no realised profit except when that is paid in cash, the shares were realisable and could have been turned into cash. Suppose a seller made a profit on a trade transaction but leaves the price in the hands of the buyer. at interest. That would not affect the claim of the Revenue for the tax payable on the profit."—Per Lord Trayner in Californian Copper Syndicate v. Harris, 5 Tax Cases 159, 167.

The P.C. has held in the Darbhanga case, 1933 I.T.C. 94 that a liability to pay interest, like any other liability to make a payment, can be satisfied by the transference of assets other than cash, and a receipt in kind can be taxable income. But it is essential that what is received should be money's worth, (approving Californian Copper Syndicate v. Harris and Scottish and Canadian General Investment Co. v. Easson).

A company effected an exchange of securities under an amalgamation scheme. On the date of exchange, the new securities had a lower market value than the old ones, and the question arose whether the company could claim any loss on the exchange even though it did not actually realise the investments. The claim was allowed on the ground that the transaction was on a money basis, the securities having an ascertainable value and the loss being susceptible therefore of exact estimation in money, Royal Insurance Co. v. Stephen, 14 Tax Cases 22; 44 T.L.R. 630.

Where a Bank converted one kind of Government securities into another, the House of Lords held that the conversion was "the exact equivalent of what would have taken place, had instructions been given to sell the original stock and invest the proceeds in the new security". The profit on conversion was therefore taxable, Westminster Bank v. Osler, 17 Tax Cases 381; (1933) A.C. 139.

A building company sold certain houses partly for cash and partly for a "ground annual", and it was held that the capitalised (i.e., the selling market) value of the "ground annual" being "money's worth" should be brought into account for working out the profits. The company's claim was that only the actual collection every year on account of the "ground annual" should be considered.

Per Lord Atkin.—"The result is not that they exchange part of their stock for a different kind of stock but that they dispose of the whole of their stock for money plus money's worth."

Per Lord Thankerton.—" . . . it is clear that "ground annuals" such as these have a well-known market value and that they are constantly traded in and in that respect they seem at least as good money's worth as any ordinary security quoted on the Stock Exchange, . . . if part of the price paid for the land and buildings consisted of money's worth, the market value of which is immediately ascertainable, I fail to see why that should not be brought into computation in the ordinary accounts of the trade for bringing out the results of the year's trading", Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Emery & Sons, 15 A.T.C. 241 (H.L.); 20 Tax Cases 213; (1937) A.C. 91.

In Emery's case, it should be noted, the builder disposed of his entire interest, but where he retains an interest of a real and substantial character, the houses which form the stock-in-trade of the builder can only be brought into account at cost price or market value, whichever is lower, and only the rent of the year can be taken into the Revenue or Trading account. When he parts with all the interest the sale proceeds, both of the reversion and the right to collect ground-rent should be brought into the trading account. Therefore where a speculative builder built houses on freehold land, and among other transactions leased some of the houses on 99 year leases and the question arose whether credit should be taken at once for the present value of the ground rents, it was held by the House of Lords, agreeing with the Court of Appeal and disagreeing with Macnaghten, J., and the Special Commissioners, that credit should not be so taken. There was no difference of opinion as to premia (not based on a peppercorn rent) being taxable as income in the year of receipt, Hughes v. Utting & Co., 19 A.T.C. 53. Where there is a trade in land and chief rent is reserved, such rent should be valued and brought in as a receipt of the trade, Beattie v. Broadbridge and others, 1944 K.B.D.

Where a builder acquired land for his business, partly freehold and partly leasehold (on long leases), and after developing the land and building houses thereon sold the houses on lease for a cash premium plus a ground rent or a higher ground rent as the case may be, the question arose whether the ground rents and improved ground rents could be taxed before realisation, and it was held that they should be treated as trading stocks and valued in accordance with Emery's case, 20 Tax Cases 213. Heatherr v. G & J. A. Redfern and others, 26 Tax Cases 119 (K.B.D.).

A company built houses and sold them to poor persons with the help of a building society, the arrangements being as follows: An out-and-out conveyance is made to the purchaser for (say) £595, of which £20 is paid by him and the building society takes a mortgage on the house for £575. But, since such a society will not advance more than a certain fraction of the value of the house, it pays the company only £501 2|3. The company agrees to guarantee the society £150, and as a concession, is allowed to deposit £73 1|3 with the society—at 4 per cent. interest—as guarantee. The security is retained by the society till the mortgage loan is reduced to £300. The question arose whether the deposit of £73 1|3 should be taken as an asset at its full value in assessing the company's profits; and it was held by the Court of Appeal that in view of its contingent nature, since it was not returnable in certain events, it should be estimated as an asset, not necessarily at its full face value. The House of Lords confirmed this decision subject to the condition that, if an estimation was not possible, the sums deposited with the society should not be treated as trading receipts except to the extent to which they were released to the company during the accounting period in question, John Cronk & Sons v. Harrison, 20 Tax Cases 612 (H.L.); (1937) A.C. 185.

This, however, does not mean that a debt which can be valued should be kept out of account altogether and left over to be considered at the time of realisation. So, where an assessee, a builder and dealer in properties, having bought a plot of land for £37,500, formed a private company with two other persons and transferred the property to the company for £50,000, £12,500 (the assessee's profit) being inter alia, treated as a loan due to the assessee from the company, and eventually, the company did not realise the expected profit and the assessee did not receive what was due to him, the Court disallowed the claim of the assessee that the £12,500 should not be taken into account at the time of credit to him of the loan, in computing his taxable income for that period. The debt was like any other trading book debt and there was no reason why it should not be included, of course at its proper valuation. In this case, there was no evidence at that time that the debt was bad or doubtful, Lock v. Jones, 1942 I. T. R. (Sup.) 153 (K. B. D.). A speculative builder erected small houses which the purchasers bought, first with advances from a building society which had the first mortgage over the houses and then with a further loan from a builder to cover the difference between the cost and the advance by the society, this loan being covered either by a second mortgage or promissory note. The question arose whether these debts covered by the second mortgage or promissory note should be valued from time to time (following Cronk & Son's Case) or as trading book debts, i.e., at full value less allowance for bad debts and it was held that they were book debts. In the Cronk & Son's Case, the subject matter of the valuation was not anything provided by the purchaser, but a deposit by the vendor in favour of the building society which deposit might become irrecoverable by the vendor whereas in this case the debt was due from the purchaser to the vendor and was a debt pure and simple, Absolson v. Talbot, 1944 T.R. 195 (H.L.). A loan by an insolvent company to a building society, advanced as such and carrying interest, even though the latter may be waived in certain circumstances, does not cease to be a loan merely because it is open to the debtor to repay the loan cum interest by a transfer of groundrents, and does not make the transaction one of purchase of property. Therefore, the difference between the value of groundrents received and the loan is taxable profit. It was argued unsuccessfully by the assessee that the transaction was one of purchase of property and that in any case the profit had not been realised, Ruskin Investments, Ltd. v. Copeman, 25 Tax Cas. 187; (1943) 1 All.E.R. 378 (C.A.).

An assessee who dealt in stocks and shares used to adjust his losses and gains only when the shares, etc., were finally sold. A company whose shares he possessed was reconstructed and reduced shares of a smaller value were allotted to the shareholders in lieu of the previous shares. The assessee claimed on the analogy of the Royal Insurance case, 14 Tax Cases 22 that he should be allowed the loss on the change of value of shares but the claim was disallowed, Bansilal Abirchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 6 I.T.C. 318.

The privilege of subscribing for shares at less than the true or market value—even if the privilege is not transferable—is a taxable profit in so far as it can be turned into money. The rule in Tennont v. Smith, 3 Tax Cases 158; (1892) A.C. 150, applies only to privileges that cannot be turned into money, Salmon v. Wright, 13 A.T.C. 292 (C.A.).

If a lessor receives part of the rent in kind, e.g., coal, he should include the value thereof in his account of rent, Hatherton v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 15 A.T.C. 173; Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Baillie, 20 Tax Cases 187; (1936) S.C. 438. Regarding receipt of agricultural income in kind, see notes under section 2 (1) and Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Mathias, 1937 I.T.R. 435 on appeal to the P.C. 1939 I.T.R. 49 and Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Kyauktaga Grant, Ltd., 1937 I.T.R. 580.

Where a money-lender takes over property deliberately at an agreed valuation in satisfaction of his debts, and not at an arbitrary or fictitious figure, he is bound by that value, the more especially in an assessment made under section 23 (4), Naba Kumar Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1944 I.T.R. 327.

Where a debt is discharged partly by payment either in kind (money's worth) or in cash and partly by a fresh evidence of debt (promissory note), the latter is not 'income'. Receiving an I.O.U. is not like receiving a house or jewellery; in the former case the debtor's liability still remains while in the latter it does not, Maharajahdiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 9 Pat. 240; 4 I.T.C. 283 (approved by Privy Council). An I.O.U. is merely a document or a voucher of debt possessing certain legal attributes. To give security for a debt is not to pay it; the giving of better or additional security makes no difference. When therefore a mortgage was substituted by another, the grantors being different and the property mortgaged being larger, it was held by the Privy Council that the discharge of the old mortgage was only an incident in the substitution of one security by another and that there was no realisation either of capital or of interest at the time of such substitution, Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1933 I.T.R. 113; 64 M.L.J. 544; A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 101.

In Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh's case, the accounts were on a cash basis and the assessee did not regard the interest on the old mortgage as having been liquidated by the execution and delivery to him of the new mortgage. Further, his accounts did not show the interest under the old loan as having been received or paid. In the Darbhangha case, there was an arrangement affecting the whole indebtedness whereby certain assets were accepted in part satisfaction and promissory notes were taken for the balance; there was no continuous or open account and the general rule therefore prevailed that the giving of a promissory note did not amount to payment. Where, however, the assessee himself regards the delivery of the fresh promissory note as amounting to a liquidation of the claim to interest on the old loan and his books also record the transactions to the same effect, the interest is taxable as income, V. S. U. R. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1935 I.T.R. 158. Similarly, where a debtor gave a promissory note in payment of interest on an existing debt and such note was accepted in settlement of the interest, the creditor showing in his accounts (the interest account and the personal account of the debtor) that the item was received during the year of execution of the note it was held that the Income-tax Officer had materials on which to find that the interest had accrued to the creditor (assessee) during the year in question, M. A. L. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1935 I.T.R. 193.

Where a moneylender takes over land in satisfaction of debts due to him, the amount of debt is not a true criterion of the value of the land, which should be estimated on its merits (unless it is ascertained by actual sale during the accounting year) the excess of the value of the land over the principal, being treated as income. If there is a deficiency, no tax should be levied. But in all cases an adjustment should be made when the land is actually sold. Annual re-valuation would not be permissible since lands are not stock-in-trade of a money-lender, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. P. L. S. M. Firm, 1934 I.T.R. 417.

Where a mortgagee purchases property in a public auction in execution of his mortgage decree the price that he bids in the auction is prima facie the market-value of the property. It is open to the Income-tax Officer, however, to place a different value on it if there is evidence for that conclusion such as an admission by the assessee or the record of valuation for land cess; but there is no onus on the assessee and any failure on his part to produce evidence cannot be taken as conclusive of the property being worth more. The fact that the mortgagee delayed suing or that he sued for the full amount and paid court-fees, etc., thereon are at best only suspicious and cannot justify an enhancement of the value of the property, Bishwanath Singh Sharma v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., I.T.R. 474.

Whatever a debtor's right to allocate payments by him as between interest and principal, where a creditor takes over property in satisfaction of his debts, the excess of the purchase price (or value) of the property over the principal represents interest. In re Lachhmandas Brijvallabdas, 1942 I.T.R. 186 (All.).

Where an assessee bought certain lands outside a big town with borrowed money and developed a suburban area out of a part of these lands, spending money on wells, a market and the like, the Income-tax Officer assessed the profits in a particular year on the basis of the area sold in that year, its original cost and a proportionate share of the development expenses. In view of the fact that three-fourths of the land were still unsold, the High Court held that there was no evidence for the conclusion of the Income-tax Officer, In re Mody, 1940 I.T.R. 179 (Bom.). All that the ruling means is that on the facts of the case, land was not stock-in-trade, and not that in every such venture, profits do not accrue until the last bit had been sold. A similar ruling was given in Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. A. K. A. R. family. 1941 I.T.R. 347, in which a money-lender took over property in settlement of a debt and sold it gradually in bits. It was held that the profits could not be ascertained until all the bits had been sold. In a Rhodesian case, British South Africa Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1946 I.T.R. (Supp.) 17, it was argued that the cost of acquiring the assets (forming the stock-in-trade), viz., various rights and concessions could not be allocated to particular assets; therefore it was claimed on the basis of expert evidence and of an arrangement with the British Revenue authorities, that no profits should be considered to arise until the total cost had first been recouped by sales and that thereafter the sale proceeds should be taxed in full as profits. The Privy Council rejected this claim. The real point, in such cases, is that, whether a cash or an accrued system is adopted, stock in trade must be valued on a reasonable basis on the last day of closing the accounts and profit deduced on the basis of that valuation.

An assessee purchased an annuity, and later on released the annuity company from a part of its obligation in return for its paying certain insurance premia on the life of the assessee, and it was held that the payments made by the annuity company to the insurance company were the assessee's income being money's worth, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Lord Forster, 19 Tax Cases 738.

W bought a farm for his son and the farm became valuable as building land. Not thinking it wise to hand over the whole of the property to his son for development, he arranged with two friends O and B to convey the property to them jointly with W junior. The conveyance stated the price to be £15,000 but simultaneously O and B undertook to pay to W junior £25,000 as and when they resold the whole of the property. The £15,000 was provided by O and B. It was held that the cost of the property was £40,000, the liability to pay £25,000 to W junior being a valuable obligation, Bennett, Oswald and Worsett v. Bennett, 16 A.T.C. 142 (K.B.).

During the War, dividends and interest, on shares and securities belonging to a British subject were paid on his account to certain German banks which held the securities, and were duly authorised to receive the monies as his agents. Held, that such dividends accrued or arose when paid to such banks even though not available to the owner because of wartime restrictions and not when actually received by him after the Peace Treaty or when the embargoes were removed. On the other hand when interest on foreign bearer bonds (Budapest City) was payable in London in sterling but under a decree of the Hungarian Government was paid only through the Hungarian National Bank and only to the extent that money was required for use in that country, and a holder of the interest coupons sold them for what they could fetch in the London Market, it was held that the owner had received no interest which could be taxed as income; what had been received was the value of the expectation of interest, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Paget, 16 A.T.C. 318 (K.B.): 17 A.T.C. 1 (C.A.). Again, where a defaulting Government offered certain alternatives to its bondholders and a holder, without accepting any of the alternatives, sold his interest coupons in the market, it was held that the sale proceeds did not constitute the receipt of interest, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Paget, 16 A.T.C. 318 (K.B.): 17 A.T.C. 1 (C.A.). In all such cases, no doubt if the holder traded in these coupons, he would be taxable.

Again, when another defaulting Government issued funding bonds and a holder accepted these bonds and sold them, it was held that, while the value of the bonds, being money's worth, should be brought into the account to work out profit and loss, the receipt could not be taxed in itself as interest, since a creditor does not receive payment of interest merely from the debtor's promise to pay, Cross v. London Provincial Trust, 17 A.T.C. 15 (C.A.). If the holder is not a trader in such bonds, all that he receives will be merely a capital asset in lieu of the interest lost.

The last two rulings referred to (Cross and Paget cases) have been largely nullified by the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1938 permitting the taxation of the value of interest coupons sold separately from the bonds to which they relate.

Where, in lieu of a dividend, a company issues a certificate of debt redeemable at a later date, the payments are income of the shareholder when actually paid and not when the certificates are issued; for a promise to pay at a future date is not the same as payment. The company, in this case, had made profits but did not have the necessary cash, and being unwilling to borrow, issued these certificates so as to fix the dividend rights of the shareholders and make those rights marketable. Associated Insulation Products v. Golar, 1944 C.A.

Interest—Added to principal.—If compound interest is payable to a creditor, and the interest is added to the principal periodically, no payment being made to the creditor either in cash or by credit in the debtor's accounts, such interest is not taxable, Board of Revenue v. Pydah Venkatachalapathy Garu, 1 I.T.C. 185; A.I.R. 1922 M. 426. This decision was given under the old Act, in which there was no section corresponding to the present section 13. According to the present Act, the taxability of such interest would depend on how the assessee, the creditor, treats it in his accounts, Haji Sheikh Ahmad Din v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 367. If nothing can be deduced clearly from the method of accounting adopted by the assessee, the Income-tax Officer is the sole arbiter to decide the question, and no question of law can arise though the assessee can appeal in the usual course against the Income-tax Officer's decision. A money-lender usually finds it convenient to keep accounts on a 'cash' basis and not on the 'mercantile' or 'accrued' basis. The mere fact that interest is added to the accounts of the debtors at the end of each year will not in itself make the accounts "mercantile", see Sethi Nanhele's case, 3 I.T.C. 28; A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 241 and Chitnavis' case, 3 I.T.C. 321; A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 50. The mere conclusion of a contract yields no immediate profit. The test is whether interest has become due in such a manner that the creditor can receive it if he desires or has in fact been received in some form or other, if not in cash, at least in kind or by adjustment. Interest on a deposit with a banker which the latter had credited in favour of the depositor and could have been drawn by the depositor at any time has been held to have accrued to the depositor, Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. v. Bhikam Chand Lakshmi Chand, 7 I.T.C. 184.

If a money-lender who keeps his accounts on a cash basis takes a fresh bond from his debtor in lieu of the old one plus accrued interest, the new bond does not bring any income to the creditor at the time of substitution of the bond. Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 101; 64 M.L.J. 544; 1933 I.T.R. 113 (P.C.). Under a mercantile system of accounting, the converse need not necessarily happen. For example transactions might be passed through a suspense head before being taken to Profit and Loss. Compare the observations in Commissioners of Taxes v. Melbourne Trust, (1914) A.C. 1001. If however, the assessee not only adds the interest to the debit against the debtor but takes the credit to his own personal account or the profit and loss account (either through an interest account or otherwise), the interest will be part of his taxable income, see Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Shrimathi Singari Bai, 1945 I.T.R. 224 (All.) overruling Jagmandar Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1935 I.T.R. 140 (All.). So much depends in all such cases on the conduct of the assessee as reflected in his book-keeping and method of computing profits for his own purposes though he must not keep his books in such a manner as to obscure the true profits for the period in question.

In Narayanan Chetti v. Suppayya Chetti, 43 Mad. 629 it was held that if money is deposited on the understanding that interest is added on to capital at each 'rest' and the principal plus interest treated as a fresh deposit. Article 60 (and not Article 63) of the Limitation Act applied to the recovery of the interest, i.e., three years from the date of demand—the interest becoming a deposit when it is added on to capital—and not three years from the date when interest became due. Following the above it was held in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Pethaperumal Chetty, 3 I.T.C. 278; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 34; 55 M.L.J. 850 and S. V. L. L. Lakshmanan Chettyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 421; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 675; 57 M.L.J. 60 that interest on deposits of the kind mentioned above should for income-tax purposes be treated as having been received and added to the principal. The distinguishing feature between these deposits (peculiar among Nattukottai Chetties) and ordinary cases of compound interest is that in the latter the principal continues to be the original sum advanced while in the former the interest is constructively received at each rest and merged in the principal.

In order to claim an allowance in respect of interest paid on borrowed capital, it must be interest paid during the year of account—either in cash or by adjustment. The real criterion in determining when the interest is paid depends not so much on the formal method of book-keeping adopted by the assessee as on the arrangements for payment of interest between the assessee and his creditor. Held, accordingly, in the case of a loan in which at the end of each rest the income became merged in the capital, that the interest was paid at the end of each rest, J. P. Pethaperumal Chetti v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 34; 3 I.T.C. 278.

It was held in the United Kingdom, In re Cravens Mortgage: Davies v. Craven, (1907) 2 Ch. 448—an Income-tax case—that accumulated interest on a mortgage was taxable in so far as it had not been made capital by contract between the parties.

In In re Morris: Mayhew v. Halton, (1922) 1 Ch. 126 (C. of A.)—also an Income-tax case—it was held that compound interest with periodical rests, though loosely spoken of as the periodical capitalisation of interest, does not really make the interest capital. For the convenience of book-keeping the sums accruing as interest periodically may be added to capital, but they are really overdue interest on which further interest is paid and cannot become capital until after the loan account between the creditor and debtor has been adjusted and the creditor has received the interest—either in cash or by adjustment—and actually capitalised it, e.g., by re-investment. Doubts were also expressed whether a mere contract between the debtor and creditor to make interest capital would make it such for Income-tax purposes.

The two United Kingdom rulings referred to above were followed by the Patna High Court in Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh's case, 9 Pat. 48; 4 I.T.C. 123.

A moneylender's books consisted of the debtor's personal accounts in which the interest due was entered every year as also the interest received, and there was no separate interest account or profit and loss account bringing together in one place the total interest or profits of the business. There was also a cash book but no interest ledger or account. Every year the assessee moneylender totalled the figures of accrued interest and returned the total as his profits but in one year he changed his mind and claimed to be taxed on the basis of realisations. The Income-tax department objected to the claim on the ground that the assessee attempted to change his method of accounting. Terrell, C.J., thought that the assessee had not regularly employed any method of accounting and that his request involved no change in the basis of accounting but only in that of assessment; he also thought that interest accrued but not realised should be assessed only if taken credit for in a Profit and Loss Account, Macpherson and Agarwala, JJ., however held that the assessee had regularly employed a particular method of accounting though unscientific, and had taken all accrued interest into account in computing his profits; the Income-tax Department, therefore, were not wrong in holding him to his own system of accounting, Dhakeswar Prasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1936 I.T.R. 71.

In connection with capitalisation of interest, a question arises in the United Kingdom (but not in India except possibly in respect of payment to non-residents) as between the payer and the payee whether the payment is in truth interest or not; for if it is interest, the payer can deduct tax and if it is capital he cannot. The substance of the course of decisions appears to be that if only the net annual payments (i.e., less tax) are added on and capitalised, tax cannot be deducted again at the time of a later settlement; otherwise if the gross interest is added on, tax can be deducted at the time of final payment.

Allocation between Principal and Interest.—Where interest is outstanding on a principal sum due and the creditor receives an open payment from the debtor, without any appropriation of the payment as between principal and interest by either creditor or debtor, the presumption is that the payment is attributable in the first instance towards the outstanding interest, In re Gopiram Gobindram, 1936 I.T.R. 157 (Cal.). In a question with the Revenue, the tax-payer is entitled to appropriate payments as between capital and interest in the manner least disadvantageous to himself; and if a certain debt is settled by the acceptance of certain assets in part satisfaction of the debt and of a promissory note for the balance the basis of the presumption, viz., that it is to the creditor's advantage to allocate payments in the first place to interest, leaving the interest-bearing capital outstanding, automatically disappears, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v. Maharajadhiraj of Dharbhanga, 12 Pat. 318; 1933 I.T.R. 94 (P.C.); see also Cross v. London and Provincial Trust, Ltd., 1938 I.T.R. 112. Where the deed relating to the debt definitely stipulates that moneys paid should be first appropriated towards interest and the balance only, if any, towards principal, the Income-tax authorities are entitled to assume that appropriation has in fact been so made, Venkatadri Appa Row Parthasaradhi Appa Rao, 48 I.A. 150; 44 Mad. 570 (P.C.).

If the creditor can show that in spite of a large balance being legally recoverable it had been necessary to close the account and the account had in fact been closed, he might reasonably claim to balance the total receipts first against capital and the remainder only against interest, Maharajadhiraj of Dharbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 283; 9 Pat. 240.

There is no rule of law that in all cases there is an absolute or universal right to attribute interest payments to income if there is any income available.

The actual facts in each case must be examined; the receipt must be neutral; the attribution, as between principal and interest, must not be inconsistent with the evidence; and the conduct of the tax payer must not be inconsistent with the attribution, Paton (trustee for Fenton) v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 15 A.T.C. 11 (C.A.); 17 A.T.C. 57 (H.L.). As regards capitalisation of interest generally, and in particular as to when income may be said to accrue on this account, there are, in addition to the rulings already cited, a number of rulings in the United Kingdom, not altogether consistent with each other and resting largely on rather subtle and even obscure, distinctions based on the facts of each case, e.g., Earl of Carnarvon v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 19 Tax Cases 455; Marland v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 19 Tax Cases 467 (overruled in Lawrence Graham's case, 17 A.T.C. 105); Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Holder, (1931) 2 K.B. 81; 16 Tax Cases 540 (overruled in Paton's Case); Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Haddington, 8 Tax Cases 711; (1924) 61 Sc.L.R. 356; Leigh v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1928) 1 K.B. 73; 11 Tax Cases 590; Lambe v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1934) 1 K.B. 178; 18 Tax Cases 212; Grey v. Tiley, 16 Tax Cases 414; Champney's Executors v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 19 Tax Cases 375 (C.A.); Bishop v. Belfield; and Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Lawrence Graham & Co., 17 A.T.C. 105 (C.A.).

A further complication under the United Kingdom law in respect of some of these cases is the right of the payer of certain kinds of 'annual' payments to deduct income-tax from the payments, and as a consequence, the spreading back, in certain cases, of such payments over past years, because they relate back to the events of earlier years. See also English Dairies, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, 11 Tax Cases 597; and Rownson Drew and Clydesdale v. Ditto, 16 Tax Cases 595.

In Holder's case, (1931) 2 K.B. 81; 16 Tax Cases 540, the Court of Appeal had misunderstood, Reddie v. Williamson, (1863) 1 Macpherson 228. The practice of bankers adding interest half yearly to overdraft accounts is, historically, only an ingenious device to circumvent old usury laws against compound interest; and irrespective of whether or not, as between banker and customer, the accrued interest has been merged in capital and ceased to be recoverable as interest, it is not paid by the customer within the meaning of the Income-tax Acts. Further, the fact that the bank treats such interest as income for its income-tax does not necessarily lead to the inference that the customer had paid it for the purpose of ascertaining his income, Paton (trustee for Fenton) v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 15 A.T.C. 11 (C.A.); 17 A.T.C. 57 (H.L.). The position in respect of capitalised interest in the United Kingdom has been elucidated by a recent ruling of the House of Lords. Inland Revenue v. Oswald, (1945) 1 All.E.R. 641; in which it was held that unpaid interest which is added to capital is not taxable. Per Lord Macmillan. "The option to capitalise is an option to exact compound interest. . . ."

But if the interest is not paid no right or duty to deduct tax arises. . . . the unpaid interest never ceases to retain its character as interest, although it has from time to time been added to the capital indebtedness and has carried interest in turn. . . . All this is in exact consonance with the view of Lord Sterndale in In re Morris, (1922) 1 Ch. 126"; per Lord Porter. "I do not find myself able to distinguish in principle between that case (Paton v. Inland Revenue, 1938 A.C. 341, 17 A.T.C. 57) and the one the House is now considering. In each case there is a debt and in each case there is a contract under which in default of payment a so called capitalisation of interest takes place. It is true that in the one case the contract is constituted by the custom of bankers and in the other by a deed of mortgage, but the substance though not the machinery is the same". Per Lord Simonds. "The question in the simplest terms is whether, when the mortgagee capitalises interest, the mortgagor pays it; and the answer in terms as simple, is that the mortgagee capitalises it just because the mortgagor does not pay it. It is not a form of payment, it is not a substitute for payment; the interest remains unpaid, but it is impressed with a new quality, viz., that it carries interest as if it were capital. The interest was already charged on the security; it adds nothing to speak of it as a capital charge. I will assume that a mortgagee may accept in full satisfaction of interest something that is not money but money's worth. But that does not justify the further assumption in the reasoning of the Court of Appeal that capitalisation of interest is payment of interest. The judgment followed Paton v. Inland Revenue, already referred to and the Privy Council ruling in Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Income-tax Commissioner, (1933) 60 I.A. 133; 1 I.T.R. 113.

Where a debtor appropriated, in his own books, certain payments, to interest but did not communicate any instructions to the creditor, who merely credited the account to the personal account of the debtor, and subsequently the debtor reversed the entries in his books claiming in a particular year the interest as a deduction from the profits of his business and the next year as a deduction from his income from house property, the Income-tax Authorities held that the debtor was in collusion with the creditor and that the creditor must have known that he unappropriated payments were meant for interest. The Court saw no justification for such an inference. It was to the debtor's advantage that a payment should be credited to principal rather than to interest and whatever manipulations the debtor might have made in his books could not by themselves support an inference that the creditor assessee had received instructions to take credit for interest. In re Khairatilal Babulall, 1941 I.T.R. 627 (All.). Where one of two judgment-debtors paid a sum in full satisfaction of his liability, viz., half the costs, half the principal and half the interest, the Income-tax authorities appropriated the greater part of the amount to interest in the accounts of the creditor (assessee) on the ground that the assessee had made no appropriation in his books. The Court disallowed the claim of the Income-tax department and ruled that only half the interest as paid by the debtor representing his share of the liability was taxable, Siddhesvar Prasad Narain Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1942 I.T.R. 344.

Mortgagee—Decree-holder—Purchase by—Interest—Adjustment of.—When a mortgagee who is a decree-holder buys the property, with the permission of the Court, there are really two separate transactions, viz., the purchase of the property and the repayment of the debt. Order 21, rule 72 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code provides that "the purchase money and the amount due on the decree. . . . may be set-off against one another and the Court executing the decree shall enter up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part accordingly". The mortgagee cannot therefore claim that he has not received any interest and that all that he has received is the property, i.e., capital, Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh and another v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 123, following Scottish and Canadian General Investment Co. v. Easson, 59 Sc.L.R. 248; 8 Tax Cases 265 and Californian Copper Syndicate v. Harris, 6 F. 894; 5 Tax Cases 167. The purchase price of the property should be apportioned between principal and interest the excess of purchase price over the principal sum of the mortgage being considered a payment of interest, Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1933 I.T.R. 113; 64 M.L.J. 544; A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 101 (P.C.); see also Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Maharajadhiraj of Dharbhanga, 1933 I.T.R. 94; 12 Pat. 318 (P.C.). It would not be correct in such cases to allocate first to interest. In the absence of evidence to the contrary the purchase price must be taken to represent market value, Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1933 I.T.R. 113; 64 M.L.J. 544; A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 101 (P.C.); see also Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v. Maharajadhiraj of Dharbhanga, 1933 I.T.R. 94; 12 Pat. 318 (P.C.).

The profits or gains arising to a mortgagee from the buying in of mortgaged property, accrue not on the date of decree nor on the date of sale, nor on the date of delivery of possession but on the date on which the sale becomes absolute. The decree is only a step towards realisation. On the date of sale, the purchaser has no indefeasible right, since the sale can be set aside. The fact that when the sale becomes absolute the property vests in the purchaser retrospectively makes no difference, Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1933 I.T.R. 113 (P.C.). Where a mortgagee takes over property in satisfaction of his principal and interest, the interest accrues to him, not when he gets possession of the property, but when the conveyance of sale is made and he gets his title. In re Kunjamal & Sons, 1941 I.T.R. 358 (All.).

Loss—Shares.—The loss sustained by a dealer in shares arising from the winding up of a company in which he holds shares should be claimed at the time of winding up when the shares lose value, and not either before or after, Bansilal Abirchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 6 I.T.C. 318.

Reserves—Distributed as profits.—In 1918, a company set aside Rs. 1,00,000 in its accounts as a Reserve for bad and doubtful debts; in 1922, the Reserve was distributed as profit. The Company contended that the sum in question was profit of the year 1918, and that, having escaped assessment then was, under section 34, not liable to tax in 1922, more than one year having elapsed. Held, that the sum was liable to tax.

"At the end of any given year of any Company's working, unless the business has been wound up, there must always be certain items in suspense—items of cash which are not yet due to the company or which have not yet been recovered. At the end of the year some of those items may be regarded by the company as good; some as bad; some as doubtful; and if the company places on the debit side a certain sum to meet the contingency that some of these debts will prove irre-coverable, that sum is not a profit but a liability, and the amount of profits arrived at after deduction of that sum is reduced by that very amount. In fact, the sum of Rs. 1,00,000 in question, though part of the income in 1918, was not profit; it was not shown as profit in the accounts; it was not treated as profit by the company; and it did not really become profit until the doubtful debts against which it was set were recovered. It was not treated as profit, nor did it become real profit until 1922, when it was incorporated as such in the company's accounts. When a business is a cash business, and accounting is not kept in the mercantile fashion, no provision is made for bad debts, but when the mercantile system of accountancy is followed, provision is invariably made for bad and doubtful debts". In re the Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co., Ltd., 8 Lah. 269; 2 I.T.C. 439.

Against the above decision the assessee applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council but was refused such leave, (ibid.).

Devices to conceal income.—Where, as a consequence of a device adopted by an assessee, e.g., fictitious cross entries, income escaped assessment in a particular year, such income cannot be taxed automatically, i.e., without reference to the provisions of section 34, in later years, when detected except to the extent that, in accordance with the assessee's regular system of accounting, if one is so employed, it may be possible to attribute income to the year of detection instead of the year of escape, In re Ratanchand Lallumal, 1936 I.T.R. 189 (All.).

Double taxation of same sums.—If a person has been taxed in one year in respect of book debts owing to him, he cannot again be taxed on the same sums of money when the debts are received in cash in a later year. A man cannot be taxed twice in respect of the same sum, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Sarvarayadu, 2 I.T.C. 208. The assessee is entitled to show that the income, etc., included in the later assessment was included in the earlier one, and it is a question of fact to be decided on the evidence whether it was so included. The Income-tax authorities must apply their minds to the materials placed before them, and it is not open to them to argue a priori that there can be no double assessment because the earlier assessment was made on a mere estimate, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. C. T. V. S. Chettiyar Firm, 4 I.T.C. 160.

Where an assessee's basis of accounting is changed over from an accrued basis to a cash basis, there may be items which are taxed twice over—once in the preceding year and again in the current year. Where the basis itself is not in dispute, there is no provision in the law under which the assessee can claim the exclusion of the item from the second assessment unless a claim can be made under section 48-A, In re Amritsar Produce Exchange, 1937 I.T.R. 307 (Lah.). Section 48-A has been since repealed and merged in section 48; see notes under that section.

It has also been held in a Scottish case, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Morrison, 17 Tax Cases 325; (1932) S.C. 639, that when an assessee changes over from an "earnings" basis to a "cash" basis, he cannot claim to exclude in the second year items which were due to him at the end of the first year. A tax is not paid on particular items of a profit and loss account but on the profits and gains of the business as a whole in a given year; and on the 'earnings' basis, book debts are only one factor taken into account in estimating profits and gains. The exclusion of such items from the profits of later years is therefore only a concession.

In the case of a moneylender whose accounts had been kept substantially on the mercantile basis, the Income-tax Department decided to tax income for several years on the cash basis, as a consequence of the ruling in Chitnavis' case, 3 I.T.C. 321. The assessee, later on, offered to be taxed on the mercantile basis if the Income-tax Officer excluded certain untaxed items of preceding years and received the tax on other previously untaxed items in instalments. The accounts had all along been kept on the same basis, viz., mercantile, and the change had only been in respect of the basis of assessment. The Income-tax Officer did not accept the assessee's conditions but nevertheless added to the current assessment the amounts that had not been taxed in earlier years. It was held that, in the absence of the unqualified acceptance of the assessee the Income-tax Officer could tax 'escaped' income only in accordance with section 34, Amritwaman v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1937 I.T.R. 721.

In Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Madan, 1945 I.T.R. 1 by an unusual case, a company had for several years wrongly deducted tax from dividends and was compelled by a court to repay such tax. The question arose whether such repayment was taxable in the shareholder's hands as dividend and the appellate tribunal found as a fact that during the years when tax had been wrongly deducted by the company, the shareholder had been assessed on a 'gross' dividend which was higher than the 'net' dividend plus the tax deducted. Consequently the repaid tax could not be taxed as a new dividend at the time of repayment. The High Court declined to interfere on the ground that the question was one of fact.

Applies only to assessments under section 23 (3).—The proviso to this section applies, strictly speaking, only to assessments made under section 23 (3). If the return of the assessee is accepted, and the assessment made under section 23 (1), no question can arise under section 13. Nor will the section apply if the assessee is in default, and as a consequence assessed under section 23 (4), inasmuch as the Income-tax Officer is not bound to follow section 13. This section in fact, adds nothing to, and takes nothing away from, section 23 (3), Gunda Subbayya v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1939 I.T.R. 21. There is nothing, however, to prevent the Income-tax Officer, even when acting under section 23 (4), from following section 13, if he has access to the assessee's accounts.

The absence of any reference in section 23 (3) to section 13 or to its substance is due partly to the fact that it would have been redundant and partly to the fact that section 13 applies only to sections 10 to 12 whereas section 23 is of general application. The only section under which an assessment can be made is section 23, and the only section which provides the method of computing profits, etc., under sections 10 to 12 is section 13. Therefore sections 13 and 23 cannot be divorced from each other. So, when making an assessment under section 23 (3) if the Income-tax Officer is not satisfied, after examining the accounts [under section 22 (4)] and the evidence produced [under section 23 (2)], it is open to him to avail himself of the provisions of section 13 if he finds that the accounts do not serve as a safe guide in calculating the assessee's profits, Gangaram Balmukund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 464. In doing so, the Income-tax Officer must take steps to procure material, if not already in possession of it, and he can call witnesses and make enquiries; and on the material before him, make an assessment to the best of his judgment. The only difference between such an assessment and one under section 23 (4) is that the method of the latter would be more summary, Gunda Subbayya v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1939 I.T.R. 21.

Section 23 deals with assessment, and section 13 with the computation of profits, one of the elements in the assessment, Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. v. Badridas Ramrai, 1939 I.T.R. 613.

The use of the proviso to section 13 can only arise in cases falling under section 23 (3). In such cases, if the accounts are rejected as to method of accounting but accepted as to facts, i.e., as being true, the need for the proviso will at once arise. The proviso merely lays down how the materials before the Income-tax Officer shall be used and has nothing to do with what the Income-tax Officer should do with information obtained by his private enquiries, Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Khemchand Ramdas, 1940 I.T.R. 159.

While it is agreed by all that where true accounts are produced but the profits are not properly deducible therefrom, the proviso operates, there is difference of opinion in respect of its applicability to cases in which the accounts are rejected as unreliable. According to one view (that of the majority in Sardar Gurmukh Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 393, which reviews most of the authorities), the proviso still applies, so long as the assessment is made under sub-section (3) of section 23 and not under sub-section (4). According to the other view, it is illogical to reject accounts as false and yet base the assessment on them though admissions made therein or inferences from them can be used by the Income-tax Officer in making the assessment. Section 23 is complete in itself, and the law deliberately says nothing as to how evidence shall be appraised and what the Income-tax Officer should do when he rejects evidence as worthless.

Flat rate profits—Estimate of.—It is under this section that assessments are made on an assumed flat rate of profits on the turnover. Such a flat assessment can be made only if the accounts kept by the assessee are such that the profits cannot be easily deduced therefrom. The basis of flat rates is obviously the previous practice and experience of the Department in regard to similar trades, Partnalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 432. The flat rate which is assumed as the basis of profits does not raise any question of law, Ferozeshah v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 4 I.T.C. 315; Asgar Ali v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Oudh, 6 I.T.C. 27. There is nothing to prevent an Income-tax Officer charging two different flat rates for two different assesseees in the same locality. No question of law is involved in this, see Dayaram Sobharam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 26. Where the principle of estimating at a flat rate is in itself not contested, the amount of profit is entirely a question of fact. Ferozeshah v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1933 I.T.R. 219 (P. C.); Ramchandra Tolba Teli v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1939 I.T.R. 151. In re Naradwip Chandra Nagendra Das, 1939 I.T.R. 488 (Cal.).

A company sold stamps through retail dealers who passed them on to purchasers of goods and when the stamps were collected and presented by the purchasers, prizes were given by the company. The profits of the company were the difference between the prices at which the stamps were sold to the retailers and the cost of organisation, printing stamps and prizes. Since the unredeemed coupons were substantial, the cash basis of accounting would have resulted in a loss in the last year of the business and the question arose what allowance should be made for the unredeemed coupons in a given year. It was held that the allowance to be made was a question of fact, Crown v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 19 Tax Cases 155.

Return—Non-acceptance of—Notice to assessee.—While under section 13 it is open to the Income-tax Officer to compute the income on such basis as he may decide if the method of accounting adopted by the assessee is irregular or such that income cannot be properly deduced from the accounts, this section does not entitle the Income-tax Officer to dispense with a notice under section 23 (2) if he does not accept the return filed by the assessee, Rampratap Sukhdial v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Delhi, 3 I.T.C. 362. That is to say, if the income as calculated by the Income-tax Officer from the accounts [produced under section 22 (4)] or any other evidence differs from that given in the return filed by the assessee, the Income-tax Officer should give the assessee an opportunity of explaining the return and producing the evidence in support of it, even though, in the end, the Income-tax Officer may have to work out the income, on his own basis, from the accounts produced or the other evidence. The notice under section 23 (2) is not bound to disclose on what basis the Income-tax Officer proposes to make the assessment.

The proviso applies only when no method of accounting has been regularly employed, or when the method is such that in the opinion of the Income-tax Officer the income cannot properly be deduced therefrom. In a case therefore in which the Income-tax Officer said nothing in his assessment order about the method of accounting employed by the assessee, but merely expressed a doubt, for which he gave no reasons, as to the genuineness of the accounts, it was held that a notice under section 23 (2) was necessary if the Income-tax Officer did not accept the return, and that in the absence of such a notice, the assessment was illegal, see Kesri Das & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Lahore, 7 Lah. 138; 2 I.T.C. 213.

If the assessee's accounts are found to be not genuine there is no obligation either under the law or in ordinary fairness to inform the assessee of the basis on which the Income-tax Officer proposes to make an estimate of income, etc. Even if the materials before him are insufficient, the Income-tax Officer must somehow make an assessment to the best of his ability. It has been suggested however that if the accounts are not found to be false, the Income-tax Officer should inform the assessee of the defects in the accounts, though the Act does not place this obligation on the Income-tax Officer, Chan Lo Chwan and Tong Hock Hin v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 3 I.T.C. 397; Gunda Subbayya v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1939 I.T.R. 21. There is no onus on the Income-tax authorities to prove by positive evidence that the accounts are unreliable or that the profits cannot be deduced therefrom or that the figure assessed by them is the correct figure, Gangaram Balmukund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 464; Ganesh Lal and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1938 I.T.R. 390.

"Method employed".—These words are used in the proviso refer to the manner in which the accounts are kept; and if the accounts tendered by the assessee are 'cooked' or fictitious it is, obviously, not possible to deduce the profits from them. But even if the words are used in the second alternative of the proviso in a restricted sense, i.e., as referring to the system of accounting, if the Income-tax Officer rejects the accounts on the ground that the assessee keeps no stock registers or vouchers or that he employs an inventory system only which is not conclusive in ascertaining the true profits, it cannot be said that he is not attacking the method of accounting. He is therefore entitled to use the power under this proviso, Gangaram Balmukund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 464; Ganeshlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1938 I.T.R. 390.

Basis of estimates.—Section 13 does not justify a 'bald' estimate of income by the Income-tax Officer without any reasons for arriving at the figure. The Income-tax Officer is not entitled to make a guess without any evidence, See Dunichand Dhariram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 188; Radheyilal Balmukund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. (All.); 4 I.T.C. 454. Where accounts have been produced and the case is not dealt with under section 23 (4) the 'basis' and 'manner' of computing the profits under this proviso to section 13 have to be legal and judicial. While a reference to earlier assessments of the assessee might in certain circumstances be an adequate basis, a mere reference to local reputation or conditions of trade generally would not be an adequate basis. In re Ramkhehwan and Sahe Thakurdas, 1939 I.T.R. 607 (All.). This does not, however, mean that even if the assessee's accounts are unreliable the Income-tax Officer must base his assessment on these accounts in the absence of positive evidence to the contrary, Gangaram Balmukund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 464. It is the duty of the assessee to present accounts showing his true income and if he fails to do so, and if the Income-tax Officer makes an estimate to the best of his ability on the materials before him, the assessee must put up with it, Maharajadhiraj of Dharbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 283. Adding on to profits suspicious credits to personal accounts for which the assessee cannot offer a satisfactory explanation will be a reasonable exercise of discretion and will not give rise to a question of law. In re Muhamad Ayub and Muhamad Jaimel, 1941 I.T.R. 610 (All.). The Income-tax Officer however must be consistent and logical, and must not act arbitrarily even if he has only to make an estimate. He must not, for example, accept only certain entries as correct and reject others as incorrect or add arbitrary figures without giving reasons for his conclusion, Shiva Prasad Gupta v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 3 I.T.C. 406; Hirabai Desai and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1936 I.T.R. 95. On the other hand, he is under no obligation either to accept or to reject the accounts as a whole; it is open to him to accept the accounts only partially, Jugal Kishore Mukatlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 6 I.T.C. 184 (All.); Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Ach-rulal, 1938 I.T.R. 225. He is under no obligation to issue a notice to the assessee to that effect, Ganeshlal Chappanal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1941 I.T.R. 81 (All.) In no case may an Income-tax Officer reject genuine accounts, i.e., without finding that they are false merely on the ground that they are complicated, see Dunichand Dhariram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 188; Radheyilal Balmukund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 4 I.T.C. 454 (All.): or that balance have not been struck, Raghunath Mahadeo v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 2 I.T.C. 302 or that profits shown are not adequate, Pioneer Sports Co., Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 305 or that they do not cover the foreign business also of the assessee or that they do not show his wealth and its distribution, P. R. A. L. M. Muthukaruppan fact that the Income-tax Officer has justifiably proceeded on a basis and in a manner of his own in computing the assessee's income does not however exempt his computation from examination on appeal and if it appears that the income-tax Officer adopted a wrong method the assessment may be set aside, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v. Maharajadhiraj of Dharbhanga, 1933 I.T.R. 94 (P.C.). He should also indicate in his order the material on which he bases his assessment since his order may be the subject of an appeal, Gunda Subbayya v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1939 I.T.R. 21. It should be noted that while under this section the Income-tax Officer may in certain circumstances reject the assessee's method of accounting he cannot reject the accounts unless they are false, P. R. A. L. M. Muthukaruppan Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1939 I.T.R. 76. The Court will not interfere with the action of Income-tax authorities, under the proviso to section 13 unless their action is arbitrary, capricious or unreasonable, Ganeshilal Ramchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1941 I.T.R. 241; Makhanlal Ramchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, N.-W.F.P., 1941 I.T.R. 330; Eknath Bellappa v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1942 I.T.R. 110; Pandit Pearylal Shukla v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1942 I.T.R. 416 (All.); Sardar Sugar Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1942 I.T.R. 441 (Bom.).

Where an assessee's profits as disclosed by the books were unreasonably low, having regard to his profits in preceding years and the current profits of others and the books did not show from whom he bought or even the nature of what he bought, it was held that the Income-tax Officer had materials to justify the inference that the books did not disclose the true profits, Ganeshilal Chappanlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1941 I.T.R. 81 (All.).

The non-production of debtor's accounts cannot in itself create a conclusive presumption that the debtor had paid money to the creditor (assessee). In a case therefore in which the debtor firm had ceased to exist, and no question had been put by the Income-tax Officer to a partner of the firm (who appeared before him) as to payment of interest to the assessee, and there was nothing to indicate that the firm's books were being deliberately withheld it was held that there was no evidence to find that interest had been received by the assessee, Naraindas Bhagwandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 7 I.T.C. 135.

In a case in which the turnover and stocks of an assessee rose but the profits shown in his books declined to a very low level notwithstanding the bullish market in the commodity in the year and the assessee did not produce extraneous evidence, i.e., vouchers and correspondence to support his books, it was held that the Income-tax authorities had evidence to justify their rejecting the accounts and making an estimate of profits at a flat rate, Badrishah Sohanlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, (1936) I.T.R. 387.

The following have been held to be adequate grounds for rejecting accounts as unreliable, viz., suppression of vouchers for purchases in circumstances in which the existence of vouchers can be reasonably inferred (e.g., when other merchants in the same trade and locality take vouchers and produce them, or when purchases are made by low paid subordinates); suspicious adjustments at critical dates (e.g., end of the year) for which no satisfactory explanation is given; unexplained entries in personal accounts involving transfers between the business and the proprietor's private account; suppression of a part of the sales, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Abdul Aziz Sahib, 1939 I.T.R. 647. The truth or falsity of the accounts is however a question of fact and the only question of law is whether there is evidence for the finding.

Unintelligible or fictitious accounts—English law.—While the Commissioners are not, as a rule, entitled to insist on the certification by a professional accountant of the accounts produced before them, it was held by Rowlatt, J., in a case in which the accounts were voluminous, kept in shorthand and not easily intelligible, that the Commissioners were justified in refusing to look at the books until the assessee had the accounts prepared by a professional accountant, Hunt & Co. v. Jolly, 14 Tax Cases 165. This view was affirmed by the Court of Appeal in Wall v. Cooper, 8 A.T.C. 240; 14 Tax Cases 552. The accounts are not bound to be accepted by the Commissioners irrespective of their unintelligibility; and if the Commissioners are unable to accept the books as they stand, they may ask for the production of certified accounts by professional accountants. If the assessee fails to comply with the wishes of the Commissioners, he cannot afterwards complain against a random assessment. If the Commissioners reject accounts as "cooked", they should give reasons for their finding so that the Court may be satisfied that there was evidence on which the finding could be based. In the absence of evidence, Commissioners can go by practice and by their knowledge of the business and other relevant considerations, Anderson v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (C.S.), 12 A.T.C. 619; 18 Tax Cases 320.

Possibility of deducing profits from accounts—Income-tax Officer—Sole Judge.—"We think it was clearly intended by the proviso to section 13 of the Act that the Income-tax Officer should be the sole arbiter on the question of the possibility of deducing the income, profits and gains from the method of accounting employed". Gokalchand Jagannath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Lahore, 2 I.T.C. 180. This dictum however, overstates the power of the Income-tax Officer. As pointed out by the Privy Council in the Sarangpur Cotton Mills Case, 1938 I.T.R. 36, it is misleading to describe this as a mere discretionary power. The judgment of the Income-tax Officer under the proviso must be fairly exercised.

If the accounts are incomplete or unintelligible, the Court will not consider whether the basis adopted by the Income-tax Officer was the soundest in the circumstances, Prem Sagar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 178; 6 I.T.C. 478. Once it is established that no method of accounting has been regularly employed or that the method is such that the income cannot be properly deduced, the proviso comes into operation and the Income-tax Officer becomes the arbiter of the basis on which and the manner in which the income shall be computed, Ishardas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 283; Haryamul Beliram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 7 I.T.C. 379; the question is one of fact—and the Court will not interfere unless the discretion has been improperly or capriciously exercised, Gangaram Balmukand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 464. Even if there is a regular method of accounting, it is the duty of the Income-tax Officer to examine whether the true profits can be deduced from it, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Sarangpur Cotton Co., 1938 I.T.R. 36 (P.C.).

An inference that the books of account produced are not complete because of the non-production of certain books called for coupled with certain other facts is a question of fact, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. E. M. Chettiyar Firm, 4 I.T.C. 111; Ruliamal Rammall Ram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 7 I.T.C. 352. Whether the profits can be ascertained with any approach to accuracy from the books or not is a question of fact, James Cycle Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 98 (C. of A.); Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 9 Pat. 240; 4 I.T.C. 283; In re Radheylal Balmukund, 4 I.T.C. 454 (All.); Neki Devi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 365; Diwan Chand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 382. Similarly what exactly is the system of accountancy followed by the assessee is a question of fact and unless an Income-tax Officer exercises his discretion capriciously or unjustly, no question of law can arise in regard to such matters, Ferozeshah v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 4 I.T.C. 315. When an assessee has omitted from his return large amounts which are taxable, the Income-tax Officer is entitled to assume that there are other similar amounts omitted but not discovered and make a reasonable addition to the estimated assessable income. No question of law will arise, Sir Harisingh Gour v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Central Provinces, 3 I.T.C. 350. Also, where owing to the incompleteness or unintelligibility of the accounts assessments have to be made on estimates it would be open to the Income-tax Officer to add an estimated figure to the admitted figure of income, Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 4 I.T.C. 283; 9 Pat. 240.

Where an assessee maintained eight years continuous accounts for debtors in which the receipts were recorded as cash was paid without any allocation between principal and interest, and subsequently allocation was made without regard to actual dates and on no definite basis, and the Income-tax Officer computed the income under the proviso to section 13, the High Court declined to interfere, Fatchchand Chhakodilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1945 I.T.R. 198.

Methods of accounting—Power of Income-tax Officer to alter.—

It was suggested in Bansilal Abirchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 57, that under the proviso to this section, if the Income-tax Officer considers the system of accounting of the assessee to be unsuitable or improper, he can issue specific orders asking the assessee to change his method of accounting; but until he has done so, the system of accounting adopted by the assessee should be accepted by the Income-tax Officer. The Income-tax Officer's duty is to compute the profits in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed by the assessee, or, if no method of accounting has been regularly employed or if the method employed is such that in the opinion of the Income-tax Officer the income, profits and gains cannot properly be deduced therefrom, in such manner, i.e., on as equitable a basis as possible, as he may determine. What the Court apparently intended is that, having accepted an assessee's method of book-keeping as reflecting his true profits, the Department cannot go back on it without giving the assessee a chance to re-arrange his book-keeping.

Method of accounting—Varying.—It is not open to an assessee who maintains accounts on the "earned" basis to claim that a particular item or items should be worked out on a "receipt" basis. No question of law arises in such a case and the Income-tax Officer has absolute discretion as to the method of computing profits, T. O. Foster v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 3 I.T.C. 435. The discretion, however is not absolute but quasi-judicial as pointed out by the Privy Council in the Sarangpur Cotton Mills case.

Whether a method of accounting has been regularly employed is a question of fact but it is open to the assessee to change his method, though not from year to year. In doing so, he should satisfy the Income-tax authorities that he is doing so in good faith and with no interest to defraud Revenue. If the Income-tax Officer is not satisfied, the assessee can appeal to the higher authorities, Sarupchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1936 I.T.R. 420. Ultimately, everything turns on whether the true profits are reflected in the accounts or can be deduced therefrom.

The fact that a certain debt may turn out to be bad is in itself not an adequate reason to justify a change in the method of accounting for a particular period; the proper course is to claim an allowance for bad debts and eventually, if necessary and permissible a refund under section 48-A (now section 48), Ram Kumar Kedarnath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 261.

Future losses.—Only actual, i.e., realised losses during the accounting period, and not estimated future losses, may be taken into account in arriving at the profits. See Collins & Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 773; (1925) Sc.L.T. 51; Whimster & Company v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1925) Sc.L.T. 623; 12 Tax Cases 813; J. H. Young & Company v. Commissioners of Income-tax, 12 Tax Cases 827; (1925) Sc.L.T. 628 (Excess Profits Duty cases) under section 10 and Dinshaw (as Agent of Gwalior State) v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 6 I.T.C. 154.

An anticipated liability is not an ascertained debt and therefore not a proper debit in the accounts. Thus when a company received a claim against them for demurrage which was not at any stage accepted by them and was eventually withdrawn it was held in an Excess Profits Duty case that the claim could not be debited against the Profit and Loss account as the withdrawal of the claim was not the giving up of an ascertained debt, Ford & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 997.

The accounts of a colliery company were made up to 30th June. From April to July, there had been a coal strike involving cessation of work. Substantial expenditure on repairs and reconditioning had become necessary as a consequence of such cessation, and the expenditure was incurred after July, though it was known in June when the accounts were closed that such expenditure was necessary. Provision was made out of the profits of the period ending 30th June in order to meet this expenditure later on, and it was held by the House of Lords that this provision could not be deducted from the profits of the period ending 30th June for Excess Profits Duty purposes, Glamorgan Coal Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 7 A.T.C. 48.

Per Lord Sumner.—“It seems to me like saying that a man is entitled to charge for supper in his expenses for Sunday night because, though he went supperless to bed, he orders something extra for his breakfast on Monday morning” (Ibid.).

Equally it is not open to the assessing officer in the absence of express legislative provision to that effect to make a contingent assessment and say that an item is taxable but that it shall not be taxed until it is actually received. Income cannot be taxed unless it exists, Lt.-Col. Lambe v. Com-

Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 18 Tax Cases 212; (1934) 1 K.B. 178; 12 A.T.C. 398.

See also notes under section 10 (2) (xv) under the heading 'Future losses'.

Method of converting other currency.—The proper method would seem to be as follows:—

(a) Fixed Capital transactions—at rate of exchange on date of transaction.

(b) Floating capital—at rate as on date of balance-sheet (this is the only practicable, even if not completely logical course) and

(c) Profits—at average rate for the period if available, otherwise as on date of balance-sheet.

This also seems to be the method followed in the United Kingdom.

In evaluating in local currency the transactions between an assessee and his foreign customers, regard should be had to the conduct of the parties and the course of transactions between them, if there is any doubt or ambiguity about the contracts subsisting between them, Radio Pictures v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 A.T.C. 236, following Watcham v. Attorney-General of East Africa Protectorate, (1919) A.C. 533.

Where interest on certain debentures was payable at the option of the debenture-holder, either in sterling or in florins or dollars (at certain fixed rates of exchange irrespective of market rates) and payment was taken in dollars as a consequence of the United Kingdom going off the gold standard, it was held that income-tax was recoverable only on the basis of payment in sterling. The option to receive in foreign currency was only an added right of delivery of a commodity, viz., florins or dollars; and in any case, the person posting the interest warrant could not say at that time how the option would be exercised, Rhokana Corporation v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 17 A.T.C. 71 (H.L.).

14. (1) The tax shall not be payable by an assessee in respect of any sum which he receives as a member of a Hindu undivided family where such sum has been paid out of the income of the family.

(2) The tax shall not be payable by an assessee—
(a) if a partner of an unregistered firm, in respect of any portion of his share in the profits and gains of the firm computed in the manner laid down in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 16 on which the tax has already been paid by the firm; or

(b) if a member of an association of persons other than a Hindu undivided family, a company or a firm, in respect of any portion of the amount which he is entitled to receive from the association on which the tax has already been paid by the association; or

(c) in respect of any income profits or gains accruing or arising to him within an Indian State, unless such income profits or gains are received or deemed to be received in or brought into British India in the previous year by or on behalf of the assessee, or are assessable under section 42.

History.—Section 5 (1) (f) of the 1886 Act was as below:—"Nothing . . . shall render liable to the tax . . . any income which a person enjoys as a member of a company or of a firm or a Hindu undivided family where the company or the firm or the family is liable to the tax." In the 1918 Act, all these items were excluded in computing the taxable income of the assessee [see section 12 (1)], but they were taken into account in fixing his 'total income', i.e., the rate of tax (section 13). In 1922 income from a Hindu undivided family was again excluded from 'total income', i.e., the position before 1918 was restored.

Sub-section (2) was entirely recast in 1939 in conjunction with sections 3, 16, 18, 23 (5), 24, 26 and 48. Clause (c) of sub-section (2), together with corresponding additions in section 17, was introduced in 1941. The last thirteen words of sub-section (1) were added in 1944.

The present scheme is explained as follows in the notes attached to the Statement of Objects and Reasons in 1939.

"Sub-section (2) (a) exempts from taxation dividends of companies whose profits have been assessed to tax. This provision needed amendment as the result of a Privy Council decision that it exempts the whole dividend even when only part of the Company's profits have been taxed. Instead of amending it, it has been decided to delete it and amend section 16 (2) and section 18 (5) [clause 16 (2) and 18]. The result of these changes will be that a dividend will no longer be exempt. It will be on the same footing as interest on securities and credit for the appropriate amount of tax on it will be given in the assessment. Other sections affected are sections 48 and 49 (Clauses 51 and 53).

Sub-section (2), clauses (b) and (c) of section 14 exempt the proportionate shares of the taxed profits of firms and associations of individuals. Since it has been decided [section 23 (5)—clause 23] to tax the partners of registered firms directly; this sub-section as amended relates only to unregistered firms and it exempts not the amount (which is now exempted) of the firm's profits proportionate to the assessee's share therein at the time of making the assessment but the portion of the firm's profits which the assessee is entitled to receive. This change is made in pursuance of a decision to take as the basis for income-tax purposes the actual shares of the previous year. The same principle has been adopted in amending section 26 (clause 30).

Sub-section (2) as now amended exempts not the amount which a member of an association receives but the amount that he is entitled to receive."

As regards the exemption of the share of profits of a partner in an unregistered firm with reference to his share of the taxed profits in the previous year and not with reference to his share at the time of assessment, see also section 26.

Hindu Undivided Family—Taxation of.—For a history, see notes under section 2 (9). A Hindu undivided family is taxed like an individual at a graded scale, according to its total income, and no account is taken of how that income is distributed amongst the individual members, when such individual members are assessed to income-tax or super-tax in respect of their separate income. This applies even in cases where the amount of the income of the Hindu undivided family is less than the minimum taxable limit, and is, therefore, not liable to taxation in the hands of the manager of the family. The same remarks apply to super-tax. The taxation of the income of a Hindu undivided family thus differs from the taxation of the income of an unregistered firm since, where the profits of an unregistered firm are not liable to taxation in the hands of the firm, such profits are taxed in the hands of the individual partners, both for the purposes of income-tax [section 14 (2) (b) and section 16 (1)] and of super-tax (section 55 proviso); and where the profits are taxed in the hands of the unregistered firm, the share of such profits of each partner is included in his 'total income' for the purpose of determining the rate at which he shall pay income-tax on his other income [section 16 (1)]. It should be noticed that sub-section (1) and clause (c) of sub-section (2), section 14 apply both to income-tax and super-tax, whereas clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (2) of section 14 apply to income-tax only—see section 58.

See, in particular, notes under section 2 (9) relating to maintenance charges received by members of Hindu families. The Patna High Court have held that section 14 (1) applies only to income in which the payee has a vested right, i.e., which already belongs to him. While the section relieves the assessee from the burden of proving that the income has already been taxed in the hands of the family, it does not relieve him from the burden of showing that he had a vested right in it as a member of the family. It was held accordingly that when the assessee had failed to raise the issues necessary for the determination of the question, he was not entitled to the exemption, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v. Maharani Lakshmibai Saheba, 1935 I.T.R. 49.

The widow of a deceased brother in a Mitakshara family who sued the living brother and his sons on the ground that her husband had separated from the family before his death agreed to a compromise, conceding that the family was joint and receiving a maintenance allowance from the living brother and his two sons. It was held, following Vedathani's case, 1933 I.T.R. 70 and Makanji Lalji's case, 1937 I.T.R. 539, that the widow received the allowance as a member of a Hindu undivided family. Her living separate was immaterial, because as a widow, she could not effect by herself a separation from the family, Mussamat Radha Kuer v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 1942 I.T.R. 229.

The widow of the holder of an impartible estate subject to the Mitakshara law disputed the right of her husband's successor to certain parts of the estate, but settled the claim by a compromise under which she acknowledged the absolute title of the successor and relinquished in his favour all her rights, and in return received an allowance, inter alia, charged on the estate, which allowance was to be her absolute property to which the successor and his heirs were to have no claim. It was held that the widow had ceased to be a member of the family and that therefore she did not receive the allowance as a member of the family. She also did not receive the allowance for maintenance. The allowance was therefore not exempt from tax in her hands, Maharani Dowagar of Jaipur v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1944 I.T.R. 489 (Oudh).

The real criterion in such cases is not whether the allowance is paid contractually or whether it is fixed or fluctuating or whether it is charged on the estate but whether the payee continues to be a member of the family or has left it.

A Hindu widow who claimed that her husband had separated from the family before his death compromised her claim, the coparceners of her husband agreeing to give her Rs. 1,000 per annum as maintenance for her life. Ultimately, the family divided into five units, and by arrangement among themselves, to which the widow was not a party, two of the units made up the allowance to the widow by paying her Rs. 500 each per mensem. The income-tax authorities considered that the allowance in its ultimate form was not received by the widow as a member of a Hindu undivided family, since there was no joint family at that stage. The High Court held however, that the widow of a coparcener, though not herself a part of the coparcenary, could be a member of the joint family, and that, in this case, she was a member of the joint family with each of the units into which the family had been divided. There could be no partition between a coparcener and a member of the family (like the widow) who was not a coparcener. Bhagavati v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1941 I.T.R. 31 (All.).

A family may consist entirely of female members; and an allowance received from it by an individual entitled under Hindu law to maintenance will not cease to be exempt merely because the allowance was fixed by an agreement or by a Court, Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Sarwan Kunwar, 1945 I.T.R. 361 (All.).

In the above cases, it will be noted, the allowances were payable qua members of the family. Where, however, a Hindu widow (after 1937) entitled to a share in the family property agrees to take an allowance in lieu of her share and the payment of the allowance is compulsory and a charge on the family property the family's income is the net income after payment of the allowance. In re Hir Lal, 1945 I.T.R. 512 (Lah.). Accordingly, if in a partition, the maintenance of a widow or widows is charged on property and allowances given to them, the allowances are not part of the income of the payers. R. S. Munshi Gulab Singh Bros. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1946 I.T.R. 66.

In order to determine whether an allowance is received as a member of a Hindu undivided family, an unfailing test is whether the allowances would cease if the payee ceased to be a member of the family. See Kartar Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 269; Maharani of Jeypore v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., C.P., and Berar, 1944 I.T.R. 489; Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Chandramoni, 1946 I.T.R. 134.

In the case of an impartible Hindu estate, apart from custom and certain close relationships like wife, minor sons, unmarried daughters and aged parents, no member of the family has a right of maintenance; and an allowance received by a member not so entitled to maintenance is not received qua a member of this family, Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Maharani Gyan Manjuri Kuari, 1945 I.T.R. 55; Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Rain Rudh Kumari, 1940 I.T.R. 607; Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Chandramoni, 1946 I.T.R. 134.

The onus is on the Income-tax department to trace the income from the family to the member, and it is then for the member to show that he received the income as a member, Maharaja Visveswar Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1935 I.T.R. 216. It would seem, similarly that it is for the assessee to show that he receives the income out of the income (not of other funds) of the family. According to the Allahabad High Court, only those members of the family can claim exemption under this section who either would be entitled on partition to demand a share or are entitled to maintenance under the Hindu law, and can therefore be said to have an interest in the joint income of the family, Kedar Narain Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1938 I.T.R. 157. By 'vested right', the Patna High Court did not, it would seem contemplate any greater right than that explained by the Allahabad High Court.

Payments not out of the family income.—The concluding words in sub-section (1) were added in 1944.

Hindu undivided family.—The object of this section is to exempt from taxation, in the hands of an individual, that which has already been taxed in the hands of the joint family as such. If, however, the individual receives an income aliunde from property which has not been taxed as that of a Hindu joint family, then the provisions of this section have no application. Accordingly, in a case in which a person received an allowance from his son out of a property which the latter had inherited from his maternal grandfather, it was held that the allowance received by the father was not exempt from income-tax. The allowance, of course, was gratuitous and the father was not legally or otherwise entitled to it by reason of his being a member of the joint family, Ambica Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 92; 5 Pat. 20.

Director's fees.—The sums earned by a Director of a company as fees are his personal earnings even though he is a director only because the shares of the company belonging to the family have been placed at his disposal, unless the joint family property is spent in earning the remuneration as director, Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Darsanram and others, 1945 I.T.R. 419. See also Sardar Indra Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1943 I.T.R. 16.

"Tax has been paid by the firm".—Prior to the 1st April, 1939 the corresponding word were "have been assessed to income-tax." So, whereas formerly, the partner's immunity depended on the assessment of the firm, it now turns on actual payment of tax by the firm. This sub-section which now applies only to unregistered firms, formerly (before 1st April, 1939) applied to registered firms also.

It will be seen that while this section uses the word "paid", the corresponding proviso under section 55 still adheres to "assessed".

Profits can be said to be "assessed to tax" only when an order has been made determining the sum payable as tax and not when calculations of profits and losses have been made. Where, therefore, the profits of a firm are more than wiped away by losses, and the partners receive in the nature of interest a share of profits, such share can be taxed in their hands, Seth Kanhaiyalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., (1937) I.T.R. 739 (All.). This question cannot arise now the law having been amended in 1939.

From 1st April, 1939, the exemption applies only to the share of profits which the partner is entitled to receive, not necessarily proportionate to his share in the firm. See notes under section 16.

Taxation at the source is more a liability than a right, and it is not open to a partner to claim that he should not be taxed directly on his share of the profits of the firm, In re Neemchand Daga, 58 Cal. 1204; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 686; 5 I.T.C. 206. See also notes under section 34. The law as it stands since 1939 however,—see section 23 (5)—lays down clearly when partners of firms are to be taxed directly and when firms themselves.

A partner received a salary from his firm and such salary was disallowed as a deduction from the firm's taxable profits. For certain reasons, the firm's profit was 'nil' and no tax was paid by it. The question arose whether the salary could be taxed in the hands of the partner and was answered in the affirmative, S. V. K. L. Somasundaram Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 55 Mad. 885; A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 435. Cases of real double taxation are met by notification under section 60. No. 8, dated the 24th March, 1928, which is still in force. Before 1939, cases of partners being taxed a second time came within this notification, but, with express provisions in section 10 (4) and section 16 (1) laying down how payments to partners by firms should be treated, such cases will seldom arise now, but if they do, this notification would still seem to apply.

Associations of individuals not being a firm, company or Hindu undivided family.—Till 1930, the profits and gains of such associations were liable to be taxed twice, once in the hands of the association and again in those of the members. Clause (b) was amended in 1939 so as to refer to the amount which a member is "entitled to receive" from the association instead of to what he "receives", thus assimilating the position to that of partners of unregistered firms.

Income in Indian States.—Clause (c) of sub-section (2), which was inserted in 1941, seeks to tax on a remittance basis, the income of British Indian residents arising in Indian States. Such income, even if not remitted, is part of the residents 'total income', i.e., for determining the rate of tax on his other taxable income. Up to Rs. 4,500 of unremitted foreign income—whether arising in an Indian State or elsewhere—will, however, be excluded from 'total income', i.e., both for rate and for liability to tax, in accordance with the third proviso to sub-section (1) of section 4.

Section 17 lays down the rate at which such income arising in Indian States shall be taxed when actually brought into British India. The amount will be included in 'total income' both in the year of origin and in the year of remittance and section 17 seeks to mitigate this effect in the year of remittance.

Investment trusts.—See notifications under section 60 regarding the exemption of dividends from super-tax in the hands of an investment trust company.

Firms—Taxation in the United Kingdom.—In the United Kingdom, firms are not charged with super-tax (see section 4 of the English Act). Under Rule 10, Cases I and II of Schedule D, the partnership is taxed jointly and in one sum, and under sections 14 (3) (c) and 20, the individual partners can get relief based on the proportion according to their shares of the joint income of the partnership. What is allocated is the statutory, not the actual income of the firm, Gaunt v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1913) 3 K.B. 395; Lewis v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 A.T.C. 48; 18 Tax Cases 174; (1933) 2 K.B. 557.

15. (1) The tax shall not be payable in respect of any sums paid by an assessee to effect an insurance on the life of the assessee or on the life of a wife or husband of the assessee or in respect of a contract for a deferred annuity on the life of the assessee or on the life of a wife or husband of the assessee, or as a contribution to any Provident Fund to which the Provident Funds Act, 1925, applies.

Exemption in the case of life insurances.

(2) Where the assessee is a Hindu undivided family, there shall be exempted under sub-section (1) any sums paid to effect an insurance on the life of any male member of the family or of the wife of any such member.

(2-A) Nothing in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall apply to so much of any premium or other payment made on a policy other than a contract for a deferred annuity as is in excess of ten per cent. of the actual capital sum assessed; and in calculating any such capital sum no account shall be taken of the value of any premiums agreed to be returned or of any benefit by way of bonus or otherwise which is to be or may be received either before or after death either by the person paying the premium or by any other person and which is not the sum actually assured.

(3) The aggregate of any sums exempted under this section shall not, together with any sums exempted under the second proviso to sub-section (1) of section 7, and any sums exempted under sub-section (1) of section 58-F, exceed in the case of an individual, one-sixth of the total income of the assessee, or six thousand rupees, whichever is less; and in the case of a Hindu undivided family, one-sixth of the total income of the assessee, or twelve thousand rupees, whichever is less.

History.—Prior to 1918, this exemption rested upon a Notification under the 1886 Act. Under the 1918 Act, the one-sixth was calculated on the 'chargeable income' and not on the total income.

As regards the omission (in 1924) of the reference to funds under the Provident Insurance Societies Act, 1912, see notes under section 4 (3) (iv). The following changes were made in 1939:—(a) Sub-section (1) was altered so as to cover cases of insurance on the life of a husband and (b) a money limit of Rs. 6,000 (Rs. 12,000 in the case of Hindu joint families) was imposed on the limit of 1/6th of total income. Sub-section (2-A) was added in 1944.

Rebate of tax, how calculated.—As regards the method of calculating rebate of tax on insurance premia, see section 17 (2).

Super-tax—No rebate of.—See section 58 which makes section 15 inapplicable to super-tax. No rebate of super-tax can therefore be claimed on account of insurance premia, etc.

Single premiums—Insurance of husband's life, etc.—The sums paid need not be annual or periodical payments. A single payment for an insurance policy is eligible for the exemption, but the allowance is subject to the maximum limit of one-sixth of the "total income" and also to the limit of Rs. 6,000 (and Rs. 12,000 in the case of Hindu undivided families) and of the percentage referred to in sub-section (2-A), the last to be applied to each policy individually. The assessee need not be an adult, nor the spouse. No allowance can be claimed on insurances on the life of children or other relations, except that in the case of a Hindu undivided family the insurance may be on the life of any male member of the family or of his wife. Also, in the case of a Hindu undivided family the insurance need not be on the life of adult male members or of adult wives of members.

Scope of exemption.—Under the provisions of section 7 (1) second proviso and section 15, taken together an abatement of income-tax is given, on such portion of an assessee's income as may have been—(i) deducted from his salary, under the authority, and with the permission, of the Government, for the purpose of securing a deferred annuity to him, or making provision for his wife or children [section 7 (1) proviso]; (ii) paid by him to an Insurance Company in respect of an insurance or deferred annuity on his own life or on the life of his spouse, but subject to the limits laid down in sub-section (2-A) of section 15; or (iii) paid by him as a contribution to any of the provident funds mentioned in section 4 (3) (iv); or (iv) paid by him or his employer and exempted as contribution to a recognised provident fund under section 58-F, provided however, the total amount on all the items together on which an abatement will be permitted may not exceed one-sixth of the total income of the assessee subject also to the superior money limit imposed by this section.

A member of a recognised provident fund under Chapter IX-A can therefore get a maximum abatement of tax on one-sixth of his salary under section 58-F and the difference between the above abatement and one-sixth of the tax on his total income under section 15. To ascertain his total income for this purpose only his own contributions to the fund should be added to his salary and not his employer's contributions or interest—see section 58-E. See also section 58-R under which employee's contributions to approved superannuation funds receive the benefit of section 15.

It should be noted that there is no explicit money limit in regard to the second proviso to section 7.

Widows, etc., Funds.—Contributions to the Widows, Orphans and Old Age Contributory Pension Fund, 1925, are exempt from income-tax since they are deducted from the salaries payable by or on behalf of the Crown to the soldiers concerned being sums deducted in accordance with the conditions of their service for the purpose of securing to them a deferred annuity and of making provision for their wives and children. Compulsory allotments from a soldier's pay, made to his wife in England under Article 886 of the Royal Warrant for Pay, are exempt from income-tax, since they are also deducted from the salaries payable by or on behalf of the Crown to an individual, being sums deducted in accordance with the conditions of his service for the purpose of making provision, whether present or future, for his wife.

The restrictions imposed by the second proviso to sub-section (1) of section 7 and by sub-section (3) of section 15, apply to the above contributions also. No allowance is due in respect of voluntary allotments made by soldiers for the above purpose.

Deductions at source on account of contributions made by an officer to provide passage-money for his widow and orphans under the Indian Military Service Family Pension Fund Regulations and the Indian Military Widows' and Orphans' Fund Regulations are exempt from income-tax. Under the rules a certificate of health is required before an officer can contribute, and the contribution which he has to pay is regulated according to the age of the officer concerned. (Income-tax Manual.)

Combined Life and Accident, etc., policies.—Out of the premiums paid in respect of a policy that covers the risks of sickness and accidental injury and also the risk of death, only so much as is attributable to the risk of death (from whatsoever cause) is admissible as a deduction from the income liable to tax. The portion of the premium so attributable should be settled in consultation with the Insurance Company concerned. (Income-tax Manual.)

Withdrawals from Provident Funds.—No rebate of income-tax is allowed on any sum withdrawn by an assessee from his Provident Fund in order to pay his life insurance premium. On the premium itself, this rebate is no doubt admissible.

Marriage, education, etc., policies.—Although insurances, on the life of a child, do not entitle the assessee to the concession, it should be noted that certain kinds of insurance for the benefit of the child should be treated for the purposes of section 15 as insurances on the life of the assessee. Policies are often taken by assessees with a view to securing a provision of a lump sum for their children, for their marriage, education or other purposes at a stipulated time and the sum assured becomes payable on that date even if the subscriber dies after paying one premium only. An insurance of this kind is really an insurance on the life of the assessee as it is designed to secure in the event of the assessee's early death (though not immediately after his death) a benefit considerably greater in amount than the annual payments which he has made and consequently contributions to such policies are eligible for rebate under section 15 (1). The criterion that should be adopted is, whether or not there is a contract dependent on the life of the assessee. A fixed term policy under which neither the premiums nor the sum payable by the Insurance Company at the end of the term are dependent on this life of the assessee is not an insurance policy (Income-tax Manual.)

Rebate on foreign income.—No relief is admissible on premium paid out of income accruing or arising out of British India when such foreign income is not chargeable to Indian Income-tax. Where however, in the case of non-residents, foreign income is included in 'total world income' and it is not possible for the assessee to allocate definitely from which income—British Indian or foreign—the premium was paid, the relief admissible will only be proportionate, i.e., in the same proportion as the British Indian income bears to the 'total world income'. (Income-tax Manual.)

Sterling—Conversion of.—For the purpose of an abatement claimed by an assessee under this section, insurance premia payable in sterling should be converted at the rate of exchange in force on the day on which the premium payment was made, in cases where the assessee is unable to state the actual cost of remittance. (Income-tax Manual.)

A claim for abatement under this section must, if the payment is made otherwise than by a deduction from salary, be supported either—
(a) by the original receipt of the Insurance Company or fund; (b) where the claim is made by a servant of the Government or of a local authority, by a copy of the original receipt presented along with the original to the officer who pays the salary and attested by that officer who should, after attestation, return the original with a note endorsed upon it that it has been produced and allowed for, a copy being attached to the bills sent with the list of payments; or (c) by a duplicate receipt or certificate of payment given by the Insurance Company or provident fund, provided a certificate is given that the original receipt is lost or is not forthcoming; or (d) when the insurance company does not issue a formal receipt, by a certificate of payment of the premium.

Where the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that none of the above prescribed documents can be produced without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience, which, under the circumstances of the case, would be unreasonable, he may accept such other proof of payment of the premium as he deems sufficient.

Abatement on account of insurance may be given effect to by the person deducting income-tax under section 18 (2) from salary at the time of payment.

Where the payment on account of insurance premia, etc., is not claimed at the time when tax is deducted from salary, it may be claimed in the assessment and in the return given by the assessee, under section 22 (1) or 22 (2) as the case may be, or if no assessment is made, a refund on account of such rebate may be claimed.

While the persons responsible for deducting income-tax at the source under section 18 (2) should allow an abatement where claimed, they need not carry out a check to see whether the abatement claimed under this section exceeds one sixth of the salary or Rs. 6,000 (Rs. 12,000) as the case may be. This will be investigated by the Income-tax Officer to whom returns are furnished under section 21. (Income-tax Manual.)

Before 1939, the rebate of tax under this section could not be claimed at the time of refund of tax under section 48; see Note 9 in the form of return prescribed by Rule 37-A. Section 48 as amended in 1939 permits such refund.

"Paid by him".—There is no definition of the word 'paid', but the provisions of section 13 will evidently govern this section if the assessee is assessed under section 10 or 12. But this will not allow an assessee to treat premiums as 'paid' in those cases in which premiums are adjusted by the insurance company out of sums at credit of the assessee, e.g., bonuses on the policies or loans granted, see Hunter v. R., 5 Tax Cases 13; (1904) A.C. 161; Watkins v. Hugh Jones, 14 Tax Cases 94.

Firms, Companies, etc.—The relief can be allowed only to individuals and to Hindu undivided families. It cannot be allowed to firms, companies or other associations of individuals.

The rebate is admissible to a partner in an unregistered firm in respect of the insurance on his life though the firm as such is not eligible for the rebate. This is because the partner's share of profits in the unregistered firm is part of the partner's 'total income'—see section 16 (1), and rebate for life insurance is admissible on the basis of total income.

See also notes under section 10 regarding insurance on the life of partners, employees, etc., and notes, supra, as regards the position of partners of firms.

Endowment policies.—'Endowment' policies are policies on the 'life' of a person, Gould v. Curtis, 6 Tax Cases 293; (1913) 3 K.B. 84. Similarly, no doubt, are the various recent day developments of endowment policies, e.g., guaranteed option policies, double endowment policies, etc., but not policies that are known in the Insurance world as "pure endowments", that is, contracts which provide for the payment of fixed sums at fixed dates, death not being one of the contingencies provided against by the policy, Joseph v. Law Integrity Insurance Co., (1912) 2 Ch. 581 and In re National Standard Life Assurance Corporation, (1928) 1 Ch. 427.

Per Lord Justice Buckley.—I come to a consideration of the true meaning of the words "insurance on his life". There would, to my mind, be a significant difference if the preposition were "of" and not "on". I can quite agree that if you speak of "insurance of the life" that, as a matter of English, may mean a guarantee of a sum to be paid if the life ceases to exist, if the life drops. That would be an insurance "of" it. The insurance "on" it is, to my mind, a different thing. It seems to me that means the insurance of a sum dependent upon it. The thing mentioned now becomes a contingency upon which the insurance is to be paid. The contingency is death or no death—death or life—and an insurance "on" life, in that sense, is an insurance of a sum payable or not payable according as the contingency of life or death is answered one way or the other. Regarded thus, it is quite plain that, an insurance "on" life includes, at a date, as an obligation to pay a sum of money, if life ceases, at such time as it should happen to cease. The words I think, include an insurance "on" life, in the sense of an obligation to pay a sum of money on an event dependent upon the contingency of human life. If that be sound, of course it follows that the whole of this premium is deductible, because this is altogether an insurance "on" life—Gould v. Curtis, 6 Tax Cases 293 at 309.

"'Insurance' and 'Annuity' are words, not of scientific law but of common business", per Hamilton, J.

Sub-section (2-A).—This was added in 1944 in order to check the avoidance of tax through the taking up of large policies for short periods with the aid of funds lent by Insurance companies to cover the premia, the policies not being bona fide insurance policies but only devices for avoiding tax. The limit laid down by the sub-section is absolute and cannot be exceeded, whether the policy is a bona fide insurance policy or not. In applying the limit, everything is ignored except the annual premium and the capital sum assured. The sub-section does not apply to policies for deferred annuities.

United Kingdom law.—The law in the United Kingdom is different from the Indian law in several material respects. Till 1920, a 'single' premium paid for a policy could not be allowed exemption as it could in India, see Turton v. O'Brien, 7 Tax Cases 170. Also the contracts should be—

"with any insurance company legally established in the United Kingdom or in any British possession lawfully carrying on business in the United Kingdom . . . or in the case of a deferred annuity with the National Debt Commissioners." Section 32, Act of 1918.

Further the allowance cannot exceed a certain percentage of the capital sum assured and payable at death or a certain figure per annum; and the rate of rebate on policies insured after June, 1916, is restricted to a certain maximum rate. There are also various special provisions about 'war insurance premiums'.

The United Kingdom law further permits, under certain conditions, the deduction of interest paid on loans taken for the purchase of insurance policies, and cases like the Earl of Carnarvon v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 13 A.T.C. 539, furnish little guidance in interpreting the provisions of the Indian law. Section 13 of the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1930 contains elaborate provisions against the avoidance of surtax by taking up large insurance policies with borrowed money.

Insurance—Joint lives.—Two persons who were joint Directors in a company took out an insurance policy on their lives jointly, each of them agreeing to pay half of the premium. A trustee was responsible for collecting the premiums from these two persons and paying them over to the insurance company; and in the event of the death of either of the Directors the capital sum payable under the insurance policy was to be paid to the trustee. Held, that the insurance premia paid by the Directors could not be deducted from their remuneration as Directors as premia paid on insurance on their lives.

Per Rowlatt, J.—"Mr. Wilson has not made an insurance at all. He has made an insurance jointly with another person. . . . That is not an insurance by him. . . . Prima facie, a contract by the two jointly is not describable as a contract by one of them only. Secondly, it is not on his life, it is on the joint lives. . . . It is not an insurance on his life, accurately speaking, at all, nor has he paid the premium for any such insurance". Wilson v. Simpson, 10 Tax Cases 753; (1926) 2 K.B. 500.

This decision, however, will not preclude an allowance under the Indian law, if the insurance is made jointly on the lives of a husband and wife or of two or more male members of a Hindu undivided family. If premia paid on the separate lives of a husband or wife or individual male members of a Hindu undivided family can be allowed, premia paid on insurance policies taken out on their joint lives should also apparently be allowed.

15-A. The tax shall not be payable by an assessee in respect of such portion if any, of the earned income included in his total income as is directed by the annual Act of the Central Legislature fixing the rate or rates of tax for any year to be deducted in making an assessment for that year, and for the purposes of determining the rates at which income-tax (but not super-tax) is payable by the assessee for that year his total income shall be deemed to be the total income reduced by the said portion.

History.—This section was added in 1945 by an Ordinance along with section 2 (6-AA) and consequential amendments to sections 16, 17, 56 and 58.

Exemption.—Under the Finance Act of 1945, one-tenth of earned income but subject to a limit of Rs. 2,000 is both exempt from income-tax and excluded from total income for the same tax. In the Finance Act of 1946, the limits were raised to one fifth and Rs. 4,000 respectively. For super-tax it is neither exempt nor excluded from total income.

The Finance Act also makes special provision for marginal cases.

Exemption and exclusions in determining the total income.

16. (1) In computing the total income of an assessee—

(a) any sums exempted under the second proviso to sub-section (1) of section 7, the second and third provisos to section 8, sub-section (2) of section 14 and section 15 shall be included ; and any sum exempted under section 15-A shall also be included except for the purpose of determining the rates at which income-tax (but not super-tax) is payable by the assessee to whom the exemption is given ;

(b) when the assessee is a partner of a firm, then, whether the firm has made a profit or a loss, his share (whether a net profit or a net loss) shall be taken to be any salary, interest, commission or other remuneration payable to him by the firm in respect of the previous year increased or decreased respectively by his share in the balance of the profit or loss of the firm after the deduction of any interest, salary, commission or other remuneration payable to any partner in respect of the previous year :

Provided that if his share so computed is a loss, such loss may be set off or carried forward and set off in accordance with the provisions of section 24 ;

(c) all income arising to any person by virtue of a settlement or disposition whether revocable or not, and whether effected before or after the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, from assets remaining the property of the settlor or disposer shall be deemed to be income of the settlor or disposer, and all income arising to any person by virtue of a revocable transfer of assets shall be deemed to be income of the transferor :

Provided that for the purposes of this clause a settlement, disposition or transfer shall be deemed to be revocable if it contains any provision for the retransfer directly or indirectly of the income or assets to the settlor, disposer or transferor, or in any way gives the settlor, disposer or transferor a right to reassume power directly or indirectly over the income or assets :

Provided further that the expression 'settlement or disposition' shall for the purposes of this clause include any disposition, trust, covenant, agreement, or arrangement, and the expression "settlor or disposer" in relation to a settlement or disposition shall include any person by whom the settlement or disposition was made :

Provided further that this clause shall not apply to any income arising to any person by virtue of a settlement or disposition which is not revocable for a period exceeding six years or during the lifetime of the person and from which income the settlor or disponer derives no direct or indirect benefit but that the settlor shall be liable to be assessed on the said income as and when the power to revoke arises to him.

(2) For the purposes of inclusion in the total income of an assessee any dividend shall be deemed to be income of the previous year in which it is paid, credited or distributed or deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed to him, and shall be increased to such amount, as would, if income-tax (but not super-tax) at the rate applicable to the total income of a company for the financial year in which the dividend is paid, credited or distributed or deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed, were deducted therefrom, be equal to the amount of the dividend.

Provided that when any portion of the profits and gains of the company out of which such dividend has been paid, credited or distributed or deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed was not liable to income-tax in the hands of the company, the increase to be made under this section shall be calculated upon only such proportion of the dividend as the amount of the profits and gains of the company liable to income-tax bears to the total profits and gains of the company.

(3) In computing the total income of any individual for the purpose of assessment, there shall be included—

(a) so much of the income of a wife or minor child of such individual as arises directly or indirectly—

(i) from the membership of the wife in a firm of which her husband is a partner ;

(ii) from the admission of the minor to the benefits of partnership in a firm of which such individual is a partner ;

(iii) from assets transferred directly or indirectly to the wife by the husband otherwise than for adequate consideration or in connection with an agreement to live apart ; or

(iv) from assets transferred directly or indirectly to the minor child, not being a married daughter, by such individual otherwise than for adequate consideration ; and

(b) so much of the income of any person or association of persons as arises from assets transferred otherwise than for adequate consideration to the person or association by such individual for the benefit of his wife or a minor child or both.

History.—The first part of the section is an amplification of section 13 of the 1918 Act. The words "second and third" were inserted in 1933 as a consequence of the amendment of section 8.

Sub-section (3) was added in 1937 but so as not to have effect in respect of income chargeable to income-tax for a year ending before the 1st April, 1937. It was again amended in 1939. Barring clause (a) in sub-section (1), the whole of sub-sections (1) and (2) were newly added in 1939. Before then these two sub-sections stood as below:

"(1) In computing the total income of an assessee sums exempted under the proviso to sub-section (1) of section 7, the second and third proviso to section 8, sub-section (2) of section 14 and section 15, shall be included.

(2) For the purposes of sub-section (1), any sum mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (2) of section 14 shall be increased by the amount of income-tax payable by the company in respect of the dividend received." Sub-section (2) was amended in 1941, so as to make it clearer.

The second part of clause (a) of sub-section (1) was added in 1945, as part of the scheme of relief for 'earned income'.

Change of Partnership.—As regards 'total income' when there is a change of partnership in a firm, see section 26.

The method of 'grossing up' dividends is as follows. With income-tax at a maximum rate which is the rate 'applicable to a company' (say) x annas in the rupee, for every $(16-x)$ annas of net dividend received by the shareholder, his total income is computed to be one rupee.

Dividends.—It is not necessary that the company should actually pay tax on the profits. Cases can arise in which a company declares dividends without itself paying any tax.

Partners of firms.—The effect of clause (b) of sub-section (1) is shown in a hypothetical case below. Let us take three partners A, B and C with equal shares and with following data:

Computation of A's share—

					Rs.	A.	P.
Salary	4,000	0	0
Interest	3,000	0	0
Loss	—1,000	0	0
					6,000	0	0

Computation of B's share—

					Rs.	A.	P.
Loss	—1,000	0	0
Computation of C 's share—
Salary	6,000	0	0
Interest	2,000	0	0

Firm's profits would be Rs. 12,000 while assessment will be made on A and B for Rs. 13,000.

Share.—This word refers evidently to the proportion in which the divisible part of the profits is to be divided, i.e., if under the partnership deed a part of the firm's profits is to be kept in reserve or given to a charity and the rest is to be divided in a certain ratio, the latter ratio will be the 'share' for the purpose of this clause. See also section 14.

Net profit or net loss.—These words are superfluous. The word 'net' evidently refers to the ultimate result of the salary, etc., plus the shares of loss of firm (the latter calculated without allowance for salary, etc.).

Proviso.—This proviso which could have been more appropriately incorporated in section 24 makes it clear how the loss of a partner in a firm is to be computed for the purpose of carry forward under section 24.

Transfers made before 1939.—Sub-section (1) (c) applies to all assessments due after 1st April, 1939, irrespective of whether the income was earned before that date. The relevant law is the law at the time of assessment, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Maharajah of Pithapuram, 1942 I.T.R. 1.

Also, the subject of charge is the income, not of the year of assessment, but of the previous year. The absence of the words "whether effected before or after the commencement" of the Amending Act after the latter class of transfer of revocable assets is immaterial and the clause applies to all transfers. The plain word cannot be cut down by adding "effected after 1939". Maharaja of Pithapuram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1945 I.T.R. 221 (P.C.).

Trusts.—Clause (c). These provisions—if one omits the third proviso which relaxes the rigour of the rest of the sub-section—are more drastic than the provisions in the United Kingdom law which have been altered many times in recent years and are very elaborate. See, for example, Inland Revenue v. Payne, 1942 I.T.R. (Supp.).

It will be noted that the very wide scope of the main part of the clause and of the first two provisos is severely restricted by the third proviso. If the settlement is not revocable for a period exceeding six years or during the lifetime of the settlor and if he derives no benefit, direct or indirect, from the income, he cannot be assessed on the income. To escape liability both conditions should be satisfied. When the period of non-revocability expires, however, he will be automatically assessed on the income, unless he makes a new settlement which is non-revocable for another period exceeding six years.

Under the main clause all settlements, whether revocable or not and whether effected before 1st April, 1939 or not, in which the assets remain the property of the settlor, and all revocable settlements are caught. The first proviso extends the meaning of revocability. Differing views have been held as to whether if the revocation required the consent of third parties or the trustees or was contingent on events, the case would be covered by the words of the proviso, See Ramji Keshavji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 105.

See notes under section 3 as to charges on income and in particular the ruling of the Privy Council in Raja Bejoy Singh Dudhuria's Case and similar rulings by High Courts. Section 16 (1) (c) refers to voluntary dispositions. If a disposition is not voluntary, the case will fall under section 40 or 41, failing which, under the section 3, in which case the assessee will be taxed on the net income he receives or is entitled to receive after prior charges.

Sections 16 (1) (c), 40 and 41 form exceptions to the general rule in section 3 that a person is taxed on his own income and not on the income of others.

First proviso.—In a similar context in the United Kingdom, the word 'power' has been interpreted as follows: "it is impossible to compare the word 'power' to a strict power in the conveyancing sense. It must, therefore, have a wider and more popular meaning those voting rights, used for the purpose for which they were used, and playing the part in the scheme which they did play, are in my opinion, properly described in the context of the section by 'power' per Greene, M.R. in Inland Revenue v. Payne, 1942 I.T.R. (Sup.). In this case the person concerned had a 75 per cent. voting power in a company, which he could wind up if he chose and thus terminate the payments in question, which were payable to the company either for the person's life or till the company was wound up.

Income paid to the settlor in repayment of loans from him would be caught by the word 'indirectly', cf. Jenkins v. Inland Revenue, 1944 (K.B.D.).

The settlement of shares in a company dominated by the settlor and giving him or capable of giving him loans or other benefits in excess of his interests in the company would be caught by the words "power indirectly over the income or assets" cf. Heddon Court House, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, 1944 (K.B.D.) following Inland Revenue v. L. B. Holdings, Ltd.

Where the settlor keeps a part of the settled property for his own enjoyment, there is no question of retransfer or reassumption, ab initio the income from that part continues to be his income, Ramji Keshavji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 105.

Where, side by side with the payment of an annuity to a person, there is an obligation on his part to repay the annuity to the settlor, the settlement will be ignored, Lee v. Inland Revenue, 1944. If, in fact, repayment is made i.e., voluntarily, the question would then arise whether the settlement was genuine or only a sham.

Second proviso.—A mere right to assume power over income, so as to give it to one beneficiary rather than another would be caught by this proviso. Though, by such a device, the settlor could not affect his own income directly, he could do so indirectly, e.g., by giving the income to a major son instead of a minor son whose (the latter's) would be aggregated with the father's, Keshavlal Punjaram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1944 I.T.R. 185. The word 'arrangement' is not a word of art. "It is used in this context in what may be described a business sense the whole of what was done must be looked at—(the assessee) deliberately placed himself in a certain relationship to the company as part of one definite scheme if a deliberate scheme, perfectly clear cut is not an arrangement, I have difficulty in seeing what useful purpose was served by the Legislature in putting that word into the definition at all", per Greene M.R., in Inland Revenue v. Payne, 1942 I.T.R. (Sup.).

An 'arrangement' evidently implies a common purpose and a connection between different facts, making them into a single scheme with a definite purpose; things done either simultaneously or otherwise with the deliberate intention that in conjunction they shall produce a certain result is an 'arrangement' (ibid.); see also Chamberlain v. Inland Revenue, 1942 C.A.

Third proviso.—The meaning of the word 'revocable' in the third proviso applies to the first proviso also and is not restricted to the substantive provision, cf. Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Warden, 17 A.T.C. 521 (C.S.); and see Ramji Keshavji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1945 I.T.R. 105.

The Crown has to establish affirmatively that the income is payable or applicable—not merely ‘may be’—for less than the life of the beneficiary; and what has to be considered is the effect of the settlement in the light of the circumstances at the relevant time. If the settlement will operate at some future date even to cut down or destroy the interest of the beneficiary, the section will apply to the whole or part of the income as the case may be; if, on the other hand, the circumstances continue undisturbed, except by an extraneous event which may or may not happen (e.g., in the case before the Court the birth of other children) the income will be considered to be applicable for the benefit of the beneficiary for the whole of his life, Manray v. Inland Revenue, 1944 C.A. This ruling suggests that in the first proviso revocability depending on extraneous events is to be excluded.

Profits dealt with under section 23-A.—In construing a trust deed under which the settlor, inter alia, had to give away a fraction of his “total income which shall accrue due and be receivable by him in that year” it has been held that profits apportioned to him under section 21 of the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1922 (roughly corresponding to section 23-A of the Indian Act) could not be included in the total income of the settlor-shareholder, not being due and receivable by him, Earl of Normanton v. Inland Revenue, 18 A.T.C. 301 (C.A.).

Trusts for employees.—With a view to affording certain employees a closer interest in the business, the principal controlling shareholder (Sir Charles Parsons) set aside some shares of his to be transferred to each employee when the dividends thereon together with any sums paid by the employee amounted to the par value of the shares. The dividends and any payments by the employees were credited to the shares in a separate account for each employee; and if the employee died before the shares were fully paid for, the full amount credited to his account was to be paid to his estate in cash. But until the transfer of the share to the employee, the shares were in the name of Sir Charles Parsons who received the dividends and had full control over the shares. Held, that the dividends were taxable as the income of Sir Charles Parsons, Inland Revenue v. Parsons, 41 T.L.R. 672; 13 Tax Cas. 700 (C.A.). The owner of a business, who desired its continuance after his death, provided, inter alia, that the net profits should be divided annually among certain selected employees, of whom the appellant was one, in certain shares. Ten per cent. of the profits was to be paid over to the employees in proportion to their shares, but the remainder was not to be drawn out by them until the whole of the late owner’s capital had been paid out. In the meantime, their shares were credited to their respective accounts in the books. The employees had no power to sell or dispose of their interests, which did not vest in them till the whole capital had been paid out. Held, that the business was the property of the trustees, that the employees were not partners, and that the 90 per cent. credited in the accounts was not the income of the employees. ‘Of course, the mere fact though under a man’s contract of service a portion of his salary is held up or payment of it is deferred.....does not less make it a part of his income. The deferred portion of the salary is still salary..... There is all the difference between a case of that kind and one where the fund is said to form part of a man’s income, but may from causes over which he has no control, be never his at all, per Lord Stormonth Darling Walker v. Reith, 1906—8 F. 381; 43 Sc. L. R. 245. Where an employer handed over to trustees for the benefit of an employee an annual bonus from each year’s profits, and such bonus was payable to the employee only on his death or on the termination of his service by the employer, but not if he was dismissed for misconduct or if he assigned his interest to others, it was held, following Smyth v. Stretton, 5 Tax Cas. 36, that notwithstanding the forfeitability of the bonus in certain events, the bonus became the income of the employee each year as it was paid by the employer to the trustees, Edwards v. Roberts, 19 Tax Cas. 618 (C.A.). An agreement to sell a business under which all receipts belong to the vendor until the purchase-money has been fully received is not the same as selling the business at once and keeping the receipts therefrom as security for the payment of the purchase-money. In the latter case, the business belongs to the purchaser, while in the former it belongs to the vendor till the purchase-money has been fully paid, Bonner v. Frood, 18 Tax Cas. 488.

Accumulations for minors.—There has been considerable litigation in the United Kingdom on this subject. The latest case was Stanley v. Inland Revenue, 1944 in which the Court of Appeal differed from the High Court. The case is understood to be before the House of Lords.

Sub-section (2).—This sub-section is part of the new scheme of taxing dividends. Formerly under section 14, no further tax was payable by the shareholder on a dividend, which however was included in the total income under section 16 (after a proportionate increase for income-tax). Now the exemption under section 14 has been removed and the dividend would be automatically taxable in the hands of the shareholder, but per contra under section 18 (5) credit is given to him for tax. This sub-section was amended in 1941 so as to make its meaning clearer.

Deemed to have been paid, etc.—The cases contemplated by these words are not clear. The reference cannot be to section 23-A, for, in that case shareholders are to be taxed directly. The reference may be to section 16 (1) (c), section 16 (3), section 2 (6-A), section 44-D and sections 44 E. & F.

Rate of tax.—It will be seen from this sub-section and section 18 (5) that the relevant rate is not that of the financial year in which the corresponding profits of the company are assessed but that of the financial year in which the dividend is paid, etc. So, tax to be added in respect of different half years may be different.

Proviso.—This deals with cases in which only a part of the company's profits was taxable.

As the sub-section stands, the whole of the dividend is taxable in the hands of the shareholder even though a part of it may have been derived from non-taxable sources, e.g., agricultural income or tax-free securities. All that the shareholder can claim under the proviso is that the notional tax addition to be made to the dividend shall be restricted to a fraction.

In other words, while the old law as interpreted by the Privy Council in the Hungerford Trust case, 62 Cal. 133; 7 I.T.C. 441, took up one extreme position, viz., that the whole dividend was exempt even though the company had paid tax only on a fraction of its profits, the new law takes up the other extreme, viz., the whole dividend is taxable even though the greater part of it may have been derived from tax-free sources. But, in practice, the Crown taxes only a proportion of the dividend; for example, only 40 per cent. of dividends of tea companies is taxed.

Paid, credited or distributed.—The alternatives are evidently put in out of abundant caution in order to cover all possible cases of payment in kind or by book adjustment.

Sub-section (3).—The sub-section was introduced in 1937 and clauses (a) (iv) and (b) were amended in 1939. As regards clause (b), the notes on clauses attached to the amending Bill stated as follows:—

"The wording of this clause has been found to be defective as it may be possible for a person to transfer income to an association of individuals which includes a person other than that individual or his wife but in such circumstances that the income becomes the income of the wife or minor child. For this reason the words 'consisting of such individual and his wife' are being omitted and the words 'for the benefit of his wife or a minor child or both' are being added. It will be seen that the provisions in sub-section (1) (c) cover all cases of transfers of income and also cover cases of revocable transfers of assets. This clause as now amended covers the further cases of irrevocable transfers of assets where the income accrues to the benefit of the wife or minor child of the transferor."

Benami.—This sub-section applies only to the cases referred to them, and does not deal with the general question of benami, which has to be dealt with under the general law in accordance with the relevant evidence, and if the Revenue seek to establish that the ostensible owner of property or income is not the real owner, the onus lies on the Revenue to establish that conclusion, Ramkunkar Banerji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. 1936 I.T.R. 118; Sovaram Jokhiram v. Ibid., 1944 I.T.R. 110; Shaikh Mohammad Nagi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1945 I.T.R. 452.

Retrospective effect.—Though there are no express words covering transfers made before 1937 (compare section 16 (1) (c) where express reference is made to settlements, etc., whether made before or after the introduction of the provisos; and also section 44-D where express words appear) and though penal legislation cannot be applied retrospectively without express words to that effect to be extended to this case, it has to be remembered that what is taxed is only current income. It is not the transfer of assets as such that is taxed but only the income that arises from the assets nor does the law seek to invalidate past transactions. The Amending Act of 1937 which originally introduced sub-section (3) merely stated, that the provision would not apply to incomes that arose before 1st April, 1937, and nothing further. It has accordingly been held that this sub-section applies to all income that arose on or after 1st April, 1937, irrespective of when the assets were transferred, H. P. Banerjee & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1941 I.T.R. 137; Pandit Ganga Prasad Tiwari v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1942 I.T.R. 308 (All.); In re Sardasini Narain Kuer, 1943 I.T.R., 448 (Lah.); Sheik Mohammad Nagi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1945 I.T.R. 452 (Lah.).

Transfers from wife.—The sub-section does not cover transfers from wife to husband. The position about transfers from a mother to a minor child is not clear. The word "individual" in sub-clause (iv) refers to the "individual" at the beginning of the sub-section, which in the light of sub-clauses (i) and (iii) evidently refers to a male.

"A wife or minor child".—The words clearly cover more than one wife or child.

Onus of proof.—There is no presumption that the assets of a Hindu wife are stridhanam, and it is for the assessee to prove that his wife's assets arose otherwise than, by transfer from him directly or indirectly. The question is one of fact, and so long as there are materials for the findings of the Income-tax authorities the findings will not be disturbed by the Court, Sinmasswami Pillai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1942 I.T.R. 71. It has been held, however, that where documents of title are in the name of the wife, the onus is on the department to show that she is not the real owner. Sovaram Jokhiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1944 I.T.R. 110. The question is always one of fact, and while the onus lies on that party which seems to show that the apparent is not real, it should also be remembered that in most cases the assessee alone has possession of all the evidence and his refusal to produce the evidence will result in an inference against him.

Where an assessee transferred to his wife two houses, without consideration, and not as part of an agreement to live apart and the wife ran a school in one of the rooms and let out the rest of the property, and later on, the wife transferred the properties to a trust out of the funds of which she was to receive Rs. 50 a month as head manager thereof (and her husband also, a monthly remuneration as their agent), it was held that the wife's income not being salary, but a part of the income of the trust could be added on to the income of the husband under this section, Pandit Gaya Prasad Tewari v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1942 I.T.R. 309 (All.).

An assessee who had certain shares and securities jointly with his wife, executed a trust deed binding himself to hold certain shares in trust for his wife. He, however, continued to receive the income. Held that the property in the shares and securities continued to remain in the assessee's hands and that the income was taxable in his hands. Sir Sorabjee Mehta v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., (1927) 2 I.T.C. 286; following, Egger v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 4 Rang. 538. This decision however, was given before the advent of section 16 (1) (c) and sub-section (3) of that section.

Adequate consideration.—Pre-nuptial settlements and settlements in favour of children to be adopted will presumably be transfers for adequate consideration, and in any case they are not transfers to a wife or child, but to a prospective wife or child. The question of adequacy of consideration is primarily a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case. Thus (say) a payment to a wife with an independent business of her own (of a nature not falling within the mischief of this sub-section) in return for surrender of something valuable by her would be a payment for adequate consideration.

Transfers from a husband to his wife, of assets otherwise than for adequate consideration cover gifts out of love and affection. The word 'consideration' is used in a legal sense; and love and affection cannot be such consideration. It has not been defined in the Transfer of Property Act, and should be given a similar meaning to that in the Contract Act. 'Adequate consideration' is quite different from good consideration, H. P. Banerjee v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1941 I.T.R. 137. In re Sardanin Narain Kuer, 1943 I.T.R. 448 (Lah.).

Associations.—Clause (b) as it stood before 1939 applied only to associations composed of an individual and his wife; now it applies to any person or association receiving income for the benefit of the wife or minor child or both. The words "otherwise than for adequate consideration" were also added in 1939 to exclude bona fide transfers of assets for adequate consideration. This clause is, it is submitted, otiose, since the cases contemplated by it would be covered by the word "indirectly" in clause (a). So long as the income is intended for the benefit of the wife (or child), it is not necessary that it need be actually spent for their benefit before the income can be added to the income of the husband (or father).

Where a Muslim assessee formed a wakf, of which his wife was one of the beneficiaries, it was held that the part of the income of the wakf which went to the wife could be aggregated with the income of the husband, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Sir Muhammad Ismail, 1944 I.T.R. 8.

Partnership [sub-clauses (i) and (ii) of clause (a)].—No matter how unimportant the interest (or professional skill) in the firm of the husband (or father) and how dominant that of the wife (or minor child), and no matter wherefrom the wife or child derived the assets in the partnership, their income from the firm will be included in that of the husband (or father).

Sub-clause (ii) will apply irrespective of whether the minors were admitted to the benefits of partnership gratis or whether they contributed to the assets, e.g., their shares in a disrupted Hindu family out of which the partnership has been formed, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Lakshmanier, 1941 I.T.R. 668. If a child admitted to the benefits of partnership attains majority after the date of assessment of the firm and before the date of assessment of the father, its income will still be aggregated with that of the father. The material date for section 26 (1) is the date of assessment of the firm. In re Chimanbhai Lalbhari, 1944 I.T.R. 199 (Bom.).

'Not being a married daughter'.—These words appear in sub-clause (iv) of clause (a) but not in sub-clause (ii) or in clause (b). The omissions do not seem to be intentional but the presence of the words in that part of the sub-section and their absence elsewhere cannot be ignored.

Scope of Section.—Total income does not include income which under the charging sections (4 and 6) is not liable to tax at all. That is to say, none of the items exempted, e.g., agricultural income, casual receipts not connected with business, etc., can be taken into account. Total income includes in addition to income on which tax is payable by the assessee directly items taxed at source or on the assessee's behalf and items of income which really belong to him though nominally to others. All such items are detailed in this section. See also section 58-E.

Total income being so determined, the assessee's liability to tax, and the tax that he should pay are fixed by the Finance Act. Credit is given to him for tax collected or assessed at source, [see section 18 (5)]; and the assessee can get a refund under section 48, if eligible.

Rules 19 and 19-A lay down the form in which details of 'total income' should be furnished to the Income-tax Officer.

Partners' shares of unremitted foreign income.—Where the rebate of Rs. 4,500 under the third proviso to section 4 (1) has been allowed to a registered firm, rebate on the same ground cannot be claimed also by the partners. Section 4 (1) deals with the assessment of tax, i.e., with what is taxable while section 16 deals with the levy, i.e., from whom the tax shall be due. The rebate, therefore is allowed at the first stage, and not at the second, Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Valiram Bhermal, 1946 I.T.R. 407. See also notes under section 4 (1).

Dividends of Foreign Companies.—It was decided under the pre-1939 law that dividends payable abroad, and actually so paid, to shareholders not resident in British India by Companies registered abroad but doing business in British India and paying tax here cannot be included in

'total income' under this section since such dividends do not accrue or arise in British India, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Major Golde, 5 I.T.C. 228; 55 Bom. 734; A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 420. This ruling, however, was nullified by Explanation to sub-section (1) of section 4. See notes thereunder. This Explanation has been challenged as being ultra vires the powers of the Legislature and this case is now before the Privy Council, the Federal Court having held the explanation to be intra vires. Governor-General in Council v. Raleigh Investments, 1944 I.T.R. 265.

17. (1) Where a person is not resident in British India, and is a British subject as defined in section 27 of the British Nationality and status of Aliens Act, 1914, or a subject of a State in India or Burma, or a native of a Tribal Area the tax, including super-tax, payable by him or on his behalf on his total income shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of the tax including super-tax which would have been payable on his total world income had it been his total income the same proportion as his total income bears to his total world income; and in the case of any other non-resident person, the income-tax payable by him or on his behalf on his total income shall be at the maximum rate and the super-tax payable thereon shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of super-tax which would have been payable on his total world income had it been his total income the same proportion as his total income bears to his total world income.

(2) Where there is included in the total income of any assessee any income (including income from a share in an unregistered firm, if assessed as such) exempted from tax by or under the provisions of this Act, the income-tax excluding super-tax payable by the assessee shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of the income-tax excluding super-tax which would have been payable on the total income had no part of it been exempted the same proportion as the unexempted portion of the total income bears to the total income.

(3) Where there is included in the total income of any assessee any income exempted from tax under clause (c) of sub-section (2) of section 14, the super-tax payable by the assessee shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of the super-tax which would have been payable on the total income had no part of it been so exempted the same proportion as the total income less the portion so exempted bears to the total income.

(4) Where any income exempted from tax under clause (c) of sub-section (2) of section 14 which has been taken into account under section (2) or sub-section (3) of this section as part of the total income of an assessee for the purpose of determining the income-tax or super-tax payable by him is in a subsequent year brought into or received in British India by the assessee and becomes chargeable with tax accordingly the tax including super-tax payable by the assessee on his total income of that subsequent year shall be—(a) the amount which bears to the total amount of the tax including super-tax which would have been payable on his total income as reduced by the amount of the income so brought into or received in British India had such reduced income been his total income the same proportion as his total income bears to such reduced income or

(b) the amount which bears to the total amount of the tax including super-tax which would have been payable on the amount of the income so brought into or received in British India had such income been his total income the same proportion as his total income bears to the amount of the income so brought into or received in British India, whichever is the greater ;

(5) Where the amount of the total income of any assessee is deemed to be the total income reduced under the provisions of section 15-A by an allowance for earned income, the expression 'total income' in this section shall, for the purpose of determining the amount of income-tax (but not super-tax) payable by the assessee, be deemed to refer to his total income so reduced.

History.—This section as framed in 1939 is entirely new and has nothing in common with the old one. The old provision relating to marginal relief cannot arise under the 'slab' system and has therefore been dropped. Sub-sections (3) and (4) were added in 1941 when section 14 was amended.

Scope.—Sub-section (1) deals with the taxation of non-residents dividing them into two classes, viz., British or Indian State or tribal subjects on the one hand and others, viz., aliens on the other. Sub-section (2) deals with exemptions like income-tax on life insurance premia; sub-section (3) with Indian States income and sub-section (4) with remittances of such Indian States income.

Income in other than Indian States.—Sub-section (1) of the new section which deals with non-residents partly incorporates sub-section (4) and (5) of old section 48. Whereas formerly the world income was taken into account only for determining the rate of income-tax for the purpose of refund of tax collected in excess at source, tax is now levied on what may be loosely called a pro rata basis with reference to world income and British India income, subject however to the condition that a non-resident alien has to pay income-tax (not super-tax) at the maximum rate.

Under section 4 (1) a resident who is ordinarily resident will be taxed on his world income; a resident who is not ordinarily resident will be taxed on his British India income and also on a part or the whole of his foreign income according to circumstances as laid down in the second proviso to sub-section (1) of section 4 and in either alternative in the latter case, in fixing the rate of tax, excluded foreign income will be excluded from "total income". A non-resident however though taxed only on his British Indian income will pay tax at a rate determined with reference to world income (or at maximum rate). As a consequence a resident who is not ordinarily resident may often be more leniently dealt with than a non-resident (even a British subject).

Income in Indian States.—Under clause (c) of sub-section (2) of section 14 income in Indian States not brought into British India nor taxed under section 42 is included in 'total income', i.e., for rate purposes but not in taxable income. When such income is brought into British India in a later year the tax is regulated as follows:

Let F be the amount so brought in, B the assessee's other total income (including, of course, income in Indian States arising in that year but not brought in and therefore not taxed), Tf the tax on F if that had been the total income, Tb the tax on B if that had been the total income. The tax payable is (1) $Tf \times \frac{F+B}{F}$ —or (2) $Tb \times \frac{F+B}{B}$ —whichever may be the greater; in other words if F is greater than B , i.e., the amount brought in the year exceeds the other income, the rate will be that applicable to that income and in computing tax this rate will be applied to that income plus his other income; similarly, if the amount brought in is less than the other income, the rate will be that applicable to the other income, and this rate will be applied to the whole of the income, i.e., other income plus the income brought in.

It will be noted that the basis of sub-section (4) is entirely different from that of the other sub-sections.

Non-resident.—I.e., not a resident. For definition of "resident", see section 4-A; it will be seen that the status of an assessee will have to be examined afresh with reference to facts every year.

Payable on his behalf.—See sections 16, 18, 43, 44-D and 49-B as to circumstances when tax is payable on an assessee's behalf.

British subject.—According to section 27 of the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, the expression "British subject" means a person who is a natural-born British subject, or a person to whom a certificate of naturalization has been granted or a person who has become a subject of His Majesty by reason of any annexation of territory.

It will be noted that the rate of tax on aliens is more onerous than on British, etc., subjects. Hindu undivided families are treated in practice like individuals for the purpose of their rights as British subjects under this section. See Report of Select Committee, 1941.

Where income partly exempt.—Sub-section (2) has been necessitated by the 'slab' system. The exemptions contemplated are those referred to in section 16 (1), viz., those under sections 7, 8, 14 and 15, which apply only to income-tax and not to super-tax. It will be noted that the sub-section refers to the computation of income-tax excluding super-tax.

Sub-section (2) deals with income-tax (not super-tax) and includes also income-tax on Indian States income exempted by section 14 (2) (c); sub-section (3) on the other hand deals with super-tax only and in respect of only one item, viz., Indian States income exempted under section 14 (2) (c).

Marginal relief.—Old section 17 provided for marginal relief which, to the extent required, is now-a-days given by the Finance Act itself.

Earned income.—Sub-section (5) was added in 1945. See sections 2 (6-AA) and 16 (1) (a) and notes thereunder. As to marginal relief in respect of earned income, see notes on section 7 of the Finance Act of 1945.

CHAPTER IV.

DEDUCTIONS AND ASSESSMENT.

Payment by deduction
at source.

18. (1) * * *

(2) Any person responsible for paying any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" shall, at the time of payment, deduct income-tax and super-tax on the amount payable at a rate representing the average of the rates applicable to the estimated total income of the assessee under this head :

Provided that such person may, at the time of making any deduction, increase or reduce the amount to be deducted under this sub-section for the purpose of adjusting any excess or deficiency arising out of any previous deduction or failure to deduct.

(2-A) Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, for the purpose of making the deduction under sub-section (2), there shall be included in the amount payable any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" which is payable to the assessee out of India by or on behalf of the Crown, and the value in rupees of such income shall be calculated at the prescribed rate of exchange.

(2-B) Any person responsible for paying any income chargeable under the head 'Salaries' to a person not resident in British India shall at the time of payment deduct income-tax at the maximum rate and also super-tax at the rate or rates applicable to the estimated income of the assessee under this head.

(3) The person responsible for paying any income chargeable under the head "Interest on Securities" shall, unless otherwise prescribed in the case of any security of the Central Government, at the time of payment, deduct income-tax but not super-tax on the amount, of the interest payable at the maximum rate :

Provided that where the Income-tax Officer gives a certificate in writing (which certificate he shall give in every proper case on the application of the assessee) that to the best of his belief the total income or the total world income of a recipient will be less than the minimum liable to income-tax or will be liable to a rate of income-tax less than the maximum rate, the person responsible for paying any income referred to in this sub-section or in sub-section (2-B), as the case may be, to such recipient shall, until such certificate is cancelled by the Income-tax Officer, pay the income without deduction or deduct the tax at such less rate as the case may be.

(3-A) Any person responsible for paying to a person not resident in British India any interest not being 'Interest on Securities,' or any other sum chargeable under the provisions of this Act, shall, at the time of payment, unless he is himself liable to pay income-tax thereon as an agent, deduct income-tax at the maximum rate:

Provided that where the person so payable is a British subject as defined in section 27 of the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, or a subject of a State in India or Burma, and the Income-tax Officer gives a certificate in writing (which certificate he shall give in every proper case on the application of the assessee) that to the best of his belief the total world income of such person will be less than the minimum liable to income-tax or that his total income will be liable to a rate of tax less than the maximum rate, the person responsible for paying any income referred to in this sub-section shall, until such certificate is cancelled by the Income-tax Officer, pay the income without deduction or deduct the tax at such less rate, as the case may be:

Provided further that nothing in this section shall apply to any payment made in the course of transactions in respect of which the person responsible for making the payment is deemed under the first proviso to section 43 not to be an agent of the assessee.

(3-B) Where the Income-tax Officer has reason to believe that the total world income of any person residing out of British India to whom any interest not being 'Interest on Securities' or any other sum chargeable under this Act is payable, will in any year exceed the maximum amount which is not chargeable with super-tax under the law for the time being in force, he may, by order in writing, require the person responsible for making such payments to such person to deduct at the time of payment super-tax at the rates determined by the Income-tax Officer to be applicable to the total world income of such person in that year.

(3-G) Where the person responsible for paying any interest not being 'Interest on Securities' or any other sum chargeable under this Act to any person makes to that person in any year payments exceeding in the aggregate the maximum amount which is not chargeable with super-tax under the law for the time being in force, the person responsible for making such payments shall, if he has not reason to believe that the recipient is resident in British India, and no order under sub-section (3-B) has been received in respect of such recipient, deduct at the time of payment super-tax on the amount by which the total amount of such payments exceeds the maximum amount not chargeable with super-tax at the rate applicable to such excess.

(3-D) Where the Income-tax Officer has reason to believe that any person, who is a shareholder in a company, is resident out of British India and that the total world income of such person will in any year exceed the maximum amount which is not chargeable to super-tax under the law for the time being in force, he may, by order in writing, require the principal officer of the company to deduct at the time of payment of any dividend from the company to the shareholder in that year super-tax at such rate as the Income-tax Officer may determine as being the rate applicable in respect of the income of the shareholder in that year.

(3-E) If in any year the amount of any dividend or the aggregate amount of any dividends paid to any shareholder by a company (increased in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 16) exceeds the maximum amount of the total income of a person which is not chargeable to super-tax under the law for the time being in force, and the principal officer of the company has no reason to believe that the shareholder is resident in British India, and no order under sub-section (3-D) has been received in respect of such shareholder by the principal officer from the Income-tax Officer, the principal officer shall at the time of payment deduct super-tax on the amount of such excess at the rate which would be applicable under the law for the time being in force if the amount of such dividend or dividends increased as aforesaid constituted the whole total income of the shareholder.

(4) All sums deducted in accordance with the provisions of this section shall, for the purpose of computing the income of an assessee, be deemed to be income received.

(5) Any deduction made in accordance with the provisions of this section and any sum by which a dividend has been increased under sub-section (2) of section 16 shall be treated as a payment of income-tax or super-tax on behalf of the person from whose income the deduction was made, or of the owner of the security or of the shareholder, as the case may be, and credit shall be given to him therefor in the assessment, if any, made for the following year under this Act :

Provided that, if such person or such owner obtains, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, a refund of any portion of the tax so deducted, no credit shall be given for the amount of such refund :

Provided further that where such person or owner is a person whose income is included under the provisions of clause (c) of sub-section (1) or sub-section (3) of section 16, section 44-D or section 44-E in the total income of another person such other person shall be deemed to be the person or owner on whose behalf payment has been made and to whom credit shall be given in the assessment for the following year.

(6) All sums deducted in accordance with the provisions of this section shall be paid within the prescribed time by the person making the deduction to the credit of the Central Government or as the Central Board of Revenue directs.

(7) If any such person does not deduct or after deducting fails to pay the tax as required by or under this section, he, and in the cases specified in sub-sections (3-D) and (3-E) the company of which he is the principal officer shall, without prejudice to any other consequences which he or it may incur, be deemed to be an assessee in default in respect of the tax.

Provided that the Income-tax Officer shall not make a direction under sub-section (1) of section 46 for the recovery of any penalty from such person unless satisfied that such person has wilfully failed to deduct and pay the tax.

(8) The power to levy by deduction under this section shall be without prejudice to any other mode of recovery.

(9) Every person deducting income-tax or super-tax in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3), (3-A), (3-B), (3-C), (3-D) or (3-E) shall, at the time of payment of the sum from which tax has been deducted, furnish to the person to whom such payment is made a certificate to the effect that income-tax or super-tax has been deducted, and specifying the amount so deducted, the rate at which the tax has been deducted, and such other particulars as may be prescribed.

Rules.—Several rules have been made with reference to this section. These are:

(1) Rule 10 prescribing the time within which deductions of tax have to be paid to Government.

(2) Rule 10-A laying down the rate of exchange for conversion of overseas or other pay paid abroad in sterling by Government.

(3) Rule 11 regarding the details of the information to be given to the Income-tax Officer in respect of (a) deduction of tax from salaries, other than those paid by Government and (b) deductions by approved superannuation funds; and Rule 11-A permitting in certain cases provisional payments monthly subject to adjustment at the end of the year.

(4) Rule 12 regarding information similarly to be given in respect of tax on interest on securities.

(5) Rule 12-A similarly in respect of cases under sub-sections (3-A), (3-B), (3-C), (3-D) and (3-E).

(6) Rule 12-B as to the action to be taken to pay the Income-tax in cases governed by Rules 12 and 12-A.

(7) Rule 13 regarding the certificate of deduction of tax in respect of interest on Government securities.

(8) Rule 13-A similarly in respect of other securities.

(9) Rule 13-B similarly in respect of interest not being interest on securities.

(10) Rule 13-C in respect of tax on deductions of shares registered in the Reserve Bank of India.

History.—The Act of 1918 provided that where a payment was a non-recurring payment, the tax should be deducted at the rate appropriate to that particular sum, as if it were the whole of the assessee's income, and that where a payment was a recurring payment, the tax should be deducted on the assumption that the total income of the assessee amounted to twelve times the recurring sum. Section 18 (2) of the Act now provides that deductions from salary shall be made at a rate which should approximate as closely as possible to the rate appropriate to the total assessable income of the assessee under the head "salaries", and it further empowers the person deducting income-tax from "salaries" to rectify, in subsequent deductions, mistakes made in previous deductions.

Under the 1918 Act, private employers could not deduct tax at source on salaries of employees.

See also sections 7, 8 and 13 of the 1886 Act under which only the interest on Government Securities and the salaries and pensions of Government servants and servants of local authorities were subject to deduction of tax at source

The changes made since 1922 are as follows:—

(1) Sub-section (2-A) was added in 1925 to provide for the taxation of sterling overseas pay;

(2) sub-sections (3-A) and (3-B) were inserted in 1933; also the provisos to sub-sections (3) and (7);

(3) in the same year, sub-sections (3-C) and (3-D) were transferred to this section from section 57; and sub-section (1) omitted; the words "unless otherwise prescribed in the case of any security of the Central Government" being added to sub-section (3); and the following minor changes made, viz., the insertion of the words "but not super-tax" in sub-sections (2) and (3); of the words "or super-tax" in sub-sections 5 and 9 and of the words "or under" in sub-section (7), and the substitution of the words "an assessee" for "personally" in sub-section 7;

(4) the words 'the Crown' were substituted for 'Government' in 1937 by the Adaptations Order;

(5) the second proviso to sub-section (5) was added in 1937;

(6) in 1939, several important changes were made; sub-section (2) was amended so as to permit deduction of super-tax; sub-sections (2-B) and (3-A) were added; sub-section (5) was altered so as to give credit to a shareholder in a company for the (notional) income-tax paid on his behalf; sub-sections (3-B) and (3-C) (as renumbered) were altered so as to provide for deduction of super-tax from payments to non-residents of any sum chargeable under the Act (see section 42); reference was made in sub-sections (3-B) and (3-D) to 'total world income' in place of 'total income'; the second proviso to sub-section (5) was expanded so as to cover cases under sections 44-D and 44-E; and minor consequential changes were made in other sub-sections.

In 1940 a proviso was added to sub-section (3-A) on the lines of the proviso to sub-section (3), and in 1941 a drafting amendment made in sub-section (3-E) in regard to the 'grossing' up of dividends.

Deduction at source.—Deduction at source is made in the following cases: viz. Both Income-tax and Super-tax on salaries (see section 7), Income-tax on Interest on Securities (see section 8), both income-tax and super-tax on other kinds of interest or other sums chargeable when paid to a non-resident [in the circumstances set out in sub-sections (3-A), (3-B) and (3-C) of this section], super-tax on dividends of companies paid to a non-resident [as in sub-sections (3-D) and (3-E)], and tax on payment of accumulations in recognised provident funds (see section 58-H).

Scope of Section.—This section provides for the deduction of tax at the source as distinguished from taxation at the source (the latter in respect of unregistered firms and certain associations of persons)—see sections 14 and 16. The tax so deducted is paid over by the persons making the deduction to the credit of the Central Government within the period specified in the rules above, along with a statement as prescribed by them. Such deductions of income-tax are, under sub-section (5) of section 18, treated as payments of income-tax on behalf of the persons from whose income or interest the deduction was made, and credit is given to them in the assessment of their income if an assessment is made of their other income.

In respect of dividends of companies, however, there is no provision in the Income-tax law for deduction of tax at source, but the tax paid by the company is deemed by sub-section (5) of this section, to have been paid on behalf of the shareholder. But there is nothing to prevent a contractual arrangement between a company and its shareholder empowering the company to deduct tax on dividends but this arrangement has nothing to do with the Crown.

References.—As to the meaning of 'Salaries', see section 7 which makes the expression include advances and certain capital receipts also; and as to that of 'Securities,' see section 8. As to the meaning of 'reside' and 'resident', see notes under section 4. As to 'grossing' up of dividends see section 16 (2).

It will be noted that there is no provision for collection of Super-tax at source on Interest on Securities.

Sub-section (2).—Two important changes were made in this sub-section in 1939, viz., (1) super-tax also has to be deducted at the time of payment and (2) the rate at which tax is to be deducted (both income-tax and super-tax) is to be the average of the rates applicable to the estimated total income under the head 'salaries'.

'Under this head'.—The rate to be applied to any particular payment is that applicable to the estimated income under 'salaries' for the year in which payment is made. Chalmers v. Rex, 1 Rang. 335; 1 I.T.C. 140; A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 30. The assessee's income from other sources than 'salaries' must be ignored for this purpose.

Paying.—The person responsible for "paying" the salary means, in the context of this section, the person responsible for making the payment and not the person responsible for bearing the financial liability. Sub-sections (3-B) and (3-C) each of which refers to more than one category of payments, use the words "making such payments" and not "paying", thus making the intention clear.

Average.—Tax has to be deducted at the average rate every month because of the 'slab' system. In the context, 'average' simply means one-twelfth of the estimated tax on salaries for the whole year.

Accrued salary.—Though under section 7 salaries can be taxed, i.e., included in total income and assessed on an accrued basis, sub-section (2) of section 18 does not authorise the person paying the salary to deduct tax on an accrued basis. The words are "shall, at the time of payment, deduct income-tax and super-tax on the amount payable". In spite of the ambiguity of the word "payable", it does not seem correct to hold that tax can be collected on the entire amount due (payable?) even though a fraction thereof is actually paid. The word "payable", which has been in this sub-section from long before the amendment of section 7 in 1939 permitting the taxation of salaries on an accrual basis, simply refers to the gross amount that would be payable but for the withholding of tax. See also the third proviso to section 7 (1) under which, when tax is deductible under section 18, the assessee cannot be called on to pay tax unless he has received the salary without deduction.

Capital sums in salaries.—See section 7 and note in particular that under Explanation 2 thereof and section 2 (6-C) 'salaries' include certain accumulated payments. As a consequence the person making such payments has to collect the appropriate tax at the time of payment. See also sub-section (2) of section 60 which permits the mitigation in certain circumstances of the burden of tax on "accumulated sums" under 'salaries'.

Residents.—Sub-section (2) is evidently intended to apply to salaries paid to residents; contrast sub-section (2-B) which expressly provides for salaries paid to non-residents.

Insurance premia—Abatement on.—For the power of an employer to allow abatements on account of insurance premia, see notes under section 15. As regards private employers, it may be noted that it is open to them to make these allowances on account of insurance premia or not, according as it may suit the convenience of themselves and their employees as, if such rebate is not given when the tax is deducted at the source, it may be claimed by the employee in the following year, either as a refund or a set-off against the amount due by him if he is assessed under section 23.

Refund in cash.—The Officer responsible for collecting tax under this section is not competent to refund in cash any excess tax collected. All that he can do is to adjust the excess by short collection, and vice versa.

Overseas pay.—Sub-section (2-A) which was added by Act XVI of 1925 provides that tax shall be deducted in India, at the time of payment of the remaining salary in India, in respect of all payments on account of salary made out of India by and on behalf of Government. But for this provision tax can be deducted only by an assessment under section 23 and not at source. It does not in itself impose any liability to tax which is laid by section 4.

Salaries of non-residents.—Sub-section (2-B) was inserted in 1939. Income-tax will be collected at the maximum rate (subject to refund if any with reference to sections 17 and 48) and super-tax at estimated average rate (subject to similar refund if any).

Leave salary.—The exemptions which had been granted under section 60 in respect of leave salaries paid abroad have been cancelled as from 1st April, 1939. See section 60 and the notes under it.

Responsibility of person who has to deduct tax at source.—Any person required to make a deduction under section 18 who fails to do so, may himself, under sub-section (7), be deemed to be an assessee in default in respect of the tax while he is also liable to be prosecuted for an offence punishable under section 51 (a) and also liable to a penalty under section 46 (1). The proviso to sub-section (7) restricts such liability under section 46 to cases of wilful default. Failure to give a certificate under section 18 (9) also renders the person liable to prosecution under section 51, if there is no 'reasonable cause or excuse' for the failure.

Persons making deductions at the source are indemnified for the deduction under section 65.

Where a person has a dual capacity both as person responsible for making payments and as payee, his liability to deduct and account for tax will not be lessened by the dual capacity cf. Howells v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 1939 All.E.R. 144 (K.B.).

Recognised provident funds—Payment of accumulations.—Sub-sections (4) to (9) of this section apply also to tax collected at source under section 58-H in respect of accumulations paid to members of recognised provident funds. See notes under that section.

Treasury Bills.—The only securities of the Central Government (other than income-tax free securities), from the interest on which income-tax is not deducted in advance, are Treasury Bills. The so called interest on them is more of the nature of discount.

Reserve bank shares.—It will be seen from Rules 13-C that dividends on these shares are treated somewhat like interest on securities, these dividends being taxable.

Securities in the custody of banks.—It frequently happens, that security-holders hand over their securities and bonds to their bankers for collection. In that event, the certificate given by the person deducting the income-tax from the security would be given to a bank for a whole block of securities. In such a case, the Income-tax Officer should accept a certificate from the bank in the following form, and act upon it as if it were a certificate received direct from the person deducting income-tax from the security:—

"We hereby certify that interest on the various securities specified on the back hereof was collected by us on behalf of and that we received payment, or were credited with the proceeds thereof (less income-tax) as stated on the other side amounting to Rs.

The securities specified are covered by certificates issued to the Bank under section 18 (9) of the Income-tax Act, 1922.

REVERSE OF FORM
Schedule of Securities.

No. and description of securities.	Date of payment of interest after deduction of income-tax.	Period for which interest has been paid.	Amount of interest (less income-tax).	Remarks.

The certificate under section 18 (9) must be taken by the Income-tax Officer of the area in which the claimant or assessee is assessed or resides (see rule 39) as conclusive evidence of the payment of the tax, both where a refund is claimed in cash and where a set-off against the tax assessed on other income is claimed. (Income-tax Manual.)

Anticipatory certificates.—The following executive instructions may be noted:

It is desirable that refunds should be avoided as far as possible. There are, for example, certain institutions, authorities and funds, the income of which is exempt from tax under the provisions of section 4 (3). Similarly, there are persons whose assessable income is less than Rs. 2,000 and who are not therefore, liable to tax. There are other cases where the Income-tax Officer may be satisfied that the income of a holder of securities, while liable to tax, is not likely to fluctuate so widely as to alter the rate appropriate to the total income. The Income-tax Officer will, in all proper cases, on application made by the assessee, issue a certificate authorising the person paying the interest on securities to make no deduction of tax, or to deduct tax at a lower rate than the maximum. The certificates will be granted to residents outside British India, by the Income-tax Officer, Non-Residents Refund Circle, Bombay and to others by the Income-tax Officers concerned. Such a certificate will be in the following form:—

Income-tax Office—

Dated— — — — — 19 .

To

I hereby authorise (1) ————— to deduct income-tax at the rate (2) ————— p. in the rupee when paying the interest on the following securities to their present holder (3) —————
The authorisation will remain in force until cancelled by me.

Description of securities.

(1) Name and address of person paying the interest. (2) Rate of income-tax sanctioned. (3) Name of person receiving interest.

Income-tax Officer.

Such certificates, when issued, will remain in force until they are cancelled.

Trusts.—The person who should apply for exemption certificates in respect of interest on securities belonging to estates vested in the Administrator-General or the Official Trustee is the beneficiary when his share is known. When the individual shares of the beneficiaries are indeterminate or unknown, the income, is chargeable to tax at the maximum rate, and no question arises of securing an exemption certificate.

Interest collected through Banks:

When the owner of a security to whom a certificate is granted according to these instructions has endorsed the security to his bank for collection of interest, the officer responsible for paying the interest regards the bank as the real holder of the security and takes no cognisance of any arrangement that may have been entered into between the real owner of the security and the bank with the result that the certificate standing in the name of the real owner of the security granted by the Income-tax Officer becomes inoperative. Again sometimes the collecting banks purchase securities on behalf of their constituents and hold these in their own names and do not endorse them in favour of their constituents who are the actual owners. In such cases the owners obtain exemption certificates from the Income-tax authorities on production of the bank's Safe Custody Receipts issued in their favour and other proofs if necessary. To avoid the possibility of paying officers refusing to act on the exemption certificate in all such cases, Treasury Officers have been instructed to act on such certificates, when presented in respect of securities referred to above, if together with the exemption certificate a declaration by the bank is presented to the effect that the security continues to be the property of the person named as the owner in the exemption certificate. (Income-tax Manual.)

These "anticipatory" certificates, previously given under executive orders, were provided for in the statute by the insertion of the proviso to sub-section (3) in 1933; and arising from the addition of sub-section (2-B) in 1939, consequential changes were made in this proviso.

Securities held by Indian States or by Ruling Princes and Chiefs.

—The following instructions have been issued:

An Indian State is not assessable to any income-tax or super-tax except under the Government Trading Taxation Act, 1926 (III of 1926), that is to say, unless the State carries on a trade or business. Interest on securities held by Indian States is, therefore, not taxable, but the exemption does not apply to interest on securities held by a State bank which is a separate entity from the State itself. Interest on Government securities held by Ruling Princes or Chiefs as individuals, that is, not as the property of the State, is taxable under the law but it has been exempted under section 60 of the Act (see Notifications). It is, therefore, no longer necessary that the authorities responsible for the payment of interest on Government securities should be supplied with information enabling them to discriminate between those that are the property of the State and those that are the property of the Ruler; but it is still necessary that such authorities before paying the interest without deducting income-tax should have evidence that the income-tax authorities are satisfied that the particular security in question is eligible to exemption on one or other of the grounds already mentioned. No such evidence is required where Government securities are held in the names of the Rulers of Indian States in the special non-transferable form prescribed by Rule 38 of the Indian Securities Rules, 1920; but in other cases, a State or its Ruler claiming the payment of interest free of income-tax should forward a certificate that it is, or he is, the owner of the securities in question through the Political Agent or Resident of the State (a) if the security is in the form of a stock certificate, to the Income-tax Officer within whose jurisdiction is situated the Public Debt Office which issued the stock certificate; (b) if the security is in the form of a promissory note or a bearer bond,—(i) when the interest is payable at a Public Debt Office or a treasury in British India, to the Income-tax Officer within whose jurisdiction such Public Debt Office or treasury lies; and (ii) when the interest is payable at a treasury outside British India, to the Income-tax Officer, Non-residents Refund Circle, Bombay. (Income-tax Manual.)

The Income-tax Officers mentioned will in turn grant exemption certificates in the prescribed form. The exemption certificates will be issued in duplicate in regard to securities in the form of stock certificates or Promissory notes, one copy being sent to the State or the Ruler concerned and the other for purposes of registration direct in the case of stock certificates to the Public Debt Office of domicile where the stock certificates are registered, and in the case of Promissory notes to the Public Debt Office or the Treasury Officer responsible for paying interest thereon.

As regards Bearer Bonds, the certificates will be issued in triplicate, the original being sent to the State or the Ruler concerned, the duplicate copy to the treasury responsible for payment of coupon relating thereto and the triplicate copy to the Public Debt Office within whose sphere such treasury is situated.

The exemption certificate pertaining to securities in the form of promissory notes or bearer bonds given to the State or the Ruler concerned should be produced before the Public Debt Office or the treasury each time the promissory note or the coupon attached to the bearer bond is presented for payment of interest.

In the case of stock certificates or promissory notes, an exemption certificate will remain valid until either (a) it is cancelled by the Income-tax Officer, or (b) the security is transferred to some other person than the State or the ruler in whose name it stood at the time when the certificate was issued, or (c) the security is changed from one form into another, e.g., from a stock certificate into promissory notes or bearer bonds or vice versa, or is renewed.

In the case of bearer bonds, a fresh certificate will be required to cover each interest payment.

The above orders refer to Government securities only, the interest on which is exempt in the case of Indian States as well as Indian Princes or Chiefs as stated above. As regards other securities, viz., those of local authorities and companies referred to in section 8 of the Act, only Indian States are exempt. In order to have exemption certificates for such securities, the State concerned will similarly send a certificate stating that it is the owner of the securities for which exemption is claim through its Political Agent or Resident to the Income-tax Officer within whose jurisdiction the Public Debt Office or the office of the local authority or company is situate and on receipt thereof that officer will grant an exemption certificate in accordance with the above directions sending a duplicate thereof at the same time to the authority empowered to pay interest on the securities concerned. Nothing in these instructions relates to dividends of companies.

The procedure laid down in the preceding paragraph may also be adopted in the case of interest not being "Interest on securities" which is liable to be taxed at source under section 18 (3-A) and (3-C) when it is to be paid to an Indian State in respect of money belonging to it and when such income is not liable under the Government Trading Taxation Act, 1926 (III of 1926). (Income-tax Manual.)

Sub-section (3-A).—This sub-section, inserted in 1939, relates to Income-tax only which has to be deducted at maximum rate on payments to non-residents (see section 4-A) of (a) Interest, not being interest on securities and (b) Other chargeable sums, regarding which see section 42. Subject to sections 17 and 48, refund can be claimed later by the payee if admissible.

Two provisos were added to this sub-section in 1940. Under the first, in order to avoid unnecessary refunds, an 'anticipatory' certificate is given by the Income-tax Officer authorising deduction at source at a rate lower than the maximum. There is no reference to natives of 'Tribal areas' in the proviso as in section 17.

The second proviso excepts "hedging and straddling" carried on through brokers at both ends.

Sub-section (3-B).—Three changes were made in 1939: (1) Reference was made to the 'total world income' instead of to the 'total income'; this is consequential on section 17 (1); (2) the sub-section now applies not only to interest not being 'Interest on securities' but to "any other sum chargeable under this Act"; as to the latter expression, see sections 4 and 42; (3) Income-tax is now deducted under sub-section (3-A) and not under this sub-section.

Sub-section (3-C).—Changes (2) and (3) referred to under sub-section (3-B) have been made in this sub-section also.

It should be noted that, while the direction by the Income-tax Officer is given under sub-section (3-B) only in respect of a person "residing out of British India", (i.e., known so to reside), the person responsible for making the payments under sub-section (3-C) has to act on the presumption that a person is non-resident in the absence of "reason to believe" that the recipient is resident. The same distinction will be noticed in the next group of sub-sections (3-D) and (3-E) relating to dividends.

It should also be noticed that while under sub-sections (3-B) and (3-D), the Income-tax Officer acts with reference to the total world income of the payee, the person making payments has to act under sub-sections (3-C) and (3-E) solely with reference to the aggregate payments made by him in the year.

The reference to 'total world income' in sub-section (3-D) instead of to 'total income' is consequential on section 17 (1).

Super-tax—Deduction at source—Shares held by Banks for others.—The following instructions have been issued:

Sometimes large blocks of shares are registered in the names of banks, and held by them on behalf of the real owners for various reasons, though the banks have no proprietary or beneficial interest therein. The aggregate dividends on a block of shares in a single company thus held by a bank may exceed the maximum amount exempt from super-tax, though the dividends payable to some or all of the real owners individually may not exceed that amount. In such circumstances super-tax should not be deducted at source from the dividends payable to the bank irrespective of the liability of the several real owners of the shares. If, therefore, a bank in such circumstances furnishes the Income-tax Officer assessing the company from time to time with a list giving the names and addresses of the beneficial owners of the shares and the number of shares held by each, the Income-tax Officer will inform the principal officer of the company, under section 18 (3-D) of the rate of super-tax to be deducted in respect of the dividends payable to the bank, or that no super-tax is to be deducted therefrom, as the case may be, having regard to the liability of the individual shareholders.

Sub-section (5).—The words "and any sum . . . under sub-section (a) of section 16" and "or of the shareholder" were added in 1939 as a part of the general recasting of the basis of taxation of dividends—compare sections, 14, 16, 18 and 48 which have all been recast as part of a single plan. The tax notionally paid by the company is treated explicitly as paid on behalf of the shareholder.

The second proviso which was inserted in 1937 in order to cover cases falling under section 16 (3) was expanded in 1939 so as to cover also cases under sections 44-D and 44-E.

Company doing business of a shareholder.—Whatever the legal position of a Company in relation to a shareholder in respect of income-tax on dividends, there is nothing to prevent a company, as a corporate entity, from acting as the agent of an individual, who may be a shareholder, and really carrying on his business, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Sansom, 8 Tax Cases 20; (1921) 2 K.B. 492, but as regards dividends and the tax on them the position is unaffected by such agency so long as the agency is not a 'sham'. The company as such, that is, as a separate legal entity, will pay tax on its own profits, and the shareholder will get relief under sections 16, 18 (5) and 48. As regards "bogus" companies and those not distributing profits, see notes under sections 2 (6-A), 3 and 23-A.

Dividends paid out of untaxed profits.—The words "where the profits and gains have been assessed to tax" which occurred in section 14 as it stood before 1939 were construed in their natural meaning. Accordingly, dividends received by a shareholder were wholly exempt from tax in his hands, even though a part of the dividends might have been paid out of profits which were exempt from tax in the hands of the paying company, In re the Hungerford Investment Trust, Ltd., 1935 I.T.R. 65; 62 Cal. 133; 7 I.T.C. 441. This ruling has been nullified by the amendment in 1939. In the United Kingdom the Court of Appeal disallowed the claim of the Crown to tax in full in the shareholder's hands preference dividends received from an Indian Company part of whose profits was received from dividends of United Kingdom Companies which had been taxed in that country on their profits. For this purpose, the Court thought that it was immaterial whether the dividends were preference or ordinary, Barnes v. Hutchison, 17 A.T.C. 263 (C.A.). This judgment however, was reversed by the House of Lords. The principle against double taxation applies only to payment of tax by the same person twice in respect of the same income, and as the preference shareholder in this case had received the full dividend to which he was entitled, he was not entitled to any relief on the basis that he had borne a share of the tax paid by the company. (1939) 3 All.E.R. 803. In Canadian Eagle Oil Co. v. Rex, 1945, the House of Lords went further and overruled Gilbertson v. Fergusson, 1 Tax Cas. 501 (C.A.), that is, extended to all cases what was decided about preference shares only in Barnes v. Hutchison.

Super-tax—Paid by company.—Under section 16 (2) dividends of companies are 'grossed' up with reference to income-tax only (and not super-tax); and under section 18 (5), credit is given to the shareholder only for the amount of income-tax added on in grossing up. A shareholder is therefore liable to pay super-tax at his appropriate rate on the dividends received by him; and he receives no credit for the super-tax paid by the company. The same result was achieved even before 1939 through section 14 and 58 as they then stood, see Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 3 Pat. 470; A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 474; 1 I.T.C. 303.

Preference shareholders—Position of.—In Purushottamdas Harikishandas v. C. I. Spinning Company, 42 Bom. 579; 1 I.T.C. 11, it was decided that as between preference and ordinary shareholders, the former are not entitled to have their preference dividends paid free of income-tax in the absence of express words to that effect in the contract regulating the rights of the parties. The law in the United Kingdom expressly authorises the deduction by a company, of income-tax, at the standard rate, from dividends and the company is not accountable to the Crown for these deductions; so a company can deduct tax even if it is not itself taxed. In India, there is no similar provision in the income-tax law and it is a matter to be settled by contract (i.e., the memorandum and the articles of association) between the company and its shareholders. In the absence however, of such an arrangement, a dividend stated merely to be 'subject to tax' cannot be subjected to tax unless the company itself pays tax, Bai Lalita v. Tata Iron and Steel Co., 1940 I.T.R. 337 (Bom.).

There is nothing to prevent a company from so defining the dividend rights of its shareholders as it pleases; so long as the articles are clear that a particular class of shareholder is entitled to a dividend on a definite basis, the dividend is so payable to him. The position of the shareholder vis à vis the Crown is a different matter and has to be regulated by sections 16, 18 (5) and 49-B, cf. Palestine Electric Corporation, Ltd. v. Myer Silverton and Amalco Pennant Trust, 1944 Ch.D.

Sub-section (7).—It will be seen that in cases falling under sub-sections (3-D) and (3-E) both the company and the principal officer will be liable to account for the tax.

Sub-section (9).—Certain minor changes were made in 1939 consequent on the changes made in the other sub-sections.

United Kingdom Law.—Though the relationship of the shareholder to the company, that is, the extent to which, if any, the company acts as the agent of the shareholder in this respect, has been made clear in the Indian Law through sections 16, 18 (5) and 48, and there is little in common between these provisions and the provisions in the United Kingdom Acts, a brief reference to the Law in the United Kingdom will be of interest. The statutory provisions in that country have at no time been too clear and there has been considerable litigation, especially in comparatively recent years. To quote the MacMillan Committee's Report (paragraph 100, et seq.):—

The principle upon which the taxation of dividends was administered from 1842 onwards, and up to 1930, is set forth in the case stated, and was sanctioned by the Court in F. H. Hamilton v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue, (1931) 2 K.B. 495. The case stated deals with the practice as follows:—

"It is, and always has been, the almost universal practice to deduct from the gross amount of the dividend the tax appropriate to that amount, or, if the dividend is declared to be 'free of tax', to treat it, for the purposes of computing total income, as equivalent to the gross amount which, after deduction of the appropriate tax, corresponds to the net amount actually paid, without any reference to the amount of the company's statutory income. This method of dealing with dividends is one of the accepted conventions under which the Income-tax Acts are regularly administered, and it is consistent with the actual words of the Acts. . . . An exception to the general rule has, in recent years, been admitted in a few special cases where it has been clear that the payment of a dividend was, in whole or in part, a distribution of profits which, by reason of their capital nature, were not within the charge to income-tax.

The idea that a company's power of deducting tax from dividends was simply a power to pass on to its shareholders its own tax on its own income, resulting, as it would have done, in a company deducting as tax from its dividends an amount representing tax at a smaller or greater rate than that in force for the year, or being unable to deduct any tax at all, and in elaborate inquiries into the past history of the company's income and its accumulation, was thus never acted upon.

So also, dividends were always treated as part of a tax-payer's income from all sources for the purpose of claiming exemption, and returnable accordingly as being 'annual payments' liable to deduction of tax. They were similarly, without question, treated as "annual payments" charged to income-tax under Schedule D in claims by charities for exemption from tax under section 105 of the Income-tax Act, 1842 (now incorporated in section 37 of the Income-tax Act, 1918). The speech of Halsbury, L.C., in the case of Attorney-General v. Ashton Gas Company, (1906) A.C. 10, well illustrates the then prevalent view that (whatever the method of collection) dividends of companies were taxable income. It is indeed difficult to imagine, from a commonsense standpoint, a receipt which is more obviously income.

In 1910 super-tax was introduced, and the inclusion of dividends in the content of "total income from all sources" became a matter of moment to tax-payers whose means enabled them to test the matter by litigation. Thus (to mention only a few cases) in Brooke v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1915) A.C. 478 the bold contention was put forward that, having regard to the taxation of dividends through the medium of the company's profits, a dividend was not returnable as part of total income at all, i.e., as income of the shareholder. This view was rejected by the Court of Appeal, and their decision on this point was subsequently approved by the House of Lords in the case of Whitney v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1926) A.C. 37. In the course of the Brooke case the observation was made that a company deducting tax from dividends did so as agent for the shareholder. This view of the situation was, however, qualified a few years later by the view expressed in Lord Cave's speech in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott, (1921) 2 A.C. 171, as follows:—

"Plainly, a company paying income-tax on its profits does not pay it as agent for its shareholders. It pays as a tax-payer, and if no dividend is declared the shareholders have no direct concern in the payment. If a dividend is declared, the company is entitled to deduct from such dividend a proportionate part of the amount of the tax previously paid by the company; and in that case the payment by the company operates in relief of the shareholder. But no agency, properly so called, is involved."

We now come to the year 1930, when, in the case of Gimson v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1930) 2 K.B. 246, the contention was raised, and accepted by the High Court, that the receipt of dividends paid out of a fund consisting in part of receipts of an income nature, which would not, upon the statutory rules for computing income, either themselves be taxed or form part of a computation for the purposes of an assessment, could not render the shareholder liable to super-tax, since such dividends could neither be the subject of deduction of tax at the source, nor be charged upon the recipient under Case VI of Schedule D.

The decision in Gimson's case was relied upon in the next case which arose (that of Hamilton v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1931) 2 K.B. 495) to support a contention that if as regards any year taxed profits of a company were less than the amount of a dividend declared for that year, so much only of the total distribution of dividend was liable to be charged to income-tax (and so included for the purposes of surtax in an individual's total income) as corresponded with the amount of the company's taxed income. This contention failed."

In 1931, for the purpose of surtax, the law in the United Kingdom was amended somewhat on the lines of section 16 (2) in the Indian Act but the House of Lords decided in Neumann v. Inland Revenue, 18 Tax Cases 332 and Cull v. Inland Revenue, 1940 I.T.R. (Sup.) 1, that the 'grossing' up was to be made only if the company had in fact deducted tax and not otherwise. These rulings furnish no guidance for construing the Indian law.

Leaving aside dividends of companies, the broad rule in the United Kingdom law is that tax can be deducted at source by the payer only if the payment is made out of a taxed fund. There is no rule of law that there is an absolute or universal right to attribute interest payments to income if there is any income available, save only in cases of illegality or ultra vires. There is no abstract right of attributing interest to a taxed fund merely because such a fund is available. The facts must be examined in each case, and the attribution made, as between the taxed and untaxed funds, on the basis of evidence, and the conduct of the tax-payer must not be inconsistent with the attribution. Paton (Trustee for Fenton) v. Inland Revenue, 15 A.T.C. 11, (1936) 2 K.B. 59 (C.A.).

Before 1927, when the law was amended in the United Kingdom, in certain cases, a person who deducted tax at source did not hold it in trust for the Crown. [In re Lang Propeller, Ltd., 11 Tax Cases 46 (C.A.).]

18-A. (1) (a) In the case of income in respect of which provision is not made under section 18 for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment, the Income-tax Officer may, on or after the 1st day of April, in any financial year, by order in writing, require an assessee to pay quarterly to the credit of the Central Government on the 15th day of June, 15th day of September, 15th day of December and 15th day of March in that year, respectively, an amount equal to one-quarter of the income-tax and super-tax payable on so much of such income as is included in his total income of the latest previous year in respect of which he has been assessed, if that total income exceeded six thousand rupees. Such income-tax and super-tax shall be calculated at the rates in force for the financial year in which he is required to pay the tax, and shall bear to the total amount of income-tax and super-tax so calculated on the said total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusions bears to his total income or, in cases where under the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 17 both income-tax and super-tax or super-tax are chargeable with reference to the total world income, shall bear to the total amount of income-tax and super-tax which would have been payable on his total world income of the said previous year had it been his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusions bears to his total world income :

Provided that, where the previous year of the assessee in respect of any source of income ends after the 31st day of December and before the 30th day of April, the order in writing issued by the Income-tax Officer requiring the payment of income-tax and super-tax on that source of income shall substitute for the four quarterly payments hereinbefore specified, three payments of equal amount to be made on the 15th day of September, the 15th day of December and the 15th day of March, respectively :

Provided further that, if the assessee is a partner of a registered firm and an assessment of the firm has been completed for a previous year later than that for which the assessee's last assessment has been completed, his share in the profits of the firm shall, for the purposes of this sub-section, be included in his total income on the basis of the latest assessment of the firm :

Provided further that, if after the making of an order by the Income-tax Officer and before the 15th day of February of the financial year an assessment of the assessee or of the registered firm of which he is a partner is completed in respect of a previous year later than that referred to in the order of the Income-tax Officer, the Income-tax Officer may make an amended order requiring the assessee to pay in one instalment on the specified date, or in equal instalments on the specified dates if more than one, falling after the date of the amended order, the tax computed on the revised basis as reduced by the amount, if any, paid in accordance with the original order ; but if the amount already paid exceeds the tax determined on the revised basis, the excess shall be refunded.

(b) If the notice of demand issued under section 29 in pursuance of the order under clause (a) of this sub-section is served after any of the dates on which the instalments specified therein are payable, the tax shall be payable in equal instalments on each of such of those dates as fall after the date of the service of the notice of demand, or in one sum on the 15th day of March if the notice is served after the 15th day of December.

(2) If any assessee who is required to pay tax by an order under sub-section (1) estimates at any time before the last instalment is due that the part of his income to which that sub-section applies for the period which would be the previous year for an assessment for the year next following is less than the income on which he is required to pay tax and accordingly wishes to pay an amount less than the amount which he is so required to pay, he may send to the Income-tax Officer an estimate of the tax payable by him calculated in the manner laid down in sub-section (1) on that part of his income for such period, and shall pay such amount as accords with his estimate in equal instalments on such of the dates specified in sub-section (1) (a) as have not expired or in one sum if only the last of such dates has not expired :

Provided that the assessee may send a revised estimate of the tax payable by him before any one of the dates specified in sub-section (1) (a) and adjust any excess or deficiency in respect of any instalment already paid in a subsequent instalment or in subsequent instalments.

(3) Any person who has not hitherto been assessed shall, before the 15th day of March in each financial year, if his total income of the period which would be the previous year for an assessment for the financial year next following is likely to exceed six thousand rupees, send to the Income-tax Officer an estimate of the tax payable by him on that part of his income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply of the said previous year calculated in the manner laid down in sub-section (1) and shall pay the amount, on such of the dates specified in that sub-section as have not expired, by instalments which may be revised according to the proviso to sub-section (2).

(4) Where part of the income to which sub-section (1), (2) or (3) applies consists of any income of the nature of commission which is receivable periodically and is not received or adjusted by the payer in the assessee's account before any of the quarterly instalments of tax become due, he may defer payment of tax on that part of his income to the date on which such income would be normally received or adjusted and if he does so he shall communicate to the Income-tax Officer the date to which such payment is deferred :

Provided that, if the tax of which the payment is deferred is not paid within fifteen days of the date on which such income or part thereof is received or adjusted by the payer in the assessee's account, the tax shall be payable with six per cent. simple interest per annum from the date of such receipt or adjustment to the date of payment of the tax.

(5) The Central Government shall pay on any amount paid under this section simple interest at two per cent. per annum from the date of payment to the date of the assessment (hereinafter called the 'regular assessment') made under section 23 of the income, profits and gains of the previous year for an assessment for the year next following the year in which the amount was payable :

Provided that on any portion of such amount which is refunded under the foregoing provisions of this section interest shall be payable only up to the date on which the refund was made.

(6) Where in any year an assessee has paid tax under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) on the basis of his own estimate, and the tax so paid is less than eighty per cent. of the tax determined on the basis of the regular assessment, so far as such tax relates to income to which the provisions of section 18 do not apply and so far as it is not due to variation in the rates of tax made by the Finance Act enacted for the year for which the regular assessment is made, simple interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the 1st day of January in the financial year in which the tax was paid up to the date of the said regular assessment shall be payable by the assessee upon the amount by which the tax so paid falls short of the said eighty per cent. :

Provided that, where, as a result of an appeal under section 31 or section 33 or of a revision under section 33-A or of a reference to the High Court under section 66, the amount on which interest was payable under this sub-section has been reduced the interest shall be reduced accordingly and the excess interest paid, if any, shall be refunded together with the amount of income-tax that is refundable :

Provided further that, where a business, profession or vocation is newly set up and is assessable on the income, profits and gains of its first previous year in the financial year following that in which it is set up, the interest payable shall be computed from the 1st day of April of the said financial year.

(7) Where, on making the regular assessment, the Income-tax Officer finds that any assessee has—

(a) under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) underestimated the tax payable by him and thereby reduced the amount payable in any of the first three instalments, or

(b) under sub-section (4) wrongly deferred the payment of tax on a part of his income, he may direct that the assessee shall pay simple interest at six per cent. per annum, in the case referred to in clause (a) for the period during which the payment was deficient on the difference between the amount paid in each such instalment and the amount which should have been paid having regard to the aggregate tax actually paid under this section during the year, and in the case referred to in clause (b) for the period during which the payment of tax was wrongly deferred on the amount of which the payment was so deferred :

Provided that for the purposes of this sub-section any instalment due before the expiry of six months from the commencement of the previous year in respect of which it is to be paid shall be deemed to have become due fifteen days after the expiry of the said six months.

(8) Where, on making the regular assessment, the Income-tax Officer finds that no payment of tax has been made in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section, interest calculated in the manner laid down in sub-section (6) shall be added to the tax as determined on the basis of the regular assessment.

(9) If the Income-tax Officer, in the course of any proceedings in connection with the regular assessment, is satisfied that any assessee—

(a) has furnished under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) estimates of the tax payable by him which he knew or had reason to believe to be untrue, or

(b) has without reasonable cause failed to comply with the provisions of sub-section (3), the assessee shall be deemed, in the case referred to in clause (a), to have deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of his income, and in the case referred to in clause (b), to have failed to furnish the return of his total income; and the provisions of section 28, so far as may be, shall apply accordingly :

Provided that the amount of penalty leviable shall, in the case referred to in clause (a), be a sum not exceeding one-and-a-half times the amount by which the tax actually paid during the year under the provisions of this section falls short of the tax that should have been paid by the assessee under sub-section (1) or eighty per cent. of the tax determined on the basis of the regular assessment as modified in the manner provided in sub-section (6), whichever is the less, and, in the case referred to in clause (b), one-and-a-half times the said eighty per cent.

(10) (a) If any assessee does not pay on the specified dates any instalment of tax that he is required to pay under sub-section (1) and does not, before the date on which any such instalment as is not paid becomes due, send under sub-section (2) an estimate or a revised estimate of the tax payable by him, he shall be deemed to be an assessee in default in respect of such instalment or instalments.

(b) If any assessee has sent under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3) an estimate or a revised estimate of the tax payable by him, but does not pay any instalment in accordance therewith on the date or dates specified in sub-section (1), he shall be deemed to be an assessee in default in respect of such instalment or instalments :

Provided that the assessee shall not, under clause (a) or (b), be deemed to be in default in respect of any amount of which the payment is deferred under sub-section (4) until after the date communicated by him to the Income-tax Officer under that sub-section.

(11) Any sum other than a penalty or interest paid by or recovered from an assessee in pursuance of the provisions of this section shall be treated as a payment of tax in respect of the income of the period which would be the previous year for an assessment for the financial year next following the year in which it was payable, and credit therefor shall be given to the assessee in the regular assessment.

History.—This section was introduced in 1944 as one of the anti-inflationary measures during the war; but as it has taken the form of an addition to the Income-tax Act it remains to be seen whether, and when it will be removed. The appropriate occasion for its removal will arise when a policy of 'reflation' of currency is adopted.

Plan of section.—The initiative in case of old assessee is to be taken by the Income-tax Officer on the basis of the income of the assessee's latest previous year; and the assessee has the option to submit an alternative estimate of income, but if his estimate of tax turns out to be less than eighty per cent. of the tax eventually assessed, he has to pay interest at six per cent. per annum on the difference. Advance payments carry simple interest at two per cent. per annum till the regular assessment. The advance tax is ordinarily payable in four instalments. Most of the detailed provisions are self-explanatory and are merely intended to facilitate estimating and collection.

Rules.—See Rule 20-A prescribing the form in which the demand is to be made by the Income-tax Officer under sub-section (1).

Income to which section applies.—As is to be expected the section applies only to cases in which under section 18 tax is not deducted at source. The section also does not apply to income below Rs. 6,000 (according to the last assessment).

Provisional.—The current rates of tax are applied provisionally in respect of these advance collections, and the necessary adjustments made when the assessment is made, in the next year with reference to the then rates.

Penalties.—Section 28 is attracted by default or false returns under this section also, to the extent laid down in sub-section (9).

Returns suo motu.—Persons previously assessed will receive an order from the Income-tax Officer to pay the advance tax in instalments, but persons not previously assessed should send returns and the tax suo motu if their estimated income exceeds Rs. 6,000, for the previous year, relating to the assessment for the next financial year.

19. In the case of income in respect of which provision is not made under section 18 for deduction of income-tax at the time of payment, and in any case where income-tax has not been deducted in accordance with the provisions of section 18, income-tax shall be payable by the assessee direct.

Payment in other cases.

History.—This roughly corresponds to section 15 (7) of the Act of 1918. It has been recast several times, viz., in 1933, 1934 and 1939.

The recasting of the earlier part of the section in 1939 was consequential on the changes in section 18 (some of which were made even in 1933) which now extends to many other items than 'salaries' and 'interest on securities'.

Scope of section.—The intention of the section is that the tax shall be levied directly on the assessee (not by deduction at source) in the following cases:—(1) All income in respect of which deduction at source is not permissible under section 18. (2) Income in respect of which such deduction can be made but has not been made. As regards the latter, see also sub-section (8) of section 18 under which the right to deduct tax at source is without prejudice to any other method of recovery.

'Income'.—In this section means, income, profits and gains and not as distinguished from profits and gains.

19-A. The principal officer of every company shall, on or before the 15th day of June in each year, furnish to the prescribed officer a return in the prescribed form, and verified in the prescribed manner, of the names and of the addresses, as entered in the register of shareholders maintained by the company, of the shareholders to whom a dividend or aggregate dividends exceeding such amount as may be prescribed in this behalf has or have been distributed during the preceding year and of the amount so distributed to each such shareholder.

Supply of information regarding dividends.

Rules.—See Rule 42 as to the scope of the returns under this section and Rule 43 as to the form of such returns, etc.

History.—This section was introduced by Act XXIV of 1926, as part of the new machinery devised to catch the super-tax due on the income of shareholders of companies, particularly non-residents. See notes under section 57 and section 18. This section applies both to public and to private companies.

Penalties.—The penalty for not furnishing the return in due time is prosecution under section 51 (c). The penalty for furnishing a false return is prosecution under section 52 of the Act.

'Preceding year'—in the context evidently refers to the preceding financial year ending 31st March.

20. The principal officer of every company shall, at the time of distribution of dividends, furnish to every person receiving a dividend a certificate to the effect that the company has paid or will pay income-tax on the profits which are being distributed, and specifying such other particulars as may be prescribed.

Certificate by company to shareholders receiving dividends.

Rule.—For the form of certificate under this section see Rule 14.

How certificates to be prepared.—The following directions may with advantage be followed by persons granting certificates prescribed by section 20 of the Act:—(1) The statutory form of certificate of deduction of income-tax prescribed by rule 14 of the Indian Income-tax Rules, should invariably be used. (2) Either, (a) the certificate should be printed on the same sheet of paper as the actual warrant, with a line of perforation to permit of its being detached, or (b) the dividend warrants should be machine numbered, while every certificate relating to a particular dividend should be given the same number as the corresponding warrant. There are cases in which Banks collect dividends on behalf of their constituents, and Companies send the Banks consolidated dividend warrants in payment of all the dividends due in respect of the block of shares for which the Bank is acting, and at the same time send separate certificates for the shareholders by whom the shares are owned. In such a case, if certificates are issued to a Bank for, say, twenty constituents relating to dividend warrant No. 1, the certificates should be numbered by hand 1|1, 1|2, 1|3, or 1|20. (3) The practice adopted by certain Companies of either attaching red slips to the certificates, drawing the attention of recipients to the need for their careful preservation for several years, or of printing this caution in red ink on the face of the certificate, may be generally followed. (4) A note should be printed on the certificate to the effect that shareholders may claim refund of tax under section 48 (1) of the Act in respect of their dividends, if the amount of tax with which they are properly chargeable is less than the amount of tax deemed to have been paid on their behalf. (Income-tax Manual.)

Associations.—This section does not apply in the case of associations of persons which are not 'companies' [see definition in section 2 (6)], e.g., in the case of profits distributed by clubs or co-operative societies.

Duplicates of Certificates.—If a certificate has been lost, the Income-tax Officer will not accept a duplicate in its stead unless he is satisfied as to why the original has not been produced.

Dividends collected by Banks.—The following instructions have been issued;

It often happens that the holders of shares in Joint Stock Companies, like the holders of securities, authorise their bankers to collect dividends on their behalf. When they do so, it is the practice of the persons distributing the dividends to issue certificates under section 20 in the name of the bank for the whole block of shares held by bank on behalf of its constituents so that it is not possible for an individual assessee for whom dividends are collected by his bankers to produce the certificate required by rule 14. The Income-tax Officer will ordinarily accept a certificate from a responsible officer of a bank in the following form, and act upon it as if it were a certificate received direct from the person responsible for distributing dividends:—

We hereby certify that dividends on the various shares specified below were collected by us on behalf of . . . and that we received payment or were credited with the proceeds thereof amounting to Rs. . . .

The dividends specified are covered by Certificates issued to the Bank under section 20 of the Income-tax Act, 1922

Superintendent.

Description of share.	Holding.	Period.	Date of declaration of the dividends.	Date of receipt of dividend.	Amount of dividends.

I hereby declare that the shares on which dividends as above specified have been received are my own property, and were in the possession of the Imperial Bank of India, Calcutta, at the time when these dividends were realised.

N.B.—The safe custody receipt and the Bank's pass book to be produced in support of any claim. (Income-tax Manual.)

Penalties.—The penalty for not giving the certificate under this section is prosecution under section 51 (b). The certificate under this section need not be given when the company itself is not liable to tax, Bai Lalita v. Tata Iron and Steel Co., 1940 I.T.R. 337; and no prosecution can lie in such event.

On the other hand, a certificate granted under this section by an officer of a company outside British India in respect of a dividend paid abroad is a valid certificate for the purpose of section 48, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Major Goldie, 55 Bom. 734; A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 420; 5 I.T.C. 228.

It is doubtful if the penalty can be enforced if the dividends are distributed outside British India. The shareholder will suffer if the certificate is not given, because in its absence he cannot get a refund under section 48. Apart from the prosecution by the Assistant Commissioner, it is not clear whether a shareholder can obtain a mandamus or an injunction compelling the principal officer of the company to give him the certificate under this section.

United Kingdom.—A provision corresponding to this section was introduced in the United Kingdom in the Finance Act of 1924 (see section 33). The Royal Commission of 1920 had recommended such a rule.

20-A. The person responsible for paying any interest not being 'Interest on Securities' shall, on or before the fifteenth day of June in each year, furnish to the prescribed officer a return in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner of the names and addresses of all persons to whom during the previous financial year he has paid interest or aggregate interest exceeding such amount not being less than four hundred rupees as may be prescribed in this behalf, together with the amount paid to each such person.

Supply of information regarding interest.

Rules.

R. 42-A.—A return shall be furnished by the person responsible for paying interest not being interest on securities in respect of amounts of interest or aggregate interest exceeding Rs. 400.

R. 43-A.—The return under section 20-A shall be in the following form, and shall be delivered to the Income-tax Officer in whose jurisdiction the person responsible for paying interest resides:—

Return under section 20-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the year 1st April, 19 to 31st March, 19 .

Name of payer.

Address of payer.

Serial No.	Name of payee	Address of payee.	Date of payment.	Amount of interest or aggregate interest.

I hereby certify that the above statement contains a complete list of persons to whom interest or aggregate interest exceeding Rs. 400 was paid during the period 1st April, 19 , to 31st March, 19 .

Signature

Dated.....19 .

History.—This section was added by Act XVIII of 1933; and the limit of Rs. 400 was substituted for that of Rs. 1,000 in 1939.

21. The prescribed person in the case of every Government office, and the principal officer or the prescribed person in the case of every local authority, company or other public body or association, and every private employer shall prepare, and, within thirty days from the 31st day of March in each year, deliver or cause to be delivered to the Income-tax Officer in the prescribed form, and verified in the prescribed manner a return in writing showing—

(a) the name and, so far as it is known, the address, of every person who was receiving on the said 31st day of March, or has received or to whom was due during the year ending on that date, from the authority, company, body, association or private employer, as the case may be, any income chargeable under the head 'Salaries' of such amount as may be prescribed;

(b) the amount of the income so received or so due by each such person, and the time or times at which the same was paid or due, as the case may be;

(c) the amount deducted in respect of income-tax and super-tax from the income of each such person.

See Rule 15 as to the authorities who shall prepare the returns under this section in respect of Government servants, Rule 16 as to limit of salary and Rule 17 as to the form of the return and its verification.

Annual return of employees.—The following instructions have been issued:

Under section 21, read with rules 15, 16 and 17, a return in the form prescribed in rule 17 must be made of all employees deriving in income of Rs. 1,600 per annum or over, by the Government officers mentioned in rule 15, by every private employer and by, in the case of local authorities, companies or other public bodies or associations, the "principal officer" "or the prescribed person". Where a company has got several places of business, it may be more convenient for the company that the returns under this section should be made not by the principal officer at the headquarters of the company but by officers at different branches, since this return has, subject to what is said in the next paragraph, to be made to the local Income-tax Officer, i.e., to the Income-tax Officer of the place where the employees happen to reside. The liability for making this return remains, under section 21, with the principal officer unless another person is prescribed. The object of the return is to enable Income-tax Officers to see that the tax has been deducted at the source under section 18 (2) or 18 (2-B), to arrange for adjustments where the collections at the source have not been made correctly, and to assess "salaried" persons under section 23, whether the tax has been collected at the source or not, where the salaried persons have other income than "salary".

This section prescribes that the return must be delivered to the Income-tax Officer, but does not state to which particular Income-tax Officer the return should be made. Every Income-tax Officer has, under the provisions of section 64 (4), all the powers conferred by or under the Act on an Income-tax Officer, in respect of any income accruing or arising or received within the area for which he is appointed, irrespective of whether the particular income is assessed by him or not. In most cases, it is convenient that this return should be made to the Income-tax Officer of the area in which the employees reside, but in some cases, it may be more convenient that the return should be made to the Income-tax Officer of the area in which the headquarters of a widespread business is situated. It is for the Income-tax Commissioner, in each doubtful case, to decide to which particular Income-tax Officer this return should be sent.

The return prescribed under this section is the return of all employees, who, during the period of 12 months ending 31st March last, were in receipt of an amount of salary which, together with the amount of salary due for but not paid in that year is not less than Rs. 1,600 and the return must be furnished to the Income-tax Officer in the proper form, before the 1st of May. The obligation to make this return is a statutory one, and no preliminary notice or request from the Income-tax Officer is required. Failure to furnish this return is punishable under section 51 (c) of the Act. Any false statement made in this verification mentioned in section 21 is an offence punishable under section 52. (Income-tax Manual.)

History.—A corresponding provision of some sort was to be found in earlier Acts also. It was expanded in 1922, and the following changes were made in 1939:

(a) The return has now to be verified in the prescribed manner (with a corresponding penalty under section 52);

(b) salary whether received or due has to be included (consequent on the change in section 7);

(c) the return covers both income-tax and super-tax (consequent on the changes in section 18).

The words "or so due" have been inserted before 'by' in clause (b) through inadvertence; the words should be 'So received by or so due to'.

Law in the United Kingdom.—Under section 105 of the English Income-tax Act of 1918, returns can be called for similarly, but only by a notice being served by the assessor on the principal officer or employer. Here under this section, the returns have to be sent in without any notice having to be served.

22. (1) The Income-tax Officer shall, on or before the 1st day of May in each year, give notice by publication in the press and by publication in the prescribed manner, requiring

every person whose total income during the previous year exceeded the maximum amount which is not chargeable to income-tax to furnish, within such period not being less than sixty days as may be specified in the notice, a return in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner, setting forth (along with such other particulars as may be required by the notice) his total income and total world income during the previous year :

Provided that the Income-tax Officer may in his discretion extend the date for the delivery of the return in the case of any person or class of persons.

(2) In the case of any person whose total income is, in the Income-tax Officer's opinion of such an amount as to render such person liable to income-tax the Income-tax Officer may serve a notice upon him requiring him to furnish, within such period, not being less than thirty days, as may be specified in the notice, a return in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner setting forth (along with such other particulars as may be provided for in the notice) his total income and total world income during the previous year :

Provided that the Income-tax Officer may in his discretion extend the date for the delivery of the return.

(3) If any person has not furnished a return within the time allowed by or under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), or having furnished a return under either of those sub-sections, discovers any omission or wrong statement therein, he may furnish a return or a revised return, as the case may be, at any time before the assessment is made.

(4) The Income-tax Officer may serve on any person who has made a return under sub-section (1) or upon whom a notice has been served under sub-section (2) a notice requiring him, on a date to be therein specified, to produce, or cause to be produced, such accounts or documents as the Income-tax Officer may require :

Provided that the Income-tax Officer shall not require the production of any accounts relating to a period more than three years prior to the previous year.

(5) The prescribed form of the returns referred to in sub-sections (1) and (2), shall, in the case of an assessee engaged in any business, profession or vocation, require him to furnish particulars of the location and style of the principal place wherein he carries on the business, profession or vocation and of any branches thereof, the names and addresses of his partners, if any, in such business, profession or vocation and the extent of the share of the assessee and the shares of all such partners in the profits of the business, profession or vocation and any branches thereof.

Rules.—For the form of Return of Income, see Rule 19. As regards income due for assessment in any year ending before the 1st April, 1939, see Rule 19-A.

Previous law.—Under the 1886 Act, while there was an obligation on the principal officer of a company to furnish a return, there was no similar obligation on the part of individual assessee to furnish returns. All that the Collector could do was to invite returns from such persons if the Local Government had so authorised him by Rules. The power to call for returns was first given by the Amending Act of 1916.

As regards the demand for the production of accounts, the Income-tax Officer had, under the 1918 Act, to call for the accounts in every case in which he did not accept the return of the assessee. Since 1918, he is not bound to do so. Further, under the 1918 Act, the accounts could be called for only if the return was not accepted by the Income-tax Officer. If no return had been filed the accounts could not be demanded. Since 1918, however, the accounts can be called for at any stage, and whether the return has been filed or not. But see notes under section 23.

Sub-section (3) was first introduced in 1922.

The most important changes in 1939 are the following: -

(1) Insistence on a return suo motu from the tax-payer in all cases, not only in the case of companies as before (with a corresponding penalty under section 28).

(2) The removal of the concluding part of old sub-section (3) under which a correct return made at any time before assessment saved the assessee from penalties for earlier failures and wrong statements; now, the putting in a return only saves the person from an assessment under section 23 (4) (q.v.).

(3) The calling for information regarding places of business, names of partners, etc., in the return [see sub-section (5)]. This was formerly provided for under section 39 (3). Other changes are minor and consequential.

It will be noted that the form of return of income has been radically revised as a consequence of the revision of section 4.

United Kingdom Law.—In the United Kingdom, the accounts of the assessee cannot be demanded; nor is there a penalty for not producing the accounts. All that he can be asked to do is to produce evidence in support of his return (section 139 of the English Income-tax Act of 1918) and if such evidence is not produced, though available, there would be the usual presumption against the assessee.

Sub-section (1).—‘In each year’ in sub-section (1) clearly means ‘in each financial year’. The Income-tax Officer has to publish both in the Press (obviously at his discretion as to the papers selected) and in the prescribed manner. Rules have been prescribed for the latter purpose.

As to ‘person’, see section 2 (9). Rules 19 and 19-A set forth the prescribed form of return of income.

The prescribed return must set forth 'total income' and 'total world income' of the assessee in addition to other particulars prescribed.

Though an obligation is laid under sub-section (1) on the assessee to furnish a return suo motu, the Income-tax Officer has the option under sub-section (2) to serve a notice and call for a return. An assurance was given on behalf of Government that in practice the Income-tax Officer would send notices under sub-section (2) to persons believed to be taxable. It will be noticed that the time limit under sub-section (2) is 30 days while that under sub-section (1) is 60 days.

Under both the sub-sections, the Income-tax Officer has discretion to extend the time limit and thus save the assessee from penalty under section 28.

Company in liquidation.—Such a company is a 'company' within the meaning of the Act and is therefore liable to make a return of income, Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P. v. Agra Spinning and Weaving Mills, (All.), 1934 I.T.R. 79; A.I.R. 1934 All. 170. As to the taxability of profits of such a company, see notes under sections 2 (2) and 3.

Notice before passing of Finance Act.—The Income-tax Officer's 'opinion' should be reasonably formed. Obviously, the Income-tax Officer cannot be satisfied about the liability of a person to tax before any tax has been imposed by the Legislature. A notice issued before the passing of the Finance Act was therefore not valid before section 67-B was inserted in the Act. The section now authorises the operation of the Income-tax Act in all respects pending the passing of the Finance Act.

Persons denying liability.—There is no obligation on the Income-tax Officer to establish the fact that a person has taxable income before a notice can be issued under section 22 (2) or 22 (4), Bhagat Dhunichand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 4 I.T.C. 33; 10 Lah. 596; A.I.R. 1929 L. 593; Kanwarji Aranda v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 417; A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 306; 11 Pat. 187. Even if a person has no taxable income he should furnish a return if called upon to do so by the Income-tax Officer, Attorney-General v. National Provincial Bank, 14 Tax Cases 111; 44 T.L.R. 701.

Notices on agents of non-residents.—See section 43 and notes thereunder.

Summary assessments of small incomes.—During the period 1931 to 1936 when the limit of taxable income was temporarily lower, the Finance Acts specially provided for the summary assessment of small incomes by the Income-tax Officer, without his calling for a return of income, option however being given to the assessee to ask for the reopening of the assessment by submitting a return.

Again, since 1942, there were similar special provisions of a temporary nature (as part of the Government's anti-inflationary measures) for the taxation of incomes below Rs. 2000 a year, in a summary manner, the assessee being given the option in the alternative to make a certain returnable deposit with the Government. The provisions were embodied in the annual Finance Acts and the rules made thereunder q.v.

Delay in audit.—The non-audit of its accounts is no justification for a Company not filing its return in time, Manbhumi Transport Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 6 I.T.C. 203. See, however, the declaration at the end of the form of return which the principal officer has to make.

Who should sign returns?—The form of return will show that an individual has to sign the return himself; but the word 'individual' would include a person acting as an agent or attorney for an individual. The signatory will be liable for prosecution under sections 51 or 52 if he commits an offence. Where the assessee is not an individual, whoever signs the return, being competent to do so, has to satisfy himself that the return is correct and will be liable, in case of default or fraud, to prosecution under section 51 or 52 as the case may be.

A power of attorney empowering an agent to "file suits, applications, complaints, memoranda of appeal and written statements and affidavits" on behalf of the principal before "Civil Courts, Revenue Courts and other Government departments" does not empower the agent to file a return of income binding the principal, Raja Sayyid Mohammad Mehdi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. (Oudh), 1935 I.T.R. 202.

Firms, etc.—A firm's return need be signed by a single partner only, and that of a Hindu undivided family by the managing member. In all cases what is necessary is that some one whose signature will bind the assessee should sign the return.

On the other hand, the application for registration by a firm has to be signed by all the partners. See section 26-A and Rule 2, et seq.

Persons wrongly described in notice.—A person who was the Manager of a Pharmacy was served with a notice under section 22 (2) addressed to him as Proprietor of the Pharmacy. He made no return and the Income-tax Officer assessed him under section 23 (4). Instead of following the remedies open to him under the Income-tax Act, he sued the Crown. Held, that a suit was barred by section 67 of the Income-tax Act and that a mere error of description in the notice was not a good excuse for not submitting a return and therefore for invalidating the assessment, Dr. R. Singha v. Secretary of State, 2 I.T.C. 462; 5 Rang. 825.

Hindu Undivided family.—The question whether individuals on whom separate notices have been served under section 22 (2) can be assessed together as a Hindu undivided family without a further notice to the family as such has been raised but not decided, Sardar Kirpal Singh, etc. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 548.

Notice form not prescribed.—There is no prescribed form for the notice under sub-section (2); it is only the form of return of income that has been prescribed—see rule 19. The assessee must be given a minimum period of thirty days, within which to comply with the requirements of the notice. If not, an assessment made under section 23 (4) for failure to file a return in time is illegal; and any subsequent opportunity given to the assessee will not cure this initial defect, Kajorimal Kalyanmal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 3 I.T.C. 451; 122 I.C. 741; A.I.R. 1930 All. 209; Jamnadhhar Potdar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1935 I.T.R. 112. The thirty days will evidently count from the date of receipt of the notice by the person called upon to make the return. The expression used is "thirty days" and not "one month"; the reckoning should therefore be made in days. Also note the expression "not less than" which means that just thirty days' notice is sufficient; on the other hand, within thirty days will be insufficient, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Ekbal & Co., 1945 I.T.R. 154.

A notice issued under section 22 (2) on a representative of a deceased under section 24-B should state whose income is required to be returned, Maharaja of Patiala v. Commissioner of Income-tax (Central), Bombay, 1943 I.T.R. 202.

Consequences of failure to furnish a return of income.—Failure to make a return under section 22 (1) exposes the defaulter to penalty under section 28 if his total income is not less than Rs. 3,500, but not to prosecution under section 51 (c), but failure to submit a return under section 22 (2) on the other hand carries the risk both of section 23 (4) and of section 51 (c) and also of section 28. Also, if the assessee is a registered firm, failure to submit the return may result in the cancellation of registration under section 23 (4).

Sub-section (3).—Sub-section (3) as it stood before 1939 gave persons who had bona fide omitted to file a return or filed an incorrect return protection from prosecution under section 51 (c) and penalty under section 28.

To obtain the benefit of this sub-section, the return should be filed before the assessment has been made; it is of no avail to file it after the assessment even if no notice of demand has been issued under section 29, Dhaniram Dharampal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 113; also, the sub-section applies only to bona fide errors and not to deliberately false returns, Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. v. Badridas Ramrai, 1939 I.T.R. 613. With reference to a similar provision in the United Kingdom, it has been held that the word 'discovers' refers to genuine and spontaneous rectification of undeliberate errors and omission and that a person may not, when penalty proceedings are imminent, free himself from liability by correcting a return which he knew to be wrong at the time it was made or in which errors have been discovered and pointed out by the Inspector, Attorney-General v. Midland Bank Executor Co., 19 Tax Cases 136.

A mere letter to the Income-tax Officer that in the return already submitted an item of so much had been omitted is not equivalent to the submission of a revised return, Gopaldas Parshothamdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1941 I.T.R. 130 (All.).

What constitutes failure to make a return.—See notes under section 23.

'Documents'.—The word 'documents' "shall include any matter written, expressed or described on any substance by means of letters, figures or marks or by more than one of those means, which is intended to be used, or which may be used, for the purpose of recording that matter." Section 3 (16), General Clauses Act (X of 1897).

'Accounts'.—'Books of account' have been held not to include "letters, cheques and vouchers from which books of account can be made up".—Per Cave, J., in In re Winslow, 16 Q.B.D. 696 (a case under the Bankruptcy Acts). 'Accounts' presumably mean the same as 'books of account'. The expression 'documents' is, of course, wider.

Production of accounts.—The following instructions have been issued:

Under sub-section (4) of section 22, the Income-tax Officer is empowered to call upon any person who has made a return under section

22 (1) or upon whom a notice under section 22 (2) has been served to produce such accounts or documents as he may require. Where the services of competent and reliable accountants are employed by assessees, steps will be taken to see that those services are utilised to the fullest extent by the Income-tax Officers. Where a statement of profit and loss and a balance-sheet filed by an assessee has been certified as correct and complete by such an Accountant, the Income-tax Officer should, unless he sees reason to the contrary, and entirely at his discretion accept them as correct and complete, although he will frequently have to call for details showing how various figures are made up. In such cases, however, the accountant himself when authorised by the assessee to appear on his behalf, will normally be asked to supply the details. (Income-tax Manual.)

Limitation on accounts to be called for.—The proviso to sub-section (4) of section 22 prevents any Income-tax Officer from calling upon an assessee to produce books of account going back for a period of more than three years, i.e., three accounting periods prior to the "previous year", i.e., the accounting period. [See section 2 (ii).] This limitation applies merely to books of account; it does not apply to documents. The Income-tax Officer can therefore call for documents of any date.

It should be noted, however, that under sections 34, 35 and 50 as amended in 1939, the period of limitation is four years, and in some cases eight years. But he cannot call for accounts more than three years old. If, however, the assessee can produce them but will not, an adverse inference may be drawn against him.

The limit of three years applies only if the notice is issued under this sub-section and not if the Income-tax Officer calls for older accounts under section 37 in order to test the assessee's return or evidence in support of it. But failure to comply with a summons under section 37 will not have the same consequences as failure to comply with a notice under section 22 (4); and in particular an assessment cannot be made under section 23 (4) for failure to produce evidence called for under section 37, Sankaralinga Nadar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 4 I.T.C. 226; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 209; Fatchand Chhakodilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1945 I.T.R. 198.

'Require' means require as a piece of relevant evidence. Therefore if the Income-tax Officer can make an assessment without the documents or accounts called for, there is no default in failure to produce such documents or accounts. In re Ganga Sagar, 53 All. 451; A.I.R. 1931 All. 717. On the other hand an assessment under section 23 (4) would not be invalid merely because in the opinion of the assessee the accounts called for but not produced were irrelevant. It is for the Income-tax Officer to determine what accounts and documents he requires to be produced. Also the fact that somehow the Income-tax Officer made an estimate of the income on the evidence before him does not mean that the evidence not produced by the assessee was not required for the assessment, Tulsidas Naginchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 385; A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 551; I.L.R. 1938 Lah. 551.

Failure to produce accounts and documents.—Neglect to furnish accounts or documents asked for by the Income-tax Officer under section 22 (4) is punishable under section 51 (d), and, further, the person will be liable to be assessed under section 23 (4) with the attendant consequences.

No question of law arises out of failure to produce accounts in existence when called for, Haji Ali Mohammad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1940 I.T.R. 243.

Notice—More than one.—The Income-tax Officer may issue more notices than one under this sub-section. As he proceeds with the examination of each case, he may require to see other documents and accounts that he may not have required in the first instance. The fact that he so requires further accounts and documents to be produced does not mean that his earlier notices need not be complied with. There can be no implied waiver of such earlier notices merely because supplementary information is called for later.

Accounts, etc., to be specified—Not confined to British India.—Under this sub-section, it is the duty of the Income-tax Officer to specify the accounts or documents that he requires. Under section 23 (2), he need not do so; and may leave it to the assessee to decide what evidence to produce. Also, under section 22 (4), the Income-tax Officer can only call for accounts or documents. He cannot ask for the attendance of persons. For that purpose, he must invoke his powers under sections 23 and 37. The accounts and documents called for under this sub-section need not necessarily be within British India; it is open to the Income-tax Officer, under this sub-section, to call for accounts and documents relating to branches of business abroad which are kept outside British India, Rudhakishan and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 2 I.T.C. 345; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 5; Somasundaram Chettyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 7 Rang. 10; A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 10; In re Lalitaprasad, (All.) 6 I.T.C. 182. Sections 22 and 23 and all other relevant provisions of the Act apply to income taxable under section 4 (2), i.e., foreign income, V. R. S. A. R. Arunachalam Chettyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 57 M.L.J. 300; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 769.

Accounts of foreign partnerships.—The Income-tax Officer can call for accounts kept outside British India even though they relate to a partnership. If there is a default the fact that the accounts relate to a partnership will be relevant only in determining whether the assessee can be reasonably expected to produce the accounts. But it would be for the assessee to show that he had no control over the accounts or that he had other difficulties constituting sufficient cause for his failure to comply with the notice of the Income-tax Officer, Mahomed Kassim Rowther v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 59 M.L.J. 220; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 763. The criterion is whether the foreign accounts or documents called for are in the possession of or under the control of the assessee or the person making the return of income, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Bombay Trust Corporation, 1938 I.T.R. 445. Where an assessee first concealed the existence of a foreign business and then evaded producing the accounts of that business or even copies thereof, even though he went abroad frequently to the place of the foreign business in which he evidently had a considerable interest, and there was nothing to show that the books were not under his control or that he could not have access to them (e.g., dispute with partners), it was held that the Income-tax Officer was justified in asking him to produce his foreign accounts and in proceeding under section 23 (4) when the accounts were not produced, Bhiwani Sahai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 225.

Heading of notices.—Nowhere in the Act is there any provision making it necessary for the officer serving the notice to state the section under which the notice is served or to state the section under which his powers have been granted, Ram Khelavant Ugamlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 7 Pat. 852; 3 I.T.C. 225; A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 529.

Notice under section 22 (2)—Precedent condition.—The Income-tax Officer can use section 22 (4) only if a notice under section 22 (2) has already been served on the person or he has submitted a return suo motu under sub-section (1). Where two Income-tax Officers have concurrent jurisdiction, see section 64, it will be sufficient if the notice under section 22 (2) is issued by the officer at the principal place of business, Lachmandas Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 61; 1933 I.T.R. 275; A.I.R. 1933 All. 853.

Where an assessee submitted a return of income to Income-tax Officer, B, in response to a notice under section 22 (2), then again to Income-tax Officer C, to whom the case was transferred, in response to a similar notice from him, and the case was later retransferred to B, and the assessee appeared before him several times and did not object to the want of a second notice under section 22 (2) from him it was held that the assessee was not justified in not complying with a notice under section 22 (4) on the ground that the proceedings of the Income-tax Officer B, were vitiated by the absence of a second notice under section 22 (2), Hiralal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1942 I.T.R. 148 (All.).

Notice pending orders under section 64.—The Income-tax Officer within whose jurisdiction income accrues to a person is competent to issue a notice under section 22 (2), pending the determination of the question of jurisdiction under section 64 (3) by the Commissioner, where the assessee does business in more places than one. This notice is valid under section 64 (4), and the Officer who has territorial jurisdiction over the principal place of business as determined by the Commissioner need not issue a fresh notice as a preliminary to assessment, Bisheshar Prasad, etc. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 7 I.T.C. 74 (All.).

See however section 64 which has since been amended and notes thereunder.

Notices—On persons outside British India—Validity of.—The validity of service of notices to make a return, and of notices of assessment on non-residents, has been the subject of litigation in the United Kingdom, and it was finally held by the House of Lords in Whitney v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 10 Tax Cases 88; confirming Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Hurn, 8 Tax Cases 466, that the service of the notice was mere machinery to enable the Commissioners to do their duty, that the principles relating to the service of writs did not apply to these notices, and that these notices were not judicial processes.

The House of Lords confirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal by a majority of 3 to 2. Extracts from the judgments representing both views are given below:—

Per Lord Chancellor Cave.—“ This enactment, which does not (as was suggested) give a privilege but imposes a duty, is plainly binding upon any person (whether British or not) who is within the jurisdiction, and it may be—though on this I express no opinion—that it binds a British subject resident abroad. But it is difficult to believe that the Legislature of this country can have intended to impose such a duty upon a subject of a foreign country resident and being in that country, whether he is or is not chargeable to super-tax here. The difficulty is increased when it is noted that by sub-section (3) of the same section (section 7 of the Income-tax Act, 1918) it is made the duty of every person chargeable with super-tax to give notice to the Special Commissioners that he is so chargeable—an enactment which is surely inapplicable to an alien resident and being out of the jurisdiction, who cannot be assumed to have any knowledge of our law; and that by sub-section (4) any person who without reasonable excuse fails to make any return or to give any notice required by the section is made liable to an immediate and a continuing penalty. By what right such a penalty could even in express terms be imposed upon an alien resident and being abroad, it is not easy to understand; and it appears to me that sub-section (2) and (4) cannot have been intended to apply to such a person. Now the power given by sub-section (5) to the Special Commissioners to make an assessment to super-tax 'according to the best of their judgment' is contingent on 'failure' to comply with the obligation to make the return under sub-section (2); and I see no escape from the conclusion that, where no such obligation exists, there can be no such 'failure' to comply with it and accordingly that in such a case an assessment under sub-section (5) cannot be made. . . .

" When a notice is sent by post, the postal authorities are only the agents of the sender to deliver the notice. The position is the same as if the sender—in this case, the Special Commissioners—had sent a messenger abroad to serve the notice there upon the appellant, in person; and if (as I hold) personal service of the notice in this case could not have been effectively made upon the appellant in New York, it follows that the service by post was equally ineffective. The regulation cannot alter the construction of the Act or enlarge the Commissioners' jurisdiction (see Lord Davey in Barraclough v. Brown L.R., (1897) A.C. 615, at p. 624). . . . If the machinery provided for assessment is not applicable to the case, then there is no power to tax. . . .

" It appears to me that the whole statute is framed on the basis that direct assessment, whether to income-tax, or to super-tax, can only be made upon persons who are or reside in this country or on representatives in this country of persons who reside abroad; and that if it is desired to have effective machinery for charging with super-tax an alien resident and being abroad who has no representative here, that machinery must be provided by an amendment of the statute. . . .

Per Lord Dunedin.—" It is here that I part company with the noble and learned Lord Chancellor. Holding that sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) setting forth the request for and the making of the return of income from all sources are inapplicable to an alien non-resident in the United Kingdom he concludes that where no return has been made there can be no failure in the sense of sub-section (5) and that accordingly no assessment can be made. My Lords, I cannot help feeling, with the utmost respect, that that is tantamount to making liability dependent on failure to make a return, and yet ex hypothesi a liability is already established. But my real reason for differing from my noble and learned friend is that I look on these sub-sections as mere aids to the Special Commissioners in their task, and not as conditions of their power. That power is, to my mind, conferred by sub-section (1). As in the cases of Tischler, 2 Tax Cases 89 and Werle, 20 Q.B.D. 753, it was held that the power given to charge a resident abroad in the name of a person acting on his behalf in the United Kingdom did not prevent a direct assessment on that person if he was in effect found in the United Kingdom, so by analogy I think that a failure of, some of the provisions of the succeeding sub-sections to fit a particular case does not prevent the Special Commissioners proceeding under the powers of sub-section (1). It is, I think, apparent that the Special Commissioners are bound if they can to adopt the methods provided by the succeeding sub-sections, and so I think indeed they have done. They have sent a notice requiring particulars in the only way available to them, viz., by post, and it is admitted that that notice was received. The next step lay with the appellant, and he made no return; and I agree that the penalty section is inapplicable. For the appellant is not subject to the jurisdiction of the English Court, nor has the British Parliament power to enjoin him personally to do anything.

"Then comes sub-section (5). I think that he failed to make a return, for I read 'failure' in the sense of 'de facto did not make' not in the sense of 'contrary to law did not make'. Accordingly, I think the Special Commissioners were authorised to make an assessment according to the best of their judgment. But quite apart from that I think that under sub-section (1) they were entitled to assess. I lay stress on that for this reason. It might have been that the notice never reached him. I think that the Commissioners would still have been entitled to assess, but the difference would have been that if and when the appellant came to know of the assessment made, he would have been absolutely entitled to be heard as to the amount, and if necessary to get it altered under the powers conferred on the Commissioners by sub-section (7); whereas when there has been failure by a person who is bound to furnish the notice under sub-section (3), I imagine that there is no absolute right on the part of the person assessed to have the assessment altered although I doubt not, as the object of the Act is to tax people justly and not unjustly, that the Commissioners would even then be ready to consider the question of the amendment of an assessment quite unjust as to amount. . . ."

Per Lord Wrenbury.—". . . . There was sent to the appellant by post addressed to him in the United States a notice under section 7 (2) requiring him to make a return. It is contended that there was no right to post him such a notice so addressed. The case, it is contended, is similar to the case of service of a writ out of the jurisdiction. I do not agree. It is similar rather to the service of a notice of dishonour of a bill or of notice to quit or of a notice requiring payment of calls upon shares as a preliminary to forfeiture in default of payment. It is not a step in a judicial proceeding but a step which will create inter partes a state of things in which judicial proceedings can subsequently be taken in default of compliance. I think the notice was duly served. In my opinion Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Hurn, (1923) 2 K.B. 563; 8 Tax Cases 466, was rightly decided. . . ."

"Section 7, sub-section (1), is self-contained and imperative. Section 4 has imposed a charge. Section 7 (1) has imposed upon the Special Commissioners the duty of assessing the amount. Sub-sections (2) to (5) do no more than supply machinery for giving effect to sub-section (1). But there are no words to the effect that if that machinery is inapplicable to the particular case, the duty in sub-section (1) shall fail to exist and shall not be performed. Under section 7, sub-section (3), it is the duty of every person chargeable with super-tax to give notice that he is chargeable. If, therefore, I am right in thinking that the non-resident alien is chargeable in respect of property in the United Kingdom, it was his duty to give that notice, and whether he performed that duty or not and whether the notice addressed to him out of the United Kingdom was duly served or not, it remains that section 7, sub-section (1), stands as a statutory duty which the Special Commissioners must discharge to the best of their ability, leaving the party assessed to his remedy if he is in a position to prove that the assessment made upon him is excessive. The power of the Commissioners to assess in default of a return is not an exclusive power to assess. Their power and duty to assess arises not only in the case in which the tax-payer makes default, but because sub-section (1) gives them power to assess and imposes upon them the duty to do it. If (but for this point) the liability exists I am unable to agree in the view that the liability is non-existent if it be found that the machinery provided by the Act does not fit the case. . . ."

Per Lord Phillimore.—" But if I find that the procedure is inapplicable, this will be a strong reason for supposing that Parliament did not intend to tax this class with this tax."

"If a non-resident and especially a non-resident alien, should be minded to come to this country for the purpose of visiting the Exhibition at Wembley, would it not be monstrous if he were suddenly prosecuted for this penalty? It seems to me no answer to suggest that in the circumstances the penalty imposed would be a nominal one. He would have been treated as a law-breaker. . . . It is only when there is a failure or an unsatisfactory return that they are enabled to make an assessment according to the best of their judgment. Failing the condition precedent, they have no jurisdiction. . . . But I am sure that it is not the duty of a non-resident and undomiciled alien to know them. . . ."

In the Bombay Trust Corporation case, 3 I.T.C. 135, the Bombay High Court doubted in passing, whether the above ruling can be followed in this country.

There seems however to be nothing in the Indian Income-tax Act to cast a doubt on the validity of notices issued under the Indian Act on non-residents. A non-resident (British subject or foreigner) can be taxed with reference to income accruing in India and the fact that he has or has not an agent in British India does not affect the question, see sections 42 and 43. Sections 3 and 4 which impose the tax do not exempt non-residents; on the contrary, the law makes them clearly liable. Section 22, sub-section (2), under which an Income-tax Officer has to serve notice upon a person likely to be liable to tax requiring him to furnish, within the prescribed period, a return in the prescribed form, does not, equally with the section in the English Act on which the Whitney ruling was based, restrict it to any person resident within British India. Sub-section (4) of section 23 is also general in its terms, and therefore, under that sub-section, an assessment can be made if the non-resident person fails to submit a return. The same remark applies also to section 29 which deals with notice of demand.

As to the mode in which such notices are to be served on a non-resident person, section 63 provides that a notice under any of the sections specified above can be served on the person therein named either by post or as if it were a summons issued by a Court under the Code of Civil Procedure. Under Order V, Rule 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure a notice can be served on a person residing outside British India who has no agent in British India empowered to accept service, by addressing the summons to the place where he is residing and sending it to him by post if there is postal communication between such place and the place where the Court is situate. That being so, both under the first part of section 63 (1) and under Order V, Rule 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, notices calling for the returns can be sent by post to the person to be assessed. As to the officer who is to send such a notice and assess, section 64 will apply.

Legality of notice under section 22 (4) not affected by subsequent action of Income-tax Officer.—An Income-tax Officer called for the accounts of the earlier years under section 22 (4). The assessee failed to produce them and the Income-tax Officer made the assessment under section 23 (4). When the assessee moved the Income-tax Officer to re-open the assessment under section 27, the Income-tax Officer refused and in doing so stated incidentally that he had required the earlier accounts in order to make a supplementary assessment under section 34. The notice that he issued under section 22 (4), however, did not state this purpose. The assessee appealed to the Assistant Commissioner against the Income-tax Officer's order under section 27. The Assistant Commissioner, who rejected the appeal, observed that the Income-tax Officer required the earlier years' accounts not only to take steps under section 34 but also to verify the opening balances of the accounts of the current assessment. It was argued on behalf of the assessee that no preliminary notice having issued under section 34, the Income-tax Officer could not call for the earlier accounts for the purpose of a supplementary assessment and that the Income-tax Officer's assessment under section 23 (4) for failure to produce accounts under section 22 (4) was illegal.

Held, that the fact that the Income-tax Officer afterwards gave to the assessee a reason which would not justify his action in calling for the earlier accounts did not make his action unjustifiable or illegal; nor did it make the failure of the assessee to produce those accounts an insufficient basis for an arbitrary assessment under section 23 (4), Kandaswami Pillai and Ramaswami Servai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 3 I.T.C. 297.

Power to seize books—Not allowed.—An Income-tax Officer went to a factory to inspect the accounts where he met the sons of the proprietors A and B. A gave the Income-tax Officer some of the books that he wanted. While the Income-tax Officer was leaving with the books, B wanted the books back. The Income-tax Officer was willing to return the books but wanted A to put in an application asking for extension of time for producing the books. To this B demurred. Thereupon the Income-tax Officer wrote out a notice under section 37, and served it on A and B, but they refused to receive it. B then attempted to recover the account books forcibly from the Income-tax Officer's orderly who was keeping them. The Income-tax Officer at once sent for the Police, and warned B that he was obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his duties: B then forcibly ejected the Income-tax Officer who had refused to go out. B was prosecuted under section 99, Indian Penal Code. Held, that although under section 22 (4) of the Income-tax Act, the Income-tax Officer can serve a notice calling upon the assessee to produce the accounts, he had no power to insist on the production of accounts in the event of non-compliance beyond what he can do under section 23 (4), that is, to assess according to the Income-tax Officer's judgment and as the law when stood deprive the person of the right of appeal. By remaining in the premises after he had been asked to go away, the Income-tax Officer was guilty of trespass, and inasmuch as he was not acting in good faith under colour of his office, section 99, Indian Penal Code, did not deprive B of the right of self-defence, Achhru Ram and others v. The Crown, 7 Lah. 104; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 326.

23. (1) If the Income-tax Officer is satisfied without requiring the presence of the assessee or the production by him of any evidence that a return made under section 22 is correct and complete, he shall assess the total income of the assessee, and shall determine the sum payable by him on the basis of such return.

Assessment.

(2) If the Income-tax Officer is not satisfied without requiring the presence of the person who made the return or the production of evidence that a return made under section 22, is correct and complete he shall serve on such person a notice requiring him, on a date to be therein specified, either to attend at the Income-tax Officer's office or to produce, or to cause to be there produced, any evidence on which such person may rely in support of the return.

(3) On the day specified in the notice issued under sub-section (2) or as soon afterwards as may be, the Income-tax Officer, after hearing such evidence as such person may produce and such other evidence as the Income-tax Officer may require, on specified points, shall, by an order in writing, assess the total income of the assessee, and determine the sum payable by him on the basis of such assessment.

(4) If any person fails to make the return required by any notice given under sub-section (2) of section 22 and has not made a return or a revised return under sub-section (3) of the same section, or fails to comply with all the terms of a notice issued under sub-section (4) of the same section or, having made a return fails to comply with all the terms of a notice issued under sub-section (2) of this section, the Income-tax Officer shall make the assessment to the best of his judgment and determine the sum payable by the assessee on the basis of such assessment and, in the case of a firm, may refuse to register it or may cancel its registration if it is already registered:

Provided that the registration of a firm shall not be cancelled until fourteen days have elapsed from the issue of a notice by the Income-tax Officer to the firm intimating his intention to cancel its registration.

(5) Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing sub-sections, when the assessee is a firm and the total income of the firm has been assessed under sub-section (1), sub-section (3) or sub-section (4), as the case may be,—

(a) in the case of a registered firm, the sum payable by the firm itself shall not be determined but the total income of each partner of the firm, including therein his share of its income, profits and gains of the previous year, shall be assessed and the sum payable by him on the basis of such assessment shall be determined:

Provided that if such share of any partner is a loss it shall be set-off against his other income or carried forward and set-off in accordance with the provisions of section 24:

Provided further that when any of such partners is a person not resident in British India, his share of the income, profits and gains of the firm shall be assessed on the firm at the rates which would be applicable if it were assessed on him personally, and the sum so determined as payable shall be paid by the firm; and

(b) in the case of an unregistered firm, the Income-tax Officer may instead of determining the sum payable by the firm itself proceed in the manner laid down in clause (a) as applicable to a registered firm, if, in his opinion, the aggregate amount of the tax including super-tax, if any, payable by the partners under such procedure would be greater than the aggregate amount which would be payable by the firm and the partners individually if the firm were assessed as an unregistered firm.

(6) Whenever the Income-tax Officer makes a determination in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (5), he shall notify to the firm by an order in writing the amount of the total income on which the determination has been based and the apportionment thereof between the several partners.

History.—This section which was radically altered in 1922 underwent a change in 1930, so as to permit the cancellation of registration of firms in the circumstances stated. In 1939, minor changes were made in sub-sections (1), (2) and (4); and sub-section (5), which involves radical changes, was newly added. Sub-section (6) was added in 1941.

Evidence in assessment proceedings other than returns and accounts of assessee.—The following executive instructions have been issued.

In addition to his general power [i.e., under section 22 (4)] to call for accounts, the Income-tax Officer, if he is not satisfied that a return made under section 22 (1) or section 22 (2) is correct or complete, has power under section 23 (2) to call upon an assessee to attend before him or to produce or cause to be produced evidence of the correctness of his return. If an assessee fails, when required by an order under section 23 (2) to attend or to produce evidence in support of his return, he is liable to a penalty under section 28, and also to be assessed under section 23 (4). If the assessee is a registered firm the Income-tax Officer may cancel its registration.

Under section 23 (3), the Income-tax Officer is empowered to utilise any evidence bearing on the assessment, which he may have obtained while under section 37, he can enforce the attendance of any person for this purpose and compel the production of the information that he requires.

Since the power to inspect, and take copies of entries in share registers, register of debenture-holders and/or register of mortgages is specially conferred on Income-tax authorities by section 39, they cannot be called upon to pay any fees for inspection or copies under the Companies Act.

General.—Before 1939, because under the then law no appeal lay in respect of an assessment under section 23 (4) it was a matter of much greater importance to assessee than at present to avoid an assessment being made under section 23 (4). So there was much litigation as to the validity of assessments made under section 23 (4), depending in turn on the validity of notices under sections 22 and 23, the exact procedure in respect of such notices, the procedure of assessment and so forth.

Proof of payments.—There is no provision in the Act under which an assessee can be compelled to give information regarding payments made by him; on the other hand if the assessee, on whom the onus lies to prove a payment which he claims as a deduction, fails to furnish evidence in support of the payment, he will naturally lose his claim to the deduction.

Sub-sections (1) and (2).—The words “without requiring the presence of the assessee or the production by him of any evidence” added in 1939 in sub-sections (1) and (2) are superfluous, and were inserted for sentimental reasons in order to obviate the possible misunderstanding that an Income-tax Officer accepted a return as correct on mere favouritism.

Sub-sections (2) and (3)—Scope of.—The scope of section 23 (2) and (3) was examined in In re Lachman Das Narain Das of Cawnpore, 2 I.T.C. 1.

Per Walsh, C.J.—“The other evidence which, the Income-tax Officer may require on specified points, under sub-section (3) of section 23, is evidence which he may require from the assessee and of which he may give him notice, specifying the points and requiring its production. This interpretation enables the machinery to work smoothly and naturally, and any other interpretation works difficulty. There is no doubt that the enquiry contemplated by section 23 is an enquiry such as that which the appellate Court under section 31 may direct the Income-tax Officer to hold, or may himself make during the hearing of the appeal. (See, however, Gopinath Naik v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1936 I.T.R. 1 and Sheik Abdul Razaak v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 425—both referred to post under this section.) It is deemed to be a judicial proceeding, and the Income-tax Officer has the same power as a Court under the Civil Procedure Code when trying a suit to enforce the attendance of any person and to compel him to give evidence on oath, to compel the production of witnesses and of documents, and to examine witnesses on commission. So that he has all the powers of a Judge in a suit, so far as concern witnesses and documents. This gives him ample facilities for securing information and guidance from rivals in the trade of the assessee, or experts, or past employees, or managers, acquainted either with the particular business of the assessee, or the class of business in the neighbourhood—and no further provision is required in any other part of the Act to vest that power in him. Section 37 is comprehensive and adequate. If sub-section (3) of section 23 gave power to the Income-tax Officer to summon further evidence himself, it would be tautologous. It would be merely repeating, in unconvincing and inadequate form, what is expressly provided by section 37. In my view, the matter is simple and clear. When the day is appointed, and the notice requiring the assessee to attend and produce evidence and so forth at the enquiry has been complied with, up to that point, there has been no default under sub-section (2). If the assessee makes default under sub-section (2) by failing to attend or failing to produce evidence, then undoubtedly the Income-tax Officer may, and indeed has no option but to, do his best under sub-section (4). But in this imperfect world especially with businesses difficult to understand for any one who has not been specially trained, occasions must often arise when the evidence produced before a tribunal falls short of giving the Income-tax Officer full and complete satisfaction. In this case, for example, the assessee might have said "the wastage is abnormal. I admit it. The fact is that our machinery is worn out. It has given great trouble this year, and partly on that account the wastage has been excessive and our profits much diminished". The obvious course for the Income-tax Officer would be to say "I was not aware of that, and if you satisfy me on that point, I shall be prepared to accept your claim of wastage, but before I do that, I require you to produce further evidence about the machinery". He may then adjourn the enquiry, fix a fresh date, and in order to prevent mistake, require by a fresh notice the assessee to produce other evidence on the specified point, namely, on the defect which had appeared in the machinery, on such adjourned date. As my brother pointed out during the argument, sub-section (2) does not confine the Income-tax Officer to one notice, and such further notice if given would become a notice under sub-section (2). The evidence, if produced, would be other evidence such as the Income-tax Officer has required on specified points, and having obtained it he can then assess under sub-section (3). If the assessee chooses not to produce the further evidence on those specified points, then the Income-tax Officer is thrown back on to sub-section (4), just as he is if the assessee has failed to produce any evidence in the first instance.

Dalal, J.—" . . . The applicant desires us to hold that the Income-tax Officer could hear evidence only of witnesses produced by him, while the Income-tax Commissioner expresses alarm in case this Court held that by the word 'require' in this clause is meant 'require from the assessee'. The Commissioner enquires how a fair assessment is to be made if the Income-tax Officer is confined to hear evidence produced by the assessee only and not any other evidence. This clause however is to be read with the rest of the Act, and it does not take away the power of the Income-tax Officer to call for and hear evidence under the powers he has under section 37 of the Act. The only difference between clause (3) and clause (4) is that in cases falling under clause (3) he is to arrive at an assessment to the best of his judgment on the evidence before him, while under clause (4) he is to decide in the absence of evidence.

As suggested in Walsh, C.J.'s judgment above, the words "such other evidence as the Income-tax Officer may require" in section 23 (3), simply refer to any evidence that the Income-tax Officer may call for under section 22 (4) or section 23 (2) or section 37. Section 23 (3) does not, of itself, confer on the Income-tax Officer any power to call for evidence, and that is why:—(a) No form has been prescribed for a notice calling for the production of evidence under section 23 (3); (b) No special penalty apart from that prescribed under the Civil Procedure Code has been prescribed for failure to comply with such a notice.

If the Income-tax Officer requires further evidence, he should apparently give reasonable time to the assessee and also specify the evidence.

Personal attendance of assessee.—The following executive instructions have been issued:

When a notice under section 23 (2) of the Act is issued, an assessee may attend the Income-tax Officer's office in person, or produce or cause to be produced any evidence on which he relies in support of his return. But if he does not attend in person he should send a representative with necessary evidence. If the Income-tax Officer wishes the assessee to attend personally he can insist on this by an order under section 37. (Income-tax Manual.)

As to who may represent the assessee in Income-tax proceedings, see section 61.

Under sub-section (2) of section 23 an assessee cannot be asked both to attend and to produce the evidence; also, it is entirely for the assessee to decide whether he should attend in person or produce the evidence relied on; and it is not open to the department to decide as to the alternative. A notice, therefore, under section 23 (2) which calls upon the assessee to attend without giving him the alternative of producing his evidence is irregular and invalid, Rajmanidevi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1937 I.T.R. 631 (All.); 172 I.C. 354.

Adjournments.—Though words similar to those in section 31 (1) in which it is stated that the Assistant Commissioner "may from time to time adjourn the hearing" do not appear in section 23 (3), it is clear from the words "as soon after as may be" that the Act contemplates the adjournment of hearing by the Income-tax Officer. Apart from these words, the power of adjournment is so necessary, convenient and universally conceded that unless it is expressly withheld by statute or rule having the force of law it must be taken to vest in him. It is not possible to regard a question of this kind apart from considerations of practical expediency in its relation to the transaction of public business.

It is not the practice—much less a rule of procedure—even in a court of justice that an adjournment date is intimated by post to an absent party. It is for him to take steps to ascertain the date. If an assessee does not appear or produce the evidence on the specified date in response to a notice under section 23 (2), it is open to the Income-tax Officer to assess under section 23 (4). He is not bound to make an adjournment. And if he makes an adjournment, it is merely an act of consideration and supererogation on his part to inform the assessee by post of the adjourned date. Failure to give such instruction would entail no legal consequences. The intimation is not a notice or requisition under the Act and need not therefore be sent by registered post as required by section 63. If such a view were not taken, no Income-tax Officer would grant any adjournments to suit the convenience of assessee. A party summoned to appear should therefore go on appearing till his case is finished. Otherwise an assessee might merely go to the Income-tax Office, fling his books down before the Income-tax Officer and then walk away, Perianna Pillai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 4 I.T.C. 217; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 113.

There is no rule by which an Income-tax Officer is bound or ought to announce beforehand how he proposes to deal with an application for an adjournment. If a person who has already obtained an adjournment desires a further adjournment, it is his duty to apply at a date sufficiently early to enable him, in the case of a refusal, to be prepared to proceed on the appointed day. Even if it could be said that the refusal of an adjournment is an exercise of judicial discretion, there is no wrongful exercise if it is refused when the application for further adjournment is delayed till the very day appointed for compliance with the order, Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Laxminarain Badridas Agarwal, 1937 I.T.R. 170 (P.C.), overruling 1934 I.T.R. 246. An assessment under section 23 (4) is therefore not invalid merely because the Income-tax Officer made it without replying to a request for adjournment, Seth Kishanlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1938 I.T.R. 108.

Firm—Notice—May be served on any partner.—In the case of a firm, the notice under section 23 (2) is not bound to be served on the same partner as made the return. Under section 63 (2), it is open to the Income-tax Officer to serve notice on any partner of the firm, see Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Thillai Chidambaram Nadar, 2 I.T.C. 27; 48 Mad. 602; A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1048.

Onus of proof.—In In re Bishnu Priya Chowdhurani, 50 Cal. 907; 1 I.T.C. 261; A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 337, an assessee who submitted a verified return of income stated that he derived no income from a particular source. The Income-tax Officer asked him to prove this negative statement, and in the absence of such proof the Income-tax Officer assessed him on income from that source without otherwise satisfying himself that he had such income, and also on an arbitrarily estimated basis; it was conceded by the Commissioner before the High Court that the ordinary principle of evidence applies and the burden of proof is on the party which would fail if no evidence were produced, i.e., on the officers of the Income-tax Department. The assessment was accordingly cancelled.

Whatever the merits of the particular case, the law as expounded by the Commissioner is open to doubt. Even in regard to confiscations and penalties made, for example, by Customs Officers, it has been held that all that an officer need do is to give the person affected opportunity to correct or contradict any evidence or statement on record on which it is proposed to act. The officer need only act on general principles (of justice)—not necessarily legal principles, and need not adjudicate on a penalty or confiscation as though he were a Court guided by the Code of Civil or Criminal Procedure, Mahadeo Ganesh v. Secretary of State, 46 Bom. 732: There is no question, therefore, of any burden of proof on the Income-tax Officer.

In Bhikaji Dravid v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 103 I.C. 38; A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 283, the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur held that the verification of the return and the assessee's statement on oath are not in themselves sufficient to discharge the onus resting on the assessee to prove the correctness of his return, especially if there are entries in the accounts requiring further explanation.

Whether the decision in the case of Bishnu Priya Chowdhurani, supra was right or wrong, there is a lot of difference between asking a person to prove that he had no income and asking him to prove his alleged losses. Once income has been admitted to exist, the burden of proving losses is on the assessee, Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Radhakishan Ramnak, 3 I.T.C. 366; A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 153.

When an assessment is made by Commissioners, the burden is upon the person disputing it to displace it, not on the person making it to sustain it, per Scrutton, L.J., in Belford v. Macc, 13 Tax Cases 539.

The burden of proving income clearly lies on the assessee since he is in the best position to know the facts—c.f. section 106, Indian Evidence Act. It is absurd for a person deliberately to withhold evidence, e.g., his accounts and then complain that the Income-tax Officer is not acting in a judicial manner, In re Harmukhrai Dulichand, 3 I.T.C. 198; A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 587; 56 Cal. 39. The normal presumption, however, is in favour of good faith; and there should be adequate grounds for disbelieving the assessee's statements, Jambudas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 104 I.C. 336; A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 336. It is for the assessee to prove his status, e.g., that he is not an individual but a partner in a firm or a member of a Hindu undivided family, Raghu Karson v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Behar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 389. The onus is on the assessee to justify the deductions from his gross income, Rowntree and Co. v. Curtis, 8 Tax Cases 678; Nopechand Magniram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 2 I.T.C. 146; In re Balcodas Rameswar, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 761. It is similarly for him to prove that his income falls within one of the exemptions, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Panchapakesa Iyer, 62 M.L.J. 656; A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 424.

It should be specially noted with reference to section 23 (3) that, where accounts are produced before the Income-tax Officer, he should examine them with reference to section 13. If he finds the accounts to be false, he need not attach any value to them; on the other hand, if he holds the accounts to be false only in part, he may rest this assessment on the part which is not false. If he finds the accounts to be true, he has to satisfy himself whether they show the profits of the year correctly and if not whether the profits can be deduced therefrom. If the accounts are true and at the same time the profits cannot be deduced therefrom he has to make the computation of profits on the best basis he can. See also notes under the proviso to section 13.

Where, however, the Revenue authorities seek to apply a penal provision against the assessee, it is for the authorities to show that there is a prima facie case for holding that the preliminary conditions have been satisfied. See Thomas Fattorini, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, (H.L.) 1943 I.T.R. (Sup.) 85.

The general scope of sections 22 and 23.—Under sub-section (1) of section 23, if the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that the return made under section 22 is correct and complete, his obvious duty is to assess the total income of the assessee in accordance with the return. He cannot ask for (why should he?) further information. Equally, the assessee cannot claim that the Income-tax Officer should not have accepted the return of income because it was incorrect in certain respects, Asoka Mills v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 6 I.T.C. 339. If, on the other hand, the Income-tax Officer has reason to believe that the return made under section 22 is either incorrect or incomplete, he must serve on the person who made the return a notice as required by sub-section (2) of section 23. It will be seen that the Income-tax Officer has no discretion in the matter. He must issue a notice if a return has been sent in, and he is not prepared to accept it as it stands. See Nirmal Kumar Singh v. Secretary of State for India, 2 I.T.C. 20; A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 890, in which, however, there are obiter dicta, Greaves, J., suggesting that this notice could be waived if the assessee had equally adequate opportunity to substantiate his return. As to the circumstances in which a return sent in by an assessee is not a valid return, see below. There is no prescribed form for this notice under section 23 (2) but it should specify the date on which the person who made the return should attend or produce or cause to be produced the evidence on which such person may rely in support of his return. Any number of notices can be issued under section 23 (2), see In re Lachmandas Naraindas, 2 I.T.C. 1. The provisions of sub-section (2) of section 23 will be complied with if the Income-tax Officer asks the assessee to show cause why he should not be assessed at a particular figure and on a particular basis, Nopechand Magniram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 2 I.T.C. 146. Under section 23 (3), the Income-tax Officer should, on a specified date or as soon as possible afterwards, hear such evidence as the person may produce. The Income-tax Officer is not precluded from calling for further evidence from the person who made the return in regard to specified points. Such evidence as has not been called for under section 23 (2) or under section 22 (4) should be called for by the Income-tax Officer under section 37. After hearing both the evidence called for on the specified points and the evidence produced by the person who made the return in support of his statements, the Income-tax Officer shall assess the total income of the assessee and determine the amount payable by him as tax on the basis of this assessment. This order must be in writing. It is subject to appeal, and should therefore be, ordinarily speaking, a reasoned order. The Income-tax Officer, however, is not a party to a suit and has no onus to discharge. It is therefore unnecessary for him to adduce evidence in the strict sense of the Indian Evidence Act in support of his conclusions. But the assessee should ordinarily have an opportunity of rebutting, if possible, the evidence or the grounds on which the Income-tax Officer proposes to assess him.

Differing views were held at one time as to whether the issue of a notice under section 23 (2) precludes an Income-tax Officer from issuing a notice under section 22 (4) also, and whether a notice under section 22 (4) can be issued in cases in which a return has been submitted. But all High Courts are now agreed that the notice under section 22 (4) can be issued at any time before the assessment. If a notice under section 22 (4) had been issued before the assessee's return was received by the Income-tax Officer, and if the Income-tax Officer is unable to accept the return as it stands, it is still obligatory on his part to issue a notice under section 23 (2) notwithstanding the fact that a notice under section 22 (4) was pending. But if there has been a default under section 22 (4), the Income-tax Officer need not continue proceedings under section 23 (2), Magaralal Pranjivan and Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 7 I.T.C. 39. In other words, notice under both sections 23 (2) and 22 (4) is not obligatory in all cases. The former is obligatory in all cases in which a return is received and not accepted, as it stands, by the Income-tax Officer, unless there has already been a default under section 22 (4), but the latter notice is optional and may be issued irrespective of whether a return has been submitted or not, Ramkissendas Bagri v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 2 I.T.C. 325; see also 3 I.T.C. 290 and connected rulings. The Allahabad High Court have ruled that though the issue of a valid notice under section 23 (2) is not a condition precedent to an assessment under section 23 (4), a notice under section 23 (2) is obligatory if the Income-tax Officer does not accept a return of income, and he cannot assess under section 23 (4) merely for default under section 22 (4). The point is that in response to the notice under section 23 (2) the assessee might satisfy the suspicion of the Income-tax Officer without producing accounts which may not be really necessary to check the returns with, Rajamani Debi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1937 I.T.R. 631. This view however is not in accord with that of the Privy Council, Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Laxminarain Badridas, 1937 I.T.R. 170 (P.C.). In the notice under section 22 (4), an Income-tax Officer should specify what evidence he requires, and such evidence must be confined only to accounts and documents. Further the accounts should not relate to a period more than three years prior to the previous year. If he wants to hear oral evidence on any point on which the assessee does not adduce any evidence himself, the Income-tax Officer would have to invoke his powers under section 23 (3) read with section 37. In a notice under section 23 (2), on the other hand, it is left entirely to the assessee to determine what evidence he should adduce. There is nothing, however, to preclude an Income-tax Officer from issuing a notice under section 23 (2) specifying the points on which he wants the assessee's written evidence, if the Income-tax Officer is in a position to do so; in fact, such specification would help both the Income-tax Officer and the assessee if only it was possible. But it is usually difficult for an Income-tax Officer at this stage to specify what he wants as he would perhaps have to call for the assessee's entire accounts, etc. See however, the remarks of Mookerjee, J., in Nirmal Kumar Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 20.

Even after proceedings have started under section 23 (3) an assessment can be made under section 23 (4) if the conditions therein laid down are satisfied. Gopaldas Purshotandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1941 I.T.R. 130 (All.).

Bearing of section 23 (4) on section 22 (4).—The wording of sub-section (4) of section 23 has given rise to much discussion as to when the notice contemplated under section 22 (4) may be issued. There had been incidental references to the question in various rulings, Nirmal Kumar Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 20; A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 890; Dhunichand Dhaniram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 188; 7 Lah. 201; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 161; Ramakrissandas Bagri v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 324; Radhakrishnan and Sons v. Commissioner of

Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 345; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 8, in all of which it had been tacitly assumed that the notice could be issued at any stage of the proceedings, irrespective of whether the return had been submitted or not and whether a notice had been issued under section 23 (2) or not. In Brijraj Rangilal, 2 I.T.C. 458; A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 39, the Patna High Court doubted the correctness of this view and suggested that the absence of the words "having made a return" in the earlier part of sub-section (4) of section 23 which refers to the failure to comply with the notice issued under section 22 (4) and the presence of those words in the later part of the sub-section which deals with failure to comply with the notice issued under section 23 (2) indicated that the notice could be issued under section 22 (4) only when a return had not been submitted. The Allahabad High Court, on the other hand, held in Lala Chandra Sen Jaini v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 17, that a notice under section 22 (4) could be issued at any stage of the proceedings irrespective of whether a return of income had been submitted or not and whether any notice had been issued under section 23 (2) or not. The Allahabad ruling was followed by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Harmukhrai Dunichand, 3 I.T.C. 198; 56 Cal. 39; A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 587, by the Patna High Court in the case of Ram Khelawan Ugamlal, 3 I.T.C. 225; 7 Pat. 852, by the Rangoon High Court in the case of R. M. P. Chettyar Firm, 3 I.T.C. 335; 7 Rang. 26, and by the Madras High Court in the case of R. M. S. R. M. Ramaswami Chettyar, 3 I.T.C. 290; 52 Mad. 194; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 60. But in the case of Lachhmandas Baburam, 4 I.T.C. 61; A.I.R. 1930 All. 49, Mukerjee, J., of the Allahabad High Court dissented from the above view and a reference was made to a Full Bench who decided that the question did not arise on the facts of the case. In Khushiram Karamchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 108 I.C. 524; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 219; 2 I.T.C. 517, the Lahore High Court considered that the primary object of calling for accounts and documents under section 22 (4) was to enable the Income-tax Officer to decide whether he would accept the return of the income under section 23 (1) or proceed to enquire under section 23 (2) and (3), and that therefore the notice under section 22 (4) should precede and not follow the notice under section 23 (2). In a later case, Muhammad Hayat v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 159; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 87; 12 Lah. 129, a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court overruled the above ruling and held that a notice under section 22 (4) could be issued at any stage—either before or after submission of the return and even after the starting of an enquiry under section 23 (3). The Allahabad High Court also has since agreed to fall in line with other Courts, In re Palumall Bholanath, 1933 I.T.R. 235; 59 All. 804; A.I.R. 1933 All. 541; 6 I.T.C. 463. All High Courts are now agreed. Most of this litigation was due to the non-appealability, before 1939, of assessments made under section 23 (4).

Failure to comply with notices.—Failure to comply with a notice under section 23 (2) brings the assessee under the operation of section 23 (4) and also exposes him to a penalty under section 28. Failure to comply with notice under section 22 (4) on the other hand, brings the assessment within section 23 (4) and exposes the person to prosecution under section 51, or to a penalty under section 28.

Section 23 (4) can come into operation only if the person—

(a) fails to make a return in response to a notice under section 22 (2), or (b) fails to comply with all the terms of the notice issued under section 22 (4), or (c) having made a return fails to comply with all the terms of the notice issued under section 23 (2). And when it comes into operation as a consequence of such non-compliance, the Income-tax Officer must assess under that sub-section, Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Laxminarain Badridas, 1937 I.T.R. 170 (P.C.). See also section 30.

Non-compliance with a notice under section 22 (4) is not a necessary condition precedent to section 23 (4) coming into operation; it is only one among different alternatives, In re Behari Lal Chatterjee, 1934 I.T.R. 377 (All.); 7 I.T.C. 123; 56 All. 518.

Failure to produce accounts.—An Income-tax Officer is not bound to make up his mind the moment he receives a return as to whether he accepts or not. It is open to him before he deals with the question to call for the production of accounts, and as the accounts have to be proved by somebody, to call upon the assessee to appear in person. If the assessee appears but does not produce the accounts, section 23 (4) is automatically attracted, and no further notice under section 23 (2) is required, Rm. Pl. S. Sivaswami Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 4 I.T.C. 207; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 127. On the other hand, failure to produce accounts before filing the return cannot deprive the assessee of his right to have his return examined under sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 23 since under section 22 (4) it is open to an assessee to put in a return before the actual assessment and such return cannot be still-born because of an antecedent failure to comply with a notice under section 22 (4). It follows therefore that the Income-tax Officer should issue a second notice under section 22 (4) if necessary after receipt of the return under the first three sub-sections of section 22, In re Sadaram Puranchand, 5 I.T.C. 459; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 729.

Non-residents.—The failure to make a return may justify an assessment under section 23 (4) but would not in itself justify the application of Rule 35; the latter would depend on the nature of the data available to the Income-tax Officer, from which he can estimate the profits in British 'India', Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. National Mutual Life Association, 1933 I.T.R. 350; A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 427.

Res Judicata.—An Income-tax Officer is not a Court except for the purposes mentioned in section 37. In re Nataraja Iyer, 36 Mad. 72, is not an authority for the position that an Income-tax Officer is a Court for all purposes. The principle of res judicata applicable to the decisions of Civil Courts does not apply to the proceedings of Income-tax Officers. If a question is referred to the High Court and decided by it, it will of course be binding on the Income-tax Department for that particular assessment. For later assessments of the same assessee, it will be ordinarily res judicata if the answer to the question does not depend on circumstances which vary from year to year, e.g., whether a certain property is a trust property. Otherwise, if the answer to the question depends on facts varying from time to time, it will not be res judicata. It is not open to the Income-tax authorities, however, to re-open concluded facts except in accordance with natural justice. Where Income-tax Officers have after enquiry assessed a particular person on a definite basis, it would not be open to the department arbitrarily to change the assessment, though it would be open to them to go back on the previous basis in the light of fresh facts. If there is evidence on which the change in basis is justified, the High Court will not interfere. See Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Massey & Co., Ltd., 3 I.T.C. 302; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 453; and Sankaralinga Nadar and Bros. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 209; 4 I.T.C. 226 (based on Hoystead v. Commissioners of Taxation, (1926) A.C. 155 and Broken Hill Proprietary Co. v. Broken Hill Municipal Council, (1926) A.C. 94. See also Deokinandan and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Delhi, 4 I.T.C. 398; Electric and Dental Stores v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 254; 12 Lah. 663; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 341; Mathradas & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1933 I.T.R. 212; 7 I.T.C. 34; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 815; Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Sir Sorabji Mehta, (1927) 2 I.T.C. 286. Tarachand Pohumal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 312), Kaniram Ganpatrai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1941 I.T.R. 332, Jitmal Chamanlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 296; Sirdar Indra Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1943 I.T.R. 16.

In Hoystead v. Commissioner of Taxation, (1926) A.C. 155, the Privy Council ruled that a decision of the Court on a fundamental point created an estoppel on the same question in a later year as between the same subject and the taxing authority. In the Broken Hill case, (1926) A.C. 94, the Privy Council decided that a decision of the Court relating to a valuation and liability to tax in an earlier year did not provide an estoppel or res judicata for later years, the valuations in different years being different questions.

Income-tax assessments are inherently of a passing nature, and do not deserve such permanence as to provide an estoppel by res judicata in later years by reason of a matter taken into account or not taken into account in an earlier year or assessment. Further, if an income-tax authority has to decide any question of law, it is only incidental to his main object of ascertaining the assessee's income, and the determination of a collateral or incidental question cannot form the basis of res judicata. It was held, therefore, by the Court of Appeal that the principle of res judicata would not apply to proceedings before Income-tax authorities, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Sneath, 17 Tax Cases 149; (1932) 2 K.B. 362. The Court dissented from Aylmer v. Mahaffer, 10 Tax Cases 594, which was decided by the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland. It was again affirmed in Trustees of Will of Brodie v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 A.T.C. 140; 17 Tax Cases 432, that there is no estoppel as between the Revenue and the tax-payer, especially, since Revenue Officers have no power to make contracts or declarations binding on Government.

In a Burma case, Thaver Brothers v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1934 I.T.R. 230; 7 I.T.C. 156, Page, C.J., observed that the Income-tax Officer ought to approach a subject with an open mind and decide on the materials before him. He must not start with the idea that he is bound by the decision of his predecessors in previous assessments unless the assessee satisfies him that the previous decision was wrong. Admissions made by the assessee however, would be relevant evidence, Sirdar Indian Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1943 I.T.R. 16.

In Rai Saheb Lala Jinda Ram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 3 I.T.C. 345, it was held that an Income-tax Officer was not estopped from going back on a decision of his own or that of his predecessors which he considered to be wrong.

According to the Calcutta High Court, however, ordinarily, once an assessment has been made under section 23 (1), i.e., the Income-tax Officer accepting the return of the assessee, the assessment is settled, and on the general principles of law governing estoppels neither the assessee nor the Crown ought to be at liberty to go behind the amount of profits and gains when once determined by a competent authority, except in circumstances to which sections 34 and 35 apply, In re Mahaliram Ramjidas, 1938 I.T.R. 265.

An Income-tax Officer is not bound to accept the conclusions, in regard to facts, reached by another Income-tax Officer, even if on the same facts and at the same time in connection with other assessments and even if indirectly concerning the assessee, L. R. M. S. T. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 416.

In a certain year, an Income-tax Officer disallowed a bad debt on the ground that the claim was premature, and his successor in the next year on the ground that the debt had become bad long before. The High Court held that there were materials for the second finding, though the Commissioner agreed ex parte to revise the order of the Income-tax Officer, Raja Mal Pahar Chand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 577. The fact that the Income-tax Officer had let off a fund for some years in the mistaken belief that it was a mutual institution was not held to prevent him from holding in a later year that it was not mutual, Trichinopoly Tennore, etc., Fund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1937 I.T.R. 703. Where entire proceedings are re-commenced, e.g., under the orders of the Commissioner under section 33, the officer dealing with the matter afresh is not to shut his eyes to obvious facts and bind himself to opinions expressed by the officer who dealt with the earlier proceedings cancelled by the Commissioner, N. A. Concern v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1938 I.T.R. 518.

An Income-tax Officer is only an administrative officer, though acting judicially; and what he has to do is to ascertain the income of the year and assess it. It is therefore open to him to arrive at a preliminary decision, e.g., on a question of law, and then arrive at his final assessment later. His first decision will not necessarily be a final determination for the purpose of law, Eirc v. Miccal Smidie, 17 A.T.C. 599.

Obiter dicta in a judgment on matters not necessary for the purpose in hand have neither binding authority nor operate as res judicata, In re Mahaliram Ramjidas, 1938 I.T.R. 265 (Cal.).

Refusal of Registration.—The amendment in 1939 fills a lacuna which existed formerly. Before that date there was provision only for cancellation of registration and not for refusal to register.

Cancellation of registration of firms—Proviso to sub-section (4).—It is evidently the duty of the Income-tax Officer to consider the objections if any put forward by the firm before cancelling its registration, and to hear the firm or its representative, if necessary.

No form has been prescribed for the notice. All that the notice need do is to intimate the Income-tax Officer's intention to cancel the registration of the firm and ask it to show cause why the Income-tax Officer should not do so. The notice should, like all statutory notices, be served in accordance with the provisions of section 63.

The rationale of refusing or cancelling the registration of a defaulting firm is that since the object of registration is to tax partners on their individual incomes, there is no point in attempting to tax partners on their individual incomes, if the firm will not help the Income-tax Officer to ascertain its income. On the other hand even if the firm does not wish to be registered the Income-tax Officer has power under sub-section (5) to treat the firm as though it had been registered if in the opinion of the Income-tax Officer the revenue will benefit by such action on his part.

Cancellation of registration under this section is appealable under section 30.

Revised Return under section 22 (3).—The reference to the revised return has been necessitated as a result of the deletion of the concluding part of section 22 (3) (q.v.). As the law now stands, the revised return is a valid return only for purposes of assessment and not for the purpose of immunity from a penalty under section 28 if any.

Where there is no proper revised return but only a mere letter that an item of so much has been omitted in the first return, the Income-tax Officer is under no obligation to issue a new notice under section 23 (2) Gopaldas Purshottamdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1941 I.T.R. 130 (All.).

Determine the sum payable.—The amendment made in 1939 makes it it clear that the Income-tax Officer must determine the sum payable, thus removing the difficulties raised in In re Beharilal Chatterjee, 1934 I.T.R. 377; 56 All. 415; 7 I.T.C. 123. (See below.). The word 'assessed', it will be seen, is used in the Act now, generally in the sense of determining the total income and not in that of computing the taxes.

To "make an assessment" includes the determination of the amount of tax payable. The presence of the words "determine the sum payable" in sub-sections (1) and (3) and their absence (before 1939) in sub-section (4) therefore did not make any difference, Beharilal Chatterji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1934 I.T.R. 377; 56 All. 415; 7 I.T.C. 123.

Description of assessee.—A notice under section 23 (2) need not describe the status of the assessee i.e., whether individual or Hindu undivided family, etc., and the Income-tax Office need not strike out in the form of notice the capacities which do not apply to the assessee, Gopaldas Parshottamdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1941 I.T.R. 130 (All.). See also In re Radhey Lal Balmukund, 1942 I.T.R. 131 (All.); Dr. Singha v. Secretary of State, 2 I.T.C. 462 (referred to under section 22). It is obvious however, that the notice should be intended, beyond doubt, for the person to whom it is addressed.

Combined notices under different sections.—There is nothing in the law to prevent the issue of a single notice under different sections of the Act; and in particular under sections 22 (4) and 23 (2) together, Chandra Sen Jain v. Commissioner of Income-tax, United Provinces, 3 I.T.C. 17; 50 All. 589; A.I.R. 1928 All. 283; Harmukhrai Dunichand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 3 I.T.C. 198; 56 Cal. 39; A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 587; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. R. M. P. Chettiyar Firm, 3 I.T.C. 335; 7 Rang. 26; R. M. P. L. S. Sivasami Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 4 I.T.C. 207; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 127. It is unnecessary for a notice to say under what section it is issued. All that it need say is what it requires the recipient of the notice to do, and where and when, Ram Khelawan Ugamal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 3 I.T.C. 225; 7 Pat. 852.

Failure to submit return—What is.—It is possible to draw, at least in theory, a line of difference between (1) an incomplete but valid return, i.e., a return which, on the face of it, fulfils or purports to fulfil the requirements of the law, but owing to some mistake or inadvertence fails to comply with a particular provision or provisions, e.g., a return complete in all respects but omitting bona fide, say, a source of income; and (2) a totally invalid return, i.e., a return which fails substantially to give the information required by the statutory form of return. Thus, a form filled up otherwise than in accordance with the instructions given in the return, or a form not signed or verified or seriously incomplete in respect of the details necessary would be an invalid return. A return which deliberately omitted to give figures relating to branches of business under assessment has been held to be no return, In re Abheyram Chunnial, 1933 I.T.R. 126; A.I.R. 1933 All. 197; 6 I.T.C. 343. A return showing under heading 5—Business, Trade, etc., “Profits or income in money-lending business about Rs. 5,000” without any details as required by Note 5 of the Instructions in the Return was held to be no return at all. So also a return with no entries in it except “Loss about Rs. 8,000; ledgers not ready”, and a return with entries “about Rs. 800, etc.” without verification and the required details, Commissioner of Income-tax v. A. R. A. N. Chettyar and V. D. M. R. M. Chettyar, 6 Rang. 21; 2 I.T.C. 477; A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 108; Mohanlal Hardecodas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 127; Lal Muhammad Sirdar Muhammad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 358; A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 858; 7 I.T.C. 347. The mere signing of the prescribed form or return without filling in any of the columns in it and, with the word ‘Blank’ written against the item ‘total’, accompanied by a letter that the person carries on no business in British India, is equivalent to failure to submit a return, Rattanchand Dunichand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 69; 9 Lah. 188; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 944. If an assessee has no taxable income, what he has to do is to make a return in the prescribed form, verify it in the prescribed manner and say that he has no taxable income. The signature and verification of the return are by no means mere formalities, Kunwarj Anand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 417; 11 Pat. 187; A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 306. A return showing ‘Nil’ everywhere except some items against which ‘Loss’ was written, no details or figures being shown either in the body of the return or in the form laid down in Note 5 is not a valid return, Ramakissandas Bagri v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 2 I.T.C. 325; see also Ramachandra Kasinath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1014; 5 I.T.C. 58 and Nawalkishore Kharaitilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Delhi, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1014. On the other hand a letter with a statement of income and a blank return form might amount to the making of a return, Gangasagar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 97; A.I.R. 1929 All. 219. This view, however, was taken with reference to a prosecution under section 52, and not in reference to section 23 (4). See also the remarks of Lord Stormouth Darling in Lord Advocate v. A.B., 3 Tax Cases 617; 35 Sc.L.R. 190 cited in notes under section 51.

While a failure to furnish a return suo motu under section 22 (1) might entail a penalty under section 28, the failure cannot by itself result in an assessment under section 23 (4).

Time given to assessee.—The Income-tax Officer's refusal to grant time and proceeding ex parte will not in themselves raise a question of law, Sir Hari Singh Gour v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 6 I.T.C. 317. An assessee should, however, be allowed reasonable time within which to produce accounts or evidence. Whether the time given is reasonable is ordinarily a question of fact, but it may become a question of law if the time is so short as to be clearly not reasonable. Even assuming that an assessee had all the books at hand and was trying to evade their production before the Income-tax Officer, it is not reasonable for the latter to ask the assessee not only to collect and produce the books but also to produce other evidence on which he might rely—all between 3 P.M. on one day (when the notice was served) and the next morning, In re Sadaram Furanchand, (Cal.), 5 I.T.C. 459; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 729. Nor is it reasonable to ask an assessee in Bombay to produce within fifteen days the accounts of one of his customers in Hongkong, however close the business connection between the two parties; Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Bombay Trust Corporation, 1936 I.T.R. 323. See also Sacchidananda Sinha's case, 1 I.T.C. 381 under section 33. On the 8th of August, a notice was issued under section 22 (4) to produce certain books. The jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer was challenged successfully before the High Court; and on the 30th December, the Governor-General issued an ordinance nullifying the Court's order. Offices were closed on the 31st December and the 1st and 2nd of January. The Income-tax Officer made an assessment on the 3rd January under section 23 (4). It was held that the assessee was prevented by sufficient cause from complying with the notice under section 22 (4) and that the assessment was capricious and not honest.

In re Govindram Sakseria, 1943 I.T.R. 104 (Bom.).

Failure to submit accounts or evidence.—As regards failure to comply with a notice under section 22 (4) or 23 (2), the failure must be in respect of one of three things: (1) producing evidence itself, (2) producing it at a certain time, and (3) producing it at a certain place; and if the person fails in any one of these things it is open to the Income-tax Officer to assess him under section 23 (4).

Since section 23 (4) refers to "all" the terms of the notices issued under section 22 (4) and 23 (2), a partial default in respect of any of the notices involves the same consequences as a total default, Banarsidas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 142; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 489.

The inadequacy of the evidence produced or the inability of the assessee to prove his case (not his deliberate omission to do it) will not deprive the assessee of his right to be assessed under sub-section (3), with its consequential benefits, though the Income-tax Officer would be at liberty to infer adversely from the inadequacy of the evidence or the inability of the assessee to prove his case, Banarsidas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 142; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 489; Raghunath Mahadev v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 2 I.T.C. 94; A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 694; S. P. K. A. A. M. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 10 Rang. 92.

tax, Oudh, 4 I.T.C. 4; A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 164; but whether on the facts section 23 (4) was rightly applied may be a question of law, A. R. A. N. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 2 I.T.C. 476; 6 Rang. 21.

Whether returns or accounts or documents were in fact produced or not or whether the terms of notices under sections 22 (2), 22 (4) and 23 (2) were complied with or not is always a question of fact, see Toharmal Uttamchand v. Crown, (Lah.), 2 I.T.C. 301. But it would be a question of law whether there was evidence for the findings, Girtan Lal Rasik Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 7 I.T.C. 209.

Whether books are available or not it is a question of fact. In a case, therefore, in which the assessee said that certain accounts had been lost or destroyed and the Income-tax Officer did not believe the statement, the High Court declined to interfere with the finding of the Income-tax Officer, Sankaralinga Nadar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 4 I.T.C. 226; 53 Mad. 420; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 209. Similarly, if the existence of accounts is denied by the assessee, it would be open to the Income-tax Officer to hold on evidence that they existed and were being deliberately withheld, Lachmandas Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 61; A.I.R. 1930 All. 49; Virbhan Bansilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 111. The Income-tax Officer however must not act on mere suspicion. There should be reasons for the Income-tax Officer's opinion that the accounts not produced are in existence and are being deliberately withheld, Ragunath Mahadeo v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 2 I.T.C. 94; A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 694; S. P. K. A. A. M. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 10 Rang. 92; 6 I.T.C. 49; A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 52. The High Court will not interfere with such a finding unless it is perverse, Raghu-Karson v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 389. The mere fact that the assessee is unable to prove the existence of individuals whose names are shown as transacting business with him and having accounts with him will not in itself justify the inference that the accounts are false or incomplete. All that the Income-tax Officer can do in such a case is to disallow the deductions claimed in respect of the items under suspicion, Ragunath Mahadeo v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 2 I.T.C. 94; A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 694, S. P. K. A. A. M. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 10 Rang. 92; 6 I.T.C. 49; A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 52.

In a case in which the assessee was asked to produce evidence under section 23 (2) and accounts under section 22 (4), but the assessee merely turned round and said in effect "We have no evidence to produce and you may decide on the materials before you," without filing any affidavit or making any effort to convince the Income-tax Officer of the absence of any evidence in their possession, the Patna High Court held that there was non-compliance with section 22 (4) and section 23 (2), and that an assessment under section 23 (4) was legal, Mohanlal Hardeo Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 4 I.T.C. 90; 9 Patna 172.

If a return is made by a person who keeps no accounts, and is therefore unaccompanied by the details required by Note 5 (b) in the Return, the return cannot be regarded as invalid because of the omission to furnish them. "Lex non cogit ad impossibilia"—A person cannot be penalized for not doing what he cannot do. Whether there are accounts is a question of fact on which the Income-tax Officer has to arrive at a finding, Khushiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 100 I.C. 774; A.I.R. 1928

Lah. 219; 2 I.T.C. 517. The Income-tax Officer cannot assume that there has been a default unless it is clear from the return or from other evidence that the assessee is intentionally omitting to do what he is in a position to do. In doubtful cases, therefore, i.e., where there is not adequate evidence to enable the Income-tax Officer to find that accounts are in fact being kept but withheld, it is only fair that he should not treat the assessee as in default in respect of the notice under section 22 (4) but give him a chance under section 23 (2), as indeed the Income-tax Officer must, if a return has been furnished; and if it is subsequently found that the assessee does maintain accounts, the Income-tax Officer could then assess the person under section 23 (4).

The onus rests on the assessee, if he denies the existence of accounts to prove that fact, and his attempt to establish that fact can be met by circumstantial evidence to the contrary. The Income-tax Officer is entitled to disbelieve improbable statements and ask for something more to satisfy him. Since the Income-tax Officer cannot be expected to produce positive evidence as to facts within the special knowledge of the assessee, circumstantial evidence and general probabilities, (See section 114, Evidence Act) constitute evidence and materials on which the Income-tax Officer can come to a finding just as properly as on positive evidence, Kanhaiyalal Umarao Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, United Provinces, 1941 I.T.R. 225 (Oudh); Chatterbhuj v. Commissioner of Income-tax, United Provinces, 1941 I.T.R. 286 (Oudh).

It is not open to an assessee to refuse to comply with notices issued under section 22 (4) or section 23 (2) on the ground that the question of the Income-tax Officer's jurisdiction is under discussion with reference to section 64, Lachman Das Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, United Provinces, 4 I.T.C. 61; A.I.R. 1930 All. 49. If an assessee submits returns relating to his branches to the respective Income-tax Officers but none to the office at the principal place of business, he is in default under section 23 (4) and it is open to the Income-tax Officer at the principal place of business to make an assessment without waiting for reports from the officers at the branches who have received the returns, Mohanlal Hardeo Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 127. On the other hand, having waived the demand for the production of branch accounts and agreed to accept the report of the Income-tax Officer having jurisdiction over the branch, the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of business cannot declare the assessee to be in default in not producing the branch accounts unless the Income-tax Officer issues a fresh notice under section 22 (4) asking for the branch accounts and this notice is not complied with, Lachmandas Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 4 I.T.C. 61; A.I.R. 1930 All. 49. If the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of business calls for a return of income of all the branches and the assessee submits the return only for his principal place of business, he is in default and an assessment can be made under section 23 (4).

Assessments under wrong sub-sections.—As already observed the question of the sub-section of section 23 under which an assessment was made was of great importance before 1st April, 1939 when assessments made under sub-section (4) could not be appealed against; even after 1st April, 1939, the question is not entirely without importance because in respect of appeals against orders under section 23 (4), the appellate authorities might not permit the letting in of evidence not produced before the Income-tax Officer. In any case, a manifest mistake on the part of the Income-tax Officer cannot operate either to deprive the assessee of a right which he possesses or to confer on him a right which he does not possess.

It is not open to an Income-tax Officer to assess a case under section 23 (4) when it really falls under section 23 (3) or vice versa. In re Sarjoo Pershad Gauri Shanker, (1931) 132 I.C. 564; 5 I.T.C. 263. It is the duty of the Assistant Commissioner to determine whether really an order has been passed under the sub-section under which it purports to have been passed, Radhakishan and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 2 I.T.C. 345; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 5. Thus, there could be no failure within the meaning of sections 22 (4) and 23 (4) on the part of an assessee who does not keep accounts if he does not produce accounts and such failure cannot be used as a reason for an order under section 23 (4) as below: "assessed under section 23 (4) as assessee has no account." If such an assessee had filed a return and was prepared to give evidence under section 23 (2), it is the duty of the Income-tax Officer to assess him under section 23 (3). Nor can an Income-tax Officer compel the assessee to produce a particular kind of evidence which he is unable to produce, and penalise him on the ground that he did not comply with the notice under section 23 (2). At the same time, an Income-tax Officer cannot condone failure and assess a person under section 23 (3) when he ought to assess under section 23 (4). In re Sarjoo Pershad Gauri Shankar, supra.

An assessee submitted no return but merely gave a statement of the amount of his business in bills and evaded producing his books. Though the Income-tax Officer assessed him ostensibly under section 23 (3), it was held that the order was really under section 23 (4) (and therefore not appealable, i.e., under the pre-1939 law). Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Ganguram Kanaylal, 1940 I.T.R. 421.

In a case in which an order has been, on the face of it, passed wrongly under section 23 (4) instead of under section 23 (3), the assessee need not invoke section 27 but can appeal against the assessment on its merits to the Assistant Commissioner, Bagavati Prasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 6 I.T.C. 105; 54 All. 496; A.I.R. 1932 All. 390.

It is a question of law whether on the facts a particular assessment should have been made under sub-section (3) or sub-section (4) Khushiram Karamchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 2 I.T.C. 517; but it is not a question of law arising out of an order under section 27 or under section 31 in appeal against an order under section 27. Kanhaiyalal Umraosing v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1941 I.T.R. 225 (Oudh).

An assessee called upon by notice under section 23 (2) to substantiate his return told the Income-tax Officer to assess on the materials at his disposal. The Assistant Commissioner, on appeal, fined the assessee under section 28. Before the High Court the assessee contended that the assessment should have been made under section 23 (4) and that the Assistant Commissioner had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal and none to impose a penalty under section 28. Held, that the assessment was rightly made under section 23 (3), since the assessee put in an estimate of his income. Pitta Ramaswamiah v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 49 Mad. 831; 2

I.T.C. 196; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 49. A similar case was Malik Damsaz Khan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, N.W.F.P., 1944 I.T.R. 498.

In a case in which the Commissioners simply followed the figures of a previous year in fixing the current assessment without at the same time indicating that the assessment had been made by estimate, Rowlatt, J., ordered as below:—

"It must go back in order that the Commissioners may state, and state in terms, what is the figure which they arrive at applying their minds and their judgments truly and actually to the figures of the relevant years guessing them, if you like, if they do not know them and if they cannot be informed of them, guessing them, if you like to the best of their ability from the sources of information they have and from the best of their skill and judgment but applying their minds really to that, because no decision that will stand can be pronounced by people applying their minds to one thing and saying they are applying it to another. They must really apply their minds to the real question and then the Court must accept it", Ogilvie v. Barron, 11 Tax Cases 503.

Appeals against orders under section 23 (4).—Under section 30 as amended in 1939, an appeal lies against an assessment made under section 23 (4). The various questions on the borderland of fact and law which were formerly raised with frequency by tax-payers with reference to the scope of section 23 (4) and that of section 27 have lost their importance.

Re-opening assessments under section 23 (4) in insolvency proceedings.—According to the Oudh Chief Court, an assessment under section 23 (4) made as a consequence of a default by a company under section 22 (4), cannot be reopened in insolvency proceedings under section 229 of the Indian Companies Act at the instance of the official liquidator and in the interests of creditors. The reason why other debts can be re-examined is the possibility of fraudulent preference and this motive is absent in respect of taxes. Dinshaw and Co. v. Income-tax Officer, Lucknow, 1941 I.T.R. 215.

On the other hand according to a bench of three judges of the Lahore High Court, which definitely dissented from the Oudh ruling, while an assessment is prima facie proof of taxable income it is open to the liquidator to rebut this proof by adequate evidence. The reason for insolvency and Liquidation courts going behind decrees is not merely the possibility of collusion but the need for safeguarding all parties and seeing that no one gets undue advantage by getting a part of the assets without a corresponding debt. In the United Kingdom, under Board of Trade regulations the Inland Revenue authorities, it appears, readjust or forego tax on the production of evidence that there had been excessive assessment. In the absence of a similar remedy in India it would be unfair to extend to India the rule in In re Calvert, 4 Tax Cas. 79. Sargodha Trading Co. v. Governor-General in Council, 1943 I.T.R. 368. See also notes under section 46.

Assessments under section 23 (4)—Allowances and deductions.—All allowances such as for depreciation must be presumed to have been made in the course of an assessment under section 23 (4), Government Mail Motor Company v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 136 I.C. 706; 6 I.T.C. 120.

Assessment by estimate.—There is nothing to prevent an assessment by estimate under section 23 (3) if the Income-tax Officer is not satisfied with the evidence produced by the assessee in support of his return. The difference between such an assessment and one under section 23 (4) is that till 1939 the one was appealable and the other not.

Orders in writing.—Orders under section 23 (4) having become appealable as from the 1st April 1939, it would appear that the orders should be in writing setting out not only the circumstances that led to the assessment being made under this sub-section but the basis of the estimate even if such basis be only vague and conjectural.

How section 23 (4) should be applied.—If an Income-tax Officer, regardless of the information at his disposal, quite deliberately, recklessly or fraudulently made an assessment knowing it to be wrong and unjustified, and if there was no other remedy available, it might be open to the High Court under its inherent prerogative powers to claim jurisdiction and interfere, see per Farwell, L.J., in Dyson v. Attorney-General, (1911) 1 K. B. 410; and Farwell, L.J., in R. v. Board of Education, (1910) 2 K. B. 478. See also Abdul Bari Choudhri v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 9 R. 281; overruling S. P. K. A. A. M. Chettyar Firm's Case, 4 I.T.C. 82; 7 Rang. 669; A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 35; P. K. N. P. R. Firm's Case, 4 I.T.C. 87 and 340 and A. R. A. N. Firm's Case, 2 I.T.C. 477; 6 Rang. 21; and Fattelal Panna Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 6 I.T.C. 299. But, ex hypothesi, an assessment under section 23 (4) must be made on inadequate materials and be therefore a mere estimate, and to that extent is arbitrary. If the Income-tax Officer acts mala fide, the Commissioner will doubtless use his powers of revision under section 33-A but there is clearly no judicial discretion in making an assessment under section 23 (4). The Income-tax Officer has no choice as to action or forbearance and must make an estimate, however inadequate the materials; the words "to the best of his judgment" therefore simply mean "as best he can". The discretion of the Income-tax Officer is therefore not similar to the discretion of Licensing Justices (see Sharp v. Wakefield, (1891) A.C. 173). The judicial discretion of a tribunal implies that in certain proved or admitted circumstances the tribunal has power to act or not to act in a particular way. There is no such choice to the Income-tax Officer when making an assessment under section 23 (4). The Rangoon High Court therefore held that no question of law can arise out of the fact that an assessment under section 23 (4) is not founded on adequate evidence. Abdul Bari Choudhri v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 9 R. 281; overruling, S. P. K. A. A. M. Chettyar Firm's Case, 4 I.T.C. 182; 7 Rang. 669; A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 35; P. K. N. P. R. Firm's Case, 4 I.T.C. 87 and 340 and A. R. A. N. Firm's Case, 2 I.T.C. 477; 6 R. 21. The ruling in Abdul Bari Choudhri's case was approved by the Privy Council, in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Lakshminarain Badridas Agarwal, 1937 I.T.R. 170; reversing 1934 I.T.R. 246; A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 183.

A Bench of five Judges of the Lahore High Court held, in Muhamad Hayat v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 159; 12 Lah.

129, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 87, that section 23 (4) does not permit of capriciously arbitrary assessments. If evidence is produced by the assessee and default occurs later, the Income-tax Officer should not ignore the available evidence. Though the High Court may not have jurisdiction in a case falling under section 23 (4), it is open to the Court to interpret that section. The Court approved of the earlier Rangoon rulings which have been subsequently overruled by the latter Court. In a later case, however, the Lahore High Court made it clear that it could not ask the Commissioner to state a case as to the arbitrariness of an assessment, Somchand Malukchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 297.

The view of the Calcutta High Court was the same as that of Rangoon since they held in In re Krishna Kumar Ghose, 5 I.T.C. 295; 58 Cal. 906; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 513 that an order as follows: "Business—Rs. 30,000" without any disclosure of the business or of any other details is a valid order the assessment being made to the best of the Income-tax Officer's judgment. An assessment under section 23 (4) however is not meant to be a penalty for the assessee's non-compliance with the Income-tax Officer's notices, Jot Ramesher Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1934 I.T.R. 129; 56 All. 933; A.I.R. 1934 All. 559; 7 I.T.C. 173. The fact that an assessment is higher than in the preceding year is no ground for holding it to be arbitrary, Lalit Kishore v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 166; 140 I.C. 712.

The Nagpur Court held that in every case falling under section 23 (4) the Income-tax Officer should conduct a local enquiry and place on record notes so that the Commissioner and the High Court can decide whether he acted arbitrarily or not. In reversing this ruling the Privy Council said that it was impossible to extract these requirements from the language of the Act. The Officer is to make an assessment to the best of his judgment against a person who is in default as regards supplying information. He must not act dishonestly or vindictively or capriciously because he must exercise judgment in the matter. He must make what he honestly believes to be a fair estimate of the proper figure of assessment and for this purpose, he must be able to take into consideration local knowledge and reports in regard to the assessee's circumstances and his own knowledge of previous returns made by and of the assessee, and all other matters which he thinks, will assist him in arriving at a fair and proper estimate and though there must necessarily be guesswork in the estimation, it must be honest guesswork. In that sense too, the assessment must to some extent be arbitrary. The section places the officer in the position of a person whose decision as to amount is final and subject to no appeal but whose decision if it can be shown to have been arrived at without an honest exercise of judgment may be reversed or reviewed by the Commissioner under section 33-A. There is no justification in the language of the Act for holding that an assessment made under section 23 (4) without a local enquiry and without a record of the details and results of that enquiry cannot have been made to the best of the Income-tax Officer's judgment, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Lakshminarain Badridas Agarwal, 64 I.A. 102; 1937 I.T.R. 170 (P.C.) reversing 1934 I.T.R. 246; A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 183.

The question whether an assessment is capricious or arbitrary cannot, in any event, be raised before the High Court unless it has first been raised before the Income-tax authorities, Chiranji Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 28.

Enquiries by the Income-tax Officer.—While an Income-tax Officer is at liberty to make private enquiries before deciding whether or not to accept a return as correct the proceedings partake of the nature of a judicial enquiry once a notice under section 23 (2) has issued and private enquiries after that stage cannot be used against the assessee without his knowledge. On the other hand, it is open to the officer to act upon the assessments in earlier years if no better evidence is available even if the earlier assessments had been made under section 23 (4); Gopinath Naik v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1936 I.T.R. 1 (All.).

Enquiries under orders of higher authority.—Though under section 23 (3) the Income-tax Officer is bound to consider the evidence tendered by the assessee he is under no similar obligation in respect of enquiries conducted under the orders of the Assistant Commissioner, Sheik Abdul Razzak v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 425.

Disclosure to assessee.—There is nothing in the Act requiring the Income-tax Officer to disclose to the assessee the materials on which he proposes to act or to refer to them in his order; but natural justice requires that he should draw the assessee's attention to such material and give him a reasonable opportunity to meet the case. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Kherserchand Ramdas, 1940 I.T.R. 159; Seth Gurmukh Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 393; Lalmohan Krishnalal Pal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1944 I.T.R. 441; Dalchand and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 458.

So long as there are materials apart from confidential enquiries by the Income-tax authorities not communicated to the assessee, the High Court will not interfere with findings of fact, Seth Gurmukh Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 393.

The assessee should have some opportunity to rebut the information or evidence on which the Income-tax Officer proposes to rely, Sheik Abdul Razzak v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 425.

In Commissioner of Income-tax v. Chanlo Chawn and Tong Hock Hin, 3 I.T.C. 397; 7 Rang. 281; A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 102 the Rangoon High Court held that the Income-tax Officer is not bound to inform the assessee of the specific grounds on which he disbelieves the latter's accounts or other evidence produced. The Court suggested however that ordinarily as a matter of fairness the Income-tax Officer should inform the assessee of such grounds. See also notes under section 13.

Where an assessee declined to account for certain interest-bearing capital that was in his possession in previous years, and the Income-tax Officer, after giving him an opportunity to prove the contrary, estimated his income on the assumption that the missing capital was still earning interest, it was held that there was evidence on which the Income-tax Officer could make the assessment, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Sankar Aiyar, 2 I.T.C. 73.

Judicial spirit—Exercise of.—Silence on the part of the assessee in the face of opportunity given is often the most cogent evidence against him, see per Sargant, L. J., in Haythornthwaite and Sons v. Kelly, 11 Tax Cases 657.

"The Income-tax Officer should be governed in his procedure by judicial considerations. He should base assessment on legal and not mere hearsay evidence, which may be the evidence of his officers or of members of the public, but without evidence that items which do not appear in an account should find a place therein, he is not entitled to assume on mere general hearsay that those items should appear in the account. Should he however find on good evidence that even one substantial item is missing, he would be entitled to treat the whole account as unreliable", Baijnath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 2 I.T.C. 176; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 233.

At the same time, as the Income-tax Officer, though not a Court of law has to act in a quasi judicial capacity, he should conform to the elementary rules of judicial procedure, and in particular, should conduct the proceedings himself, and not allow any one else, even his official superior to take the conduct of the case out of his hands. D. D. Shroff v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay (Central), 1943 I.T.R. 172.

"They (proceedings before Income-tax authorities) are judicial proceedings in the colloquial sense because the Income-tax authorities have to make up their minds judicially with fairness to the public and to the assessee, between whom they stand, after taking all the facts, or such facts as they can, into account; but they are not judicial proceedings in the strictly scientific sense of the term so as to raise questions in appeal to some higher tribunal as to whether the gentleman making the assessment has decided against the weight of evidence or has disregarded evidence which he ought to have taken into account he (the Income-tax Officer) must use his best judgment first to obtain and secondly to weigh the available evidence. It is to some extent a private inquisition, it is confidential, it is not supposed to be disclosed to the public and it is certainly not open to review, especially because frequently the Income-tax Officer is compelled to draw inferences and to consider evidence which might not be justified by the Evidence Act. As was once said in a case by a well-known Judge in England, there is no rule of law compelling a Judge to accept evidence, even though it is uncontroverted, which he believes to be a pack of lies.", Bhagwat Halwai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 48.

When the assessee gives a false and unbelievable explanation of an item in his books, the Income-tax Officer is under no obligation to prove by positive evidence that the item is taxable. The Income-tax Officer is entitled to act on circumstantial evidence, Lalmohan Krishnalal Pal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1944 I.T.R. 441.

"An Income-tax Officer is invested with plenary powers in the matter of assessment, and drastic though at first sight these powers may appear to be, they are designed to impress on the minds of the assessee that if they expect equity from the Income-tax authorities they must do equity themselves and come with clean hands before them. . . . the proceedings before the Income-tax Officer are not judicial proceedings in the sense in which that term is ordinarily used, and all that is required of him is to proceed without bias and give sufficient opportunity to the assessee to place his case before him or in other words to conduct himself in accordance with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience", Gangaram Balmukund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 464; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 397.

It is open to the Income-tax authorities to go behind the consideration of a settlement of a debt as stated in a registered deed; it is all a question of there being materials before the Income-tax authorities to justify their findings. Dalchand and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 458.

An Income-tax Officer can refuse to allow the production of evidence which is prima facie worthless. In a case in which the assessee alleged that his important books of account had been lost and the Income-tax Officer disbelieved this, the High Court held that the Income-tax Officer was justified in refusing to admit evidence offered by the assessee from his other books of account and regarding the profits of other assessees, Manoharlal Dev Karandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 3 I.T.C. 317; 10 Lah. 691; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 173.

Evidence led on behalf of an assessee and not cross-examined need not be accepted as conclusive. It may be dissected, and inferences drawn from it; Aldwarke Co. Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 18 Tax Cases 125.

The Income-tax Officer's personal knowledge would be perfectly good evidence Bhagwat Halwai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 48.

Even if the Income-tax Officer's inferences are based on the assessee's own admissions, it may sometimes be necessary to give the assessee an opportunity to show that the inferences are wrong. In a case therefore in which the Income-tax Officer started on the footing that certain individuals were not members of a joint Hindu family but assessed them as a family on the strength of certain admissions made by them, the assessees successfully argued before the High Court that the Income-tax Officer gave them no opportunity to disprove his conclusion by evidence which they had at their disposal. The requisite evidence was tendered before the Assistant Commissioner on appeal who refused to admit it on the ground that it should have been tendered before the Income-tax Officer, Radheylal Balmukund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, United Provinces, 52 All. 991; 4 I.T.C. 454; Ibrahim Bhai, etc., v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 5 I.T.C. 302.

An assessee when given an opportunity under section 23 (2) failed to produce his books which would have thrown light on certain bad debts, the deductibility of which was in doubt. Held, that the Income-tax Officer was justified in disallowing the deduction claimed on account of the bad debts, Deokinandan and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Delhi, 126 I.C. 786; 4 I.T.C. 398.

In the words of the Privy Council in Lapointe v. L'Association, etc., Montreal, (1906) A.C. 535 a case of a police pension fund—the Income-tax Officer, though a Revenue Officer, should act like "a judge, not an inquisitor"—though he is not bound by the forms and procedure of law courts.

As to the general principles that should be followed by the Income-tax authorities in making a fair and equitable assessment attention is also invited to the following decisions, some of which, however, do not relate to revenue matters:

Per Lord Loreburn.—"Comparatively recent statutes have extended, if they have not originated, the practice of imposing upon departments or officers of State the duty of deciding or determining questions of various kinds. In the present instance, as in many others, what comes for determination is sometimes a matter to be settled by discretion, involving no law. It will, I suppose, usually be of an administrative kind; but sometimes it will involve matter of law as well as matter of fact, or even depend upon matter of law alone. In such cases the Board of Education will have to ascertain the law and also to ascertain the facts. I need not add that in doing either they must act in good faith and fairly listen to both sides, for that is the duty lying upon every one who decides anything. But I do not think they are bound to treat such a question as though it were a trial. They have no power to administer an oath, and need not examine witnesses. They can obtain information in any way they think best, always giving a fair opportunity to those who are parties in the controversy for correcting or contradicting any relevant statement prejudicial to their view," Board of Education v. Rice, (1911) A.C. 179.

Per Viscount Haldane, L.C.—"When the duty of deciding an appeal is imposed, those whose duty is to decide it must act judicially. They must deal with the question referred to them without bias, and they must give to each of the parties the opportunity of adequately presenting the case made. The decision must be come to in the spirit and with the sense of responsibility of a tribunal whose duty it is to mete out justice. But it does not follow that the procedure of every such tribunal must be the same. In the case of a Court of law, tradition in this country has prescribed certain principles to which in the main, the procedure must conform. But what the procedure is to be in detail must depend on the nature of the tribunal. In modern times it has become increasingly common for Parliament to give an appeal in matters which really pertain to administration rather than to exercise of the judicial functions of an ordinary court, to authorities whose functions are administrative and not in the ordinary sense judicial. Such a body as the Local Government Board has the duty of enforcing obligations on the individual which are imposed in the interests of the community. Its character is that of an organization with executive functions. In this it resembles other great departments of the State. When, therefore, Parliament entrusts it with judicial duties, parliament must be taken, in the absence of any declaration to the contrary, to have intended it to follow the procedure which is its own and is necessary, if it is to be capable of doing its work efficiently", Local Government Board v. Arlidge, (1915) A.C. 120.

Per Lord Shaw.—"The words 'natural justice' occur in arguments and sometimes in judicial pronouncements in such cases. My Lords, when a central administrative Board deals with an appeal from a local authority it must do its best to act justly, and to reach just ends by just means. If a statute prescribes the means it must employ them. If it is left without express guidance it must still act honestly and by honest means. In regard to these, certain ways and methods of judicial procedure may very likely be imitated; and lawyer-like methods may find especial favour from lawyers. But that the judiciary should presume to impose its own methods on administrative or executive officers is a usurpation. And the assumption that the methods of natural justice are ex necessitate those of Courts of Justice is wholly unfounded. This is expressly applicable to steps of procedure or forms of pleading. In so far as the term 'natural justice' means that a result or process should be just, it is a harmless, though it may be a high-sounding expression; in so far as it attempts to reflect the old jus naturale it is a confused and unwarranted transfer into the ethical sphere of a term employed for other distinctions; and, in so far as it is resorted to for other purposes, it is vacuous", Ibid. See also Russel v. Russel, (1880) 14 Ch.D. 471 and Wood v. Wood, 1874 L.R. 9 Ex. 190.

"The Commissioners have a very large liberty as regards the materials on which they may act in coming to a figure. They might take the lease with or without considering the premium paid by the original lessee. They might take into consideration, if they thought it affected the matter, the premiums paid by the successive assignees. They might act upon evidence as to the de facto annual value of the premises. They might act upon their own knowledge of what the annual value ought to be. I could not quarrel with any decision they might come to, not being a decision in point of law, on such matters as that. . . . The authorities are given wide powers in matters of that kind. . . . It is essential in the highest interest of the revenue, which interest is that the public should have confidence in the authorities, that these powers should be exercised fairly carefully and indeed, almost judicially. It is disquieting to find that an assessment is put forward which the Inspector, on being confronted with on appeal, at once says he is willing to reduce practically by half, and it is very regrettable that that half—whether it could be justified upon some totally different kind of reasoning I do not propose to inquire—upon the principle which was adopted, and which was accepted, should be supported by a use of figures which I can only describe as obviously fallacious. . . ."—Per Rowlatt, J., in Davis v. Abbott, 11 Tax Cases 575.

Indian Evidence Act—Applicability of.—Under section 3 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), a 'Court' includes all persons except arbitrators legally authorised to take evidence. In view of section 37 of the Income-tax Act, therefore, Income-tax Officers, Assistant Commissioners and Commissioners are all a 'Court'. See also the notes under section 52. But the Evidence Act applies only to "all judicial proceedings in or before any Court." The question therefore arises whether the proceedings before the above-mentioned officers under the Income-tax Act are 'judicial proceedings'. There is no general definition of the expression 'judicial proceedings'. According to the Criminal Procedure Code, section 4 (1) (m), 'judicial proceeding' includes any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath. Just as in section 37 of the Income-tax Act, proceedings before various Revenue Officers have been specially declared in various Acts to be 'judicial proceedings' for the purpose of sections 193 and 228 of the Indian Penal Code. Whether, from the fact that proceedings before the officers of the Income-tax Department have been specially declared to be 'judicial proceedings' only for the purpose of sections 193 and 228 of the Indian Penal Code, it is a reasonable inference or not, on the principle of expressio unius est exclusio alterius, to hold that for other purposes, such proceedings are not 'judicial proceedings', there seems to be little doubt that the detailed provisions of the Evidence Act will not apply to such proceedings automatically and without qualification. Obviously, the same person cannot be party, judge and witness. Nor can the applicability of the Evidence Act conceivably arise when the Income-tax Officer has perforce to assess under section 23 (4) to the best of his judgment, the assessee not having complied with the requirements of the Income-tax Officer. Similarly, beyond the limited provisions referred to in section 37, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code also will not apply to proceedings before Income-tax authorities.

The general principles of how inferences may be drawn will however apply. The presumption to be drawn from the non-production of account books by an assessee who keeps them will be governed by section 114 of the Evidence Act. Ordinarily, the inference will be that the books if produced will go against assessee, Sankaralinga Nadar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 4 I.T.C. 226; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 209. Evidence as used in this section (23 of the Income-tax Act) includes circumstantial evidence and is not confined to direct evidence. Where, therefore, the accounts of the assessee are found to be false or unreliable and he is unable to account satisfactorily for certain items of income not to be found in the accounts, the Income-tax Officer will be justified in making an estimate on general considerations even when making an assessment under section 23 (3), Paras Dass Munnalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 523.

Adequacy of notice under sections 22 (4) and 23 (2).—See Lachmandas Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 35, under section 27. The adequacy of notices will arise only under section 27 in determining whether the assessee was prevented by sufficient cause from complying with the notices.

Assessment wrongly made under section 23 (4).—Where the proper authority, the High Court, the Commissioner of Income-tax or the Assistant Commissioner as the case may be has declared that an assessment which has been made under section 23 (4) should have been made under section 23 (3) or 23 (1), the assessment, it is submitted, is not necessarily completely set aside, and it is not necessary in all cases for the Income-tax Officer to start ab initio with a notice under section 22 (2). All that is required may be to treat the assessment as one made under section 23 (1) or (3) and allow an appeal against the assessment and the further rights, if any, arising out of the appeal. Questions of this kind do not often arise since 1939, because orders under section 23 (4) are now appealable. See also notes under section 66.

Supply of assessment orders.—When an assessment order has been passed under section 23, an assessee who applies to the Income-tax Officer for a copy of the order will be supplied by the Income-tax Officer with a copy free of charge, subject to the following conditions: (a) not more than one copy of an assessment order will be supplied free, and (b) a copy of an assessment order applied for more than one year after the order was passed will not be supplied free of charge unless the applicant satisfies the Income-tax Officer that it is required for his use in some proceedings which are pending under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, with reference to the particular assessment covered by the order and which are not time-barred.

Proposed representations to higher authority which are not covered by any provision of the Act will not be regarded as proceedings pending under the Act (Income-tax Manual).

United Kingdom Law.—The Commissioners are not bound to accept the return nor are they bound even to look into all the evidence offered by the assessee if they think that the evidence will not help them. See R. v. Offlow Commissioners, (1911) 27 T.L.R. 353. In this respect the law in the United Kingdom is more unfavourable to the assessee than in India as under section 23 (2) and (3) the Income-tax Officer is bound to hear and consider—whether he accepts it or not—the evidence produced by the assessee. If the assessee does not produce accounts, the Commissioners can, as they indeed must, tax according to an estimate, see In re Fletcher, 3 Tax Cases 289. In Grahamston Iron Company v. Crawford, (1915) S.C. 536; 7 Tax Cases 25, the Commissioners asked the Company, who were members of an association of producers formed to keep up prices and who claimed as a deduction the subscriptions to the association, to produce a copy of the accounts of the association so that the Commissioners could see how the money was actually spent by the association. The Company could not produce the accounts and the Commissioners rejected the claim of the Company. It was held by the Scottish Court of Session that the Commissioners were entitled to demand production of the accounts in question. A similar decision was arrived at in Adam Steamship Company v. Matheson, 1 A.T.C. 149; 12 Tax Cases 399; (1921) Sess. Cas. 141. In a case of succession, the plea that the successor could not produce the books of the predecessor in order to rebut the estimates made by the assessing authority was not accepted, Thomson and Balfour v. Le Page, 8 Tax Cases 541; (1924) Sess. Cas. 27. The successor must take the consequences if he fails to take over the predecessor's books or to arrange access to them. The point of these decisions is that the onus of proving that an item is deductible rests on the assessee—cf. Nopechand Magniram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 146 and other rulings under "Burden of proof" in the preceding notes on this section.

In Tudor and Onions v. Ducker, 8 Tax Cases 591, the accounts of the assessee were prepared by an Accountant who had afterwards been prosecuted by the Board of Inland Revenue for perjury and convicted. The accounts in question were therefore rejected by the Commissioners. The books of the assessee had been destroyed and the assessment was therefore made by estimate. The assessee contended that the accounts produced by the convicted Accountant should be accepted but were unable to produce any evidence to support the correctness of those accounts. Held, that in the absence of evidence the Commissioners were right in computing the assessments by estimate.

In Gundry v. Dunham, 7 Tax Cases 12; 32 T.L.R. 142, the authorities of a Poor Law Union had all the 'on licence' houses re-valued by an expert in a year succeeding that in which the quinquennial review of assessments under Schedule A had been made. In a case in which the re-valuation had resulted in an increase, the Surveyor of Taxes made an additional assessment. The question was raised that the assessment should not have been based on the Poor Law valuation but on an independent investigation. It was held by Rowlatt, J., that "It is a reasonable and proper thing, because the Surveyor has not to act by legal evidence, for the Surveyor to assess on the basis of the Poor Law if he sees no reason to the contrary. Then when it comes before the Commissioners that assessment is not to be distrusted unless the Appellant shows that it is wrong. . . . If the Commissioners had refused to receive evidence to show that the Poor Law valuation was not correct then they would have been wrong."

In the Court of Appeal, Lord Justice Swinfen Eady said:

"In my opinion . . . the Commissioners were not in fact controlled by the Poor Rate Valuation; they had regard to it as they were entitled to; they were not bound. They were bound to receive any further evidence duly tendered and they appear to have received all the evidence that was in fact tendered."

The evidence produced by the assessee is not conclusive and it is open to the Commissioners to accept it or not. The Commissioners are also entitled to avail themselves of their personal knowledge, see Stocks v. Sulley, 4 Tax Cases 98; 36 Sc.L.R. 902.

Where an assessee sprang a surprise at the last moment by claiming that the business was not his own but that of his daughter and there was no evidence to that effect except an old bank pass book in the daughter's name relating to a back period, and the assessee withheld his own pass books, it was held that the business was that of the assessee himself, and the Court held the decision to be entirely one of fact, Berry v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 13 A.T.C. 673; 18 Tax Cases 193.

Mandamus—Non-production of books, etc.—An assessee appealed to the Special Commissioners against an assessment and sent in a schedule of accounts and offered to verify them on his oath, but declined to produce his books and vouchers. The Commissioners refused to put him on oath and confirmed the assessment with which they were satisfied. Held, by the Court of Appeal, that no mandamus could be granted because (1) the Commissioners were not bound to accept the schedule of accounts merely because the assessee offered to verify them on oath; (2) it was a matter for discretion whether they should be so verified; and therefore it was a decision of the Commissioners on a question of fact and not of law; (3) even if it was a point of law whether the Commissioners were bound to put the appellant on oath and the oath was conclusive, it was not a case in which a mandamus should be granted, R. v. Special Commissioners (In re Fletcher), 3 Tax Cases 289.

Unintelligible accounts.—The Commissioners are not bound to accept the accounts irrespective of their intelligibility. In a case in which the accounts were voluminous and kept in shorthand, Rowlatt, J., held that the Commissioners were justified in refusing to look at the accounts until the assessee had them prepared by a professional accountant, Hunt v. Joly, 14 Tax Cases 165. It was held by the Court of Appeal in Wall v. Cooper, 14 Tax Cases 552, that the Commissioners as the final judges of facts had to decide whether the accounts were intelligible or not and that therefore they could ask an assessee to get his accounts recast and certified by a professional accountant.

Estimated assessments.—" . . . who if they do not choose, as they have not chosen, to state an account so that the amount of profits may be strictly determined, cannot complain if a random assessment is made upon them by the Crown", per the Lord President in Macpherson & Co. v. Moore, 6 Tax Cases 107; (1912) Sess. Cas. 1315.

"If the Act of Parliament says the amount of profits is to be ascertained they must be whether that can be done in a satisfactory method or not," per Lord Mackenzie, ibid.

Firms.—The addition of sub-section (5) constitutes the most important change made in this section in 1939. It lays down that (a) subject to two provisos in the case of a registered firm, only the partners after including their shares of profits of the firm, and not the firm by itself, should be taxed, and (b) the Income-tax Officer may at his option tax an unregistered firm as though it was registered if thereby the Revenue would be greater in the aggregate.

Clause (a) merely crystallises previous departmental practice (which had the approval of the Calcutta High Court in Neemchand Daga's case, 58 Cal. 1204; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 696) of taxing only the partners of registered firms and not the firms as such. The first proviso has been put in, evidently out of abundant caution, not only to remove possible doubts as to whether a share of income would necessarily include share of loss, but also as a consequence of the changes made in section 24 withdrawing the privilege of set-off formerly allowed to partners of unregistered firms in accordance with the Madras ruling in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Rm. Ar. Ar. Rm. Arunachalam Chettiar, 1934 I.T.R. 401 and later approved by the Privy Council in Rm. Ar. Ar. Rm. Arunachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1936 I.T.R. 173.

Second proviso.—The firm will be taxed only in respect of non-resident partners as though the latter were assessed personally. If a resident partner defaults or, for any reason, tax cannot be recovered from him, the amount cannot be recovered from the firm. The word "personally" clearly means "individually" [cf. clause (b)] since only individuals can be members of a firm [see notes under section 2 (6-B)].

Foreign income of firms.—There are two steps in the assessment of partners in a registered firm, viz., (a) first, the ascertainment of the total income of the firm; and (b) next, the ascertainment of the total income of each partner—including other income, if any, of his.

Under section 4, the exclusion of Rs. 4,500 of the unremitted foreign income must first be applied to the firm, if the firm has foreign income, and it is not open to the partners to claim that each of them is entitled, in respect of the firm's foreign income, to an allowance of Rs. 4,500. Mohanlal Hiralal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1943 I.T.R. 259.

Presumably, each partner will be entitled to a further allowance of the difference between Rs. 4,500 and his share of the allowance in respect of the firm, if he has other foreign income (than through the firm) not brought into British India.

On the same reasoning as in Mohanlal Hiralal's Case, it was held that a partner, resident but not ordinarily resident of a resident registered firm can not claim that his share of the foreign profits of the firm should be excluded under the second proviso to section 4 (1). Seth Badridas Daga, etc. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1944 I.T.R. 468. It would seem similarly that a non-resident partner in a resident registered firm could not in respect of his share of profits in the firm claim to fall entirely under clause (c) of section 4 (1) and thus to be exempt from tax on his share of profits; but this question is one between the partners inter se, because under the second proviso to clause (a) of sub-section (5) of section 23, the tax due from a non-resident partner in a registered firm is recovered from the firm itself.

Unregistered firm.—The option given by clause (b) is one-sided and while the firm cannot claim to be treated as registered except by registering itself, the Income-tax Officer can at his option treat it as registered for this purpose. He is not concerned with the motives of the partners, and all that he is concerned with is which course would be more advantageous to the revenue. If his estimate or opinion is wrong revenue suffers, and he has no right, it is submitted, to correct his mistake under section 34 and go back on his option at a later stage.

It should be noticed that clause (b) applies only to unregistered firms i.e., falling under the Partnership Act and not to other associations.

Sub-section (6).—Inserted in 1941 fills a lacuna in the Act. The formal communication to the firm is necessary for appeal purposes. Section 30 was also simultaneously amended.

23-A. (1) Where the Income-tax Officer is satisfied

Power to assess individual members of certain firms, associations and companies.

that in respect of any previous year the profits and gains distributed as dividends by any company up to the end of the sixth month after its accounts for that previous year are laid before the company in general meeting are less than sixty per cent. of the assessable income of the company of that previous year, as reduced by the amount of income-tax and super-tax payable by the company in respect thereof he shall, unless he is satisfied that having regard to losses incurred by the company in earlier years or to the smallness of the profit made, the payment of a dividend or a larger dividend than that declared would be unreasonable, make with the previous approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner an order in writing that the undistributed portion of the assessable income of the company of that previous year as computed for income-tax purposes and reduced by the amount of income-tax and super-tax payable by the company in respect thereof shall be deemed to have been distributed as dividends amongst the shareholders as at the date of the general meeting aforesaid, and thereupon the proportionate share thereof of each shareholder shall be included in the total income of such shareholder for the purpose of assessing his total income :

Provided that when the reserves representing accumulations of past profits which have not been the subject of an order under this sub-section exceed the paid up capital of the company, together with any loan capital which is the property of the shareholders, or the actual cost of the fixed assets of the company whichever of these is greater, this section shall apply as if instead of the words 'sixty per cent.' the words 'one hundred per cent.' were substituted :

Provided further that no order under this sub-section shall be made where the company has distributed not less than fifty-five per cent. of the assessable income of the company, as reduced by the amount of income-tax and super-tax payable by the company in respect thereof unless the company, on receipt of a notice from the Income-tax Officer that he proposes to make such an order fails to make within three months of the receipt of such notice a further distribution of its profits and gains so that the total distribution made is not less than sixty per cent. of the assessable income of the company of the previous year concerned as reduced by the amount of income-tax and super-tax payable by the company in respect thereof :

Provided further that this sub-section shall not apply to any company in which the public are substantially interested or to a subsidiary company of such a company if the whole of the share capital of such subsidiary company is held by the parent company or by the nominees thereof.

Explanation.—For the purpose of this sub-section—a company shall be deemed to be a company in which the public are substantially interested if shares of the company (not being shares entitled to a fixed rate of dividend, whether with or without a further right to participate in profits) carrying not less than twenty-five per cent. of the voting power have been allotted unconditionally to, or acquired unconditionally by, and are at the end of the previous year beneficially held by, the public (not including a company to which the provisions of this sub-section apply), and if any such shares have in the course of such previous year been the subject of dealings in any stock exchange in British India or are in fact freely transferable by the holders to other members of the public :

(2) The Inspecting Assistant Commissioner shall not give his approval to any order proposed to be passed by the Income-tax Officer under this section until he has given the company concerned an opportunity of being heard.

(3) (i) * * * *

(ii) Where the proportionate share of any member of a company in the undistributed profits and gains of the company has been included in his total income under the provisions of sub-section (1), the tax payable in respect thereof shall be recoverable from the company if it cannot be recovered from such member.

(iii) Where tax is recoverable from a company, under this sub-section a notice of demand shall be served upon it in the prescribed form showing the sum so payable, and such company shall be deemed to be the assessee in respect of such sum, for the purposes of Chapter VI.

(4) Where tax has been paid in respect of any undistributed profits and gain of a company under this section, and such profits and gains are subsequently distributed in any year, the proportionate share therein of any member of the company shall be excluded in computing his total income of that year.

(5) Where a company is a shareholder deemed under sub-section (1) to have received a dividend, the amount of the dividend thus deemed to have been paid to it shall be deemed to be part of its total income for the purpose also of the application of that sub-section to distributions of profits by that company.

History.—The section which was first inserted by Act XXI of 1930 was radically altered in 1939.

Old sub-section (1) was deleted in 1939 as being unnecessary since the option given to the Income-tax Officer under section 23 (5) (b) to treat an unregistered firm as registered gives the requisite power to the Revenue.

The other changes made in 1939 are brought out in the following extracts from the notes on clauses (in the statement of objects and reasons) and the Report of the Select Committee respectively:

"Clause 24.—Section 23-A of the Income-tax Act, 1922, has proved practically a dead letter, mainly because it imposes upon an Income-tax Officer the duty of determining whether the profits and gains of a Company are allowed to accumulate beyond its reasonable needs, existing and contingent, having regard to the maintenance and development of its business. The present clause substitutes a simple arithmetical criterion for the determination of the applicability of the section to the circumstances of a Company in any year. Subsidiary Companies, and Companies in which the public are substantially interested are still excluded from the operation of the section, but the opportunity has been taken to amend the definition of "Subsidiary Company" so as to remove any doubt as to the meaning of the expression "a Company not being a company to which the provisions of this sub-section apply". The clause also alters the procedure under the section. Instead of passing an order to the effect that the sum payable as income-tax by the Company shall not be determined and that the proportionate share of each member in the profits and gains of the Company shall be included in his total income, the Income-tax Officer has under the present clause merely to deem the profits of the Company to have been distributed as dividends on a given date. The assessment of a Company to both income-tax and super-tax will therefore be made whether or not an order is passed under the section in its proposed new form."

"Clause 25 (old 24).—In the proposed new sub-section (1) of section 23-A of the Act the first change indicated by asterisks and by the insertion of the words "by any company" has the effect of extending the scope of the section to all companies and not merely to companies which are under the control of not more than five persons. We have restored the words "with the previous approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner" which though already in the Act were omitted in the re-draft of the sub-section proposed in the Bill. The change made in the proviso covers cases where the accumulated undistributed profits exceed the value of the fixed assets or the paid up capital taken with loan capital belonging to shareholders, whichever is greater. We have added an additional proviso in order to make allowance for possible cases of error in which, though the full sixty per cent. of the assessable income of the company has not been actually distributed, an amount exceeding fifty-five per cent. has been distributed. In such cases we consider that the company should be given a reasonable opportunity of escaping the operation of the section by revising its distribution within three months. The removal of the reference to subsidiary companies supplements the first change made in the section and secures the application of the section to all companies except companies in which the public are substantially interested in the sense defined in the Explanation. The deletion of clauses (a), (c) and (d) in the Explanation is consequential on the changes made in the main part of the sub-section."

Minor changes were made in 1940 to make it clear that the percentages (60) of profits to be distributed is on the net profits after payment of income-tax and super-tax and not on the profits before payment of these taxes. Before 1939, when the applicability of the section depended on the reasonableness of distribution of profits, there was a right of appeal to the assessee to go before the Board of Referees. With the simple arithmetical basis now adopted, this appeal has been abolished.

Second proviso.—See extract from Report of Select Committee, supra.

Third proviso.—"Or" at the end of the proviso really means "and/or" since even a private company must have at least two shareholders.

Explanation.—Old clauses (a), (c) and (d) have been deleted since the section does not now take into account the nature of the control.

"Any company", i.e., whatever the nature of the control and whether private or public, but see the third proviso which saves companies (and subsidiaries thereof) in which the public are substantially interested.

Assessable income.—There is no definition of this expression which probably refers to 'total income' or 'total world income' as the case may be i.e., income, profits and gains as computed for income-tax purposes and not the actual profits of the company as shown in the Profit and Loss or other accounts. In a later part of the same section the qualifying words "as computed for income-tax purposes" are used after 'assessable income'; see also sub-section (5) where the 'total income' is referred to.

Having regard to losses.—Even with the amendment in the law in 1939, the Income-tax Officer has to use his discretion, though, to a smaller extent than under the old section, because he has even now to take into account losses made in the past and the smallness of the profit under consideration. The proper exercise of the discretion as to what would be "unreasonable" would clearly be a question of fact. [Carnarvon Estates v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 19 Tax Cases 643 C.A.] While there is no doubt that the Income-tax Officer must have regard to past losses and the smallness of current profits, it is not clear whether he can be compelled to have regard to other relevant considerations e.g., non-availability of resources for distribution Cf. Fattorini Ltd. v. Inland Revenue (H.L.), 1943 I.T.R. Sup. 50 in which on account of a previous loan from a bank (which was bona fide and not for avoiding tax), practically all the income had to be made over to the Bank in payment of the loan and the House of Lords held that the onus lay on the Crown to show that it would have been reasonable for the company to have contracted another loan in order to distribute dividends, which onus had not been discharged. Similarly, as a result of capital losses, the company may have no funds to distribute as profits. Section 23-A, seems to contain lacunae in these directions.

Undistributed portion.—While if not less than 60 per cent. of the assessable income (less tax) has been distributed, the section does not come into operation, the whole of the undistributed income will be deemed to have been distributed in cases in which less than 60 per cent. have been distributed and the Income-tax Officer decides to apply the section. The scheme of the law is to divide companies into two classes, those who distribute reasonably (i.e., in India the specified percentage) and those who do not. The former are let alone while the latter are treated like partnerships. cf. Colville Estates, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, 15 Tax Cases 485.

The allocation will be made between the shareholders as on the date of the relative general meeting. The status of the share-holder is whether an individual, firm, company, Hindu undivided family or any other association is immaterial. The Income-tax Officer so far as this section is concerned, will go merely by the Register of Share-holders of the company as on the date of general meeting and will not be concerned with beneficial interests, with which he will deal if necessary under sections 40 and 41. cf. Marquis of Tickfield v. Inland Revenue, 1941 K.B.D.

A distribution of dividend on condition that an equivalent loan is made by the share-holder to the company is not a distribution of profits. Inland Revenue v. Marboob Co., Ltd., 18 A.T.C. 257 (K.B.).

Limitation.—While an Income-tax Officer cannot set this section in motion before a certain date as laid down in the section, there is no time limit to the date after which he is prohibited from taking action, except what is laid down in section 34.

If there is delay in calling a general meeting and placing the accounts before it, action can be taken, if at all only under the Companies Act. The Income-tax Officer cannot act under section 23-A of the Income-tax Act until the specified period has elapsed after the general meeting.

First proviso.—The limit of 60 per cent. laid down in the main part of the sub-section is to be raised to 100 per cent. in the two cases referred to in this proviso.

The words "representing accumulations of past profits" exclude capital sources including appreciation thereof. The past profits for this purpose are evidently to be taken as computed for income-tax purposes from year to year.

The words "loan capital which is the property of the shareholder" are intended, according to the proceedings in the legislature, to refer to debentures and loans held by shareholders.

The "actual cost of the fixed assets" is evidently the original cost and not the depreciated or written down cost.

"Fixed assets" is not defined but it will, according to commercial usage, include buildings, plant, machinery, etc., but not stocks of raw materials of finished goods, stores, etc., or securities.

The comparison is to be made between (a) the sum of the paid up capital and the loan capital raised from the shareholders and (b) the original cost of the fixed assets. The greater of the two is to be taken and if the reserves out of accumulated profits exceed this greater figure, the company should distribute its entire profits thereafter. If the reserves exceed the original cost of the fixed assets it follows that the paid up capital and other resources are available for floating assets, and the company is, therefore, in affluent circumstances. If, on the other hand, the reserves exceed the paid up capital plus shareholders' debentures, it means in substance that the reserves exceed the shareholders' true capital and such reserves ought to be ample.

Companies in which the public are substantially interested.—

Under explanation to sub-section (1), a company shall be deemed to be a company in which the public are substantially interested (1) if shares of the company (not being shares entitled to a fixed rate of dividend whether with or without a further right to participate in profits) carrying not less than 25 per cent. of voting power have been allotted unconditionally to, or acquired unconditionally by, and are at the end of the previous year beneficially held by, the public (not including a company to which the provisions of this sub-section apply) and (2) if any such shares have in the course of the previous year been the subject of dealing in any stock exchange in British India or are in fact freely transferable by the holders to other members of the public. Two sets of conditions have to be satisfied while there are alternatives in each set.

It will be noted that preference shares are excluded in determining the 25 per cent. voting power held by the public, i.e., they should have 25 per cent. voting power in the shares other than preference shares.

The date with reference to which the criteria have to be applied is the last day of the accounting year the profits of which are under assessment, though section 23-A, itself cannot be set in motion until several months after the general meeting and the profits of the company, if the section is applied, are allocated to shareholders as on the date of that meeting.

Under the United Kingdom law, which, in this respect, closely corresponds to the law as it stood in India before 1939, and in which the statute creates a presumption of control if a 'relative' holds shares and for this purpose a 'relative' is defined as meaning 'a husband or wife, ancestor or lineal descendant, brother or sister', the question, arose whether a 'niece' was a member of the 'public' and it was held (by the Court of Appeal) that she was. There was no reason why the ordinary meaning of the word 'public' should be cut down; and it was irrelevant that in the particular case the niece had received the shares as a gift from her uncle. Tatum Steam Navigation Co. v. Inland Revenue, 1942 I.T.R. (Sup.) 85.

In India under section 23-A, as it now stands, without any reference either to 'control' or to 'relatives', the word 'public' might conceivably include even husband or wife, ancestor, lineal descendant, brother or sister except to the extent some of them may be caught by section 16 (3) in certain circumstances. On the other hand, it could be said that a word like 'public', in the context of section 23-A, refers only to persons not under the control of the dominant shareholders in the company. The word needs clarification.

Previous approval of Assistant Commissioner.—Sub-section (2).—The Inspecting Assistant Commissioner is associated with action under this section from the very beginning of such action. An appeal lies to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner; see section 30.

Even under the section as it was before April, 1939, the previous approval of the Assistant Commissioner was required to bring a case under section 23-A, and as the same Assistant Commissioner exercised both appellate and inspecting functions the appeal against the Income-tax Officer's order lay to a Board of Referees through the Commissioner.

Recovery of Tax—From whom—Sub-section (3).—This clause has been altered in 1939 shifting the primary liability for tax from the company to the member, i.e., whereas formerly the tax was recoverable from the member if it could not be recovered from the company, it is now recoverable from the company only if it cannot be recovered from the member.

Expenses in contesting the application of section 23-A.—Following the practice in the United Kingdom in similar cases the Central Board of Revenue has directed that the expenses of an appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or to the Tribunal against the application of this section will be allowed if the company succeeds in the appeal.

Enforcement of demand.—Clause (iii) of sub-section (3) extends the machinery of Chapter VI to the assessments made under this section.

Relief from taxation twice.—Sub-section (4) provides that if undistributed profits and gains have been once taxed under this section, they shall be ignored when they are actually distributed subsequently.

Sub-section (5).—This was added in 1939 as a consequence of the new principle that the distribution of less than 60 per cent. of the income is the main condition precedent to the application of this section.

United Kingdom Law.—The corresponding law in the United Kingdom which is contained in various Finance Acts from 1922 onwards and has been amended many times since is in outline the same as in old section 23-A as it was before April, 1939, but with many important points of difference in detail. These details are of little interest in applying present section 23-A, which has adopted a simple, arithmetical basis of a fixed percentage of profits being distributed.

With the radical change in the section made in 1939, rulings in the United Kingdom are of little guidance, except to a limited extent in connection with cases which still remain to be dealt with under old section 23-A.

Rulings in the United Kingdom.—A husband and wife owned 9,995 out of 10,000 shares in a private company. The company, though not formed as an insurance company, did nothing but issue what were called endowment policies to the husband and wife in return for lump sum premia in National War Bonds equal in face value to the amounts assured under the policies. There was no provision either in the policies or in the company's articles giving a claim to the policyholders to a share in the profits of the company, though the policies stated that the company would pay the amounts assured plus "any bonus which at the time of payment will be attached to the policy". The directors periodically appropriated to the credit of each policy an amount roughly equal to the interest on the bonds delivered as premium; and the amount so appropriated was reinvested in War Bonds. No notice of appropriation was communicated to the policy-holders. It was contended by the company that the appropriations were binding on it and that the sums so appropriated were not available for the payment of dividends. Held, that the sums were available for distribution as dividends for the purpose of section 21 of the Finance Act of 1922, Endowment Company, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 14 Tax Cases 353.

Whether object of evasion of tax to be proved.—The following dicta may be noted:

" It is true that the mischief for which the section provides a remedy is the avoidance of a liability to super-tax. . . . by the accumulation of the profits in the hands of the companies. . . .

. . . . But the application of the remedy does not, I think, depend on the proof of motive on the part either of the company or its shareholders unless indeed in this sense, the object to avoid payment of super-tax is an inferential presumption from the fact that the restriction of dividends cannot be accounted for either by the current or prospective requirements of the company or by the maintenance or development of its business. That fact must be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioners but if it is established they have neither right nor duty to carry their investigations into matters of intention or motive any further."—Per L. P. Clyde.

" the direction is plain and is not subject to the qualification that the Commissioners must be satisfied that the motive was the avoidance of super-tax. . . . Human motives are obscure and difficult of ascertainment, sometimes conjectural and their ascertainment cannot appropriately be allowed to enter into the matter of collection of public revenue. It is quite open to the shareholders. to satisfy the Special Commissioners that they have a reasonable cause for withholding from distribution a considerable part of the profits. If they fail to do so then in the view of the Legislature there is a presumption of law that avoidance of super-tax is the object of the retention of undistributed profits and it is unnecessary in a particular case that the Commissioners should so find."—Per Lord Sands.

" If the language of the enacting part of section 21 is clear, as I think it is, then in the absence of any ambiguity in the enacting words, it follows that the preamble of section 21 cannot either restrict or extend the enacting provisions in the section."—Per Lord Ashburn in David Carlaw and Sons, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 11 Tax Cases 96; (1926) Sess. Cas. 870.

Though under old section 23-A (before 1939), it was one of the conditions precedent to the application of the section that the company or firm should have been formed or was being used for the purpose of evading tax, it was held in Harvey v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1935

I.T.R. 311, that an express finding to the effect that the failure to distribute profits was for the purpose of evading tax was not necessary.

Current requirements.—The fact that a Company chooses to enter into an agreement to sell all its assets retrospectively to another does not preclude the former from distributing as dividends the profits made by it from its business after the specified back date; and section 21 of the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1922 can be applied to such a case, John White's Trust, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 A.T.C. 183 (K.B.). With reference to a provision which extends the above section to companies going into liquidation in respect of periods for which accounts have not been closed and profits taxed, it has been held that if the liquidation and sale are so arranged that the profits of an intervening period are withheld from distribution, such profits are not retained for the current requirements of the business, Austins of East Ham, Ltd., (in liquidation) v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 A.T.C. 344 (K.B.).

Liquidation of companies.—A company which goes voluntarily into liquidation while the "reasonable time" contemplated by the law within which profits should have been distributed is still running comes within the mischief of the section. By its action, it terminates the "reasonable time" within which it should have distributed a reasonable part of its profits, and in view of the intended liquidation it is reasonable to infer that it should have distributed the whole of the available income, Lionel Sutcliffe, Ltd v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 14 Tax Cases 171.

Control.—The question of 'control', which arose before the amendment of the section in 1939, does not arise now. Excess Profits Duty rulings like Noble Co. v. Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 573; and the ruling under the Income-tax Act in Himley Estates Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, 17 Tax Cases 367 (C.A.) may be seen in this connection with reference to old section 23-A.

A company sold its business, leaving certain items to another by an agreement in November, 1928. The old company retained possession till completion of sale but from August 1928 it was to be deemed to carry on the new company's business. The old company went into voluntary liquidation in December, 1928. The company argued that its income for the period ending August, 1928, was not available for distribution, and that because of the sale, there was no income for the period August to December. The Board of Referees rejected the arguments and the Court of Appeal upheld the Board, Collier and Sons, Ltd. (in liquidation) v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1933) 1 K.B. 488; 18 Tax Cases 83.

Tenants for life under a trust are 'members' of a company for the purposes of this section; upon the liquidation of company, the undistributed profits become its income available for distribution, Alexander Drew and Sons, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 17 Tax Cases 140.

In India, cases of this kind would be caught by the special definition in section 2 (6-A) which includes, in 'dividend' distribution in liquidation of past accumulated profits. There is no such definition in the United Kingdom law.

Tax—By whom to be borne.—Where super-tax levied under these provisions is paid by a company on its winding-up the amount should not go to diminish the amount available for distribution but be allocated against the amounts receivable by the different shareholders in the proportions in which tax was assessed, In re Alexander Drew, Ltd., 13 A.T.C. 670 (Ch. D.); 17 Tax Cases 140.

Where a liquidator of a company falling under this section distributes assets, the recipient will be a contributor within the meaning of the Companies Act, and liable to pay the Crown the tax due under this section, Re Aidall, Ltd. (C. of A.), (1933) Ch. D. 323; 148 L.T. 233.

Whether distribution reasonable—Where a company held over a certain sum in reserve against, inter alia, the possibility of an additional claim for income-tax contingent on the final decision of a general question then before the appellate Courts, it was held that the Board of Referees had evidence for finding that the company had not distributed its profits within a reasonable time, London and Northern Estates Company v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cases 128.

Two persons who between them owned all the shares of a company formed a new company to hold the shares of the old company. Money for the purchase of the shares was advanced by a bank to whom the shares of the old company which were to be acquired by the new company were mortgaged. The bank received the dividends declared so as to keep down the interest and in fact to wipe out the capital. Held, that the income of the company in so far as it was already mortgaged to the bank was not available for distribution, and that it was available for distribution in so far as it was laid out on new ventures. "In determining what is a reasonable part, attention is not to be directed to a merely arithmetical question of proportion. A 'reasonable part' is a reasonable part for distribution; and, therefore, one has to look at whether the act of refraining from distribution is reasonable. It cannot be argued that the distribution is not to be governed by reason, but that the part thereof has to be dissected as a matter of figures upon the principles of reason. . . . It is quite true that for the purposes of super-tax a person cannot denude himself of income by merely putting it under the control of a mortgagee who uses it to pay the mortgagor's own debt. . . . But the point here is whether the borrower has distributed a reasonable part of the income, and the question is whether it is reasonable to distribute it when it is not available" . . . , Glazed Kid, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 9 A.T.C. 207; 15 Tax Cases 445.

An 'income receipt' may be utilised for capital outlay; but that does not affect the fact that in the year there are profits available for distribution. But while there are book profits, the assets may be locked up and there may be no cash for distribution. Whether in such a case it was reasonable to expect the company to distribute dividends by borrowing cash arose in Fattorini, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, (H.L.) 1943 I.T.R. (Sup.) 85 and it was held that the onus lay on the Crown to prove that it was reasonable to do so. In that case the profits of the company had to be paid to the bank in payment of an antecedent debt, contracted bona fide and not with a view to avoidance of tax.

In a case in which there was no contract that the profits of the company should be paid in liquidating the principal of the mortgages but there was an article of the company that except under special resolution to the contrary the net profits shall be applied in the discharge of the mortgages, it was held that the profits of the company were available for distribution. The question to consider in such cases is whether the company looking at it as a whole has distributed a reasonable part of its income and in doing so one has to examine the reasons for not distributing. In the Glazed Kid case there was a contract with an outsider under which the company was bound to pay all the profits to an outsider and if the company did not, it would have been restrained by injunction at once. In this case on the other hand the shareholders merely did not want the profits to be distributed and gave effect to this intention through the articles.

The Board of Referees are entitled to look not only into the history of the company, its stability, its real position and so forth but also the truth and substance (apart from the form) of its various transactions. The finding of the Board however is a question of fact, the justification of the Court being limited to seeing that there was evidence, Montague Burton, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 20 Tax Cases 48 (H.L.); 154 L.T. 355. And in particular, the fact that at least as much as the profits of the year have been spent on the maintenance and development of the business will not in itself exclude it from the operation of this section.

A dividend paid on condition that an equivalent amount is lent to the company is not a distribution of profits, Inland Revenue v. Marbob, Ltd., 18 A.T.C. 257 (K.B.D.).

24. (1) Where any assessee sustains a loss of profits or gains in any year under any of the heads mentioned in section 6, he shall be entitled to have the amount of the loss set off against his income, profits or gains under any other head in that year :

Set-off loss in computing aggregate income.

Provided that where the loss sustained is a loss of profits or gains which would but for the loss have accrued or arisen within an Indian state and would, under provisions of clause (c) of sub-section (2) of section 14, have been exempted from tax, such loss shall not be set off except against profits or gains accruing or arising within an Indian state and exempt from tax under the said provisions:

Provided further that where the assessee is an unregistered firm which has not been assessed under the provisions of clause (b) of sub-section (5) of section 23 in the manner applicable to a registered firm, any such loss shall be set off only against the income, profits and gains of the firm and not against the income, profits and gains of any of the partners of the firm; and where the assessee is a registered firm, any loss which cannot be set off against other income, profits and gains of the firm shall be apportioned between the partners of the firm and they alone shall be entitled to have the amount of the loss set off under this section.

(2) Where any assessee sustains a loss of profits or gains in any year, being a previous year not earlier than the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1940, under the head 'Profits and gains of business, profession or vocation', and the loss cannot be wholly set off under sub-section (1), the portion not so set off shall be carried forward to the following year and set off against the profits and gains, if any, of the assessee from the same business, profession or vocation for that year; and if it cannot be wholly so set off, the amount of loss not so set off shall be carried forward to the following year, and so on; but no loss shall be so carried forward for more than six years, and a loss arising in the previous year for the assessment for the years ending on the 31st day of March, 1940, the 31st day of March, 1941, the 31st day of March, 1942, the 31st day of March, 1943, and the 31st day of March, 1944, respectively, shall be carried forward only for one, two, three, four and five years respectively:

(a) Where the loss sustained is a loss of profits and gains of a business, profession or vocation to which the first proviso to sub-section (1) is applicable, and the profits and gains of that business, profession or vocation are under the provisions of clause (c) of sub-section (2) of section 14, exempt from tax, such loss shall not be set off except against profits and gains accruing or arising in an Indian state from the same business, profession or vocation and exempt from tax under the said provisions;

(b) where depreciation allowance is, under clause (b) of the proviso to clause (vi) of sub-section (2) of section 10, also to be carried forward, effect shall first be given to the provisions of this sub-section;

(c) nothing herein contained shall entitle any assessee, being a registered firm, to have carried forward and set off any loss which has been apportioned between the partners, under the proviso to sub-section (1), or entitle any assessee, being a partner in an unregistered firm which has not been assessed under the provisions of clause (b) of sub-section (5) of section 23 in the manner applicable to a registered firm, to have carried forward and set off against his own income any loss sustained by the firm;

(d) where an unregistered firm is assessed as a registered firm under clause (b) of sub-section (5) of section 23, during any year, its losses shall also be carried forward and set off under this section as if it were a registered firm;

(e) where a change has occurred in the constitution of a firm, nothing in this section shall be deemed to entitle the firm to have set off so much of the loss proportionate to the share of a retired or deceased partner computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 16 as exceeds his share of profits, if any, of the previous year in the firm, or to entitle any partner to the benefit of any portion of the said loss which is not apportionable to him under the said clause (b), and where any person carrying on any business, profession or vocation has been succeeded in such capacity by another person, otherwise than by inheritance, nothing in this section shall be deemed to entitle any person other than the person incurring the loss to have it set off against his income, profits or gains.

(3) When, in the course of the assessment of the total income of any assessee, it is established that a loss of profits or gains has taken place which he is entitled to have set off under the provisions of this section, the Income-tax Officer shall notify to the assessee by order in writing the amount of the loss as computed by him for the purposes of this section.

History.—Under the Act of 1918 the aggregate amount chargeable under each of the separate heads mentioned in sections 7 to 12 of the Act determined the total and taxable income of an assessee, so that when a person carried on a trade or profession and also had income from house-property, if he had actually incurred a loss from the trade or profession, the figure adopted under that head in arriving at the aggregate amount of the income chargeable to tax was nil and not a minus sum. Since 1922 a loss under one head of income could be charged against profits under another in the same year.

Sub-section (2) was amended in 1933 so as to extend the concession to minors admitted to the benefits of partnership. Before the amendment of sections 24 and 48 in 1933, the departmental practice was to treat such minors as partners of a firm except for the purposes of these two sections.

Several important changes were made in 1939 as explained in detail below; and further amendments made in 1941 and 1944 respectively, the former filling gaps in the section relating to the priority of set off of carry-forward under section 24 before set off of unabsorbed depreciation under section 10 and to the rights of firms to carry forward when there is a change in their constitution; and the latter being consequential on the exemption from tax of unremitted Indian state income.

Set-off.—The proviso to sub-section (1) newly put in in 1939, [which partly incorporates old sub-section (2)] involves in the other part a radical change in the law. Formerly, on the basis of Rm. Ar. Ar. Rm. Arunachalam Chettiar's case, 1 I.T.C. 278, (approved by the Privy Council in 1936 I.T.R. 173), a partner in an unregistered firm was allowed to set-off his share of loss in the firm against his other income; this concession is no longer claimable. It is only the unregistered firm as such that can set-off its own losses against its own income.

The concession is applicable, however, to partners of unregistered firms taxed as registered firms under section 23 (5).

In the case of a registered firm, the net loss of the firm will be first worked out, i.e., by first setting off its own losses against its income, and the share of this net loss apportioned among the partners, each of whom can set-off such share of loss against his other income.

See also section 16 (1) (b).

The words 'they alone' in the proviso, which seem to be superfluous, are evidently intended to emphasise that no other person than the partners, e.g., successors, can claim the concession. See Gokaldas Lakhmichand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 519; and Bhogilal Hargovindas Patel v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 555.

Carry forward of losses.—Sub-section (2) was inserted for the first time in 1939. It permits losses to be carried toward and set off but only against the profits of the same business, profession or vocation. The period of carry forward will be eventually six years; in the meantime the period will be gradually extended as follows:—

Profits of previous year assessed in		Stopping with assessment for the year
	1939-40	1 year	1940-41.
Do.	1940-41	2 years	1942-43.
Do.	1941-42	3 years	1944-45.
Do.	1942-43	4 years	1946-47.
Do.	1943-44	5 years	1948-49.
Do.	1944-45	6 years	1950-51.

'Six years' mean evidently six years following, and exclusive of the previous year in which the loss arises. In the United Kingdom, where the corresponding words are 'Six following years of assessment' the question arose whether in these years should be included years in which there was no assessable income and it was held (by the Court of Appeal) that the words merely refer to the six years immediately following the year in which the loss was incurred, irrespective of whether there was any assessable income in them or not. Harling v. Celyn Collieries Workmen's Institute, 1940 (C. A.).

Net losses.—What is to be carried forward is the net loss after set-off under sub-section (1), cf. Inland Revenue v. Scott Adamson, 17 Tax Cases 679.

Same business, etc.—It will be noted that the words "the same source" are not used as in section 2 (11). Whether an assessee has a single business or many businesses is a question of fact, see section 2 (4) and notes thereunder.

Difficult problems will arise when an assessee's status changes over from resident to non-resident and vice versa, or ordinarily resident to not ordinarily resident and vice versa, and at the same time, his foreign business is an integral part of the British Indian business. Evidently, in a year in which foreign profits are taxable, even without being brought into British India, foreign losses can be set off against British Indian profits and carried forward under section 24. If, in a later year, but before the expiry of six years, the status of the assessee changes into that of non-resident or not ordinarily resident, the unabsorbed loss, whether in British Indian profits or in foreign profits, it is considered, will not lapse but remain in abeyance and can be set off or carried forward within the period of six years, if and when such set off is otherwise permissible. In other words, non-taxability in an intermediate year will not destroy the already existing right to carry forward but only postpone that right. Section 24 is silent on this point and other similar points that can arise. It is obvious that, for the purpose of the claim in British India under section 24, it is irrelevant how the losses have been set off or carried forward in the other country, i.e., of origin of profits.

Income in Indian States.—The first proviso to sub-section (1) and proviso (a) to sub-section (2), both inserted in 1944, are consequential on the amendment in 1941, of section 14, under which the income of a resident in British India accruing in an Indian State is ordinarily not taxable until it is brought into British India. These two provisos seek to prevent set off and carry forward of losses as between taxed and untaxed income and segregate the income into separate blocks for this purpose.

Unabsorbed depreciation—Proviso (a) of sub-section (2).—There is no limit of time within which unabsorbed depreciation carried forward under section 16 (2) (vi) must be absorbed, whereas losses can be carried forward under section 24 only for six years. Proviso (a) makes it clear that where both losses and unabsorbed depreciation are carried forward, the losses must first be set off and extinguished so that the balance of unabsorbed depreciation may be carried forward without limit of time. Moreover, if unabsorbed depreciation was first set off, the assessee might lose his right to carry forward losses, such losses not being set off before six years. The proviso avoids this result also.

Under section 19 of the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1932, if a loss cannot be set off within six years because the profits of those years are utilised in setting off unabsorbed depreciation the unabsorbed loss can be carried forward indefinitely without limit of time, to the extent that relief could not be given because of unabsorbed depreciation.

Partners of firms, proviso (c).—This proviso makes clear, out of abundant caution, (1) that losses of a registered firm already apportioned among the partners cannot be carried forward by the firm itself, and (2) partners of unregistered firms cannot carry forward shares of losses of the firm (they have no right even of set off in the course of the current assessment in respect of such losses).

There is, evidently, no difference in meaning between the verb 'sustained' used in this proviso and the verb 'incur' in the proviso (e).

If the excess loss of a registered firm is apportioned among partners under the second proviso to sub-section (1), they can have the benefit of set off in future years only if the same business, i.e., of the registered firm continues, and there are profits in it; otherwise the carry forward will lapse.

Unregistered firms assessed as registered—Proviso (d).—The unregistered firm in question will be treated as if it was a registered firm; that is, its net losses (after set off against its own income) shall be apportioned among the partners under sub-section (1), who shall have the right of carry forward. An unregistered firm assessed as such will on the other hand itself carry forward its losses, the partners not being given the right; see the second proviso to sub-section (1) and proviso (c) of sub-section (2).

Change in partnership—Proviso (e).—This proviso was amended in 1941, so as to make it clear that only the partners who actually incurred the loss should be allowed the carry forward and set-off. This proviso has to be read with section 26 (1). In effect this part of the proviso will apply mostly to unregistered firms taxed as such, for partners of registered firms get an apportionment of their losses every year and carry forward these losses themselves; but it will apply to partners of registered firms also to the extent that as a consequence of disallowing salaries, interest, commission, etc., paid to partners, (see sub-section (1) of section 16), a share of loss is apportioned to the partners. The essential point of the proviso is that a partner will have no right to carry forward for his own benefit a loss not actually incurred by him.

The law in the United Kingdom, see Batty v. Baron Schroder, 23 Tax. Cas. 1, is that if the partners in a firm the constitution of which is changed agree to a computation, as if there had been a discontinuance followed by a new setting up, a partner cannot carry forward his share of losses to be set-off against his profits under the new constitution.

Succession—Proviso (e).—This is part of the plan of taxing cases of succession to a business, etc., on the footing that the person who actually earns profits or incurs loss takes also the consequences, see section 26 and notes thereunder as to the various questions that arise in connection with succession.

Inheritance.—The words “otherwise than by inheritance” were added in order to permit a successor by inheritance to carry forward the losses of the predecessor. But, can a mere exception to a restrictive proviso confer such a positive right when, according to the main part of the sub-section an ‘assessee’ is permitted to carry forward and set off only against his own future profits and, clearly, a successor is not the same ‘assessee’ as the predecessor?

Determination of loss—Sub-section (3).—This is a new provision added in 1939. ‘Set off’ in the context clearly means ‘carried forward and set off in future years’.

“Notify.”—The Income-tax Officer should act in accordance with section 63. His order should be in writing.

As regards right of appeal against such orders, see section 30.

Assessment of total income means determination of total income. cf. section 23.

Identity of business.—Same business means the identical business; otherwise, the words would have been the “Same head of income” or “same source”; moreover the word ‘same’ would be otiose and meaningless if all the business of an assessee were to be taken together as one. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Ramkrishna Ramnath, 1944 I.T.R. 21. So, where a trader in beri who also speculated in cotton and was allowed to set off the losses in the latter against profits in the former, gave up speculation in the next year, and still claimed to carry forward the unexhausted loss in speculation the claim was disallowed on the ground that the business had been given up.

In United Steel Co. v. Cullington, 23 Tax. Cas. 91, in which a new company had been formed by the amalgamation of two old companies, and the old companies had unexhausted losses and depreciation allowance, the new company, was not allowed to carry forward either the losses or the depreciation allowance of the old companies.

Where an assessee, a company owning and publishing a newspaper agreed with another newspaper company that the two newspapers, run by the two companies, be published jointly by the latter, the former receiving only a fixed monthly payment and not participating in the profit or loss, it was held that the first company did not carry on a trade after the amalgamation of the newspapers and that consequently it could not carry forward its previous losses and set them off against the monthly sums received. Morning Post Ltd. v. George, 1942 I.T.R. (Sup. 20 (K.B. D.)). Whether different trading operations constitute a single business or different businesses is largely a question of fact but the proper legal inference from proved facts is essentially a matter of law. In the words of Rowlatt, J., in Scales v. George Thompson and Co., Ltd., 13 Tax. Cas. 83, the question is "was there any interconnection, any inter-lacing, any interdependence, any unity at all embracing the two businesses?"

In a case in which a moneylender in British India (who also dealt in securities as an integral part of the moneylending) had also moneylending business abroad which was conducted by agents, who though given discretion to lend had to submit regular accounts to the principal in British India and were under his close supervision and there was a flow of remittances both ways according to needs and the final trading result was incorporated in the accounts at headquarters, it was held that the foreign money-lending was not a separate business from that in British India; and carry forward was allowed of losses both in respect of the moneylending and of dealing in securities in British India, in order to be set off against foreign profits, Chindambaran Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1945 I.T.R. 177.

Losses in Burma in 1936-37.—As to such losses being set off against other income in British India in that year, see notes under section 3; also Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Valliammai Achi, 1938 I.T.R. 720. In re Rawji Dhanji & Co., 1940 I.T.R. 1 (Bom.).

Decisions under the old law.—A firm carrying on business in piece-goods was a major partner in two other firms carrying on the same business. The other partners in the two other firms had a nominal share in order to encourage them to take an interest in the business. Held, that the losses in the other two firms could be set off against the profits in the first. This decision was given under the 1918 Act which contained no provision corresponding to section 24 of the present Act, and the ratio decidendi was as below:—

When the subsidiary business engaged in is connected with the main business and is a proper employment of the assessee's capital or labour, it is, in my judgment for the purpose of assessment, to be treated as part of the business of the firm. If the firm in one branch makes a loss, that loss may be set-off against the profits made in its head office or other branches".—Per Schwabe, C.J., Board of Revenue v. Munisami Chetty and Son, 1 I.T.C. 227; 47 Mad. 653; A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 205.

In re Arjun Khemji & Co., 1 I.T.C. 249; A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 65—also under the 1918 Act—it was held by the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur that the share of a partner's loss in an unregistered firm can be deducted from his other income. The same Court also held in Seth Balkishan Nathani v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1 I.T.C. 248; A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 153 the losses suffered by an assessee as a member of a firm are to be taken into account in fixing the amount of his taxable income—under section 12 (1) of the 1918 Act (corresponding to section 14 of the present Act). As already observed there was no section in that Act corresponding to section 24 in the present Act.

The question again arose, this time under the 1922 Act, in Commissioner of Income-tax v. M. Ar. Arunachalam Chettiar, 1 I.T.C. 278; A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 474; 47 Mad. 660. The assessee carried on two different businesses, one individually and the other as a partner in an unregistered firm. Held, that the loss in the partnership could be set off against the profit in the individual business.

"I can find nothing to justify the argument that each partner in a firm is not an assessee for he is a person by whom the income-tax is payable, nor can I find anything to justify the argument that this assessee being a partner is not a person carrying on the business in question. . . . the words 'any business' being open to either construction, I must take that construction which, looking at the whole Act, is the more rational, and must construe 'any' to mean 'each and every'. It follows that an assessee is entitled to set-off profits in one business against losses in another . . . a partnership is not an entity known to the law. . . . its name is merely a convenient method of describing its partners each of whom is jointly and severally liable for its debts and for income-tax purposes it is a convenient body to assess . . . for this purpose no distinction can be made between registered and unregistered forms for whether a firm is a legal entity or not does not depend on registration. . . . Section 24 (1) is dealing with something quite different, namely, the allowance of set-off between different heads mentioned in section 6 and not the allowance of set-off between different businesses coming under one head. Section 24 (2) again dealing with set-off between different heads allows the partners of a registered firm, where that firm has made a loss under one head and has not sufficient income under another head, to avail themselves of this set-off, to use the loss to set-off against their own individual incomes arising under other heads. Whether this must be taken by implication to prevent such set-off in the case of partners of an unregistered firm is a different question which does not arise here."—Per Schwabe, C.J.

The Privy Council approved of the above decision and reasoning, Rm. Ar. Ar. Rm. Arunachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1936 I.T.R. 173 (P.C.). The amendments in 1939 however make this decision obsolete.

In a later case, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Siddha Gowdar and Sons, 55 M. 818; 6 I.T.C. 78, but before the above decision of the Privy Council, the same High Court questioned the correctness of the above view and held that there is nothing in section 24 to prevent the set-off of loss in one business against the profits in another of the same assessee though you cannot set-off capital loss in winding up a business against profits in another.

Though a firm as such, not being a legal entity, cannot enter into a partnership with another firm, it can set-off against its own profits its share of the loss in the bigger firm since what has to be taxed is the actual income of the assessee irrespective of the legality or illegality of the transaction from which the income is derived, Chandrika Prasad Ramswarup v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1939 I.T.R. 269. See also notes under section 2 (6-B). It would appear that this decision also has been neutralised by the amendments to section 24 in 1939; for, ex hypothesi, the bigger firm could not be a registered firm, and a partner in an unregistered firm is expressly precluded from setting-off against his own profits any share of the loss of the firm.

Capital losses.—As to capital loss in winding up, see Burrell's case, (1924) 2 K.B. 52; 9 Tax Cases 27; In re Armitage, (1893) 3 Ch. 337 and In re Crichton Oil Co. (1902) 2 Ch. 86.

It had been held that an assessee cannot set-off (as loss or) bad debts (amounts) due from an ex-partner in a business against profits in another. The loss on account of the ex-partner is not a bad debt of the second business, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Rm. Ar. Ar. Rm. Arunachalam Chettiar, 1934 I.T.R. 401; A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 557; 7 I.T.C. 287 (P.C.). A contrary view was taken in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Khemchand Ramdas, (Sind), 1933 I.T.R. 309; A.I.R. 1933 Sind 148; 6 I.T.C. 360; but the doubt was set at rest by the Privy Council in 1936 I.T.R. 173.

It is not the business of the Income-tax Officer to cast an account between the partners inter se but merely to compute the proportionate share of profits or loss of the firm. Though, in certain circumstances (in 1936, a partner in any firm, whether registered or not, could set-off his share of profits or losses in the firm against his other losses or profits) 'a partner's share of loss in the firm can be set-off against his other profits if any, he cannot claim such set-off in respect of his liability to bear or pay more than his share of loss so as to entitle him to a contribution from an insolvent partner. Though, logically, the solvent partner may have to bear the whole loss and not merely his share, it has to be remembered that a partner in a continuing partnership cannot, at the end of a year's trading, claim to set-off the whole of the firm's loss in the previous year treating the other partner as insolvent. He is not entitled to do so on the dissolution of the firm, nor can he later, when the other partner's insolvency is established, set-off in one year the whole of the other partner's share of loss for several years. In 1934 I.T.R. 401 above, the assessee, the sole owner of a money-lending business and the capitalist partner in a cotton business with another partner closed down the latter on 31st March, 1930. The other partner being without means the entire loss was borne by the assessee but in the partnership accounts the share of loss of each partner was shown separately. On 1st April, 1930, the debit against the other partner was transferred to the moneylending business as though a loan had been made to the other partner to bear the loss. In March 1931 the assessee wrote off this loan as a bad debt; and claimed it as a bad debt or as a set-off. The set-off was disallowed for the reasons stated above and the write off as a bad debt on the ground that the debt had been bad even before it was transferred to the moneylending business, Rm. Ar. Ar. Rm. Arunochalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1936 I.T.R. 173. A partner cannot single out a particular bad debt as relating to his share. He can only take the result of the firm's getting a bad debt allowance, Motilal Onkara v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 6 I.T.C. 16.

The operations of winding up a business may be carried on in such a manner as themselves to constitute a business and thus attract tax, or in a different manner so as not to constitute a business and thus avoid tax. In the latter case, no losses can be claimed in realising assets, since such losses will be of a capital nature. So, where a partnership was dissolved and the assets thereof taken over at a reduced value (mostly by the partners) the loss was held to be of a capital nature. O. RM. OM. RM. PL. Muthukaruppan Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1943 I.T.R. 540.

Where an assessee, on the dissolution of a Hindu undivided family, of which he was a member, took over as his share of the assets certain debts which became irrecoverable later, it was held that the loss was a capital loss. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. S. P. K. A. R. M. Family, 1941 I.T.R. 685. A similar case, relating to a partnership, is 1943 I.T.R. 540 referred to above. If on the eve of the dissolution, the outstandings had been valued and the Profit and Loss account of the family (or firm) made up, the family (or firm) could no doubt have claimed the loss (as an allowance for bad debts), though, after dissolution the members (or partners) could have no claim to any such allowance.

Where there are two separate businesses and one of them is discontinued, it is not open to the assessee to claim in a subsequent year to set-off against the profits of the remaining business the expenses of collecting the outstandings of the closed business. In re Hiralaal Kalyanmal, 1943 I.T.R. 128 (Bom.).

Where a money-lending firm, jointly with another firm, leased a big building and sublet it, and eventually there was litigation over the lease and loss was incurred, it was held that the leasing and subletting were outside the business of the firm which was therefore not entitled to set-off the loss against its other profits. PR. AL. M. Muihukaruppan Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1943 I.T.R. 38. Set-off can be allowed only as between taxable sources of income; the loss on a 'hobby' is personal expenditure and cannot be set off against profits from taxable sources. Whether an alleged 'hobby' is really such or a business is a question of fact; and in a case in which a physician also ran a dramatic troupe the Income-tax authorities were unsuccessful in trying to find that the dramatic troupe was only a 'hobby' and not a source of income. P. S. Varier v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1940 I.T.R. 628.

Where a firm made a loss in a particular year, at the end of which one of the partners left the firm and later on executed a document to make good to the other partners a part of the loss, it was held that the whole loss should be taken into account in the assessment of the year in which the loss occurred and that the partial re-coupment of the loss, if any, can be brought into account only in later periods as the loss was recovered. Bhudarmal Chandiprasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 8 I.T.C. 249.

Where a son succeeded to his father's estate by inheritance and losses arose in certain business assets coming on from the father's time the question arose whether such losses were capital or revenue losses, no allowance for bad debts having been claimed in the father's time. The losses were allowed as revenue losses. The ratio decidendi, which is not clear, would seem to be that the business of the father was a single business which continued in the accounting year when the son made the claim. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Maharaja of Dharbhanga, 1944 I.T.R. 116.

There is nothing to prevent losses—set-off under section 24—from including an allowance for bad debts, if, on merits, such allowance for bad debts is admissible under section 10 (2) (xi), and the business continues. In re Hulsil Lal Ramdayal, 1941 I.T.R. 635 (All.).

Set-off—Between different unregistered firms.—The question whether an unregistered firm can set-off against its profits a loss sustained by another firm in which two members of the unregistered firm (and not the unregistered firm itself as such) are partners has been raised and held to be inconceivable, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Mulhu K. A. R. M. Ramanathan Chetty and Karuppan Chetty, 2 I.T.C. 194. The law clearly does not permit an assessee to set-off his profits against the loss of some other assessee, Shivnarain & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1935 I.T.R. 402; A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 896; 8 I.T.C. 117. Since a firm as such cannot be a partner in another firm, it cannot set-off its losses or gains against the gains or losses of another firm in which some of its partners happen to be partners.

Succession—Set-off.—A firm of three partners, carried on business in Ellore. On 16th February, 1925, they started business in Madras in partnership with a fourth partner. On 30th November, 1926, the fourth partner retired and the other three who had the same shares in the Madras business as in the Ellore business carried on both the businesses. It was held that on the facts the two firms were identical, and that, under sections 26 and 24, set-off should be allowed in respect of the assessment for 1926-27 (on the accounting year 1925-26) on the loss of the business in Ellore against profits in Madras, M. K. M. Mahomed Hassana Labai & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 3 I.T.C. 431.

The question whether under the pre-1939 law an assessee could claim set-off of losses in a partnership (or in a sole business) which he had left (or sold) between the period of loss and the date of assessment was decided in the affirmative by the Sind Court, Gokaldas Lakhmichand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 519, on the ground that section 26 did not prohibit such set-off and in the negative by the Bombay High Court, Bhogilal Hargobindas Patel v. Commissioner of Income tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 555, who considered that the person entitled to the set-off was the successor. The former was dissented from and the latter followed in In re David Sassoon & Co., 1944 I.T.R. 7 (Bom.). These decisions however have all become obsolete in view of the amendment of section 26 in 1939.

Fractional Periods.—If an assessee has more than one business or source of income and one of them in which a loss occurs had been with him only for a part of the year, he can still claim that loss to be set off against profits from other sources. In re Hulasilal Ramdayal, 1941 I.T.R. 635 (All.).

Unabsorbed depreciation.—See rulings under section 10 (2) (vi) permitting the set-off or carry-forward of unabsorbed depreciation under business against profits under other heads of income.

Assessee—Meaning of.—It will be noticed that in this section the word 'assessee' is not used in the strict sense of the definition in section 2 (2) but loosely in the sense of the person who is being assessed. Obviously until set-off has been allowed it is not possible to determine whether or not a person is liable to pay tax.

Loss of 'profits'—As distinguished from loss of Capital.—The reference to 'profits' is superfluous and was added in order to make it clear that no loss of capital could be taken into account. See also Siddha Gowder & Son's case, 55 M. 818; 6 I.T.C. 78. As regards capital losses, see rulings under section 10 (2) (xv).

Defunct business.—As regards the inadmissibility of set-off of loss on defunct businesses, e.g., interest on loans, see also notes under section 10 (2) (iii).

24-A. (1) When it appears to the Income-tax Officer that any person may leave British India during the current financial year, or shortly after its expiry, and that he has no present intention of returning, the Income-tax Officer may proceed to assess him on his total income of the period from the expiry of the last previous year of which the income has been assessed in his hands to the probable date of his departure from British India, or where he has not been previously assessed, on his total income of the period up to the probable date of his departure from British India. The assessment shall be made on the total income of each completed previous year included in such period at the rate at which such income would have been charged had it been fully assessed, and as respects the period from the expiry of the last of such completed previous years to the probable date of departure the Income-tax Officer shall estimate the total income of such person during such period and assess it at the rate in force for the financial year in which such assessment is made:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall authorise an Income-tax Officer to assess any income, profits or gains which have escaped assessment or have been underassessed, or have been assessed at too low a rate, or have been the subject of excessive relief under this Act, but in respect of which he is debarred from issuing a notice under section 34.

(2) For the purpose of making an assessment under sub-section (1), the Income-tax Officer may serve a notice upon such person requiring him to furnish, within such time not being less than seven days as may be specified in the notice, a return in the same form and verified in the same manner as a return under sub-section (2) of section 22, setting forth (along with such other particulars as may be provided for in the notice) his total income for each of the completed previous years comprised in the relevant period referred to in the first sentence of sub-section (1) and his estimated total income for the period from the expiry of the last such completed previous year to the probable date of his departure; and the provisions of this Act shall so far as may be, apply as if the notice were a notice issued under sub-section (2) of section 22.

History and object.—This section was inserted in 1933 in order to fill a lacuna. To quote the Select Committee, the section “provides for the assessment up to the moment of departure of the income of a person leaving British India during the currency of a financial year or within so short a period of its end as to prevent the normal assessment of his income and enables the Income-tax Officer to assess within the limits permissible by section 34 of the Act any income for which he is liable to pay but has not paid income-tax”.

Minor changes were made in 1939 to remove certain lacunæ and in particular to make it clear that the section applies to a person not previously assessed. Verbal changes were also made in the proviso consequentially on the changes made in section 34.

‘The period’ means evidently the total period for which no assessment had been previously made and in respect of which assessment is permitted by the proviso.

‘Fully assessed’, i.e., in the appropriate year; the word ‘fully’ is otiose, merely being equivalent to ‘if no part had escaped assessment’.

The proviso makes it clear that the limitation imposed by section 34 will apply in cases falling under this section.

See also notes under sections 22, 23 and 34.

It will be noted that there is no reference in terms to total world income in this section; the reference, however, to a return in the same form as one under section 22 (2), would seem by implication to refer to total world income also.

If the assessee returns to British India in the next year, and if the rates of taxation have been altered by the next Finance Act, there is no provision for revision of the assessment already made but, presumably. Section 48 can be applied to such cases.

24-B. (1) Where a person dies, his executor, administrator or other legal representative shall be liable to pay out of the estate of the deceased person to the extent to which the estate is capable of meeting the charge the tax assessed as payable by such person, or any tax which would have been payable by him under this Act if he had not died.

(2) Where a person dies before the publication of the notice referred to in sub-section (1) of section 22 or before he is served with a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 or section 34, as the case may be, his executor, administrator or other legal representative shall, on the serving of the notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 or under section 34, as the case may be, comply therewith, and the Income-tax Officer may proceed to assess the total income of the deceased person as if such executor, administrator or legal representative were the assessee.

(3) Where a person dies, without having furnished a return which he has been required to furnish under the provisions of section 22, or having furnished a return which the Income-tax Officer has reason to believe to be incorrect or incomplete, the Income-tax Officer may make an assessment of the total income of such person and determine the tax payable by him on the basis of such assessment, and for this purpose may by the issue of the appropriate notice which would have had to be served upon the deceased person had he survived, require from the executor, administrator or other legal representative of the deceased person any accounts, documents or other evidence which he might under the provisions of sections 22 and 23 have required from the deceased person.

History.—This section was inserted in 1933 to fill a gap in the Act. The Bombay High Court had held in Ellis Reid v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 100; 55 Bom. 312; A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 333, that no assessment could be made on a deceased person in the absence of express provision to that effect.

Limit of liability.—To quote the Select Committee, "the liability of the executor, administrator or other legal representative is confined to the payment of tax to the extent to which the estate is capable of meeting the charge. It is not our intention that the payment of income-tax due by the deceased should rank in any way prior to other charges to which the estate may be liable."

Penalties.—As regards penalties for default by executors, see notes under section 28.

Appropriate notice.—See sections 22 and 23.

Posthumous income.—This section relates to the income of the deceased, i.e., which accrued to him. The assessment of the executor, etc., on the income that accrued to him, i.e., to the estate is a different matter altogether to be regulated by sections 3 and 41. Section 24-B applies only to income which would have been taxed on the deceased had he been alive, cf. Inland Revenue v. Henderson's Executors, 16 Tax Cases 282; Wood v. Owen, 23 Tax Cases 541, and Bryan v. Cassin, 24 Tax Cases 468, cases in the United Kingdom in which claims by executors to repayment of tax paid by the deceased were disallowed.

Salary due to a deceased, received by his legal representatives is taxable on the latter under the last part of sub-section (1). In re Usharani, 1942 I.T.R. 199 (Cal.).

Assessments under section 23 (4).—It will be seen that sub-section (3) places the executor, etc., in the same position as the deceased would have been in. It is irregular to assess a deceased person as such, Maharaja cf. Patiala v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay (Central), 1943 I.T.R. 202, but the irregularity may be condoned if the legal representative had notice at all stages and supplied all the information required. (Ibid.)

Old rulings.—The section renders obsolete the old rulings, viz., Ellis Reid's case above referred to, Mitchell v. Macneill & Co., 2 I.T.C. 298; 103 I.C. 120; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 518 and Govinda Saran v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 2 I.T.C. 480; 3 Luck. 237; A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 465.

Succession.—Section 24-B is intended to supplement section 26, and does not therefore override it. So, if the facts of the case justify the application of section 26, it is that section which is to be applied and not section 24-B. If the case does not relate to succession to a business, profession or vocation, section 26 is not applicable at all; and only section 24-B will apply. Ramaswamy Iyengar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1943 I.T.R. 610. In this case, on the death of the deceased his widows and his son's widow succeeded to his business and carried it on; later on, there was litigation between the widows and a receiver was appointed who was assessed under section 24-B. The Appellate Tribunal held that section 26 applied; and the High Court agreed with the Tribunal.

Assumptions to be made.—Where a managing director was entitled to payment to himself or to his executors of £10,000 on the termination of his service otherwise than by wilful default in performing his duties, and his executors received £10,000 on his death, it was held under section 45 (5) of the United Kingdom Finance Act, 1927 (roughly corresponding to this section) that the executors were taxable. The Revenue authorities must go by the actual facts of the case and make no other assumption than that the tax-payer had not died, Allen and Murray v. Trehearne, 16 A.T.C. 87 (K.B.).

25. (1) Where any business, profession or vocation, to which sub-section (3) is not applicable is discontinued in any year, an assessment may be made in that year on the basis of the income, profits or gains of the period between the end of the previous year and the date of such discontinuance in addition to the assessment, if any, made on the basis of the income, profits or gains of the previous year.

(2) Any person discontinuing any such business, profession or vocation shall give to the Income-tax Officer notice of such discontinuance within fifteen days thereof, and where any person fails to give the notice required by this sub-section, the Income-tax Officer may direct that a sum shall be recovered from him by way of penalty not exceeding the amount of tax subsequently assessed on him in respect of any income, profits or gains of the business, profession or vocation up to the date of its discontinuance.

(3) Where any business, profession or vocation, on which tax was at any time charged under the provisions of the Indian

Income-tax Act, 1918, is discontinued then, unless there has been a succession by virtue of which the provisions of sub-section (4) have been rendered applicable, no tax shall be payable in respect of the income, profits and gains of the period between the end of the previous year and the date of such discontinuance, and the assessee may further claim that the income, profits and gains of the previous year shall be deemed to have been the income, profits and gains of the said period. Where any such claim is made, an assessment shall be made on the basis of the income, profits and gains of the said period, and if an amount of tax has already been paid in respect of the income, profits and gains of the previous year exceeding the amount payable on the basis of such assessment, a refund shall be given of the difference.

(4) Where the person who was at the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, carrying on any business, profession or vocation on which tax was at any time charged under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918, is succeeded in such capacity by another person, the change not being merely a change in the constitution of a partnership no tax shall be payable by the first mentioned person in respect of the income, profits and gains of the period between the end of the previous year and the date of such succession, and such person may further claim that the income, profits and gains of the previous year shall be deemed to have been the income, profits and gains of the said period. Where any such claim is made, an assessment shall be made on the basis of the income, profits and gains of the said period, and if an amount of tax has already been paid in respect of the income, profits and gains of the previous year exceeding the amount payable on the basis of such assessment, a refund shall be given of the difference :

Provided that sub-sections (3) and (4) shall not apply (a) to super-tax except where the income, profits and gains of the business, profession or vocation were assessed to super-tax for the first time either for the year beginning on the first day of April, 1920, or for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1921 ;

(b) to a business, profession or vocation on where income-tax was at any time charged in the hands of a company under the Indian Income-tax Act 1886, or on which income-tax would have been charged in the hands of a company for the assessment year ending on the 31st day of March, 1918, if the company, having been in existence in that year had also been in existence in the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1917.

(5) No claim to the relief afforded under sub-section (3) or sub-section (4) shall be entertained unless it is made before the expiry of one year from the date on which the business, profession or vocation was discontinued or the succession took place, as the case may be.

(6) Where an assessment is to be made under sub-section (1), sub-section (3) or sub-section (4), the Income-tax Officer may serve on the person whose income, profits and gains are to be assessed, or in the case of a firm, on any person who was a member of such firm, at the time of its discontinuance, or in the case of a company, on the principal officer thereof, a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22, and the provisions of this Act shall, so far as may be, apply accordingly as if the notice were a notice issued under that sub-section.

History.—There was no corresponding section in the earlier Acts. Before 1924 the section provided for (1) the taxation of a discontinued business which was begun after 31st March, 1922, and (2) the taxation of a discontinued business which was in existence on the 31st March, 1922, and was at any time taxed under the Act of 1918, but not for taxation on discontinuance of a business, which though in existence on the 31st March, 1922, was never taxed under the Act of 1918. Since that date it has provided for the taxing of discontinued businesses (a) which were not taxed under the Act of 1918, and (b) which were taxed under the Act of 1918. Sub-sections (4) and (5) were added in 1939.

The proviso to sub-sections (3) and (4) were added in 1941; and the words 'to which sub-section (3) is not applicable' substituted for the words 'on which income-tax was not at any time charged' under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918' in 1944.

New business.—Under section 3, assessments under the Act are made on the profits of the "previous year". When a new business is started, therefore, no assessment will, as a rule, be made in the first year, and the assessment in the second year will be made on the profits of the preceding year. Sections 24-A and 25 provide exceptions for this rule.

Business, profession or vocation.—Note that this section applies only to cases assessed under section 10 and not to other heads of income. It does not for example apply to salary earners, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Fletcher, 69 M.L.J. 611. Therefore a company, whose business was not that of buying and selling securities, cannot claim the benefit of this section if it had paid tax under the 1918 Act only on interest on securities and not on its profits from business. The fact that the memorandum of the company allows it to invest money in securities is not sufficient. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Larkana Jacobabad Railways, 1946 I.T.R. 395. The status of the assessee is immaterial in construing the words "carrying on business." (Ibid.)

Businesses not taxed under the 1918 Act—Sub-sections (1) and (2).—In order to guard against a possible loss of revenue owing to delay in making assessments on the profits of businesses, professions or vocations that close down during the course of a financial or commercial year, it is provided that in such cases in addition to the assessment on the income of the preceding year, a further assessment may be made in the year in which a business, profession or vocation is closed down, on the income of that year. Sub-section (2) imposes a statutory obligation on persons discontinuing a business, profession or vocation to give notice of such discontinuance within fifteen days of the discontinuance.

Discretionary.—The power to make the additional assessment under section 25 (1) is a discretionary power which may be exercised whether the business, etc., is a purely temporary business commencing and closing down in the same year, or whether it is a business that has been in existence and has been previously taxed under the present Act. It will be used in cases where there is reason to anticipate that the tax may not be collected unless the assessment is made in the year in which the business, etc., closes down. Where no difficulty in making the assessment and collecting the tax in the usual manner is anticipated, the special powers conferred by this sub-section will not be used. (Income-tax Manual.) This sub-section does not preclude an assessment under other sections of the Act (e.g., sections 3, 4, 42,) if permissible. In re Kamdar, 1946 I.T.R. 10 (Bom.).

Profits taxable and rate of tax.—The profits to be taxed under the provisions of section 25 (1) are the profits accruing between the end of the last “previous year” of which the profits have been taxed and the date of the discontinuance of the business. Further, the rate to be applied in taxing the discontinued business under sub-section (1) is the rate in force in the year in which the assessment is made.

Businesses taxed under the 1918 Act.—Under sub-section (3) where tax has been charged on a business, profession or vocation under the provisions of the Income-tax Act of 1918, no liability to tax exists in respect of profits or gains for the period between the end of the last “previous year” and the date of discontinuance, unless sub-section (4) applies. The assessee is, in such a case, also entitled to substitute the profits of that period for the profits of the last “previous year”. For example, in the case of a business whose “previous year” ends on 31st March, if it closed down on 31st March, 1940, its assessment for 1939-40 will be on the profits for the year ending 31st March, 1939 or at its option, on the profits of its year ending 31st March, 1940, and no assessment will be made for 1940-41. If such a concern closed down on 30th April, 1939, it would still be assessed in the year in which it closed down (1939-40), but the assessment would be on the year's profits to 31st March, 1939, or at its option on the profits of the month of April, 1939, and no assessments would be made for the year, 1940-41. If, however, the concern's “business year” ends on 30th April, and it closes down on 30th September, 1939, its assessment in the year 1940-41, would be on the profits of its year to 30th April, 1939, or at its option on its profits from 1st May, 1939 to 30th September, 1939, no assessment would be made for the year 1941-42. This special provision applies only to a business, profession or vocation on which tax was charged under the Act of 1918, and when a claim for this concession is made, it must be supported by proof that tax had been charged under the Act of 1918 in respect of that very business, profession or vocation.

An assessee will be allowed the benefit of section 25 (3) if (a) he has (for example) both a business and a profession and discontinues only one of them, or (b) has more businesses than one and discontinues one or more, but not all of them, provided that they are genuinely distinct businesses for which separate accounts are maintained, and not mere branches of a single business. The section should, of course, only be applied to the income of any profession or business that is actually discontinued. (Income-tax Manual.)

Discontinuance different from succession.—The provisions of sub-sections (1) and (3) apply to the complete stoppage or discontinuance of a business, profession or vocation and do not apply to any change in the proprietorship. Where there is any change in the proprietorship merely, the provisions of sub-section (4) and section 26 apply. As to the meaning of "succeeded in such capacity by another person, the change not being merely a change in the constitution of a partnership",—see section 26 and notes under it, as also, Ellis Reid v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 100; 55 Bom. 312; A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 333 and other decisions referred to later under this section.

Responsibility of partner for tax.—Where a business, profession or vocation is completely discontinued and is not merely transferred from one proprietor or set of proprietors to another, the person who carried on the discontinued business is responsible for the payment of the tax, unless he is exempt under sub-section (4), and where the proprietorship was vested in a firm, section 44 specifically provides that the persons who were members of the firm on the date of such discontinuance, are jointly and severally liable to any tax due from the firm.

Succession to businesses taxed before 1918.—Changes were made in 1939 [by amending sub-section (3) and adding a new sub-section (4),] so as to give to the immediate predecessor (on the occasion of the first succession after 1st August, 1939) to a business, profession or vocation the benefit previously given by sub-section (3) to the owner of a discontinued business assessed under the 1918 Act. That benefit, viz., being allowed to substitute the profits from the end of the previous year up to the date of discontinuance for the profits of the previous year, was given because otherwise those assessed under the 1918 Act would be assessed for one year more than the number of years the business was in existence. Since section 26 now provides that whenever there is a succession the predecessor shall be assessed on what he got of the previous year's profits, it became necessary to give this relief to the predecessor in the case of succession to a business assessed under the 1918 Act.

The words 'then unless' in sub-section (3) merely mean 'except when'; discontinuity can refer both to the business and to the person; and these words mean that the cases in view should be regulated under sub-section (4), being exceptions to the discontinuity contemplated in sub-section (3). The words do not mean that every case that is not one of succession must be one of discontinuance. Appellate Tribunal v. Buchraj Nathani, 1946 I. T.R. 191 (Nag.).

Limitation.—Sub-section (5) added in 1939 merely codifies departmental practice, no limitation having been laid in the statute before. Of the two reliefs, viz., not taxing profits after the end of the previous year and the adjustment of tax of the previous year, the assessee has to claim only the latter; the former has to be done by the Income-tax Officer himself. Consequently limitation applies only to the claim for adjustment of tax and not to the non-taxability of profits after the end of the previous year. The reference to the "claim to relief afforded under sub-section (3)" is to the relief by way of adjustment of tax of the previous year and the resultant refund, if any, and not to the exemption of tax from the end of the previous year onwards. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. O. R.M. M. SP. SV. Meyyappa Chettyar, 1943 I.T.R. 247. It was held however in

In re the Hon. Mr. Justice Iqbal Ahmad, 1942 I.T.R. 152 (All.), that it was the duty of the Income-tax Officer to take action suo motu in respect of relief under section 25 (3) if there were materials before him to suggest that the business, etc., had been discontinued and that therefore no limitation of time will operate against the assessee in such a case. The correct position would seem to be that taken in 1943 I.T.R. 247 referred to above, except that in cases in which the assessee, while informing the Income-tax Officer of the discontinuance, does not in terms ask for the adjustment of tax of the previous year but merely asks for relief due under the law or makes some such vague claim it may be proper to hold that the further steps are for the Income-tax Officer to take, and that the limitation will apply only to the intimation of discontinuance.

Proviso to sub-sections (3) and (4).—The purpose of the above proviso will be understood from the history of the law since 1886 as stated below. The adjustment system introduced in respect of income-tax by the Income-tax Act of 1918, was not retrospective. Under section 19 of that Act, no adjustment was to be made in respect of tax paid or assessed before the Act came into force. Consequently, so far as income from business (in fact all income not assessed at source) was concerned, in a sense, the income of the year 1917-18 ultimately escaped assessment altogether. That is to say, no one ultimately paid tax calculated on the basis of the actual income of that year. The tax for the year 1918-19 was assessed provisionally on the basis of the income of 1917-18. But when the actual income for the year 1918-19 was known, in the year 1919-20, this provisional assessment was adjusted by collection of the deficiency, or refund of the excess, in the provisional assessment, and thus tax was finally suffered on the actual income of the year 1918-19. In the year 1917-18 under the Act of 1886 the tax (though regarded as paid 'for' the year 1917-18) was assessed on the income of the year 1916-17. As there was no adjustment in respect of this assessment, tax was finally borne on the income of the years 1916-17 and 1918-19, but no tax was ultimately suffered on the actual income of the year 1917-18. But under the Act of 1886 the assessment was made each year on the (statutory) income of the year of assessment (actually the income of the previous year). In the first year in which a business became liable to assessment—there being no "previous year", the assessment was made on an estimate [section 15 (2)]; and the law (section 33, Act II of 1886) provided for an adjustment with reference to the actual income of the year of assessment, when a business was discontinued or its owner died, or became insolvent or owing to other "specific cause" was deprived of or "lost" the income on which the assessment was made. The result was that, since no final assessment was made in 1918-19, and the income of 1918-19 was not finally assessed till 1919-20, the final assessments had by the latter year fallen one year behind-hand. A business opened in 1914-15, e.g., would, up to and including 1919-20, have been assessed finally only 5 times on 6 years' working. When therefore the adjustment system was abandoned on the passing of the Act of 1922, it was agreed that one final adjustment should be made in the year 1922-23; and both a final assessment or adjustment under the old system (retained for one year by section 68, second proviso, of the Act of 1922), and an assessment under the new system were made on the income of the year 1921-1922. The result was that the assessments which had been lagging a year behind (so far as final assessments were concerned) were brought up abreast of the income again. The assessment under the new Act in the year 1922-23 was made for the year 1922-23.

A company, however, did not pay tax in the first year of its existence, and stood therefore to gain a year's tax relatively to other businesses—see sections 11 and 15 of the 1886 Act.

In regard to salaries, the position is as below. Under the Acts of 1886 and 1918, as under the present Act, the tax on salaries was deducted month after month as they were paid. When the adjustment system was introduced, all that had to be done each year was to collect any deficiency or refund any excess tax on the previous year's salary, with reference to the amount actually deducted at source. The tax on the salary of 1917-18 was deducted in 1917-18. In 1918-19, no provisional assessment was made on the salary of 1917-18 for the year 1918-19. Excess or deficient deductions were adjusted and the tax for 1918-19 was deducted in 1918-19. Similarly, when the adjustment system was abandoned on the introduction of the Act of 1922, there was no need to make an assessment to income-tax on the salaries drawn in 1921-22 in addition to making an adjustment in respect of them. In 1922-23 any excess or deficiency in the deductions made from salaries in 1921-22 was adjusted, and tax was deducted as usual from the salaries actually paid in 1922-23. In fact, so far as salaries are concerned, the system has remained the same under the three Acts of 1886, 1918 and 1922, except that under the present Act the collections on salaries, etc., are advance collections on account of the next year's liability to tax. (As to the consequences of this position, see notes under the Finance Acts.)

The situation in regard to super-tax is as below. Super-tax was introduced in the year 1917-18. It was not at first liable to adjustment. It was levied on the income of the previous year. The adjustment system was first applied to super-tax in 1920-21. Ultimately, the income of one year, viz., 1919-20, was never taken as the basis for a final assessment to super-tax owing to the adjustment system. A provisional assessment was made on it in 1920-21, and in 1921-22 a final assessment was made by adjustment with reference to the income of the year 1920-21. The tax was thus shifted forward from the income of the year 1919-20 to the income of the year 1920-21. But, whereas in the corresponding year 1918-19 (the year in which the adjustment system was first applied to income-tax) the income-tax assessments became one year behindhand as explained above, in consequence of the new system, the situation in regard to super-tax was different. Since this had always been a tax on the previous year's income, it was always a year behindhand from the very start.

When the Act of 1922 came into force, and the final adjustment under the Act of 1918 (section 68 of the Act of 1922) and the first assessment under the new Act were made in 1922-23, salaries, like business incomes, of 1921-22 suffered super-tax twice, once by way of adjustment and once by way of assessment. The income-tax assessments on salary income thus once again drew abreast of the income, but the super-tax assessments were still a year behind.

Under section 25 (3), a person discontinuing a business, profession or vocation, if he was at any time assessed under the Act of 1918, is entitled to claim that he shall not be assessed at all on the income of the period between the date on which he closes down and the end of the preceding 'previous year'; or, if he prefers, that the income of that period shall be substituted for the income of the preceding previous year, and assessed as such and an adjustment made. Thus, if a man closed his business on 31st March, 1925, he could claim not to be assessed on the income of the year 1924-25 or to have his assessment for 1924-25 (on the income of 1923-24) adjusted with reference to the income of 1924-25. The justification for this is as follows: So far as persons assessed at any time under the Act of 1918 are concerned, the "double assessment" in 1922-23 brought the assessments abreast of the income as already explained. At the end of any year such a person has been assessed for precisely the same number of years as his business has been running. If, therefore, he were assessed in the year after closing down, on the income of the last working year, he would be assessed for one year in excess. But in the case of a business taxed for the first time under the Act of 1922, the tax-collector is lagging a year behind because in the Act of 1922 there is no provision for assessment, on estimate, in the year in which a business is opened, as there was under the previous Acts. Consequently, unless an assessment were made in the year after closing down on the income of the last year's working, the number of assessments would be one short. It is clear that for the reasons stated, there was no need to extend the concession to salaried assesseees so far as income-tax was concerned. Their assessments kept pace with their incomes all along and all that was done after the close of a year was to adjust any excess or deficiency. So far as super-tax is concerned, there does not appear to have been any real justification for extending the section to super-tax at all. The difference between income-tax and super-tax explained above seems to have been overlooked, till the proviso was added in 1941. As already explained, a business assessee who started business in 1916-17, and was assessed in that year, and closed down in 1924-25, will be found to have been assessed to income-tax once for each year from 1916-17 to 1924-25, both inclusive, and hence it would be wrong to assess him in 1925-26 on the income of 1924-25. But a super-tax assessee in similar circumstances would have enjoyed nine years' income and been assessed only eight times including the assessment in 1924-25. Clearly, therefore, he should be assessed in 1925-26 on the income of 1924-25. The extension of this section to super-tax on income from business appears to have been due to misunderstanding or oversight. For the exact wording of this section the Joint Select Committee of 1922 is responsible.

In all that has been said above it should be remembered that for the purpose of income-tax, companies taxed under the 1886 Act gained the tax on the first year of existence relatively to other businesses.

These unintended advantages have been withdrawn by the proviso inserted in 1941.

Effect of change of accounting year and discontinuance.—This section leads to anomalous results in cases in which the assessee changes his accounting period and later on closes down his business. Ordinarily, when an Income-tax Officer permits an assessee to change his accounting year under section 2 (11), he would insist on the assessee not escaping tax for any period. Thus, taking the example of an assessee who keeps accounts by the year ending, say, 30th April and changes them to the financial year, the position will be as below (ignoring the period before 1921-22) :—

Year of assessment i.e., year for which tax is paid.	If accounting year unchanged Tax paid on income of			If accounting year changed Tax paid on income of
	12	months ending	30-4-21	12	months ending	30-4-21

i.e., Profits for 17 months escape taxation ;
it will not pay to substitute his 17 months' profits for 12 months ending 30-4-27. (A).

i.e., profits for six months escape ; and assessee can get refund for six months, i.e., 12 months in all can escape. (B).

Therefore, by changing the accounting year, the assessee pays extra tax on five months' profits. It is assumed in the argument throughout that a month's profit is constant.

Though the figures given above refer to a particular case, general formulae can be deduced for (A) and (B) above. (B) must always be 12 months while (A) cannot be less than 12 months nor more than 24 months according to the circumstances of each case. An assessee who closed the accounts on 1st April and discontinued business on 30th March would escape tax for 23 months and 29 days. Therefore he has nothing to gain and something to lose by changing over to the financial or other year.

Such absurdities do not arise under section 25 (1), i.e., in businesses not taxed under the 1918 Act. The probability seems to be that in framing section 25 (3) regard was had only to accounts being maintained by the financial year ; or it may be that the loss of tax in respect of discontinuance of businesses not keeping accounts by the financial year was deliberately accepted as the price for purchasing the consent of the commercial community to the abandonment of the adjustment system. As already observed, the Select Committee of 1922 is responsible for the wording of this section of the Act.

Bearing on section 25-A and section 26.—There is no inconsistency, repugnancy or conflict between sections 25 (4), 25-A (2) and 26 (2) ; for each deals with a different group of circumstances ; and, in spite of partition, a Hindu family should, under section 25-A, be treated as joint for the purposes of assessment, which will include relief under section 25 (4). Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Saran Singh Ram Singh, 1946 I.T.R. 152 ; Kotha Govindarajulu Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1944 I.T.R. 97.

Relief under section 60.—As a consequence of the insertion in 1928 of the words "at the time of such assessment" at the end of clause (b) of section 14 (2) (the section has since been recast) an unintended hardship was produced in the case of partners of firms discontinuing business. To remove this hardship the Governor-General in Council exempted under section 60 from income-tax, "such part of the profits or gains of a firm which has discontinued its business, profession or vocation as is proportionate to the share of an assessee in the firm at the time of such discontinuance, if tax has at any time been charged on such business, profession or vocation under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918 (VII of 1918) or if an assessment has been made on the firm in respect of such profits or gains under sub-section (1) of section 25 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922): Provided that such part of the profits or gains shall be included in computing the total income of the assessee."

This notification was interpreted by the Madras High Court to refer to exemption from income-tax only and not from super-tax. The proviso according to the same ruling includes the exempted income not only for the purpose of arriving at the appropriate rate of tax but for that of determining whether the income is sufficient to make it chargeable to super-tax, A. C. T. Nachiappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1933 I.T.R. 241; 11 Rang. 380; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 229; 7 I.T.C. 1.

Is 'discontinuance' consistent with succession?—In In re Polson 1942 I.T.R. 52; the Bombay High Court held that in sub-section (3) as amended in 1939, the word "discontinued" referred both to cases of cessation of business and of its disposal otherwise, for, were it not so, neither the predecessor nor the successor could get the benefit of section 25 (3), as a consequence of section 26. Further, section 26 having been brought in line with the rest of the Act (in 1939) i.e., to tax the person who actually gets the income, it is the individual (or person) that should be taxed and not an abstract thing called 'business'. This decision was dissented from in O. R. M. M. SP. SV. Meyyappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1943 I.T.R. 247. The word 'discontinuance' is also used in section 44, and there is nothing in the context in section 25, compelling the adoption of a different meaning of the word there. Moreover, the words 'succession' and 'discontinuance', the distinction between which was, at one time, very important under the United Kingdom law, had been interpreted in that country as excluding each other, and the Indian law must be presumed to have adopted these meanings. Again as between the different sub-sections of section 25, different meanings cannot be given to the same word; and if in sub-section (1), the word is to include 'succession', which is the section to be applied to such cases, section 25 (1) or section 26? The amendment of sub-section (3) of section 25, in 1939 is merely intended to provide against double relief, once to the predecessor at the time of succession and again to the successor when the latter closes down. Moreover in the United Kingdom also, a system of apportionment of profits between predecessor and successor has existed side by side with relief in cases of discontinuance, and this did not justify the construction of the word 'discontinuance' so as to include 'succession'. The Privy Council reversed the judgment of the Bombay High Court in Polson's case and approved of the Madras decision in Meyyappa Chettiar case. The amendment in 1939 did not change or widen the meaning of the word 'discontinuance'; all that the amendment did was to introduce a qualification that if there was succession in respect of which relief was given, there should be no relief on discontinuance. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Polson, 1945 I.T.R. 384 (P.C.). In Nihal Chand Kisorilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 2 I.T.C. 338 (All.), it was thought that 'discontinuance' as used in section 44 may consist of various forms. It may mean total abandonment or extinction; it may mean self extinction for the purpose of reconstruction in another form. This does not, however, mean that there is no difference between 'discontinuance' in section 25 and 'succession' in the same section and in section 26.

In the case of a firm carrying on a profession, if the firm is dissolved by the death of a partner, it is not necessary, for the purpose of constituting discontinuance, that the remaining partners also should abandon the profession; therefore the benefit of section 25 (3) is available in such a case. In re Motichand v. Devidas, 1946 I.T.R. 534 (Bom.).

Reference to High Court.—Where an order under section 25 is set aside by the Commissioner under his revisional powers on the ground that discontinuance has not been established and the Income-tax Officer assesses the successors in business after finding facts about the latter independently the previous owners have no right of reference under section 66 (2) against the orders of the Commissioner since they are not prejudiced by such orders, Dhaniram Ramgopal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 384. In this case, the Commissioner had decided that no tax was payable by the predecessor, and the latter had not made, any claim for refund under sub-section (3).

Where the assessee makes a claim for refund under sub-section (3), and the Income-tax Officer fails or refuses to take action on the claim, there is no explicit provision for a right of appeal. The intention of sub-section (6) is evidently that in all such cases a formal assessment shall be made under section 23, proceedings being started with notices under section 22, but sub-section (6) is permissive and not mandatory. Sub-sections (3) and (4) on the other hand are mandatory so that "an assessment shall be made". But section 30 provides only for appeals against orders under sub-section (2) and not for refusal to make an assessment under sub-sections (3) and (4). It is possible however by a generous interpretation of section 48—and particularly of the words "properly chargeable" occurring there—to found an appeal under that section in such cases.

Ephemeral associations.—This section is frequently applied, in practice, to assess touring companies, Liquor shop syndicates, Toll gate syndicates, etc., which generally consist of comparatively short-lived businesses and which are not actually transferred from predecessor to successor. This section coupled with section 34 gives the Income-tax Officer the necessary powers to assess such incomes. Such cases are not likely to fall under sub-section (3) or (4) but under sub-section (1).

Temporary discontinuance.—The law does not recognise temporary discontinuance. Either a business is discontinued or it is not.

"Business is not confined to being busy", per Lord Sumner in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. South Behar Railway Co., 12 Tax Cases 657; (1925) A.C. 476.

The non-existence of profit does not in itself imply that a business has been discontinued, Henry v. Galloway, 17 Tax Cases 470; 49 T.L.R. 191.

There is a certain amount of overlap in the decisions relating to what is 'discontinuance'—section 25—and what is 'succession'—section 26. The question is generally one of fact.

For convenience, all the decisions are referred to below, though some of them relate more closely to section 26 than to this section.

The question of succession or discontinuance was of special importance under the English law in view of the system of taxing on the average of three years' profits, which has been discarded; and many of the cases cited below arose in that connection.

Running steamships was part of the undertaking of a railway company. The steamships ran at a loss and the railway decided to discontinue them. Held, that there was no discontinuance—the steamships being part and parcel of the railway system, Highland Rail Co. v. Special Commissioners, 2 Tax Cases 151; 23 Sc. L.R. 116.

The conversion of a private partnership into a company with limited liability creates a 'succession', Ryhope Coal Co. v. Foyer, 1 Tax Cases 343; 7 Q.B.D. 485. The point is that there is continuity of the 'business' to which the new person, i.e., the company 'succeeds'. In such a case, there is no 'discontinuance'.

Similarly if a business is sold by an individual to a company, there is a succession—Bartlett v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1914) 3 K.B. 686; 7 Tax Cases 229.

Where a business changes hands or a partner ceases to be a partner, there is no discontinuance of business but only a change in its ownership, Hanutram Bhuramal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 1938 I. T.R. 290.

Business—Identity of—Question of fact—Criteria.—A company took over the business of a firm of whisky distillers, blenders, etc. For some time before, the firm had not worked any distillery. The company worked a distillery and the accounts of the company for a period of about 14 months after its formation included the results of the business carried on at such distillery, as well as those of the business carried on elsewhere. The Commissioners held that the concern carried on by the company was not a succession to the concern carried on by the firm. On appeal by the Crown, it was held by the Scottish Court of Exchequer that the question as to the identity of the two concerns was one of fact, not of law, and that there was nothing to show that the decision of the Commissioners was wrong, Alexander Ferguson & Co., Ltd. v. Aikin, 4 Tax Cases 36.

A company owned and traded with one steamship; it afterwards acquired fifty-nine sixtieths of a second steamship, taking over the management and keeping the accounts thereof, and claimed to be assessed as a single concern taking the two ships together. Held, that the second steamship was a concern carried on by two or more persons jointly, and that its profits must be assessed separately. In such a case the old business is neither discontinued nor merged in the new, the two continuing to exist side by side, Farrell v. Sunderland Steamship Co., Ltd., 4 Tax Cases 605, following Attorney-General v. Borrodaile. (1814) 1 Price 148.

In a case of sale of a tramp steamship in which no books, accounts, or list of customers were transferred or sold with it, it was held that the new owners were not entitled to be assessed as successors in the business of the previous owners.

Per the Lord President.—" There is no succession to any trade, manufacture, adventure, concern or profession. There is simply the purchase of a corporeal moveable which may or may not carry on the same business, which may be put equally well to a different trade. . . . if the contention were to apply, it would equally apply to a house bought in open market or to a carriage knocked down at a sale. . . .", Watson Brothers v. Lothian, 4 Tax Cases 441; 39 Sc.L.R. 604.

A tramway company was incorporated under a local Act. Later on, this was taken over by another company which also ran an omnibus service. Finally, the local authority acquired the tramway and extended it and substituted electric for horse-drawn vehicles. Held, that the tramway succeeded to the business of the company.

Per Bray, J.—"Railway companies are always spending capital and extending their railways and some of them have substituted electrical powers for steam but it could not be suggested that by doing this they were commencing or setting up a new business. It so happens here that the extension and modification was very great and that it occurred just at the time when the respondents had bought the original undertaking but I do not think this alters the case. There seems no reason why the revenue should be benefited by the accident of transfer at the time", Stockham v. Wallasey District Council, (1906) 95 L.T. 834.

There can be no succession to a part of a business, though there may be to a separate branch of the business; and the Indian rule on this point is the same as the English one, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Zaveri, 1937 I.T.R. 664. This does not imply however that if what is succeeded to is not the same extent of trade or even does not include a particular line of customers, it necessarily follows that there cannot be a succession to the trade. Held, accordingly in a case of a trading company which took a lease of the brewery of another company and their tied-houses but did not take their free trade or goodwill that the decision of the Commissioners that there was a succession could not be upset, Shipstone and Sons v. Morris, 14 Tax Cases 413. See also rulings referred to under section 26 under "partial succession" and In re Gregory & Co., 1937 I.T.R. 12.

The National Provincial Bank purchased the business of the County of Stafford Bank. The former had several Branch Establishments in England and Wales while the latter had only one Office at Wolverhampton. A large sum was paid for goodwill, premises, furniture, etc., and the Manager and the former staff of the Stafford Bank were taken over by the National Bank. Profits earned at the Wolverhampton Branch were merged in and formed part of the general profits of the National Provincial Bank without distinction as to source or origin of profits. Held, that there was a "succession" by the National Provincial Bank to the business of the Stafford Bank.

Per M. of R.—" (Mr. Danckwerts) relies upon the authority of a case decided in Scotland of Ferguson v. Aikin as showing that it is and must be a question of fact whether there has in point of fact been a succession or not. It may be in many cases, or in some cases at all events, a question of fact. But it seems to me for the reasons I have already given that if it was a question of fact for the Commissioners in this case they have deliberately not decided it. They have presented to us a problem of law, and they have given us the benefit of their opinion upon it, and if we do not agree with that we are entitled to say so. In my view if this is a finding, as I think it must be, of law that there is no succession within the meaning of the Rule, I find myself unable to agree with it for the reasons I have given. The fact that in a particular case, which was a rather exceptional case, in Scotland (which I need not go into) the Court held that the Commissioners having found that there was no succession in point of fact, they were bound by that decision and disinclined to go behind it, in my opinion presents no difficulty in this case", Bell v. The National Provincial Bank of England, Ltd., 5 Tax Cases 1; (1904) 1 K.B. 149.

To constitute succession the new business and the old one should be identical and not merely similar. Where X and Y who had been supplying dock labour to a port trust joined their resources on the termination of their respective contracts and supplied labour thereafter to the port trust jointly, though using the name, premises and employees of X, and there was no transfer of assets or liabilities it was held the new joint business was not identical with the previous one of X or of Y. In Bell v. National Provincial Bank, supra, and in Best & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 55 Mad. 832; A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 484, the previous business which included premises, clients, goodwill, etc., passed over to the successor whereas in this case neither X nor Y had any assets or goodwill to hand over to the joint business, Kannappa Naicker & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1937 I.T.R. 49.

Under its Articles of Association a Steamship Company could own only one ship at any one time, but was empowered on the loss or disposal of such ship to acquire and trade with another ship. The "Merchiston", the first ship owned by the Company, was lost in April, 1906, and in the following month an order was given for another ship, the "Veraston", which commenced her first voyage in October, 1906. Held, that the business of the Company was continuous.

Per Bray, J.—"I only say with regard to the finding of the Commissioners that it seems to be based entirely upon a misapprehension, and therefore I cannot look upon their finding as a distinct finding upon a question of fact upon which there is no appeal. I think I have all the facts before me and can determine what is the proper conclusion of law to be drawn from them", Merchiston Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Turner, 5 Tax Cases 520; (1910) 1 K.B. 713.

Before the outbreak of the Great War in 1914 a Company had been engaged in completing old contracts entered into by a firm of contractors whose business it had been formed to take over in 1912. The Company had obtained no fresh contracts itself. The business premises of the Company were closed down during the year 1913, and offered for sale, but without success. The premises were eventually taken over and ultimately purchased by the War Office in December, 1914. From December, 1914, until February, 1920, the Company had neither works nor plant, but during that period persistent and continuous efforts were made by its directors on its behalf to obtain contracts. Their efforts however were unsuccessful until early in 1920 when, as the result of the introduction of fresh capital into the Company and the adoption of a different business policy, a number of profitable contracts were obtained, and fresh plant acquired. All through, the Company had retained its registered office and held its annual statutory meetings regularly and paid the secretary's salary and directors' fees. It had also spent substantial sums, including those incurred by the directors in connection with their abortive efforts to obtain contracts. The Commissioners held that there was no trade carried on by the Company between 1914 and 1920, that the trade which was taken over by the Company was discontinued in 1914, and that a fresh trade was set up and commenced in 1920. Held, that the question involved was one of law; and that there was no discontinuance of its trade.

Per Rowlatt, J.—"Because in the middle of a great career a Company or still more an individual professional man, might have a year when he was holding himself out for business or the Company was holding itself out for business but nothing came, yet that would not effect a break in the life of the company for Income-tax purposes. It is not a question that the field of business was not precisely the same . . . I think that really it is a question of law in the sense that the Master of the Rolls laid down in Bell's case (Bell v. National Provincial Bank of England, 5 Tax Cases 1; (1904) 1 K.B. 149); the finding is that upon the construction of the Rule the case is not within it. It is not really a question of fact or even of mixed law and fact", Kirk and Randall, Ltd. v. Dunn, 8 Tax Cases 663.

A steam drifter employed in herring fishing was taken over by the Admiralty compulsorily on hire, and it was held that notwithstanding the different use to which the ship was put by the Admiralty the owner carried on the same business as before, viz., using the ship for profit in ordinary shipowning business, Sutherland v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1918) S.C. 788; 12 Tax Cases 63.

A firm of timber merchants and saw-millers bought a saw-mill which also did joinery business and transferred to that place the direction of their own business. At the time the saw-mill was acquired, there was acute trade depression and there were no current orders with the mill. The purchasing firm took over no books, no list of customers and none of the staff, except a few woodmen. The new firm could not even identify whether orders came from the customers of the vending firm or not. The price paid for the concern was based only on the value of the tangible assets but the contract of sale referred to it as including goodwill. Also, a joint circular was issued by the purchasing and selling firms together that the purchasing firm succeeded to the business. Held, that the question whether there was a succession was a question of fact, the Commissioners having held that there was a succession in respect of the joinery business.

Per the Lord President.—"I do not propose to attempt a definition of 'succession' . . . but it is, I think, safe to say two things about it. In the first place, it does not include the accidental acquisition by a trader, who continues in business, of the custom left by another who goes out of business. A trader might give up or go out of the trade for some reason without attempting to realise or transfer goodwill and the result of that might be the capture of some custom theretofore attached to him by one or more of his competitors who continued to trade. . . . On the other hand—and in the second place—I think the word 'succession' does cover any case of the transfer by one trader to another of the right to that benefit which arises from connection and reputation. The question whether there is in any particular case a 'succession' or not is a question of fact," Thompson and Balfour v. Le Page, 8 Tax Cases 541; (1924) Sess. Cas. 27.

In Fullwood Foundry Company v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 9 Tax Cases 101 (see also Humphries v. Cook, 13 A.T.C. 649 (K.B.D.); 19 Tax Cases 121), also it was held that succession was a question of fact and that the Court could not interfere if there was any evidence before the Commissioners to support their finding. Whether on the facts as found there is a succession within the meaning of statute is, however, a question of law, Naraindas & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 116; Commissioner of Income-tax v. Zaveri, 1937 I.T.R. 664; A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 102.

A Company which was started in 1919 went into voluntary liquidation at the end of 1922. On 21st February, 1923 the liquidators agreed to sell to a new company all the assets; and the agreement to transfer the business was effected on the 20th July, 1923. The new company was taxed for the period 1st of April, 1922 to the 31st March, 1923. Held, that, on the facts, there was no 'discontinuance' of the business but only a 'transfer or succession', and that section 25 (3) did not apply, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. M. H. Sanjana & Co., Ltd., 2 I.T.C. 110; 50 Bom. 87; A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 129.

A partition took place in a Hindu family doing business, the sons separating from the father. The account books of the family business remained with the father, who continued the business in its old name and had the right to realise old outstandings. No branch was closed. Held, that there was a succession and not discontinuance, Kalu Mal Shori Mal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 3 I.T.C. 341; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 461. This ruling and that in Sanjana & Co's case above referred to, as also that in Hanutram Bhuramal's case, 1938 I.T.R. 290; referred to under section 25, were approved by the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, v. Polson, 1945 I.T.R. 384.

On the other hand, where in a firm with six partners and four businesses, there was a dispute among the partners and one of them locked up two of the shops, and the other five started two firms in different places, and the dispute was eventually settled by arbitration, the sixth partner being bought out by the other five, who were to restore the assets and discharge the liabilities, and the old trading name was not to be used by any one, it was held that the old firm had discontinued its business and that there was no succession thereto. Hariram Gopinath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 357.

To 'succeed' another within the meaning of this section it is necessary that the successor should succeed to the business as a whole; if the business is split up and a part thereof carried on by some one else, the latter does not succeed to the business, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. N. N. Chettyar Firm, 1934 I.T.R. 83; A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 13. Where a Hindu undivided family of two brothers with its headquarters in British India carried on moneylending in several places in Burma, Malaya and India, and the family was partitioned, and a partnership composed of the two divided brothers took over the moneylending business in Burma, the Income-tax authorities claimed that there had been a succession. This claim was negatived by the Rangoon High Court on the ground that all the facts—and not merely those relating to Burma—were to be considered. The continuity related only to a part of the family business, which was not 'succession' under section 26. In this case, it would seem, the business of the family in Burma was not a separate business by itself apart from its business elsewhere. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. A. L. V. R. P. Firm, 1940 I.T.R. 531. In other words when only a part of the business is taken over, no one can be said to succeed the predecessor "in such capacity" as required by the statute, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, v. Zaveri, 1937 I.T.R. 664;

A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 102. Where, however, a business is run in several branches independently of each other, though under a single ownership i.e., of a partnership and the business is divided between the quondam partners, the business in each branch being continued without interruption, the case would be one of succession, Income-tax Appellate Tribunal v. Bachraj Nathani, 1946 I.T.R. 191 (Nag.). If there is no continuity in the business, and if one business has come to an end and another starts after some time, the latter is not a 'succession' even though the new business may be in the same premises and with the same assets, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. N. N. Chettyar Firm, 1934 I.T.R. 83; A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 13. This criterion of continuity however, is not an unfailing or universal test, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Zaveri, supra.

The interval or delay is really a question of degree and it may well be that the delay means merely a cesser of profit-making operations and not of the business as such. The real test is the identity of the two businesses; and the reasons for closing down and for re-opening would often indicate the solution. Accordingly, where a firm of two partners was dissolved owing to financial difficulties and one of the partners (assessee) carried on, without any serious interruption the same kind of business on a smaller scale in the same premises, there being, however, a slight change in the name of the business and the settlement by the firm of the major creditors, while at the same time the other partner gave up all claims to outstandings, stock-in-trade, furniture and trade marks in favour of the assessee, it was held that there was a succession, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Zaveri, supra.

On the other hand, where a sole agent and distributor of a manufacturer for an area took over the sole agency of a contiguous area from another agent with the permission of the manufacturer and in doing so took over stocks and rights under hire-purchase agreements and paid the manufacturer outstanding royalties and the previous agent for the goodwill, it was held that the goodwill being really that of the manufacturer who alone could appoint agents the case was not one of succession but of a simultaneous cessation of a business and the opening of a new one, Tolaram Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 680 (Sind).

This does not however, mean that the transfer of an agency business cannot form a succession in any circumstances, e.g., even if the business was transferred as a going concern including all assets. So, when an agent of General Motors (India) Limited, took over the agency of other areas and along with the latter, the rights, stocks, outstandings, etc., for all of which he paid the previous agent a substantial price, it was held that there was a succession. Commissioner of Income-tax v. Naraindas and Co., 1939 I.T.R. 305 (Sind).

A business formed largely of employees of a previous business, and conducted in different premises, the former business having been given up by the owner and the premises pulled down, the new business not taking over any assets, stock or book debts, contracts or liabilities of the old business, nor having paid anything for the goodwill but dealing mainly with the customers of the former business, was held to be a case of discontinuance and not of succession. One test, suggested by Rowlatt, J., was whether a business is split up according to categories or according to customers: in the latter case the business is dissipated, Mills from Emelie, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 73.

One cannot separate business simply because customers are separate or they pay on different bases. The more important tests are whether the accounts are the same and include all the transactions, whether the actual management and control are the same. There may be a succession to a business even though one of the previous partners takes away part of the custom.

A business in the hands of a company was advertised for sale and went into liquidation. A firm connected with the old directorate bought the stock-in-trade and premises but, for certain collateral reasons, placed a very small value on the stock-in-trade. There was no interregnum and the old servants continued under the new employers. Nothing was said about bad debts and trade liabilities. The Commissioners held that "the appellants acquired no more than certain premises together with a very small amount of stock and proceeded to carry on therein a trade similar to but not identical with that formerly carried on by the company." Rowlatt, J., declined to interfere, Wilson and Barlow v. Chibbett, 8 A.T.C. 174; 14 Tax Cases 407.

To constitute succession, it is not necessary that the assets of the predecessor should be acquired by the successor. On the other hand, even though goodwill be one of the assets so acquired, the case is not necessarily one of succession. There is no conclusive test, and it is of a question of fact in each case with reference to all the circumstances. The gap in time between the old and the new businesses may sometimes be an important clue, Reynolds v. Ogston (C. of A.), 9 A.T.C. 8; 15 Tax Cases 501; on the other hand, the interval must be considered with reference to all the circumstances, and the mere length of the interval cannot be conclusive. It is a question of degree and therefore of fact. In Wild v. Madam Tussaud's Ltd., 17 Tax Cases 127, the Court refused to interfere with the finding of the Commissioners that even though the interval between the closing of the exhibition to the public and its re-opening under a new management was about three years, there was a succession to the business, in view of other facts in the case, e.g., the continuous restoration of the models, the transfer of the staff to the new management, etc.

It is not necessary however that the successor should take over the selling organisation and book debts of the predecessor; what is necessary is that the business should be taken over as a going concern and this is a question of fact, Malayalam Plantations v. Clark, 19 Tax Cases 314.

"If any person succeeds to a trade" means "if any person takes over and continues a trade as that trade", and the words therefore cannot cover a case of incorporation of a wholesale (or manufacturing) trade in a retail one. The fact that the wholesale (or manufacturing) trade before the alleged succession was carried on entirely with a parent company by its subsidiaries is not relevant to the question of whether the parent company has succeeded to the trade of its subsidiaries, Laycock v. Freeman, Hardy and Willis, 17 A.T.C. 287 (K.B.). If, in this case, the subsidiaries had bought all the leather from one source, and if the leather-maker had acquired the business of the subsidiaries and carried it on it might have been possible to hold that there was a succession. See Briton Ferry Steel Co. v. Barry, 1941 I.T.R. (sup.) 122 (C.A.). In the case of Freeman, Hardy and Willis, all that was left of the activities of the subsidiaries was mere manufacture, (without sale), which, by itself, could not produce profits; there was no profit providing activity to succeed to; whereas in Briton Ferry Steel Co.'s case in which the manufacturer of raw materials acquired the subsidiaries which had previously bought from him and converted the raw materials into finished bars he succeeded to a profit-earning activity. It would have made no difference to the business of the subsidiaries if they had made the steel bars themselves instead of buying them from the parent Company.

Where an individual sold his jute mill to a private company in which he held almost all the shares and claimed that the business had been discontinued because: (a) there was a gap of a few days between the cessation of his business as an individual and the commencement of business by the company; and (b) the outstandings and liabilities of the business (which, incidentally, nearly cancelled each other) had not been taken over by the company, the Commissioner held that there had been a succession, there having been no winding up of the old business which was carried on in the same way as before and with the same name and practically the same staff, the High Court declined to interfere, In re Babulal Raj Garhia, 1936 I.T.R. 148 (Cal.).

There may be a succession even though there is no document transferring the goodwill etc. Again the fact that business intended to be carried on by the predecessor in two places is carried on by the successor at one place only will not in itself make the new business a different one from the old. What is required is positive evidence that they are different. In re Gregory & Co., 1937 I.T.R. 12 (Cal.). The question of succession is at bottom a question of fact, though whether a particular set of facts constitutes succession within the meaning of the statute is a question of law.

G an expert jute buyer carried on the business of G. and Co. for some years with R as partner and then for some years with R's son as partner. In 1928-29, J. K. a firm came in as partner in place of R's son and this continued till July, 1931, when C another firm took J.K.'s place. The partnership agreement was renewed every year. G was the expert and working partner and the other was the financier. The business always used the name and mark of "G. & Co." In its dealings with the Income-tax authorities as with other outsiders, the firm had always acted as though the business was a continuous one. In connection with its assessment for 1932-33 the firm contended that there had been no succession because; (a) there was no formal transfer; (b) the business was intended to be done at two places under the preceding partnership whereas the succeeding one did business only at one; and (c) there could be no succession to a part of a business. Derbyshire, C.J., held that the case fell neither under section 26 (1) nor under section 26 (2), and Costello, J., held that it fell under the former while Panckridge, J., held that it fell under the latter since the former applied only when a change occurred in the constitution of the firm or a new firm was constituted during the currency of the partnership. In this case the new firm came after the termination of the old one. In re Gregory & Co., 1937 I.T.R. 12 (Cal.).

A receiver on behalf of debenture holders who takes possession of the property charged by the debentures and carries on (or concurs in carrying on) the business of the Company does not succeed to the business of the company since there is no cessation by the latter, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Thompson, 20 Tax Cases 422 (K.B.); (1937) 1 K.B. 290.

Where an assessee conducting a hire-purchase business sold his business to a company and the company agreed to collect on his behalf the sums already due and sums becoming due thereafter on the already existing hire-purchase transactions, it was held that the assessee had set up a new trade. Parker v. Batty, 1942 I.T.R. (sup.) 162 (K.B.D.).

Evidence.—Whether on the facts, there is succession within the meaning of section 26 is a question of law. Naraindas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1937 I.T.R. 116; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Zaveri, 1937 I.T.R. 664; Hariram Gopinath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 367. To enable a successor to be taxed, there must be some evidence to show that he succeeded; it is not sufficient that the predecessor carried on the business and that the alleged successor has not produced evidence that he is not carrying on the business. Haj Ghulam Hussain v. Commissioner of Income-tax, N.-W.F.P., 1942 I.T.R. 405.

Discontinuance—Part of business—Question of fact.—‘Discontinuance’ like ‘succession’ is a question of fact. Whether a firm carried on one business or more than one—which is often a preliminary issue in determining whether there has been discontinuance or not—is also necessarily a question of fact to be determined by the Income-tax authorities. In Howden Boiler and Armaments Company v. Stewart, 9 Tax Cases 205; (1925) Sess. Cas. 110, the Company, originally a firm of boiler-makers, manufactured armaments and gave up the latter business after some time. The General Commissioners held that it was all one business though with two departments (as all the accounts were brought into a single account) and the High Court declined to interfere on the ground that the question was one of fact.

Part of business—Discontinued—How treated—Set-off.—If there are two separate businesses or professions carried on by the assessee and, one is discontinued, this section should evidently be applied as though there were two separate assesseees conducting each business but at the same time the assessee should evidently not be deprived of the ‘right of set-off’ under section 24. That is, two separate assessments should be made as though there were two assesseees and the assessments consolidated.

Profession—Discontinuance of.—A barrister does not discontinue his profession and commence a new one by becoming King’s Counsel, Seldon v. Thomas, 16 Tax Cases 740; (1932) 1 K.B. 759.

25-A. (1) Where, at the time of making an assessment under section 23, it is claimed by or on behalf of any member of a Hindu family hitherto assessed as undivided that a partition has taken place among the members of such family, the Income-tax Officer shall make such inquiry thereinto as he may think fit, and, if he is satisfied that the joint family property has been partitioned among the various members or groups of members in definite portions, he shall record an order to that effect :

Assessment after partition of a Hindu undivided family.

Provided that no such order shall be recorded until notices of the inquiry have been served on all the members of the family.

(2) Where such an order has been passed, or where any person has succeeded to a business, profession or vocation formerly carried on by a Hindu undivided family whose joint family property has been partitioned on or after the last day on which it carried on such business, profession or vocation, the Income-tax Officer shall make an assessment of the total income received by or on behalf of the joint family as such, as if no partition had taken place, and each member or group of members shall in addition to any income-tax for which he or it may be separately liable and notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) of section 14, be liable for a share of the tax on the income so assessed according to the portion of the joint family property allotted to him or it ; and the Income-tax Officer shall make assessments accordingly on the various members and groups of members in accordance with the provisions of section 23 :

Provided that all the members and groups of members whose joint family property has been partitioned shall be liable jointly and severally for the tax assessed on the total income received by or on behalf of the joint family as such.

(3) Where such an order has not been passed in respect of a Hindu family hitherto assessed as undivided, such family shall be deemed for the purposes of the Act to continue to be a Hindu undivided family.

History.—This was first inserted in 1928 to fill a lacuna in the Act. Certain drafting amendments intended to make the section more accurate and clear were made in 1930.

Two important changes were made in 1939, viz., (a) all reference to the separation of members was omitted, reference being retained only to the partition of the joint property; and (b) it was made clear that if a business etc., of a joint family had been succeeded to by some one else before its joint property was partitioned, this section should be applied. The latter is consequential on the alteration of section 26 which taxes predecessors and successors on what they respectively receive.

Object.—In the absence of this section it is not possible to assess a Hindu undivided family on the profits of the period dating from the last day up to which the family has been assessed up to the date of partition. This is because while section 14 exempts the members, the family as such cannot be got at having ceased to exist.

Question, when to be raised.—The question of status of the family or of a member should be raised at the time of assessment and cannot be raised for the first time before the Assistant Commissioner on appeal (still less before the Commissioner, or Appellate Tribunal or the High Court), Karamchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 313; 12 Lah. 714; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 601.

Procedure.—Since the enquiry is such as the Income-tax Officer “may think fit”, he has a discretion as to how to conduct it in the best manner in the circumstances of the case and as to the evidence to be heard. His decision is a question of pure fact, Bansidhar & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1938 I.T.R. 95; A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 154.

It is open to the Income-tax Officer to suspend orders on an application under section 26-A by members of a Hindu family until the assessment proceedings are held. If at that time, a claim is made under section 25-A, it is the duty of the officer to decide whether there has been a separation of the members and a partition of the property within the meaning of that section. If his finding is in the affirmative, and if he then finds that a firm has been formed by the separated units which have come into existence, he will proceed under section 26 and register the firm under section 26-A, In re Sundar Singh Majithia, 1938 I.T.R. 336; A.I.R. 1938 All. 452. If on the other hand his finding about the separation is in the negative, or to the effect that no new firm has come into existence, he can refuse to recognise the alleged firm, Lachiram Baldeodas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1936 I.T.R. 279.

Until an order has been passed under sub-section (1), the family is deemed under sub-section (3) to be joint and no order will be made under sub-section (1), unless a claim is made by a member of the family, Chhedilal Nandkisore v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. 1942 I.T.R. 61 (Oudh); Sirdar Indra Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. 1943 I.T.R. 16. An assessment under section 23 (4) in earlier years will not render section 25-A inapplicable, i.e., will not alter the presumption of jointness under sub-section (3), Chhedilal Nandkisore v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. Before the Income-tax Officer recognises a partition he should give an opportunity to all the members of the family (including member-groups). The Income-tax Officer need not take the initiative in the matter. As regards the service of notice, see section 63.

Liability to tax.—It should be noted that each member of the family has to bear his share of the tax payable by the family in respect of the broken period in addition to any tax payable by him otherwise than as a member of the family.

It will be observed that though each individual member or family has to pay his or its share of the tax of the undivided family, the rate of tax in respect of that share is that applicable to the undivided family. The share of income from the family can not be aggregated with other income in order to fix the rate of tax payable by the members.

This section applies only where the family as such ceases to exist and not where there has been only a division of part of the property. In re Sirdar Singh Majithia, 1942 I.T.R. 457 (P.C.). See notes below as to what constitutes ‘partition’ for the purpose of this section. Where there is only a partial partition, and a part of the property continues to belong to the family, while the rest belongs to a partnership composed of the members, section 25-A will not apply, since the family continues to exist. There are two entities, viz., the family and the firm, and separate assessments have to be made on them. The firm, if genuine, cannot be ignored R. B. Dandhania v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1944 I.T.R. 126. There is nothing in law to prevent the members of a family which has disrupted from parting with undivided assets either to themselves or to a stranger; and where businesses are individually allotted to and carried on by divided members, the fact that the partition was ultimately settled by an arbitration award of a later date will not necessitate the income of their businesses being assessed on the family even after they have been made over to individual members. Waman Satwappa Kalghatgi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1946 I.T.R. 116.

Partition synchronous with succession by firm.—The section provides only for cases of partition as such, and where partition is simultaneously accompanied by other incidents, e.g., succession to a business, other sections, e.g., section 26 have to be considered but where partition synchronises with succession, sections 25-A and 26 read together make it clear that the profits of the aggregate period of assessment have first to be apportioned between the predecessor family and the successor firm, and that the tax on the profits of the former are to be recovered rateably from the divided members.

The combined effect of sections 25-A and 26 has been the subject of divergent views, as the following summary of rulings will show:—

If the partition of a Hindu family is accompanied by a succession in the family business, the section to be applied is clearly section 26 and not section 25-A. The person succeeding to the business cannot escape liability unless he can bring himself within some exempting section, V. R. S. A. R. Arunachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 57 M.L.J. 300; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 769; 3 I.T.C. 441. Where, simultaneously with the break up of a Hindu undivided family the separated members form themselves into a firm, the case is regulated by section 26 and not by section 25-A so far as the separated members are concerned, Beliram Bros. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1935 I.T.R. 243; A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 278; 8 I.T.C. 380.

In another case, the Madras High Court held that the word 'succession' as used in section 26 (2) connoted a transfer of ownership; there was, therefore no 'succession' where the business of a Hindu undivided family devolved on a coparcener by survivorship under Hindu Law, Jupudi Kesava Rao v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1935 I.T.R. 339; 9 I.T.C. 64. The same principle was followed by the Madras High Court in another case, and also by the Bombay High Court, Chinna Pullayya v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1937 I.T.R. 132; 9 I.T.C. 377; Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Jesinghbai Ugarchand, 1938 I.T.R. 25; A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 350, in both of which cases firms were formed by members of a Hindu family after disruption and the Courts directed assessments under section 25-A and not under section 26 even though the Income-tax Officer was satisfied that new firms had been formed. The Bombay High Court, while doubting the correctness of the Madras rulings, followed them more for the sake of uniformity.

This view however was dissented from by the Lahore and Allahabad High Courts, Ramrakhamal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 137; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 830; Jugal Kisore Mukatlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1938 I.T.R. 494. In the case before the former, the members of a family, without effecting a complete partition among themselves, formed themselves into a company and it was held that the latter could be assessed under section 26 (2) while, simultaneously, the family also could be assessed on the rest of its income, i.e., from other sources than the business, etc., succeeded to by the company. It is not possible for a firm or a company to succeed a Hindu undivided family as a whole so long as the latter has not been completely disrupted but it is possible to have partial succession, i.e., in respect of a particular source of income by a company or other association. According to this view, section 25-A applies only when the case is one of pure and simple disruption of a family without the formation of a firm or other association for profit. If a firm or other association has been formed, it does not matter whether the firm owes its origin to certain individuals, strangers to one another, entering into a contractual relationship and agreeing to constitute a firm, or to a joint Hindu family, whose members divided among themselves and who then decided to form themselves into a firm. In either case, if at the time of assessment a firm or other association has come into existence, section 26 will apply.

The Madras High Court, however, in a later case, Kotha Govindarajulu Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1944 I.T.R. 97 overruled the two earlier rulings. When a Hindu undivided family separates and its members carry on the family business in partnership the business is no longer owned by the family but by the firm. The case is therefore one of succession under section 26 (2), and consequently the benefit of section 25 (4) is admissible. See also Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Saran Singh Ram Singh, 1946 I.T.R. 152.

Date of partition.—The date of partition for the purpose of section 25-A is the date when partition of the properties in definite portions has been completed; until then, the family is deemed to continue joint for the purpose of this section. Madam Gurumurthi Chetti v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1944 I.T.R. 176. Where the Income-tax Officer accepts the fact of partition but not the date thereof, it is open to the assessee to raise the question on appeal against the assessment as a whole, i.e., in Form B of appeal since he cannot appeal in Form C, there being no refusal on the part of the Income-tax Officer to recognise the fact of partition, Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Lachhminarain Bhadani, 1944 I.T.R. 355.

Families wrongly assessed.—Section 25-A can be applied to cases in which previous assessments had been made wrongly as if on a Hindu undivided family and there having been in truth no such family, the property having been self acquired and individual, if the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that there is a partition and a claim is made under section 25-A by the persons concerned, Sardar Bahadur Indra Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1943 I.T.R. 16. Section 25-A does not come into the picture when the Income-tax Officer wishes to act under section 34 in order to assess a person who has been wrongly assessed in the first instance as a Hindu undivided family, but ought to have been assessed as an individual. There is, therefore, no need for the Income-tax Officer to issue any notice under section 25-A. Ramaswami Iyengar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1944 I.T.R. 29. Nor does section 25-A apply when a trust has been created out of the property of a Hindu undivided family, even though some of the beneficiaries may be members of the family. Estate, Harendra Kumar Roy v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1944 I.T.R. 68.

Onus of proof.—The members of a Hindu family claiming to be treated as a partnership must first establish that the family has been dissolved. If they admit that for all purposes other than the business in question they continue to be joint, evidence that they had no ancestral property or that the father built up the business by himself are irrelevant, Bansidhar & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1938 I.T.R. 95.

The fact that, at an earlier stage, the so-called partition was a camouflage will not justify the Income-tax Authorities completely ignoring a subsequent suit for partition in the family and an award in that suit. In re Gulab Singh Johri Mal, 1946 I.T.R. 246 (Lah.).

Separation or partition.—Sub-section (1)—as it stood before 1939—required that there should be a separation in status and also a partition of property in definite portions. The reference to definite portions was construed in one case to refer to division by metes and bounds, Saligram Ramlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 7 I.T.C. 354; 1934 I.T.R. 448 (Lah.). On the other hand it was considered in another case that it was immaterial whether the property was held in defined shares or divided by metes and bounds, so long as there was a complete disruption of the family, Biradhmah Lodha v. Commissioner of Income-tax U.P., 1934 I.T.R. 164; 56 All. 504; A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 81; In re Sir Bissessar Das Daga, and others, 1936 I.T.R. 66. The question came before a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in Sher Singh Nathuram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 479 who ruled that a division by metes and bounds was not necessary and that the words “partitioned in definite portions” really meant “partitioned in definite shares”. It was not sufficient for the purposes of this section that there had been a mere disruption of the family; on the other hand, it was not necessary that there should be a division by metes and bounds. What was required was disruption of the family plus the definite ascertainment of the shares of the members whether by consent or otherwise, Sher Singh Nathuram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 479. The ruling in Saligram Ramlal's case, 1934 I.T.R. 448, supra, was not discussed and was therefore not formally overruled. According to the Patna High Court the Income-tax Officer had not to enquire into the separation or disruption of the family, notional or otherwise; he merely had to enquire into the question of whether the family property had in fact been divided, Lachiram Baldeodas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1936 I.T.R. 279. This last decision has been codified by the amendment in 1939.

In a Mitakshara family, by a mere claim to partition, a division of interest may be effected among coparceners so as to disrupt the family and extinguish all right of succession by survivorship. Till the shares are determined, or partition made by metes and bounds, which may take time, the family property will belong to the members as in a Dayabhaga family, i.e., in effect as tenants-in-common. If the property has been partitioned in definite portions, assessment will be apportioned and made individually on the members, notwithstanding section 14 (1), but holding all the members jointly and severally liable for the total tax of the family; if not so partitioned, the family is deemed to continue. Sirdar Sundar Singh Majhiha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1942 I.T.R. 457 (P.C.).

In Gordhandas Mangaldas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1943 I.T.R. 183, the Bombay High Court dissented from Sher Singh Nathuram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 479. In reference to ‘property’, the words ‘portion’ and ‘share’ are not synonymous; the former refers to a part of the property itself while the latter refers to the interest of an individual in the property. A room is a portion of a house, not a ‘share’ in it. Though physical division may not be possible in all cases i.e., a business, there should be a division into 'definite portions', i.e., clearly identifiable portions.

Res judicata.—The recognition by the Revenue in a given year, of partition of the family does not preclude the Revenue from treating the family as joint in later years if there is evidence for such a finding, Mathradas & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1933 I.T.R. 212; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 815. Similarly the failure of the assessee to seek the help of this section in one year will not prevent his seeking it in a later year, Biradmal Lodha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., (All.), 1934 I.T.R. 164; 56 All. 504; Sher Singh Nathuram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 479; A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 81. In re Sir Bissessar Das Daga, and others, 1936 I.T.R. 66. See also rulings under section 23 as to res judicata.

Received, in sub-section (2) does not necessarily mean cash receipt, nor does it exclude 'accrue' or 'arise'. The actual quantum of total income would be determined with reference to sections 4, 13, 16 and other relevant sections.

By or on behalf of the joint family as such.—The words are intended to draw a clear line between the joint income and other income.

Questions of fact and law.—See notes under section 2 (a) as to how far the status of a Hindu family is a question of fact or law.

26. (1) Where, at the time of making an assessment under section 23, it is found that a change has occurred in the constitution of a firm or that a firm has been newly constituted, the assessment shall be made on the firm as constituted at the time of making the assessment:

Provided that the income, profits and gains of the previous year, shall for the purpose of inclusion in the total incomes of the partners, be apportioned between the partners who in such previous year were entitled to receive the same :

Provided further that when the tax assessed upon a partner cannot be recovered from him it shall be recovered from the firm as constituted at the time of making the assessment.

(2) Where a person carrying on any business, profession or vocation has been succeeded in such capacity by another person, such person and such other person shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (4) of section 25, each be assessed in respect of his actual share, if any, of the income, profits and gains of the previous year :

Provided that, when the person succeeded in the business, profession or vocation cannot be found, the assessment of the profits of the year in which the succession took place up to the date of succession, and for the year preceding that year, shall be made on the person succeeding him in like manner and to the same amount as it would have been made on the person succeeded or when the tax in respect of the assessment made for either of such years assessed on the person succeeded cannot be recovered from him, it shall be payable by and recoverable from the person succeeding and such person shall be entitled to recover from the person succeeded the amount of any tax so paid.

History.—This section has been completely recast twice since 1922, once in 1928 and again in 1939. A major change was made in 1939 introducing the principle of taxing predecessors and successors on what they respectively were entitled to receive.

The amendments in 1939 restore the main part of sub-section (1) to substantially what it was before 1928, but the question raised in Mellor's case, 1 I.T.C. 320 (Bom.), viz., whether the apportionment between partners should be with reference to the position on the date of assessment or to the position in the previous year when the profits under assessment were earned, will not now arise since the proviso makes it clear that the apportionment should be made with reference to what each partner was entitled to receive during the previous year.

The question which arose formerly with reference to succession, viz., whether tax should be levied from the successor (in respect of the profits of the period relating to the predecessor) with reference to the predecessor's status, (viz., registered or unregistered firm, individual, company, etc.) or the successor's status—a matter of considerable importance with reference to Company super-tax and taxation of unregistered firms, does not arise now, because both predecessor and successor will now be taxed each in respect of his actual share. The rate of tax to be borne will depend on the respective statuses of the predecessor or successor, e.g., whether unregistered firm or company or individual or Hindu joint family. The rate will obviously be the rate laid down by the Finance Act in force at the time of the assessment. Formerly the whole question was one of difficulty. The Allahabad High Court held in Begg Sutherland & Co.'s case, 2 I.T.C. 30; 47 All. 715; A.I.R. 1925 All. 535 and Nehalchand Kisorilal's case, 2 I.T.C. 338; A.I.R. 1927 All. 327, that the old section was only bare machinery and that tax was to be recovered from the successor with reference to the status of the predecessor while the Bombay High Court held in Western India Turf Club's case, 2 I.T.C. 227; 52 Bom. 640; A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 1, that the tax was to be recovered with reference to the status of the successor. The Privy Council in the Western India Turf Club's case supported the Bombay view on the ground that tax is imposed only by the Finance Act which may be long after the date of succession, and no one can say at the latter date what tax will be payable on a future date after a new Finance Act is passed. Old sub-section (2) incorporated this decision (see also Hitkari Bros. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 135 and Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. P. R. A. L. M. Muthukarappan Chettiar, 1939 I.T.R. 29, the latter extending the principle of assuming that the successor had owned the business in the previous year), but as already stated, this question does not arise now.

'At the time of making an assessment'.—These words simply mean 'in the course of process of assessment', and do not refer to the 'previous year'. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., v. Maharaja of Darbhanga, 1944 I.T.R. 116.

Computation of income.—Section 26 is not concerned with the computation of income but with who is liable to pay the tax. The relevant sections have to be applied for the purpose of computation; and in respect of set-off and carry forward of losses, section 24 should be applied Commissioner of Income-tax B. & O. v. Maharaja of Darbhanga, 1944 I.T.R. 116.

Change in constitution—Firm.—The first sub-section applies only to those cases in which a change has occurred in the constitution of the firm or a new firm has been constituted. Other cases fall under the second sub-section.

'Change in the constitution of a firm' means a change in the personnel of the partners and not merely a change in the proportions of the shares of the partners, In re Moolji Sicka, 1938 I.T.R. 234 (Cal.).

The date on which a partnership is dissolved is a question of fact. Even though an agreement may provide for the dissolution on a certain date, the partnership may in fact continue beyond that date, Faraday (Michael), Rodgers and Eller v. Carter, 11 Tax Cases 565.

Regarding the assessment, on majority, of minors admitted to the benefits of partnership, see notes under section 16 (3) and in re Chimanbhai Lalbhai, 1944 I.T.R. 199 (Bom.).

Assessment.—In sub-section (1) the word refers evidently to the determination of total income though the word 'assessed' has been used with reference to tax in the second proviso. The recovery of tax will be determined by the provisos read with section 23. Thus, if either firm is unregistered and treated as such, tax will be recovered from the firm itself, the partners getting immunity under sections 14 and 56 from taxation a second time. Or, if the tax cannot be recovered from a partner in a registered firm (or unregistered firm treated as registered), it will be recovered from the firm as such.

Previous year.—Both the sub-sections assume continuity of the firm's previous year; and if the change in the firm or succession synchronises with a change in the accounting year, the case will be dealt with by the Income-tax Officer under section 2 (11), who will record an order regarding the conditions on which the change was permitted, see notes under section 2 (11).

Apportionment.—Under the first sub-section the function of the Income-tax Officer is first to determine the total income of the firm during the period covered by the assessment, i.e., from the last date of the last previous year already assessed to the end of the previous year under assessment (this period may be more or less than 12 months if a change of 'previous year' has been permitted) and then to ascertain the amounts which each partner (or either old or new firm if unregistered and treated as such) was entitled to receive.

If the firm is throughout unregistered or both the firms are unregistered, the question of apportionment between partners will arise only with reference to sections 14, 16 and 56, since the firm or firms and not the partners would be themselves taxed. If both the firms are unregistered, the profits of the period must obviously be apportioned between them in the first instance before the respective shares of the partners are determined for the purpose of sections 14 and 56.

Under the second sub-section also, the position is the same if both the predecessors and successors are firms.

Whether a change in personnel of the partners is merely a change in the constitution of the firm or amounts to succession by a new firm is a question of fact. On the death of a partner, new partners were taken and the same business was continued in the same premises under the same name and management. The assets and liabilities of the old firm were however taken over by the new firm only after nineteen months. The Appellate Tribunal agreed with the Income-tax Officer that there had only been a change in the constitution of the firm, and the High Court declined to interfere, Ghella Dayal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 133.

Actual share—i.e., what he is entitled to, irrespective of what he may have actually received; the share is of the profits of the 'previous year' (as computed for income-tax purposes) of the business, etc.

Thus, if a registered firm consisted of partners A, B & C with equal shares and carried on business throughout the year ended 31st January, 1939 (the previous year for 1939-40 assessment), its total profits amounting to Rs. 30,000, and if on 1st May, 1939, A retired and D came in as a partner, taking over A's share, the assessment for 1939-40 would be made on this firm B C D because that is the firm as constituted at the time of assessment; but the profits of the 'previous year' having been determined, these profits would be divided for assessment purposes between A, B & C (and not between B, C & D). A, B & C would each be assessed on Rs. 10,000 while D will pay no tax in respect of the profits for the year ended 31st January, 1939, assessed in 1939-40.

In the assessment for 1940-41, if there were no further change in partnership up to 31st January, 1940, the profits would be divisible as follows:—

- A— $\frac{1}{3}$ proportion of the profits firm 1st February to 30th April, 1939.
- B— $\frac{1}{3}$ of the profits of the whole year ending 31st January, 1940.
- C— $\frac{1}{3}$ of the profits of the whole year ending 31st January, 1940.
- D— $\frac{1}{3}$ proportion of the profits for the period 1st May, 1939 to 31st January, 1940.

(Income-tax Manual).

Hindu undivided family—Associations of individuals, etc.—Section 25-A deals with the assessment of Hindu undivided families immediately after partition. Section 26 (1) deals with changes in the constitution of a firm; and section 26 (2) with all cases of succession to a business, profession or vocation. There is no provision for cases of changes of membership or constitution of other associations of individuals.

As regards the scope of the two sections when members of a Hindu family divide and then form a firm or other association, see notes under section 25-A.

Business, profession or vocation.—As regards the meanings of these expressions, see notes under sections 2 (4) and 4 (3) (vii). Though the first half of the section, viz., that which relates to the change in the constitution of a firm, applies to all cases irrespective of what are the activities of the firm and its sources of income, it must be remembered that a firm's activities can only embrace business, profession or vocation, see the Indian Partnership Act, 1932. The second part of the section applies in terms only to cases of succession to business, profession or vocation. Where a person succeeds to income under other heads than from a business, profession or vocation, this section will not apply, and the taxing authorities can only tax the actual person who received the income in question or to whom it accrued and not the person who has succeeded to the property or securities or income from other sources, as the case may be.

In such capacity.—These words are important, and when, on the facts, any difficulty arises as to the legal construction of the words “succeeded in such capacity” a question of law arises. See rulings referred to under section 25.

Subject to the provisions of section 25 (4).—Where that section is applicable, the predecessor will not be taxed at all, and may even be eligible for refund.

Succession.—As to what constitutes succession, see rulings referred to in the notes under section 25.

Where one of the partners takes over the business of the firm, the section applicable is section 26 and not section 44, the case being one of succession. S. M. S. Karuppiah Pillai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1941 I.T.R. 1.

The transfer should be effective; and a mere agreement to transfer the business, etc., will not bring section 26 into operation. Also the transfer should precede the assessment if the section is to apply, Baghavandas Harikrishnadas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1938 I.T.R. 176.

Partial succession.—Old sub-section (2) was also applied to cases of partial succession, i.e., to succession to one business among several, (Ramarakhmal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 137; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 830 and other cases referred to below); and there seems to be no reason why the new sub-section (2) should not be similarly applied. In fact the general plan of the new section of taxing each person on what he gets makes it less difficult to extend the section to cases of partial succession.

While there can be no partial succession to a business, i.e., to a part of a business (as distinguished from succession to one of several businesses of the same person), Stockham v. Wallasey District Council, 95 L.T. 834; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. N. N. Firm, 1934 I.T.R. 83; A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 13, it is not necessary that the successor should succeed to each and every business of the predecessor. The extension of the principle of M. Ar. Ar. Arunachalam Chettiar's case, 1 I.T.C. 278; 47 Mad. 660, i.e., ‘any business’ in section 10 each and every business, to cases under section 26 would lead to absurdity. The scheme of the Act is to avoid assessing two persons in respect of the same business for the same period and to assess the one who can be more properly and conveniently assessed; Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Best & Co., Ltd., 55 M. 832; 6 I.T.C. 271; A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 434. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind thought that because the English law stressed the succession to a business while the Indian law referred to a “person” and “in such capacity,” the latter required the predecessor to be wiped out before there could be a succession. In view, however, of the instructions in the Income-tax Manual to the contrary and the doubtful nature of the issue, the Court decided to give the meaning more favourable to the tax-payer, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Sind Light Railway Co., 138 I.C. 673; A.I.R. 1932 Sind 189.

Business outside British India.—Before section 4 was amended in 1939, there had been doubts as to how far section 26 applied to firms outside British India.

See V. R. S. A. R. Arunachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 57 M.L.J. 300; 3 I.T.C. 441; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 769 (F.B.). Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. P. R. A. L. M. Muthukaruppan Chettiar, 1939 I.T.R. 29; A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 376. The amendment of section 4 in 1939 has resolved these doubts.

'Escaped' income of predecessor.—Under the pre-1939 law income which had escaped assessment in the hands of the predecessor in business, etc., could be taxed under section 34 in the hands of the successor. It was immaterial for this purpose whether the succession took place before or after the close of the year in which the income escaped assessment. The only important dates were the date of assessment and the year of account, Nachal Achi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1933 I.T.R. 277; A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 63; Ram Rakhamal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 137; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 830. These decisions are now obsolete. Under section 26 (2) the predecessor and the successor is each assessed on his actual share, and the predecessor's tax can be recovered from the successor only if the former can not be found.

Taking the converse case even under the pre-1939 law, the fact that the predecessor had been wrongly taxed on profits taxable on the successor would not entitle the successor to exemption to that extent; he had to meet his liability and it was for the predecessor to obtain refund of tax if he was eligible thereto. Karuppiiah Pillai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1941 I.T.R. 1.

Set-off.—As to set-off of losses in cases of succession, see notes under section 24.

Carry forward of losses.—See section 24 and notes thereunder. Such carry forward is inadmissible in cases of succession, unless succession is by inheritance.

Notice to successor.—The proceedings against the successor do not require to be initiated with a de novo notice under section 22 (2) or section 34. It is sufficient if the predecessor had received the notice, for such notice automatically attracts all the provisions of sections 23 and 26, Nachal Achi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, supra; Ram Rakhamal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, supra. The words "at the time of making an assessment" simply mean "in the course of the process of assessment"; and the word 'assess' is not used here in the restricted sense of making an order of assessment. The process of assessment begins with the service of a notice under section 22 (2) and continues till an order of assessment has been made. A successor therefore cannot escape liability on the ground that since his predecessor could not be assessed under section 23 (owing to death in this case) no assessment could be made on the successor, Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1934 I.T.R. 345 (P.C.). Section 24-B was not in existence at the time this case was decided. The present plan of section 26 is not inconsistent with this ruling.

Cannot be found—i.e., by the Income-tax authorities after reasonable efforts. The same applies to 'cannot be recovered'. Where the partners of the predecessor in a firm are alive and their addresses are known, it cannot be said that they "cannot be found". Under section 2 (6-B), the words 'firm' etc. have the same meanings as in the Indian Partnership Act; and under section 4 of the latter, persons who have entered into partnership are called individually partners and collectively a firm. Merely because the Income-tax Act treats a firm as a separate entity for certain purposes it does not follow that for all purposes it should be treated as a judicial person, Commissioner of Income-tax v. National Cycle Importing Co., 1941 I.T.R. 502.

Limitation of one year.—This limitation overrides the limitation laid down in section 34. In cases of succession, the successor can be proceeded against on account of the predecessor's income which escaped assessment only to the extent of one year over and above the year of succession.

It should also be noted that the tax in respect of such predecessor's income as escaped assessment should be levied with reference to the predecessor's status though it is recovered from the successor.

Indemnity.—In view of section 65, the concluding part of the proviso to sub-section (2) seems to be superfluous. It was added by the Select Committee in 1939 out of abundant caution. The mode of recovery by the successor is that which is permissible to him under the ordinary law, viz., set-off of debts or appropriation of predecessor's other monies or suit as the case may be.

Splitting up and amalgamation of business.—The old section, i.e., before 1939 presented certain difficulties when two or more firms coalesced into a single firm or company, i.e., where two or more businesses or professions were merged; see Hassana Labbai & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 3 I.T.C. 341; or if a part of a business only was transferred and the predecessor continued to carry on the business. But these difficulties cannot arise now since the present section proceeds on the simple plan of taxing both predecessor and successor on what each respectively is entitled to receive out of the profits of the combined period.

Unabsorbed depreciation.—As regards the right of a successor to the unabsorbed depreciation allowance carried forward from the predecessor, see rulings under section 10 (2) (vi).

Interest paid to retiring partner.—Where one or more partners leave a firm in the year of assessment receiving their capital with interest to the date of leaving, the surviving partners cannot claim to deduct from the profits of the firm the interest paid to the retiring partners, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Karuppaswami Mooppanar, 1934 I.T.R. 284; 7 I.T.C. 283.

Revaluation of assets.—No deduction can be claimed on account of revaluation of assets as a result of reconstruction of partnership, K. A. R. K. Chettyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 7 I.T.C. 44; A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 1.

Succession by inheritance.—This section applies to all kinds of succession and is not restricted to cases of succession inter vivos, Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 123; 12 Pat. 5, affirmed by the Privy Council in 13 Pat. 607; 61 I.A. 312; 1934 I.T.R. 345. In cases of succession by inheritance, the tax payable by the predecessor in respect of the period during which he was alive should evidently be recovered from whoever is responsible for it under section 24-B, i.e., not necessarily the successor; but section 24-B is not intended to over-ride section 26 and where both are applicable, i.e., in cases of business, etc., it is the latter that should be applied. Ramaswami Iyengar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1943 I.T.R. 610.

United Kingdom Law.—The law about the computation of profits in cases of succession in the United Kingdom is complicated and has undergone several changes, the most important being in 1926. See for example Inland Revenue v. Gibbs, 1942 I.T.R. 12 (Supp.).

The only relevant rules and decisions under the United Kingdom law are those relating to the difference between 'discontinuance' and 'succession' which have been referred to under section 25. See also notes under section 44.

26-A. (1) Application may be made to the Income-tax officer on behalf of any firm, constituted under an instrument of partnership specifying the individual shares of the partners, for registration for the purposes of this Act and of any other enactment for the time being in force relating to income-tax or super-tax.

Procedure in registration of firms.

(2) The application shall be made by such person or persons, and at such times and shall contain such particulars and shall be in such form, and be verified in such manner, as may be prescribed; and it shall be dealt with by the Income-tax Officer in such manner as may be prescribed.

Rules.

R. 2. Any firm constituted under an Instrument of Partnership specifying the individual shares of the partners may, under the provisions of section 26-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter in these rules referred to as the Act), register with the Income-tax Officer, the particulars contained in the said Instrument on application made in this behalf.

Such application shall be signed by all the partners (not being minors) personally and shall be made—

- (a) before the income of the firm is assessed for any year under section 23 of the Act, or
- (b) if no part of the income of the firm has been assessed for any year under section 23 of the Act, before the income of the firm is assessed under section 34 of the Act, or
- (c) with the permission of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner hearing an appeal under section 30 of the Act, before the assessment is confirmed, reduced, enhanced or annulled, or
- (d) if the Appellate Assistant Commissioner sets aside the assessment and directs the Income-tax Officer to make a fresh assessment, before such fresh assessment is made, or
- (e) before or after the dissolution of the firm in respect of the assessment or assessments to be made on its income up to the date of dissolution:

Provided that where an application is made under clause (e) after dissolution of the firm it shall be signed by all persons who were partners in the firm immediately before dissolution and by the legal representative of any such person who is deceased.

R. 3. The application referred to in rule 2 shall be made in the form annexed to this rule and shall be accompanied by the original Instrument of Partnership under which the firm is constituted, together with a copy thereof; provided that if the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that for some sufficient reason the original Instrument cannot conveniently be produced, he may accept a copy of it certified in writing by all the partners (not being minors) or where the application is made after dissolution of the firm, by all the persons referred to in the proviso to the said rule to be a correct copy, and in such a case the application shall be accompanied by a duplicate copy.

NOTE.—This application must be signed personally by all the partners (not being minors) in the firm, or if made after dissolution of the firm, by all persons (not being minors), who were partners in the firm immediately before dissolution and by the legal representative of any such person who is deceased.

R. 6-A. On receipt of an application under Rule 6 the Income-tax Officer may, if he is satisfied that the application is in order, grant to the assessee a certificate signed and dated by him in the following form:—

"The registration of the firm of _____ granted on _____ is renewed by me and will remain effective for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March 19 ____."

If the Income-tax Officer is not so satisfied, he shall pass an order in writing refusing to renew the registration of the firm.

R. 6-B. In the event of the Income-tax Officer being satisfied that the certificate granted under Rule 4 or under Rule 6-A has been obtained without there being a genuine firm in existence he may cancel the certificate so granted.

History.—This section was introduced in 1930. Formerly the conditions and the procedure were regulated by the definition in section 2 (14) and the rules framed thereunder.

Changes in 1939.—Important changes were made in 1939 in the rules relating to the registration of firms. Firstly it is now necessary for all the partners to apply for registration and for renewal thereof; and the Income-tax Officer has no power to dispense with the signature of any of the partners even if sufficient cause be shown. Secondly, full details have to be given in the application not only of the constitution of the firm at the date of application but also of the apportionment of profits of the previous year under assessment. Thirdly, the rules codify (what was always implicit and recognised by Courts—see rulings quoted below) that a condition precedent to registration is the Income-tax Officer's being satisfied that there is a firm in existence as shown in the deed of partnership. Fourthly, what is a corollary from this, the rule explicitly provides for the cancellation of registration made by mistake when there is no genuine firm in existence, neutralising the decision in Sir Bissessar Daga's case, 1936 I.T.R. 66 (Nag.). And lastly, an order of refusal to register should be in writing, the partners having a right of appeal under section 30.

Refusal to register.—An appeal lies under section 30 against the refusal of the Income-tax Officer to register a firm; so, the order of refusal should be in writing and communicated to the firm.

The remedy against refusal to register a firm is only through an appeal under section 30, and not through a civil suit against the Crown, Governor-General in Council v. Mulla Muhammad Bhai, etc., 1945 I.T.R. 10 (Nag.).

Cancellation of Registration.—Rule 6-B does not require the income-tax Officer in terms to pass in writing his order cancelling the registration.

Section 30 provides a right of appeal when registration is cancelled under section 23 (5), but not when it is cancelled under Rule 6-B. The latter cancellation is evidently equivalent to refuse to register, and therefore appealable as such.

Firm, what is a.—See section 2 (6-B) and notes thereunder as to what is a firm, what conditions it should satisfy, etc.

Enquiry by Income-tax Officer.—The Income-tax Officer has power to call for evidence as to the reliability of the instrument of partnership produced before him and to refuse registration if he is not satisfied about the genuineness of the partnership, Bissessaral Brijlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 4 I.T.C. 365; 57 Cal. 1336; A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 449; Jattu Shah Nattu Shah v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 575; 14 Lah. 134; 6 I.T.C. 162; Ghansyamdas Ramkumar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1933 I.T.R. 215; 6 I.T.C. 198; Raghu Karson v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 5 I.T.C. 389; Sookina Bhoy Salee Bhoy v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 6 I.T.C. 13; A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 116; Haji Ghulam Rasul Khudu Bux v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 506; In re Sir Sundar Singh Majithia, 1938 I.T.R. 336; A.I.R. 1938 All. 452; Hafiz Abdul Ghafar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 1939 I.T.R. 625; In re Central Talkies Circuit, 1941 I.T.R. 44 (Bom.), or about the existence, in law, of one, Hoosen Kasim Dada v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1937 I.T.R. 182. The onus is on the applicant to prove the genuineness of the partnership, see Bissessaral Brijlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 4 I.T.C. 365 and cases quoted above. It is similarly for him to prove that a partnership has come into existence and that it is to be assessed instead of a Hindu undivided family, Lachiram Baldeodas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1935 I.T.R., 279; Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Goshta Behari Sadhukhan, etc., 1946 I.T.R. 219; In re Gulab Sing Joharimal, 1946 I.T.R. 246 (Lah.). Whether the partnership is a sham is a question of fact; and if it is not a sham and is in law a valid partnership, the motives of the partnership are irrelevant, Mulla Fida Ali Sultan Ali v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1937 I.T.R. 615; Lukhmanjee v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 1943 I.T.R. 164.

Application when to be made.—The rule on this point had been altered many times before 1928 from which date it is substantially in its present form. According to the Income-tax Manual, the words 'No part of the income has been assessed' in Rule 2 (b), refer to cases in which the whole of the income of the person in question had escaped assessment altogether until proceedings were started under section 34. They do not apply to a case in which proceedings have been taken under section 23 in respect of the income of any person and owing to that person's concealing part of his income or owing to a part of his income having escaped assessment for any reason, he has either been declared not liable to tax, or been under-assessed.

In Hussainbhai Bohari v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 43, it was held by the Additional Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, that a certificate of registration granted before April in respect of the year commencing 1st April is not void.

Assistant Commissioner's powers.—The Appellate Assistant Commissioner cannot himself register the firm but only condone the delay and permit the Income-tax Officer to accept the belated application. The power of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner is discretionary and not amenable to the jurisdiction of the High Court unless perversely exercised, Chiranjilal & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 44.

Registration—Application for—Signature of.—An application made by an agent of the partners would not be adequate, and the registration of the firm on such an application is ultra vires and void, C. T. A. C. T. Nachiappa Chettiar v. Secretary of State and another, 1933 I.T.R. 330; 7 I.T.C. 1; 11 Rang. 380; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 229. A firm was registered in Burma and assessed as such on the application of the local agent. At that time one of the partners was dead. The son of the deceased partner who was assessed in Madras to super-tax on the share of profits of the firm representing his father's interest objected to the registration as being illegal, but the Burma authorities would not cancel the registration. On a reference to the Madras High Court it was held that the assessment made in Madras was correct since the firm continued to be a registered one, and that the assessee's remedy was to file a suit in Burma to get the registration annulled, A. C. T. Nachiappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 5 I.T.C. 374.

The hint was taken and a suit filed which went to the Rangoon High Court on second appeal. That Court considered that the Madras Income-tax authorities ought to have determined for themselves whether the assessee was in fact a partner in the firm and the registration was or was not ultra vires. The registration was in this case ultra vires because there had been a change of partnership (a partner having died) and this fact was not disclosed to the Income-tax Officer at the time of registration, and also because the application for registration had been signed only by an agent, C. T. A. C. T. Nachiappa Chettiar v. Secretary of State, 1933 I.T.R. 330; 11 Rang. 380; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 229; 7 I.T.C. 1.

The signature of the application by a clerk would not suffice; and the certificates would have to be completed by the partners, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Gelli Krishnamurthy etc., 1940 I.T.R. 121.

It should be noted that since 1st April, 1939, applications for registration have to be signed by all the partners. According to the Madras High Court, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Rao Bahadur Ravulu Subba Rao etc., 1946 I.T.R. 232, the word 'personally' excludes an authorised agent; section 2 of the Powers of Attorney Act, 1882, only states a general rule, which cannot override the specific provision in Rule 6 of the Income-tax Rules. In practice, however, some relaxation seems to have been made especially in respect of persons who cannot be easily reached on account of the war; and the Income-tax Officer satisfies himself on the statements of the other partners that the absentee partners' share has been duly credited to him.

Invalid partnerships.—The Income-tax Officer can only register the partnership specified in the instrument produced before him. Therefore, if some of the partners cannot be partners, e.g., a Mutawali of a Wakf or a minor, the Income-tax Officer cannot treat the partnership as one subsisting between the remaining partners and register it; nor can the wakf or the minor be treated a partner in a loose sense and the partnership registered, Hoosen Kasim Dada v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1937 I.T.R. 182.

Fictitious firms.—Where it was alleged that certain gifts had been made out of the capital of his business by a person to two of his employees and his two sons and that these sums had been reinvested by these four persons in the business which had thereby become a partnership of five persons, and under the law the gifts had to be made in accordance with the Transfer of Property Act but were not, it was held that the alleged firm could not be registered as such, Abba Dada & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1938 I.T.R. 470; A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 435.

A firm consisting of the kartas of three Hindu families admitted eleven more members, viz., their wives and their daughters-in-law. The Income-tax Department held that the new membership was fictitious and intended only to reduce tax and therefore refused to register the firm. Thereupon, the firm transferred its rights to a firm in another province composed of the same three kartas and their ten sons; and the Income-tax Officer considered this transfer also to be fictitious; and the High Court declined to interfere the question being one of fact, Bhagavandas Harkishandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 1938 I.T.R. 176.

By registering a firm, an Income-tax Officer is not estopped from enquiring whether the alleged partner is the real partner or not. Kirpaldas Motandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind, 1942 I.T.R. 505. Section 26-A is a procedural section, and does not affect the liability of a partner to tax which is determined by sections 3 and 4. An assessment can therefore be made on a basis different from what has been registered under section 26-A. Shapurji Pallonji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1945 I.T.R. 113 (Bom.).

On the placing of section 16 (3) on the statute book, a family firm dropped out the minors and brought in an old lady of the family; and in view of the following facts viz., (1) the lady was given a very large share in the profits without any reason or consideration; (2) the firm did not need the finance which the lady was alleged to have brought in; (3) she could not account for the source of the money; (4) apart from section 16 (3), there was no apparent ground for the change in the firm; the Income-tax authorities held that the change in the firm was not genuine and the High Court declined to interfere. In re Central Talkies Circuit, 1941 I.T.R. 44 (Bom.). While an assessee is at liberty so to arrange his affairs as to attract the least tax, the transactions on which he relies must be genuine.

Instrument of partnership—Registration of.—The instrument to be produced before the Income-tax Officer to secure the registration of a firm need not be a registered instrument under the Indian Registration Act. The registration by the Income-tax Officer has nothing to do with registration under the Registration or Partnership Acts. The Income-tax Officer as such is not concerned with the fact that the document is insufficiently stamped or requires to be registered under the Indian Registration Act and need not reject such documents as not being legal evidence since they are not adequately stamped nor accept them as being legal evidence merely because they are properly stamped or registered. His duty is to satisfy himself that the transaction evidenced by the instrument is genuine and then act accordingly. He is not bound by the technicalities of the Indian Evidence Act—see notes under section 23. As a Public Officer, however, it is incumbent on the Income-tax Officer to impound a document that comes before him if it is insufficiently stamped—see section 33 of the Indian Stamp Act.

Hindu undivided families.—As to members of Hindu joint families forming themselves into firms and being thus eligible for registration as firms under this section, see notes under sections 2 (6-B), 2 (9), 25-A and 26. If the Income-tax Officer finds that there is no contractual relationship between the assesseees, he cannot register them as a firm, Piyarelal and others v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1933 I.T.R. 215; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 827; 7 I.T.C. 31. If there has been partial partition and in respect of the partitioned properties a genuine firm has been formed out of the members of the family there are two entities viz., the family and the firm, and the firm is entitled to be registered if it complies with all the other requirements of the law. R. B. Dandhania v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1944 I.T.R. 126.

Deed of partnership—Which to be produced before Income-tax Officer.—Ever since 1928 when section 26 was amended so as to cover both super-tax and income-tax, the deed of partnership to be produced before the Income-tax Officer is in all cases the deed in force at the time of assessment or rather application. For the purpose of apportionment between partners, however, if the case falls under section 26 (1), there having been a change in the partnership, the older partnership deed also may have to be produced if necessary. The registration is valid only for the year to which it relates and has to be renewed every year by fresh application.

Deceased partner.—If one of the partners mentioned in the instrument of partnership is dead and, nevertheless, his name is included in the application for registration, it will be open to the Income-tax Officer to refuse registration, Banjee & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 8 I.T.C. 107; Chiranji Lal & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 44. Where a partner dies before the application for registration is submitted, the persons to sign the application are the partners at the time of application. The changed partnership will be dealt with under section 26 (1), and the assessment will be made on the firm as constituted at the time of making the assessment but the apportionment between partners will be based on the shares in the 'previous year'.

Penalty for not distributing profits.—See section 28 (2) as to the penalty leviable if the profits of a registered firm are distributed otherwise than in the manner set out in the instrument of partnership disclosed to the Income-tax authorities. The registration of a firm cannot be refused on the ground that no disclosure has been made as to when profits will be distributed. Leaving profits in the business does not invalidate a partnership; the test is whether the partners can draw their shares when they wish to, Kikabhai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Central Provinces, 4 I.T.C. 178; A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 6.

Instrument of partnership—Whether can be implied.—The following dicta may be noted:

"Ordinarily a contract for a term constituted by a written agreement must be considered as having come to an end at the expiration of the period for which it was entered into; and the contract during the term differs from that which arises from the continuance of the relation by the mutual consensus of the parties after the term has expired. The one is to last for a certain term; the other only for so long a time as they both shall choose. Am I then by any principle of law bound to assume or justified in assuming that all the special articles and conditions in the original written deed of partnership for a term are at once transferred by law to this new contract which has no particular limit to the time of its duration? That would be a wrong and extravagant assumption, and one that is not warranted by any principle or authority," Per L. C. Westbury in Clarke v. Llach, 1 D.G.J. & S., p. 44.

"There is no doubt about the law that, when there is a partnership for a term of years, and it is afterwards, after the expiration of the term, continued at will, the rule, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, is that it may be presumed that the new business is carried on upon the old terms as far as they are applicable to it, and only so far; and as far as the principle is concerned, I do not think there is any discrepancy between any of the authorities," per Lord Selborne in Neilson v. Mossend Iron Co., 11 A.C. 298.

Following the above—and in the absence of anything in section 256 of the Indian Contract Act to the contrary—the Madras High Court held in M. V. Krishna Ayyar and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 52 Mad. 367; 56 M.L.J. 151; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 67, that where a written instrument of partnership expired and the partnership was continued without any break, or change in personnel, there was no written instrument within the meaning of section 2 (14) of the Income-tax Act to enable the firm to be registered. See also Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Gelli Krishnamurthy, etc., 1940 I.T.R. 121.

Where the trustees of the estate of a deceased partner who are entitled to continue the partnership but are given discretion not to do so or to vary the terms of the partnership decide to continue, even if on identical terms as before, what is formed is a new partnership. The registration of the firm cannot be allowed unless a new instrument is written and produced before the Income-tax Officer. In re Makerwal Colliery, 1942 I.T.R. 422 (Lah.).

Where the shah partner can increase or decrease the number of gumasta partners and actually does so, a new partnership is formed, which should apply for fresh registration if it requires it, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Seth Mangoomal Lunida Singh, 1939 I.T.R. 208.

Letters exchanged may constitute an instrument of partnership. Where the correspondence is silent or incomplete about certain matters, it is necessary to enquire into the subsequent acts of the parties in order to ascertain the nature of the original agreement. In a case in which the Commissioner of Income-tax refused to accept certain letters as constituting an instrument of partnership because the reply of the senior partner did not cover all the points raised by the junior partners, the Calcutta High Court suggested that an opportunity should be given either for the junior partners to waive the other conditions or for the senior partner to accept them, and that the application for registration as amended in the light of the further document could be accepted as if made within time, i.e., on the date of the original application, Hari Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 4 I.T.C. 475; A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 409; 139 I.C. 497.

A complete instrument of partnership, i.e., one not requiring to be supplemented by other evidence, is not necessary for the purpose of registering a firm. In a case therefore in which three partners had executed this instrument and the fourth had died before executing it, it was left to the Commissioner to register the firm if he was satisfied that the dead person had assented to the instrument before his death, In re Ramlal Murlidhar, 58 Cal. 1005. A case of this sort will not arise under the new rules which require all the partners to sign the application unless the application is signed before the partnership instrument.

It was not necessary under the rules, as they were before April, 1939, that the partnership deed should be signed by all the partners; and unilateral agreements executed by gumasta partners in favour of Capitalist partners were adequate for the purpose, Bulchand Keshavdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind, A.I.R. 1930 Sind 301.

Instrument of partnership not conclusive.—Where there was a partnership deed between father and son, minor sons being excluded and there being no capital account nor any capital contributed by the son, and customers were not informed of the creation of the partnership, it was held that the Income-tax Officer had materials before him on which he could find that there was no partnership in existence, Abowath Bros. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma. (1934) 7 I.T.C. 38.

Retrospective partnerships.—When persons enter into a partnership and execute a deed and say that they are to be partners retrospectively, all that is meant is that they take accounts back to the date mentioned. They cannot in any other sense be partners retrospectively. On the other hand, even before the date of the deed, they may have been in fact partners without a formal deed of partnership, and in that case the formal deed either supersedes or confirms the previously existing partnership rights. In all cases it is essentially a question of fact when a partnership commenced, Waddington v. O'Callaghan, 16 Tax Cases 187.

Specification of shares.—A partnership cannot be registered under this section unless the instrument of partnership on the face of it specifies the individual shares of the partners, even if the Income-tax Officer has other knowledge as to the shares. Accordingly, where a partnership was composed of another partnership (of four individuals) and certain (other) individuals, and the instrument of partnership merely showed the aggregate share of profits of the smaller partnership without specifying the shares of each of the four individuals who were members of the partnership, and the Income-tax Officer refused to register the bigger partnership though he had registered the smaller one and knew the respective shares of the partners in it, the High Court upheld the action of the officer, Kannappa Naicker v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1937 I.T.R. 49. Where certain minors were admitted to the benefits of partnership jointly, without vested, and specific shares for each, the rights being governed inter se by survivorship, it was held that the Income-tax Officer rightly refused to register the firm, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Abdulla Sahib, 1942 I.T.R. 7.

Minors as partners.—See the amendment of the definition of 'partner' in section 2 (6-B), so as to include a minor admitted to the benefits of partnership. So long as there are at least two partners competent to contract, the fact that a minor has been admitted to the benefits of partnership will not stand in the way of the registration of the firm by the Income-tax Officer. The Income-tax Manual contains instructions to this effect.

Firms as partners.—See notes under section 2 (6-B).

The following instructions, adopting the rulings in Jaidayal Madan Gopal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1933 I.T.R. 186 (All.), and Chandrikaprasad Ramswarup v. Ditto, 1939 I.T.R. 269 (All.), are found in the Income-tax Manual.

"A firm cannot legally enter into partnership with another firm. It does not, however, follow that because a firm is not a partner in another firm what is described as its share in the profits of such firm is not its income. Although a firm cannot legally enter into partnership with another firm, yet, when two firms do enter into a larger partnership, the larger partnership will be treated as one constituted by the members of the two firms. If registration is applied for by the larger partnership, it would be allowed, provided the firms entering into partnership are also constituted under instruments of partnership specifying the individual shares of partners."

Registration—Cancellation of.—Under section 23 (4) as amended by Act XXI of 1930 it is open to the Income-tax Officer to cancel, after giving fourteen days' notice, the registration of a firm which fails to produce the accounts and documents called for by the Income-tax Officer under section 22 (4) or the evidence relied on by the firm under section 23 (2). The primary object of registration is to tax each partner on his real income, and this cannot be ascertained if the firm defaults in producing the most important evidence for this purpose. In other cases except when there was a change in the partnership between the date of registration and the assessment (about which see below) it was doubtful whether the Income-tax Officer could cancel the registration even if he found later on that the partnership was not genuine, In re Sir Bissessar Das Daga and others, 1936 I.T.R. 66 (Nag.). Rule 6-B makes this ruling obsolete.

Partnership—Change in—Between registration and assessment.—If there is a change in the constitution of a partnership between the date of the registration with the Income-tax Officer and the date of assessment, the question will arise whether the new firm or rather the firm as newly constituted should not be treated as a separate assessee and called upon to make a return of income and register itself if it seeks that privilege. Such questions would be avoided if the Income-tax Officer postponed registering the firm till he was ready to make the assessment.

27. Where an assessee within one month from the service of a notice of demand issued as hereinafter provided, satisfies the Income-tax Officer that he was prevented by sufficient cause from making the return required by section 22, or that he did not receive the notice issued under sub-section (4) of section 22, or sub-section (2) of section 23, or that he had not a reasonable opportunity to comply, or was prevented by sufficient cause from complying with the terms of the last-mentioned notices, the Income-tax Officer shall cancel the assessment and proceed to make a fresh assessment in accordance with the provisions of section 23.

Cancellation of assessment

Previous law.—Under the Act of 1918, the only way in which an assessee could re-open an assessment was to get the appellate authority to pass an order on appeal remanding the case. The reference to "the principal officer" of a company was omitted in 1939 as being unnecessary.

This section is to some extent analogous to Rules 9 and 13 of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code.

'Prevented'—Meaning of.—Though mention has not been made in this section of cases in which the notice under section 22 (2) does not reach the assessee, it will evidently also apply to such cases. Arguably, a person could not be prevented from doing a thing unless he had an intention to do so, and ex hypothesi the assessee could not have intended making a return in the absence of a notice having been served on him under section 22 (2), but it would be more reasonable so to read the section as to permit the re-opening of assessments if the assessee shows that the notice under section 22 (2) did not reach him.

Appeal.—Since 1939, an appeal lies against orders passed under section 23 (4) so that the assessee has the option either of proceeding under section 27 or of lodging an appeal against the assessment itself under section 30. There is nothing to prevent his seeking both the remedies at the same time; and if he does so, it is not clear what will happen if the appellate orders of the Assistant Commissioner and the final decision of the Income-tax Officer under section 27 are in conflict. The Income-tax Manual recognises the right of the assessee to avail himself of both the remedies together.

United Kingdom Law.—In the United Kingdom Law there is no such provision as in this section; but assessments against ex parte or estimated assessments [corresponding to those here under section 23 (4)] can be appealed against.

Onus of proof.—In a proceeding under this section, the onus is upon the assessee to prove that he was prevented by sufficient cause from complying with the various requirements. If he furnishes no evidence, it is open to the Income-tax Officer to refuse to cancel the assessment, and even if he produces evidence, it is for the Income-tax Officer to determine the weight of the evidence. No question of law will arise out of the Income-tax Officer's refusal, Abdul Bari Chowdhury v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 352; 9 Rang. 281; A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 194; A. K. R. P. L. A. Chettyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 182; 9 Rang. 21; A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 97.

There is a passage in Dunkley, J's judgment in Abdul Bari Chowdhury case which suggests that a question of law might arise on the ground of absence of materials for a finding. But the correctness of this view was questioned by the Calcutta High Court, In re Keshardeo Chamria, 1935 I.T. R. 418, in which it followed the judgment of Page, C.J., and that of the Allahabad High Court in Jotiram Sher Singh's case, 1934 I.T.R. 129; 56 All. 933; A.I.R. 1934 All. 559. The refusal of the Income-tax Officer to grant time and his proceeding ex parte will not give rise to a question of law under this section, Sir Hari Singh Gour v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 6 I.T.C. 317.

Where the assessee has failed to comply with one of the notices referred to in section 23 (4), the fact that he had sufficient cause for not complying with another notice is not relevant; and the assessment under section 23 (4) must stand, Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. v. Laxminarain Badridas, 1937 I.T.R. 170.

In proceedings under section 27, it is open to the assessee to challenge and prove the illegality and invalidity of the notices issued under sections 22 and 23. In re Radheylal Balmukund, 1942 I.T.R. 1311 (All.). cf. In re Govindram Sakseria, 1943 I.T.R. 104 (Bom.), referred to under section 23 (4).

Insolvency of assessee.—As to whether an assessment under section 23 (4), not reopened under section 27, can afterwards be reopened during insolvency proceedings of the assessee, see Dinshaw & Co. v. Income-tax Officer Lucknow, 1941 I.T.R. 215 (Oudh) and Governor-General in Council v. Sargodha Trading Co., 1943 I.T.R. 368.

Delaying of orders.—It is not open to the Income-tax Officer to hold over orders under this section until questions of law affecting the merits of the assessment but not the issues arising under section 27 have been disposed of by Courts finally on a reference from a previous assessment, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Bombay Trust Corporation, Ltd., 1936 I.T.R. 323.

Sufficient cause.—An assessee who failed to produce the accounts of a branch before the local Income-tax Officer when he called for them, and promised to produce them before the Income-tax Officer assessing the head office, failed to produce them before the latter officer also on the ground that it was inconvenient to produce the branch accounts at the head office. Held, that the assessee was not prevented by sufficient cause from producing the accounts before the Income-tax Officer.

“The word ‘prevent’ . . . involves some definite active cause, making compliance with the order impossible, and not a passive cause such as the opinion that compliance is not obligatory because of rights supposed to be secured under the Act”, Lachhmandas Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 2 I.T.C. 35 (All.).

In Kajorimal Kalyanmal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 3 I.T.C. 451; A.I.R. 1930 All. 209, the same High Court ruled that the question whether an assessee is prevented by sufficient cause from complying with the notices issued by the Income-tax Officer is a mixed question of fact and law. While the question whether there was sufficient cause is one of fact, Sheo-dattarai Pannalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1941 I.T.R. 118 (All.), the question whether there is evidence at all is one of law. Chaturbhuj v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1941 I.T.R. 286 (Oudh). In Ramkumar Mohanlal's case, 3 I.T.C. 375; 119 I.C. 569; the Allahabad High Court held on the facts of the case that the assessee was not prevented by sufficient cause. The Patna High Court have also taken a similar view, China Rajnilar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 28. The latter High Court have held in the case of a company that the non-audit of its accounts or successive extensions of time granted by the Income-tax Officer up to a certain stage did not constitute sufficient cause for its not filing a return of income in time, Manbhumi Transport Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 6 I.T.C. 203.

In Siva Pratap Bhattadu v. Commissioner of Income-tax, I.T.C. 323; A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 880, Kumaraswami Sastri, J., held in that first instance that it was entirely a matter for the Income-tax Officer to decide whether on the particular facts of the case the assessee had shown sufficient cause and that even if the High Court considered that the Income-tax Officer had judged harshly and made the assessment ex parte the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere under section 66. This was appealed against. On appeal Couts-Trotter, C. J., held that the question was essentially one of fact; but Krishnan, J., held that the discretion vested in the Income-tax Officer under section 27 should be exercised judicially, that the question is one of law and that though it may be open to a High Court to order a reference under section 66, it would not do so unless the discretion was prima facie improperly or illegally exercised. The view taken by Krishnan, J., was also taken by the Rangoon High Court in P. K. N. P. R. Chettiyyar Firm's case, 4 I.T.C. 340; 8 Rang. 203; A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 33, which however was overruled in effect by a Full Bench of the same Court in Abdul Baree Chaudhuri's case, 5 I.T.C. 352; 9 Rang. 281; A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 194. The latter

High Court ruled in A. K. R. P. L. A. Chettiyar's case, 9 Rang. 21; A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 97; 5 I.T.C. 182, that the only question of law that can arise in such cases is whether there was evidence to show that the assessee was prevented by sufficient cause. The Court will not consider whether on the facts the inference of the departmental authorities was correct. The ruling in Abdul Baree's case was followed by the Lahore High Court who decided that the question is essentially one of fact, Nannehmal Jankidas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 333; Vithal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 1938 I.T.R. 264. Questions of law can, however, arise, e.g., the illegality of the notice not complied with and can be made the subject of a reference, Rajmani Devi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1937 I.T.R. 631.

According to the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur, however, the words "satisfies" and "was prevented by sufficient cause" in this section are practically identical in meaning with the similar words in Q. IX, R. 9 and O. XLI, R. 19 of the Civil Procedure Code, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Lakshminarain Badridas Agarwal, 1934 I.T.R. 246; A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 183.

As to whether the time allowed to the assessee for the purpose of compliance with the Income-tax Officer's notices is reasonable, see notes under section 23 (4). Ordinarily the question is one of fact but in extreme cases it may be a question of law whether the time was not too short to be reasonable, In re Sadaram Puranchand, 5 I.T.C. 459; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 729; see also Sacchidananda Sinha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1 I.T.C. 381; 3 Pat. 664.

The following rulings may also be noted though they do not relate to Revenue cases:—

Per Kershaw, C.J., and Fulton, J.—"The Judge had a discretion to decide on the application, and it becomes necessary to enquire (1) what is the meaning and extent of such discretion, and (2) under what circumstances it can be said to be illegally exercised."

In Sharpe v. Wakefield, (1891) A.C. 173 at 179, Lord Halsbury, L.C. observed:

"An extensive power is confided to the justices in their capacity as justices to be exercised judicially; and 'discretion' means, when it is said that something is to be done within the discretion of the authorities that that something is to be done according to the rules of reason and justice, not according to private opinion—Rooke's case, 5 Rep. 100, a, according to law and not humour. It is to be, not arbitrary, vague, and fanciful, but legal and regular. And it must be exercised within the limit, to which an honest man competent to the discharge of his office ought to confine himself—Wilson v. Rastall, 4 T.R. at p. 757. So in Reg. v. Boteler, 33 L.J.M.C. 101, where justices thought proper not to enforce the law because they considered that the Act in question was unjust in principle, the Court of Queen's Bench compelled them by a peremptory order to do the act which nevertheless the statute had said was in their discretion to do or leave undone. So, again, in the case of overseers who were required by 3 and 4 Vict., c. 61, to certify whether applicants for beer licences were real residents and rate-payers of the parish, it was held that they were not entitled to refuse the certificate on the ground that in their opinion, there were already too many public-houses, or that the beer shop was not required. So a discretion which empowered justices to grant licences to inn-keepers as in the exercise of their discretion they deemed proper would not be exercised by coming to a general resolution to refuse a licence to everybody who would not consent to take out an excise licence for the sale of spirits—Reg. v. Sylvester, 31 L.J.M.C. 93."

The general result of the cases is stated by Wills, J., in Sharpe v. Wakefield, (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 66 at p. 80 as follows:—

"So far it is, I think, impossible to contend that there was . . . any limitation upon the absolute discretion of the justices, when applied to for a new licence, to grant or refuse it upon any grounds which to them seem fit grounds to act upon, provided that there is a real judgment exercised in respect of the individual case. I mean to exclude, for instance, a case in which the ground of refusal had absolutely nothing to do with the question in hand, as for instance where the justices refused the licence because the applicant had not taken out a spirit licence—Reg. v. Sylvester, 2 B. & S. 322, or where they had laid down a general rule that they would grant no more licences in the locality—Reg. v. Justices of Walsall, 3 C.L.R. 100. In such cases, there is really no exercise of discretion at all, and it is very much as if the licence had been refused because the applicant wore a blue coat or a white hat. But where it cannot be shown that no real discretion had been exercised, the applicant has, in case of refusal, no other resort, and must submit to his fate."

"Applying this principle we have to consider whether in the present case we are satisfied that the Judge has exercised no real discretion. If he had evidence before him, which would fairly warrant a reasonable man in his position coming to the conclusion at which he arrived, it cannot be contended that he exercised no real discretion. In such a case, there would be no question of law involved, but he would be deciding a question of fact on reasonable and proper grounds which would not entitle this Court to interfere. It has even been decided in such a case that the mere fact that the Court above would have come to a different conclusion is no ground for interference—Ranchodji v. Lallu, (1882) 6 Bom. 304 and Fatima Begam v. Hans, (1887) 9 All. 244", Parvati v. Ganpati, 23 Bom. 516.

Per Sir Arnold White, C.J.—"The test is,—Has the discretion been exercised after appreciation and consideration of all the facts which are material for the purpose of enabling the Judge to exercise a judicial discretion and after the application of the right principle to those facts? If a discretion is exercised under these conditions and a certain conclusion is arrived at, that conclusion is an exercise of discretion judicially sound though an appellate tribunal might be disposed to draw a different inference from the facts", Kichilappa Naicker v. Ramanujam Pillai, 25 Mad. 167.

Per Schwabe, C.J.—" When for some reason a man has not attended a case in Court and there is no sufficient explanation of his absence, the case, by reason of his absence, is allowed to go ex parte. If he comes to Court afterwards and asks that his case may be restored to file, the question to be considered by the Court is not whether by some human possibility, being wise after the event, he could not have got there in time or whether a man who studied his railway guide a little better, would not have got in another train or taken another route, but whether a man honestly intended to be in Court and did his best though in his own stupid way, to get there in time, and once the Court is satisfied, as was the fact in this case, that the man did try to get there and that he would have got there in time but for the intervention of an inevitable accident for which he was in no way responsible, it is the duty of the Court, in my judgment, to set aside the judgment, mulcting, in proper cases, the delinquent man in costs. In all those cases, this universal panacea for healing wounds, as it has been called in England, will properly be applied. It is not right in cases of this kind that the man should have his case disposed of without being heard. These Courts are here so that people who have cases can have those cases heard and determined, and it should never be the intention of the Court that a man should be deprived of a hearing unless there has been something equivalent to misconduct or gross negligence on his part or something which cannot be put right, as far as the other side is concerned, by making the man to blame pay for it . . . ", Arunachala Ayyar v. Subbaramiah, 46 Mad. 62.

28. (1) If the Income-tax Officer, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Appellate Tribunal in the course of any proceedings under this Act, is satisfied that any person—

Penalty for concealment of income or improper distribution of profits.

(a) has without reasonable cause failed to furnish the return of his total income which he was required to furnish by notice given under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of section 22 or section 34 or has without reasonable cause failed to furnish it within the time allowed and in the manner required by such notice, or

(b) has without reasonable cause failed to comply with a notice under sub-section (4) of section 22 or sub-section (2) of section 23, or

(c) has concealed the particulars of his income or deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of such income, he (or it) may direct that such person shall pay by way of penalty, in the case referred to in clause (a), in addition to the amount of the income-tax and super-tax, if any, payable by him, a sum not exceeding one and a half times, that amount, and in the cases referred to in clauses (b) and (c), in addition to any tax payable by him, a sum not exceeding one and a half times the amount of the income-tax and super-tax, if any, which would have been avoided if the income as returned by such person had been accepted as the correct income:

Provided that—

(a) no penalty for failure to furnish the return of his total income shall be imposed on an assessee whose total income is less than three thousand five hundred rupees unless he has been served with a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 ;

(b) where a person has failed to comply with a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 or section 34 and proves that he has no income liable to tax, the penalty imposable under this sub-section shall be a penalty not exceeding twenty-five rupees ;

(c) no penalty shall be imposed under this sub-section upon any person assessable under section 42 as the agent of a person not resident in British India for failure to furnish the return required under section 22 unless a notice under sub-section (2) of that section has been served on him.

(d) When the person liable to penalty is a registered firm or an unregistered firm treated under section 23 (5) (b) as a registered firm, so that the amount of the income-tax and super-tax payable by the firm itself has not been determined, that amount shall be taken to be an amount equal to the tax which would have been payable by an unregistered firm on an income equal to the firm's total income, and, in the cases referred to in clauses (b) and (c), the amount of the income-tax and super-tax which would have been avoided if the income as returned had been accepted as the correct income, shall be taken to be the difference between the amount of the tax which would have been payable by an unregistered firm on an income equal to the firm's total income and the amount of the tax payable by an unregistered firm on an income equal to the income of the firm as actually returned by the firm.

(2) If the Income-tax officer, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Appellate Tribunal in the course of any proceedings under this Act, is satisfied that the profits of a registered firm have been distributed otherwise than in accordance with the shares of the partners as shown in the instrument of partnership registered under this Act governing such distribution, and that any partner has thereby returned his income below its real amount, he (or it) may direct that such partner shall, in addition to the income-tax and super-tax, if any, payable by him, pay by way of penalty a sum not exceeding one and a half times the amount of income-tax and super-tax which has been avoided, or would have been avoided if the income returned by such partner had been accepted as his correct income ; and no refund or other adjustment shall be claimable by any other partner by reason of such direction.

(3) No order shall be made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) unless the assessee or partner, as the case may be, has been heard, or has been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

(4) No prosecution for an offence against this Act shall be instituted in respect of the same facts on which a penalty has been imposed under this section.

(5) An Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Appellate Tribunal on making an order under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall forthwith send a copy of the same to the Income-tax Officer.

(6) The Income-tax Officer shall not impose any penalty under this section without the previous approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.

History.—See section 24 and section 39 (a) of the 1918 Act. Under that Act, penal assessment could be made only “in making any assessment or adjustment”; now, it can be made “in the course of any proceedings under this Act”. The latter would include, for example, cases of refunds under sections 48 and 49 as well as revisional proceedings (before 1941) under section 33, while the former would not.

Sub-section (2) was introduced and consequential alterations made in the other parts of the section in 1930.

Extensive changes were made in 1939, viz., (a) It was made clear that the section applies both to income-tax and to super-tax; (b) the maximum penalty was increased from the amount of tax awarded to one and a half times that amount; (c) the penalty is imposable not only for concealment as before, but for failure to submit returns and in time and in proper manner—whether suo motu under section 22 (1) or in response to a notice under section 22 (2) even for failure to submit accounts under section 22 (4) or evidence under section 23 (2); (d) certain provisos were simultaneously added to mitigate the rigour of the new provisions.

Proviso (d) was added in 1940, in order to fill a gap that existed because under section 23 (5) no tax is payable by the firm.

Commissioner.—The Commissioner has been given no powers now under section 28. In revisional proceedings before him under section 33-A, it is not open to him to pass any prejudicial orders whether under section 28 or otherwise.

Without reasonable cause.—Cf., “sufficient cause” under section 27. The failure need not be ‘wilful’; even gross negligence would bring the assessee within the mischief of this section. There must be some element or circumstances beyond control to eliminate the operation of the section. It would obviously be a question of fact whether there was reasonable cause or not; and while an appeal would lie to the Appellate Authorities and the Appellate Tribunal on this question, no reference would lie to the High Court. Questions of law could however arise about the legality of notices and so forth.

Failure to submit returns.—Sub-section (1) can be applied to all cases of failure without reasonable cause to submit returns whether (1) under section 22 (1) which the tax-payer has to submit suo motu, or (2) under section 22 (2) in response to a notice from the Income-tax Officer or (3) under section 34 in response to a similar notice, and also of failure in all the three cases, (4) to submit the return in time, or (5) to submit them in the manner required.

Even if a return is submitted under section 22 (3) before the assessment is made, the assessee will still be liable to a penalty for not submitting the return in the first instance within the time allowed (by section 22 (1), section 22 (2) and section 34 respectively, as the case may be).

An incomplete or unverified return would not be a return in the manner required, i.e., by sections 23, 34 and Rules 18, et seq.

Failure to submit accounts or evidence.—Failure without reasonable cause to submit accounts or documents in response to a notice under section 22 (2) or to submit evidence in response to a notice under section 23 (2) is also liable to be visited with penalty under this section.

United Kingdom Law.—There are various penalties corresponding to the different circumstances arising under this section: and the plan of the law is not very logical. The Macmillan Committee recommended a radical revision including an option to the tax-payer to have proceedings for penalties dealt with by Courts of law instead of by Income-tax Commissioners. It was held in Attorney-General v. Lloyds Bank (Lillicrap's executor), 1945 K.B.D., that it is no defence against the levy of a penalty to say that the false statements did not in fact give rise to any larger relief than if the true income had been returned. In India, however, the quantum of penalty is a multiple of the tax sought to be avoided, and in such a case no penalty could be levied. On the other hand, a prosecution would lie section 52.

Concealment—Question of fact.—It is clear that it must be a question of fact whether there has been concealment or deliberate misrepresentation. Relevant considerations would be the magnitude of the omitted income, the method of accounting, the nature of the transactions omitted and the evidence adduced by the assessee. So long as there is evidence to support the finding of the Revenue Officers, no question of law can ordinarily arise. In re Lachhmondas Brajballabdas, 1942 I.T.R. 186 (All.); Lachhmandas Mehrchand v. Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, 1944 I.T.R. 432 (Lah.).

While the Revenue authorities ought to act fairly and reasonably according to the circumstances of each case, the quantum of penalty within the maximum limit laid down by this section is a question of fact and not of law, K. M. O. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, (1934) I.T.R. 160; 7 I.T.C. 187; A. A. R. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, (1934) I.T.R. 386 (F.B.); 11 Rang. 75; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 30; 6 I.T.C. 385, and the High Court will not interfere so long as the Income-tax Authorities do not act capriciously or arbitrarily. In re Gopaldas Purushotamdas, 1941 I.T.R. 372 (All.).

For the purpose of imposing the penalty, the true figure of profit is not that estimated by the assessee or shown in his books but that determined by the Income-tax Officer if the books are not reliable. It is also not necessary for the Income-tax Officer to specify each item in detail, or the method of computation or estimate involved in the concealment, Butto Kristo Kamala Saha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 122. The maximum penalty is the difference (now one and a half times) between the tax on the income declared by the assessee and that on the true income assessable under the Act—not merely the tax on the block of income concealed, K. M. O. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, (1934) I.T.R. 160; 7 I.T.C. 187; A. A. R.

Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1934 I.T.R. 386 (F.B.); 11 Rang. 75; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 30; 6 I.T.C. 385.

The evidence required for a penalty under section 28 need not necessarily be stronger than that required for an additional assessment under section 34. Istafakhan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1942 I.T.R. 435 (Oudh). The imposition of penalty, however, is not a matter of guess-work. The Income-tax authority must have before it such evidence as would satisfy a reasonable person that there has been concealment. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Veera Venkataramiah, 1943 I.T.R. 308.

In regard to cases of concealment, the words "and has thereby returned it below its real assessment" have been omitted in 1939, evidently because they were superfluous.

Penalty is in all cases in addition to the tax payable.

Provisos (a) and (b).—It will be seen that the penalty is measured either by the tax payable or by the tax avoided, and in either case, it is obvious that an assessment must be made before the penalty can be levied. Under section 23, no assessment can be made in the event of non-submission of return under section 22 (1) except by service of notice under section 22 (2). If these considerations are borne in mind, the following consequences seem to arise:—

(1) The reference in proviso (a) to a notice under section 22 (2) is superfluous; the proviso merely means that no penalty will be levied on persons with a total income of Rs. 3,500.

(2) If an assessee fails to submit a return under section 22 (1), but submits one under section 22 (2), he will be liable for a penalty in respect of his initial default, even though his later return may be accepted in toto. This may seem harsh but is evidently intended.

(3) Where there is a failure to submit a return even when called for, the penalty will be measured by the 'best judgment' assessment made under section 23 (4); and if eventually, whether as a result of action under section 27 or on appeal, the assessee proves that he has no income liable to tax, proviso (b) will restrict the penalty to a maximum of Rs. 25. On the other hand, this result is not altogether in accord with the wording of the section. Under the substantive part of the section the penalty imposable is a multiple of the tax payable or avoided, and if the latter is 'nil' the multiple must also be 'nil', and there is no need to limit it to a maximum.

(4) If a case is re-opened under section 27 and the assessee has some income or where an assessment under section 23 (4) is reduced on appeal, it is not clear whether the penalty for initial default should be measured with reference to the total income in the original assessment or that in the revised assessment.

Proviso (c).—The object of the proviso is to give the agent of a non-resident a specific opportunity to submit a return of income.

Proviso (d).—Inserted in 1940 fills a gap, for under section 23 (5), no tax is payable by a registered firm or unregistered firm assessed as if registered.

Income.—The word in this section means "assessable income" after allowing for the legitimate deductions or exemptions and not the gross income; and a person cannot therefore escape the penalty under this section merely on the ground that while his 'deduct' entries were false, his gross income was true, Naginchand Shiv Sahai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 534; A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 620.

"In the course of any proceedings".—According to the Allahabad High Court the use of the present tense "has furnished" restricts the power of imposing penalty to cases of concealment during the particular proceeding before the Income-tax authority. It was held therefore in a case in which there was concealment in the original assessment under section 23 but not in the supplementary assessment under section 34 that a penalty could not be levied at the time of the latter assessment in respect of the earlier concealment, Mayaram Durgaprasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 471. In this view an Income-tax authority can levy a penalty only if he detects a concealment then and there, so to speak, as it was made or attempted. Accordingly it was held in another case by the same High Court that where the income was returned wrongly both during the original assessment under section 23 and also during the supplementary one under section 34, that a penalty could be levied in respect of the concealment in the latter, In re Batuk Prasad Khatri, 5 I.T.C. 138.

On the other hand, the Madras High Court have held that if in the course of revision the Commissioner finds on the materials of the original assessment that there had been a concealment, he is empowered to levy a penalty, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Sheikh Abdul Kadir Maracayar, 3 I.T.C. 372; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 257. This was, however, under the pre-1939 Law. The Commissioner, acting under present section 33-A, cannot impose any penalties.

Executors.—The Income-tax department cannot, it would appear, proceed against an executor for penalties in respect of defaults by the assessee when no penalty proceedings were pending against this latter at the time of his death. Cf. Attorney-General v. Canter, 17 A.T.C. 236 (K.B.D.); 17 A.T.C. 488 (C.A.) which arose under a Special United Kingdom Act of 1934 regarding claims by and against the estate of deceased persons.

"Deliberately".—Accidental mistakes cannot be penalised; see also section 22 (3).

Unauthorised Agents.—No penalty can be levied under this section in respect of concealment in a return of income filed by an agent who has no authority to file such return, Raja Sayyid Mahomed Mehdi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., and U. P., 1935 I.T.R. 202; A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 505.

If an Assistant Commissioner refuses to admit an appeal on ground that no appeal lies, the assessment having been made under section 23 (4), there are no proceedings before him in the course of which he can impose a penalty under this section. Also, if against a penalty so imposed, an appeal is made to the Commissioner under section 32 (now, the Appellate Tribunal, under section 33) the latter cannot re-impose the penalty and thus validate the very order under challenge. Similarly, it would not be open to the Commissioner (now, the Appellate Tribunal) to re-impose the penalty when an application is presented under section 66 (2) for a reference to the High Court on the legality of the penalty, Banarsi Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1936 I.T.R. 218; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 585.

Appeal—Right of.—As regards appeal against a penalty imposed under this section by the Income-tax Officer, see section 30; and as regards appeal against a penalty imposed by the Assistant Commissioner on appeal, see section 33. There was formerly (before 1939) no right of appeal against a penalty levied in the course of revisional proceedings by the Commissioner, nor a right of reference to the High Court, Jangi Bhagat Ramavatar v.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 3 I.T.C. 418; A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 418, but if a question of law arose out of the Commissioner's order in revision, a reference lay to the High Court between 1933 and 1939. In exercising the present revisional powers conferred by section 33-A, the Commissioner cannot levy any penalty.

An order whether original or appellate, passed by the Tribunal in respect of a penalty, is final, unless a question of law, arises out of the order, in which case that question can go before the High Court.

Improper distribution of profits.—The object of sub-section (2) is to check evasion of tax, which is possible, by the dominant partner understating his true share in the course of getting the firm registered and thus reducing the tax payable. The words "governing such distribution" must be read with reference to section 26. These provisions will presumably apply also to cases of non-distribution. See, however, Kikabhai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 4 I.T.C. 178, which was decided before this sub-section was introduced.

"Reasonable opportunity".—Whether reasonable opportunity was given or not is a question of fact, Butto Kristo Kamala Saha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 122. Normally, it would be necessary to serve a notice on the assessee, Banarsidas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 218; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 585. Sometimes, the Income-tax Officer may presume that the assessee had 'constructive notice'. As to what this is, it is—

"the knowledge which the Courts impute to a person (upon a presumption so strong of the existence of the knowledge that it cannot be allowed to be rebutted) either from his knowing something which ought to have put him to further enquiry or from his wilfully abstaining from enquiry to avoid notice," per Farwell, J., in Hunt v. Luck, (1901) 1 Ch. 52 (Stroud.).

There is no form prescribed for giving notice to the assessee under this section before he is penalised.

It is not necessary for the Income-tax Officer to wait till the completion of the assessment or other proceeding before he can issue a notice under this section asking the assessee to show cause against his being penalised. The section does not require the Income-tax authority to be satisfied about the concealment before issuing the notice. He need be satisfied only before levying a penalty, In re Batuk Prasad Khatri, 5 I.T.C. 138.

According to section 28, there is no difference between the procedure which the Income-tax Officer should adopt and that which the appellate authorities should adopt. Obviously, the latter can act only after the conclusion of the assessment; therefore, there is nothing to compel the Income-tax Officer to issue a notice under section 28 before concluding the assessment. Guruprasad Shaw v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1944 I.T.R. 233.

'Forthwith' does not mean, at once without the lapse of any interval, but as soon as possible thereafter, R. v. Berkshire Justices, 4 Q.B.D. 469.

Conditions to be satisfied.—Three ingredients make up the conditions precedent to the infliction of a penalty, in cases of concealment of income, viz., (1) In the course of a proceeding, the Income-tax authority must be satisfied that the assessee has deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of his income and thereby returned it below the real income; (2) there must be a determination by the authority that the assessee has so furnished inaccurate particulars; and (3) the authority refuses to accept as correct the income returned by the assessee, In re Mayaram Durga Prasad, 5 I.T.C. 471 (All.).

Evidence as to real income.—Though this section relates, not to the assessment of income for the purpose of levying tax but to the imposition of a penalty, evidence adduced by the assessee purporting to disclose his real income is both relevant and admissible—not for the purpose of varying the assessment but in order to show either that no penalty should be imposed or that it ought to be less than the maximum. The Income-tax authority therefore must not shut out such evidence, A. A. R. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1933 I.T.R. 285; 11 Rang. 75; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 30; 6 I.T.C. 385 (F.B.).

Approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.—Sub-section (6) was added in 1939. Over and above this, the Government announced in the legislature that work in connection with the levy of penalties would be centralised in the Office of the Central Board of Revenue. It should be noted, however, that the levy of penalties can be appealed against to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and the Appellate Tribunal.

The control of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner is purely administrative and he need not give a hearing to the assessee; only the authority levying the penalty is under obligation to hear the assessee. In re Govindram Tansukhrai, 1944 I.T.R. 450 (All.); Lachhmandas Mehrchand v. Appellate Tribunal, 1944 I.T.R. 432 (Lah.).

Revised return—Effect of putting in.—The fact that the assessee has put in a revised return will not absolve him from the penalty under this section if in the original return he had “deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars” of income, etc., irrespective of whether his revised return is valid under section 22 (3) or not, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. A. Rm. A. L. A. Arunachalam Chettiar, 55 M. 827; 6 I.T.C. 58; A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 433.

This decision was given with reference to section 22 (3) as it stood before amendment in 1939. A fortiori, therefore under the new law, a revised return will not save the tax-payer from penalty for concealment in the original return.

The Bill of 1938 as introduced contained an express provision that the submission of a revised return under section 22 (3) shall not operate to prevent the imposition of a penalty under section 28 (1), but the Select Committee omitted the provision in the view that it was unnecessary.

Order when to be passed.—The words “payable by him” mean “to which he has been assessed”, irrespective of whether the amount has been paid or not; and it is open, therefore, to the competent authority to pass an order after the tax has been paid, and it is not necessary for him to do so before the tax is paid, Virbhan Bansilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, (1938) I.T.R. 616; A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 749.

Prosecution.—The second proviso [present sub-section (4)] does not bar a prosecution with reference to other facts. All that it does is to bar a prosecution in respect of the same facts on which a penalty has been imposed under this section. See R. v. Hussain Ally, 1 I.T.C. 48; 43

Mad. 498; 55 I.C. 1003, a case under the 1918 Act relating to a prosecution for failure to produce accounts along with a penal assessment for a false return.

Penalty when proceedings are illegal.—An assessee whose income had escaped assessment was served by the Income-tax Officer with notice under section 34. There was no response to the notice, and the Income-tax Officer assessed him under section 23 (4). An application made under section 27 was rejected, and on appeal against this rejection the Assistant Commissioner held that there had been no valid service of notice. The Commissioner of Income-tax did not set aside the Assistant Commissioner's order but proceeded to re-assess under section 34. Held, that the proceedings under sections 33 and 34 were null and void, and that the Income-tax Officer could not levy penalty under section 28, since there were no proceedings under the Act, Sheik Abdul Kadir Marakayar & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 372; A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 257.

Applicability to super-tax.—The Allahabad High Court ruled that this section being a penal provision should be construed strictly, and that the word 'income-tax' did not include super-tax in the absence of a clear intention to the contrary. In re Batuk Prasad, 5 I.T.C. 138. See however section 58 in this respect which has been the same at all material times. This decision has now been nullified by the amendment of the section in 1939, so as to refer in terms to super-tax.

Jurisdiction of appellate authority to impose or enhance penalty.—See Pitta Ramaswamiah v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 196; 40 Mad. 831; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 49; Malik Damsaz Khan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, N. W. F. P., 1944 I.T.R. 489, in both of which the assessee argued unsuccessfully that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal [both cases under the pre-1939 law when there was no appeal against assessments under section 23 (4)] the assessments, though purporting to be made under section 23 (3) having been really made under section 23 (4) and that therefore there were no valid proceedings before the Assistant Commissioner to enable him to levy a penalty. See also notes under section 31 from which it will be seen that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner has been given power since 1939 to enhance a penalty under section 28 during appeal.

29. When any tax penalty or interest is due in consequence of any order passed under or in pursuance of this Act, the Income-tax Officer shall serve upon the assessee or other person liable to pay such tax penalty or interest a notice of demand in the prescribed form specifying the sum so payable.

Notice of demand.

Rules.—For the Notice of Demand under section 29, see Rule 20.

History.—This section was expanded in 1922 and again completely recast in 1939. Its terms are now wide and it covers all cases in which tax or penalty has to be recovered, on whatever grounds.

The reference to "interest" was made in 1944 consequent on the system of advance payments of tax (section 18-A).

Assessee or other person liable to pay.—Section 2 (2) refers to 'assessee' as 'a person by whom Income-tax is payable'; the reference to 'penalty' in this section and the possibility of tax being recovered from persons other than the legal owners of taxed incomes, e.g., section 16 (3), section 44-D, section 44-F, have led to the use of the words 'assessee' or other person liable to pay. The Income-tax Officer should obviously be supplied with copies of all orders passed by the various appellate (and revisional) authorities and Courts before he can issue a notice of demand with reference to such orders.

Supply of assessment order.—See notes under section 23.

Notice—Service of—Obligatory.—Unless this notice has been first served, no proceedings can be commenced under section 46.

Notice—How to be served.—The notice should be served on the assessee. As to how notices should be served, see section 63.

Time-limit for serving notice.—Where no specific time-limit has been prescribed, the person acting must act as soon as possible, i.e., with due diligence. In two cases, in the United Kingdom—Queen v. Special Commissioners of Income-tax—In re The Cape Copper Mining Company, 2 Tax Cases 332; 21 Q.B.D. 313 and Russell v. North of Scotland Bank, 3 Tax Cases 14—it was held in connection with claims for relief which had to be made "within or at the end of the year" that the sections must receive a reasonable interpretation with regard to the exigencies of business and that everything depended on the particular circumstances of each case. In the second case mentioned, the bank's claim was refused on the ground that it had not exercised due diligence.

"Although no time is prescribed for issuing the notice in question (under section 29) it may be said that such a notice must be issued within a reasonable time. What would be a reasonable time might vary according to circumstances. . . . There is no period of limitation in the Act", Raja Rajendra Narayan Bhanj Deo v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 82; 5 Pat. 13; A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 581.

Though there is no rule prohibiting the issue of separate notices for income-tax and for super-tax, yet since the form of notice of demand shows a simultaneous demand both for super-tax and for income-tax, the demand for super-tax should be made within a reasonable time of the assessment for income-tax; and an interval of two years and four months is an unreasonable time, Khemchand Ramadas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1934 I.T.R. 216; A.I.R. 1934 Sind 46, affirmed by the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Khemchand Ramdas, 1938 I.T.R. 414. Sections 34 and 35 prescribe the only circumstances in which and the only time in which fresh assessment can be made; and fresh notices of demand issued. (Ibid.)

Correction of mistake.—A demand notice simply apprises the assessee of an existing fact, viz., that he has been assessed to tax at a certain figure. Therefore, if a mistake has been made in writing out the notice, a corrected notice can be issued. The fact that, by inadvertence, the sub-section of section 23 under which the assessment was made is wrongly entered in the notice will neither deprive the assessee of the right of appeal if he possessed it nor give him such a right if he did not possess it, In re Pratap Chandra Ganguly (Calcutta), A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 410; 4 I.T.C. 418.

Similarly the issue of a demand notice wrongly headed "section 29" in respect of an order by the Commissioner under section 33 gives the assessee no right of appeal or of a reference to the High Court, Mohamad Farid Mohamad Shafi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 9 Lah. 317; A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 513; 2 I.T.C. 430. But under section 33-A, now, the Commissioner cannot pass an order resulting in an additional demand for tax.

Return submitted after assessment but before issue of demand notice.—See notes under section 22 (3).

Alteration of assessment.—See notes under sections 3, 4 and 5.

30. (1) Any assessee objecting to the amount of income assessed under section 23 or section 27, or the amount of loss computed under section 24 or the amount of tax determined under section 23 or section 27, or denying his liability to be assessed under this Act or objecting to the cancellation by an Income-tax Officer of the registration of a firm under sub-section (4) of section 23 or to a refusal to register a firm under sub-section (4) of section 23 or section 26-A or to make a fresh assessment under section 27, or objecting to any order under sub-section (2) of section 25 or section 25-A or sub-section (2) of section 26 or section 28, made by an Income-tax Officer, or objecting to any penalty imposed by an Income-tax Officer under sub-section (6) of section 44-E or sub-section (5) of section 44-F or sub-section (1) of section 46 or objecting to a refusal of an Income-tax Officer to allow a claim to a refund under section 48, 49 or 49-F or to the amount of the refund allowed by the Income-tax Officer under any of those sections, and any assessee, being a company, objecting to an order made by an Income-tax Officer under sub-section (1) of section 23-A, may appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner against the assessment or against such refusal or order :

Provided that no appeal shall lie against the order under sub-section (1) of section 46 unless the tax has been paid :

Provided further that where the partners of a firm are individually assessable on their shares in the total income of the firm, any such partner may appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner against any order of an Income-tax Officer determining the amount of the total income or the loss of the firm or the apportionment thereof between the several partners, but in respect of matters which are determined by such order may not appeal against the assessment of his own total income :

Provided further that a shareholder in a company in respect of which an order under section 23-A has been passed by an Income-tax Officer, may not in respect of matters determined by such order appeal against the assessment of his own total income.

(1-A) Any person having, in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3-A), (3-B) or (3-C) of section 18, read with sub-section (6) of that section, deducted and paid tax in respect of any sum chargeable under this Act other than interest who denies his liability to make such deduction may appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner to be declared not liable to make such deduction.

(2) The appeal shall ordinarily be presented within thirty days of the payment of tax deducted under sub-section (3-A), (3-B) or (3-C) of section 18 or of receipt of the notice of demand relating to the assessment or penalty objected to or of the order in writing notifying the amount of total income on which the determination under sub-section (5) of section 23 was based and the apportionment thereof between the several partners or of the loss computed under section 24 or of the intimation of the refusal to pass an order under sub-section (1) of section 25-A or to register a firm under section 26-A or of the date of the refusal to make a fresh assessment under section 27 or of the intimation of an order under sub-section (1) of section 23-A or under section 48, 49 or 49-F as the case may be ; but the Appellate Assistant Commissioner may admit an appeal after the expiration of the period if he is satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause for not presenting it within that period.

(3) The appeal shall be in the prescribed form, and shall be verified in the prescribed manner.

RULES.—Rule 21 prescribes the different forms (A to J) in which different kinds of appeal have to be filed and verified.

History.—This section roughly corresponds to section 21 of the 1918 Act and section 25 of the 1886 Act, but is completely different in detail, the machinery of administration having been radically changed. The section has been amplified several times since 1922, and on an extensive scale in 1939, in order to provide in terms a specific right of appeal in respect of each of the various matters on which an Income-tax Officer can pass an order to the disadvantage of an assessee. See Rule 21 for the respective forms in which appeals in respect of different matters have to be preferred.

Appeals against order under Rule 6-B.—There is no specific provision for an appeal against such an order, while there is one for an appeal against an order of cancellation of registration under section 23 (4).

Appeals under section 18-A.—There is no appeal against advance collection of tax under section 18-A ; for the assessee has the option to make his own estimate for the purpose and pay if need be, penal interest and if there is any mistake as to the amount of interest, section 35 provides the remedy, for the mistake would be obvious from the record.

Double Income-tax Relief.—In cases not covered by sections 49 or 49-F, i.e., those falling under section 60 or 49-A or 49-D, an appeal can lie only if it is provided for in the relevant notification (under section 49-A or 60) or if it can be made as part of the appeal against the assessment (if the case is under section 49-D).

Verification.—All appeals have to be verified and a false statement will attract prosecution under section 52.

Copies of orders.—Under executive instructions, an assessee is supplied a copy of every appealable order free of cost and without any application from him. A copy of any other order will also be supplied free of cost but only on his application.

Form of appeal.—See Rule 21 for forms A to J. In most cases the notice of demand (Rule 20) has to be attached to the appeal, while in others a copy of the order complained against has to be attached.

Appeal in case of loss.—Where assessable income before granting the depreciation allowance is less than that allowance, an appeal lies against the decision of the Income-tax Officer as to the determination of the income and also against the allowance.

Undistributed profits of Companies.—In respect of companies dealt with under section 23-A, the right of appeal to a Board of Referees formerly enjoyed under section 33-A has been withdrawn from April, 1939, and an appeal now lies to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. A shareholder, however, cannot in an appeal against the assessment of the company raise questions about his own total income. The latter can be raised in appeal only in respect of his own assessment.

Firms.—In an appeal against the assessment of a firm, the partners cannot raise questions about their own total income but only as regards the income of the firm and its apportionment between the partners. The appeal against the partners' own assessments would have to be entirely separate.

Defective appeals.—The Assistant Commissioner is not bound to call upon the appellant to rectify defects in an appeal and may reject in limine a defective appeal, e.g., unsigned and unverified, Damodar Prasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 3 I.T.C. 405; 8 Pat. 796; A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 409. An appeal must not be directed against the assessment orders of more than one year, Nawal Kishore Kharaitilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 7 I.T.C. 409; 1934 I.T.R. 350.

Annexing opinions to petitions.—The practice of annexing to petitions and appeals the opinions of members of the legal profession was condemned by the Patna High Court who suggested that the tribunal to whom the petition or appeal is presented should insist on the removal of the opinions before considering the petition or appeal, Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1933 I.T.R. 206; 12 Pat. 5; A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 123.

Appeal where demand has been altered.—An appeal lies in respect of an assessment, and not in respect of the demand notice; therefore the fact that the demand notice has been subsequently altered by the Income-tax Officer is not a valid reason for the Assistant Commissioner to throw out an appeal, Mohanlal Hardevdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 4 I.T.C. 90; 9 Pat. 172.

When Income-tax Officer becomes Assistant Commissioner.—According to departmental instructions when an Income-tax Officer is promoted to be an Assistant Commissioner, he must not hear appeals against his own orders which should be dealt with by another Assistant Commissioner to whom the cases should be transferred for disposal under section 5.

Limitation—Relaxation of—Computation of.—The use of the word 'ordinarily' shows that the Assistant Commissioner can, if he is satisfied, extend the period of thirty days, Mitchell v. McNeill & Co., 31 C.W.N. 630; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 518; if the Assistant Commissioner refuses so to extend the period, there is no question of law involved, and no reference to the High Court can lie, Kasi Chettiyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 98. In computing the period of limitation, the day on which the order to be appealed against was made and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of such order should be excluded. (See section 67-A.)

Appeals against section 23 (4) orders.—Where an assessee does not proceed under section 27 but appeals straight away under section 30, he cannot raise the question of validity of the assessment as one properly made under section 23 (4) but only the question of quantum of income; note the words "objecting to the amount" in section 30, Nabakumar Singh Dudhuria v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1944 I.T.R. 327. It is open to the assessee to proceed both under section 27 (to reopen the assessment) and under section 30 (to contest on merits) but there is nothing in the law to prevent the confusion that may arise as a consequence.

Appeals against order under section 25-A.—Where an Income-tax Officer finds under section 25-A that a Hindu undivided family has been partitioned but from a date different to that claimed by the parties, an appeal will lie generally under section 30 against the order instead of as a specific appeal against an order under section 25-A; and the general form of appeal may be used, Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Lachhminarain Bhadani, 1944 I.T.R. 355.

Appeal admissible only in cases specified.—A subject has no inherent right to appeal against an order (see Rules of Construction—Introduction). In cases not specified in the Act, there is no right of appeal, see Furiado v. City of London Brewery, 6 Tax Cases 382; (1914) 1 K.B. 709. Per Swinfen Eady, L.J.—"The Rule of Law is that although a certiorari lies unless expressly taken away, yet an appeal does not lie unless expressly given by statute." This is the reason why section 30 has been amplified so many times.

The question of jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer cannot be raised on appeal before the Assistant Commissioner and no reference will lie on it to the High Court. The question should be raised before or during the assessment and the Act leaves the question for the final decision of the Commissioner or the Central Board of Revenue as the case may be, Dinanath Hemraj v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 2 I.T.C. 304; 49 All. 616; A.I.R. 1927 All. 299; Setth Kanhaya Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1937 I.T.R. 739 (All.).

Pre-1939 law.—Before 1939, no appeal lay against an order under section 23 (4) and the only remedy was under section 27. So, it was a matter of importance whether an assessment had been originally made under section 23 (4) or not. See In re Bhagwati Prasad, 6 I.T.C. 105; 54 All. 496 and other rulings referred to under section 31.

Objection before Income-tax Officer.—Every assessee assessed by an Income-tax Officer has an unqualified right of appeal under section 30 (as laid down therein), whether or not he had questioned his liability before the Income-tax Officer. His right of appeal does not depend on his having so questioned the liability, though his not having so questioned it may be a good ground for not allowing his appeal. The mere submission of a return of income is not necessarily an admission by the assessee of his liability to tax, Rani Anand Knuar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1940 I.T.R. 126 (Oudh).

Review by Assistant Commissioner of His own orders.—An Assistant Commissioner cannot review his own orders or those of an Income-tax Officer. If an Assistant Commissioner throws out an appeal because of the non-appearance of the assessee, he cannot revive the appeal, even if he is satisfied that non-appearance was due to "sufficient cause". The only remedy in such cases is for the assessee to move the Commissioner under section 33-A or the Appellate Tribunal under section 33 as the case may be.

Agent of non-resident.—There is nothing in section 30 to prevent a person declared by the Income-tax Officer to be an agent (under section 43) of a non-resident to dispute his selection as an agent and consequently his liability to tax by way of an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner, Gokuldas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 152; but not in advance as a separate, preliminary issue in anticipation of the appeal against the final assessment, when of course he can raise the issue, In re Sehgal Brothers, 1943 I.T.R. 533 (Lah.).

Appeals under section 18.—The person entitled to appeal is the payer of interest or other chargeable item, and not the payee. An order passed on such an appeal cannot prejudice the right of the payee to claim refund, if eligible, under section 48 or other appropriate section or through a regular assessment under section 23; for, under section 18 (5), all deductions at source made under section 18 are treated as a payment of tax on behalf of the recipient of the income.

Succession.—Before 1939, under section 26 (2) the successor was taxed in respect of the predecessor's profits also, and no right of appeal was required beyond that of the successor against his own assessment. Now that the profits of the previous year in which the succession took place are apportioned between the predecessor and the successor under section 26 (2), a right of appeal has become necessary.

Penalties.—The offences created by sections 44-E (6) and 44-F (5) are new (i.e., since 1939) and an appeal has been provided against them. Formerly there was no appeal against a penalty under section 46 (1); this has been permitted since 1939, but on condition that tax is first paid.

Appeal against refunds.—An appeal now lies under section 30 instead of under section 50-A. As a result, a right of reference to the High Court under section 66 arises to the assessee, which he did not possess previously unless the Commissioner agreed to make a reference suo moto under section 66 (1).

Reference to High Court.—As a consequence of the expansion of this section, the right of reference to a High Court under section 66 now (since 1939) arises in respect of many other matters besides refunds referred to above.

Proviso—Assessments under section 23 (4).—As already mentioned the non-appealability, before 1939, of orders under section 23 (4) led to considerable litigation as to the extent to which the High Court could interfere with such assessments. At one time the Rangoon High Court had held, Commissioner of Income-tax v. A. R. A. N. Chettyar and V. D. M. R. M. Chettyar, 6 Rang. 21; 2 I.T.C. 477; S. P. K. A. A. M. Chettyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 7 Rang. 669; A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 35; 4 I.T.C. 182, that the proviso did not prevent the High Court

T.C. 352. The proviso applied to two kinds of cases, viz., (a) assessments section 23 (4). But this view was later overruled, Abdul Baree Chaudhuri v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 9 Rang. 281; A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 194; 5 I. T.C. 352. The proviso applied to two kinds of cases, viz., (a) assessments made under section 23 (4) and (b) those made under that sub-section read with section 27. It was held that if an assessee succeeded in having his assessment reopened under section 27, he had no further right of appeal, A. K. A. C. T. V. V. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 3 I.T.C. 253; 6 Rang. 652. The proviso did not bar an appeal against refusal to reopen the assessment under section 27, for which the substantive part definitely provided.

Procedure.—See section 31.

Assessment by estimate.—In England, assessments by estimate in the absence of returns [corresponding to assessments under section 23 (4) here] can be appealed against, Holborn Viaduct Co. v. Queen, 2 Tax Cases 228.

31. (1) The Appellate Assistant Commissioner shall fix a day and place for the hearing of the appeal, and may from time to time adjourn the hearing.

Hearing of appeal.

(2) The Appellate Assistant Commissioner may, before disposing of any appeal, make such further inquiry as he thinks fit or cause further inquiry to be made by the Income-tax Officer.

(2-A) The Appellate Assistant Commissioner may, at the hearing of an appeal, allow an appellant to go into any ground of appeal not specified in the grounds of appeal, if the Appellate Assistant Commissioner is satisfied that the omission of that ground from the form of appeal was not wilful or unreasonable.

(3) In disposing of an appeal, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner may, in the case of an order of assessment,—

(a) confirm, reduce, enhance or annul the assessment, or

(b) set aside the assessment and direct the Income-tax Officer to make a fresh assessment after making such further inquiry as the Income-tax Officer thinks fit or the Appellate Assistant Commissioner may direct, and the Income-tax Officer shall thereupon proceed to make such fresh assessment, and determine where necessary the amount of tax payable on the basis of such fresh assessment, or, in the case of an order cancelling the registration of a firm under sub-section (4) of section 23 or refusing to register a firm under sub-section (4) of section 23 or section 26-A or to make a fresh assessment under section 27,

(c) confirm such order, or cancel it and direct the Income-tax Officer to register the firm or make a fresh assessment as the case may be, or in the case of an order under sub-section (2) of section 25 or sub-section (1) of section 23-A, or sub-section (2) of section 26 or section 48, 49 or 49-F.

(d) confirm, cancel or vary such order, or, in the case of an order under sub-section (1) of section 25-A.

(e) confirm such order or cancel it and either direct the Income-tax Officer to make further inquiry and pass a fresh order or to make an assessment in the manner laid down in sub-section (2) of section 25-A.

or, in the case of an order under section 28 or sub-section (6) of section 44-E or sub-section (5) of section 44-F or sub-section (1) of section 46,

(f) confirm or cancel such order or vary it so as either to enhance or reduce the penalty, or, in the case of an appeal against computation of loss under section 24,

(g) confirm or vary such computation ;

or in the case of an appeal under sub-section (1-A) of section 30,

(h) decide that the person is or is not liable to make the deduction and in the latter case direct the refund of the sum paid under sub-section (6) of section 18:

Provided that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner shall not enhance an assessment or a penalty unless the appellant has had a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against such enhancement :

— Provided further that at the hearing of any appeal against an order of an Income-tax Officer, the Income-tax Officer shall have the right to be heard either in person or by a representative.

(4) Where as the result of an appeal any change is made in the assessment of a firm or association of persons or a new assessment of a firm or association of persons is ordered to be made, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner may authorise the Income-tax Officer to amend accordingly any assessment made on any partner of the firm or any member of the association :

(5) The Appellate Assistant Commissioner shall, on the conclusion of the appeal, communicate the orders passed by him to the assessee and to the Commissioner.

History.—See section 22 of the 1918 Act. The section has been amended several times since 1922, the changes being consequential on those in section 30. Sub-section (2-A), regarding additional grounds of appeal was added in 1939. The second proviso, also inserted in 1939 follows the general plan (see section 5) of the separation of appellate and executive functions, and gives a right to the Income-tax Officer to appear (as a party) before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. The power to increase penalties was also added in 1939.

Sub-section (5) was added in 1941 to provide that the Appellate Assistant Commissioner shall of his own accord communicate his orders both to the assessee and to the Commissioner, both of them being entitled to appeal to the Appellate Tribunal under section 33.

United Kingdom Law.—As will be seen from the notes under section 5, the administrative machinery in the United Kingdom is so dissimilar from that here, that the details of procedure in the United Kingdom regarding appeal are of no interest, but the separation of appellate from executive functions of Assistant Commissioners and the right of the Income-tax Officer to appear or be heard before the appellate authorities brings Indian procedure nearer to the British.

Procedure.—Subject to what is stated in this section and section 37, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner can adopt any reasonable procedure regarding the hearing, adjournments, etc.

Additional grounds.—The Lahore High Court held that the Assistant Commissioner had no power to admit new matter in the form of additional grounds of appeal, whether within or after the period prescribed, Ramrakhamal and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 137; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 830, while the Oudh Chief Court held, not only that he could do so but an improper refusal on his part might give rise to a question of law; Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Beharilal Ramchandra, 1937 I.T.R. 417. The amendment in 1939 resolves this difference of opinion and gives power to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner to allow new grounds of appeal if he is satisfied that omission in the first instance was not wilful or unreasonable. In allowing additional grounds, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner must not deprive the other side, i.e., the Income-tax Officer of adequate opportunity to meet these new grounds.

Raising new questions and letting in new evidence.—It is not open to an assessee to raise before the Assistant Commissioner questions not raised before the Income-tax Officer, Karamchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 313; 12 Lah. 714; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 601. The refusal of the Assistant Commissioner to consider such questions is not a question of law arising out of order under section 31, Chiranjilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 7 I.T.C. 42. On the other hand the Assistant Commissioner is not necessarily confined to what is in the records before him and may, if he thinks fit, call for further evidence. He could not however be compelled to do so, Biradhmil Lodha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1934 I.T.R. 164; 56 All. 504.

An appellant in income-tax proceedings has no higher right in adducing fresh evidence on appeal than he would have in a civil case under Order XLI, Rule 27 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is entirely within the discretion of the appellate authority to admit or reject further evidence, and where the assessee has had opportunity to tender evidence before the lower authority, the appellate authority need not allow any further evidence, E. M. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 4 I.T.C. 111; 7 Rang. 635; A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 4.

Appeals against orders under section 23 (4).—It follows from this that where an appeal is made against an order under section 23 (4) (no action having been taken under section 27) the Appellate Assistant Commissioner need not permit the tax-payer to let in evidence which he failed to produce before the Income-tax Officer. As a result, the tax-payer cannot attack the assessment unless there is some inconsistency or obvious absurdity in the Income-tax Officer's estimate. When however, an assessment has been made under section 27, the appeal would in all respects be like one made against an order under section 23 (3) unless the assessee was in default a second time. Section 37 gives the Assistant Commissioner powers to call for evidence, etc.

Questions of law.—It is the duty of Income-tax authorities to decide both on questions of law and questions of fact. The fact that an appeal can be made to the Appellate Tribunal and a reference to the High Court against the order of that Tribunal does not absolve Income-tax authorities from the obligation to decide questions of law.

Costs.—No costs will be allowed to an assessee who succeeds in his appeal before the Assistant Commissioner or the Appellate Tribunal.

Copies of orders.—A copy of the appellate order is given free of charge if applied for. Extra copies will be charged for.

Who may represent assessee.—See section 61. The Income-tax Officer, however, may appear before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and the Appellate Tribunal either in person or through any representative.

Appeals against orders passed under section 27.—In deciding such appeals, the jurisdiction of the Assistant Commissioner is limited to seeing whether the appellant had sufficient cause preventing him from complying with the requirements in respect of which the default occurred. He is not at liberty to enter into the merits of the assessment, Jhuri Misra v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 3 I.T.C. 248; In re Pratab Chandra Ganguly, 4 I.T.C. 418; A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 410; Mohanlal Hurdeodas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 62; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. A. K. R. P. L. A. Chettyar Firm, 9 R. 21; A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 97; 5 I.T.C. 182. If, however, he has decided the appeal on the merits, his order, it has been held, is one under section 31 even if, strictly speaking, no appeal lay; and a reference can lie to the High Court in respect of his order, Abdul Qayam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1933 I.T.R. 375, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 396. A contrary view has also been held, Kunwarji Ananda v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 5 I.T.C. 417; 11 Pat. 187; A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 306. These rulings are obsolete, and an appeal has first to go to the Appellate Tribunal.

Whether the Income-tax Officer applied his discretion justly in refusing to re-open an assessment under section 27 may be a question of law arising out of an appellate order passed under section 31. See notes under section 27.

Enquiries.—It is not open to the Assistant Commissioner to institute enquiries behind the back of the assessee and use the result of such enquiries against him for the purpose of assessment. If the Assistant Commissioner's finding, however, can be supported on other relevant circumstances, without taking into consideration the result of the private enquiries, his finding will not be illegal, c.f., section 167 of the Indian Evidence Act, Gopinath Naick v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., (All.), 1936 I.T.R. 1; A.I.R. 1936 All. 286.

Though under section 23 (3) the Income-tax Officer is under obligation to consider the evidence tendered by the assessee, he is under no such obligation in respect of enquiries conducted by him under the orders of the Assistant Commissioner or higher authorities, Sheik Abdur Razak v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 425; 8 I.T.C. 268.

Assistant Commissioner not bound by the letter of the Indian Evidence Act.—In this respect, the position of the Assistant Commissioner is the same as that of the Income-tax Officer. See notes under section 23 as to how far the Income-tax Officer is bound by the Law of Evidence, and the cases cited under that section.

“When an assessment is made by Commissioners the burden is upon the person disputing it to displace it, not on the person making it to sustain it.”—Per Scrutton, L.J., in Belfour v. Mace, 13 Tax Cases 539.

Res judicata.—See notes under section 23 as to how far the principles of res judicata and estoppel apply to Income-tax proceedings.

Preliminary state of facts to be decided by Assistant Commissioner.—It is for the Assistant Commissioner to decide first of all whether an appeal lies or not.

Whether an order dismissing an appeal on the ground that no appeal lies is an order under section 30 or one under section 31 has been the subject of difference of opinion. The Patna High Court in Kunwarji Ananda v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 417; 11 Pat. 187; A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 306, and Meharam Gyan Manjari Kuari v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 1944 I.T.R. 59, the Allahabad High Court in, In re Bhagavati Prasad, 54 All. 496; A.I.R. 1932 All. 390; 6 I.T.C. 105, and the Lahore High Court in Dunichand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 33; 10 Lah. 596; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 593, held that the order was one under section 31. On the other hand the Allahabad High Court held in other cases that no reference lay to the High Court where the Assistant Commissioner held that section 23 (4) had been rightly applied and that no appeal lay, In re Suraj Bhan Ugar Sen, 6 I.T.C. 143; A.I.R. 1932 All. 642; In re Pallumal Bholanath, 1933 I.T.R. 235; A.I.R. 1933 All. 541; 146 I.C. 759; Jot Ram Sher Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1934 I.T.R. 129; 7 I.T.C. 173. Hiralal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1942 I.T.R. 148; so also the Oudh Chief Court in Lakshmi Bai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1940 I.T.R. page (Ref.). Though some of these rulings are later than Khemchand Ramdas case, 1938 I.T.R. 414 (P.C.), they do not refer to it. Such an order is according to the view in these latter cases passed under section 30 and not under section 31. It has also been held that an order by an Assistant Commissioner dismissing an appeal on the ground that it is time-barred is an order under section 30 and not under section 31. An appeal is filed under the former section, and it is only after it is admitted under that section as being within time that the Assistant Commissioner can function under section 31, Shivnath Prasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. & C.P., 1935 I.T.R. 200 (All.). See also M. K. S. Chettiyar firm's case referred to under section 30, 5 I.T.C. 96; 8 Rang. 587; A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 53.

The Privy Council supported the former view, viz., the mere fact that the assessment purports to have been made under section 23 (4) does not shut out the appeal; it must be shown that the circumstances of the case bring it within the scope of that sub-section. One of the questions of law arising out of the order of the Assistant Commissioner is whether the appeal to him was competent and he cannot deprive the assessee of the right of a reference to the Court merely by deciding this question against the assessee

Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Khemchand Ramdas, 1938 I.T.R. 414 (P.C.).

Though a reference to the High Court now lies, not from the order of the Assistant Commissioner, but from that of the Appellate Tribunal, the general principle in the Privy Council ruling above is still of importance vis., an authority cannot shut out a reference to higher authority merely by deciding a preliminary issue of law against a party.

Form of appellate order.—The fact that the Assistant Commissioner 'entertained' an appeal gives him no power to consider questions not within his jurisdiction, e.g., the merits of an assessment made under section 23 (4) (this was before 1st April, 1939, when no appeal lay against such assessments). It is unnecessary for him to say that the appeal is incompetent; if he simply dismisses it, there is nothing wrong in his orders, Nawalkishore Kharailal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Delhi, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 1014; 7 I.T.C. 409. The Assistant Commissioner however must, in disposing of an appeal, state the facts and give reasons for his conclusions, Rampratap Sukh Dial v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Delhi, 3 I.T.C. 362; 10 Lah. 833; A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 277. On the other hand, according to the Rangoon High Court he is under no such obligation, E. M. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 224; 4 I.T.C. 464.

Remand.—The Appellate Assistant Commissioner is entitled to call for a report from the Income-tax Officer and after considering it to pass such orders as he may think fit, including, if necessary the enforcement of the assessment, In re Lala Sarju Prasad, 1943 I.T.R. 525 (All.). The Appellate Assistant Commissioner can also remand the case to the Income-tax Officer for disposal on its merits. The basis and details of the assessment, including the application of the proviso to section 13 (regarding the estimating of profits from the accounts) can be raised by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. In re Pcaraylal Shukla, 1942 I.T.R. 238 (All.).

Appeal against orders under section 31.—Before the Appellate Tribunal was set up, no appeal lay against the appellate orders of the Assistant Commissioner unless there was an enhancement of assessment under this section or a penalty was levied by the Assistant Commissioner under section 28. The only remedies were a petition to the Commissioner under section 33, (corresponding to present section 33-A) or a reference to the High Court under section 66 if a question of law was involved. Now, all orders passed by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner are appealable to the Appellate Tribunal.

Appeals against assessments made under section 34.—See notes under section 34. The Assistant Commissioner cannot give any relief in respect of the original assessment or enhance the supplementary one if the latter is without jurisdiction. His general power is subject to the limitations laid down in sections 34 and 35, Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Nawab Shaw Nawaz Khan, 1938 I.T.R. 370; A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 741.

Non-appearance of assessee.—An Assistant Commissioner cannot dismiss an appeal because the assessee does not appear. Whether he appears or not, the Assistant Commissioner should consider the appeal on its merits and decide. There is no provision in the law authorising the Assistant Commissioner to dismiss an appeal, i.e., without, applying his mind to it, simply because the appellant does not appear. But the appeal should of course be otherwise in order before he can consider it.

Order when to be passed.—The Assistant Commissioner is not required to pass orders on the actual date of hearing, but may pass orders after the last day of hearing; but whenever he passes the order he has to communicate it under sub-section (5) both to the assessee and to the Commissioner both of them having the right of appeal against the order to the Appellate Tribunal.

Adjournment.—Though there is no provision to that effect, it is obviously the duty of the Assistant Commissioner to re-open the hearing if it is apparent that the notice of hearing has not reached the assessee. If the Assistant Commissioner has decided an appeal ex parte, he cannot re-open the appeal on grounds similar to those set out in section 27, even if the appellant shows that he was prevented by sufficient cause from being present at the hearing of the appeal.

Appeal withdrawn.—Where an assessee withdrew his appeal before the Assistant Commissioner and afterwards claimed that, on the basis of an alleged understanding by which the assessee was to withdraw his appeal and at the same time the Assistant Commissioner was to withdraw a then impending prosecution, the Assistant Commissioner ought to have re-opened the appeal and decided it on its merits because he had not kept his part of the undertaking, it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the question raised did not arise out of an order under section 31 or section 32 with which alone the Court were concerned, Shyam Sundar Beharilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 6 I.T.C. 290.

By filing an appeal the assessee creates not merely an opportunity but a duty for the Assistant Commissioner to perform a public task which may have an effect entirely opposite to that contemplated or desired by the assessee. He cannot, therefore, claim either by not appearing before the Assistant Commissioner or by withdrawing the appeal that the latter should not proceed further with it, cf., Rex v. Special Commissioners of Income-tax (ex parte Elmhirst), 20 Tax Cases 381; (1936) 1 K.B. 487 (C.A.); 14 A.T.C. 509.

The Income-tax Act is a special piece of self-contained legislation on a special subject; and while there is provision for enhancement of assessment on appeal, there is none for withdrawal of appeal. The absence of the latter is clearly intended to avoid the absurdity of the appeal being withdrawn as soon as the appellant fears a possible enhancement of assessment; in other words, the extension, to the special Act, of the general power of withdrawal of appeal would nullify the power of the Assistant Commissioner to enhance assessments, Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Nawab Shah Nawaz Khan, 1938 I.T.R. 370; A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 741.

Assistant Commissioner cannot travel beyond subject-matter of appeal.—See Babu Jagarnath Therani v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 2 I.T.C. 4; 4 Pat. 385; A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 408, also Nawal-kisore Khaeratlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 287.

If, after hearing the assessee, the Assistant Commissioner calls for a report from the Income-tax Officer, the Assistant Commissioner is under no obligation to give the assessee a further hearing unless the Income-tax Officer's report is of such a nature that it would be a denial of natural justice not to give the assessee an opportunity to contest the report. Maharajathiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 4 I.T.C. 283; 9 Pat. 240.

If the report indicates an enhancement of assessment on the strength of evidence to rebut which the assessee has had no chance, it would seem that he should be given such a chance.

The Assistant Commissioner's power of enhancement is subject to the other provisions of the Act; so, he cannot add an item after the expiry of the limitation laid down in section 34, Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Nawab Shah Nawaz Khan, 1938 I.T.R. 370.

What is enhancement of assessment.—In view of (a) assessment in section 23, referring to the determination of "total income" and (b) the reference in section 30 to one (not several) assessment and to objections to "the amount" and "the rate," it has been held that if an Assistant Commissioner on appeal upholds the assessment of the Income-tax Officer as a whole, i.e., does not increase the total income there is no enhancement even though the Assistant Commissioner may increase the figures under certain items necessarily decreasing those under others, Namberumal Chetti and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1933 I.T.R. 32; 6 I.T.C. 313; 56 Mad. 329; A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 1. A fortiori if the Assistant Commissioner reduces the total income assessed, there can be no enhancement.

Opportunity to assessee to show cause against enhancement.—The enhancement may be made by estimate if the materials before the Assistant Commissioner are insufficient to base a precise figure upon. If the enhancement by the Assistant Commissioner is based on materials from which he could reasonably conclude—though only roughly—that a particular figure is the true income, then his action is legal; if, on the other hand, it is wholly arbitrary and based on no materials it is illegal. In particular, it is open to appellate authorities to enhance an assessment based on the proviso to section 13 by altering the basis of the estimates, including the probable percentage of profits. In re Pearylal Shukla, 1942 I.T.R. 239 (All.).

It is not necessary for the Assistant Commissioner to give notice that he proposes to enhance the assessment to a particular figure or to disclose the materials forming the basis of the proposed enhancement; a general intimation of proposed enhancement is enough but he should give the basis of the enhancement in his appellate order so that the Appellate Tribunal or the Commissioner can decide on further appeal (or revision) whether the enhancement was justified, cf., E. M. Chettiyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax Burma, 4 I.T.C. 111; 7 Rang. 635; A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 4. The proviso does not deprive the appellant of the right to be heard.

Enhancement of penalty on appeal.—The ruling of the Allahabad High Court that a penalty levied under section 28 could not be enhanced in the course of an appeal, Rai Sahib Harikrishnadas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 275; 53 All. 679; A.I.R. 1931 All. 401, is obsolete, the section having been amended in 1939. The assessee, however, should be given an opportunity to show cause against the proposed enhancement.

32. (Omitted in 1939).

Before the Appellate Tribunal was set up this section provided for an appeal to the Commissioner in two cases, viz., (a) levy of penalty by the Assistant Commissioner and (b) enhancement of assessment by him; and there was a right of reference to the High Court on questions of law, arising out of the Commissioner's Appellate order under section 32.

Now, all orders of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner can be appealed against to the Appellate Tribunal under section 33.

33. (1) Any assessee objecting to an order passed by an Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 28 or section 31 may appeal to the Appellate Tribunal within sixty days of the date on which such order is communicated to him.

(2) The Commissioner may, if he objects to any order passed by an Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 31, direct the Income-tax Officer to appeal to the Appellate Tribunal against such order, and such appeal may be made within sixty days of the date on which the order is communicated to the Commissioner by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner.

(2-A) The Tribunal may admit an appeal after the expiry of the sixty days referred to in sub-sections (1) and (2) if it is satisfied that there was sufficient cause for not presenting it within that period.

(3) An appeal to the Appellate Tribunal shall be in the prescribed form and shall be verified in the prescribed manner, and shall, except in the case of an appeal referred to in sub-section (2), be accompanied by a fee of one hundred rupees.

(4) The Appellate Tribunal may, after giving both parties to the appeal an opportunity of being heard, pass such orders thereon as it thinks fit, and shall communicate any such orders to the assessee and to the Commissioner.

(5) Where as the result of an appeal any change is made in the assessment of a firm or association of persons or a new assessment of a firm or association of persons is ordered to be made, the Appellate Tribunal may authorise the Income-tax Officer to amend accordingly any assessment made on any partner of the firm or any member of the association.

(6) Save as provided in section 66 orders passed by the Appellate Tribunal on appeal shall be final.

History.—This section came into effect in 1941, with the setting up of the Appellate Tribunal.

Form of appeal.—See Rule 22 of the rules made by the Central Board of Revenue which sets out the different forms.

Appeal by assessee.—An appeal lies against any order under section 31 or 28. Before 1941, appeals to the Commissioner under section 32 lay only in a few specified cases.

Appeal by the department.—While the Income-tax Officer is the authority to appeal, he cannot do so except under the orders of the Commissioner. The idea, obviously, is to avoid unimportant appeals to the Tribunal. It should be noted that the department cannot appeal on the ground of inadequate penalty levied under section 28.

Delayed presentation of appeals.—As to what is sufficient cause. see notes under section 27.

The date on which an order is "communicated to" a person is presumably the date on which he received it and not the date on which the order is despatched from the office of the Tribunal. The change in 1941 was evidently intended to avoid only the service of notice and not to curtail the time at the disposal of the parties.

Forms.—See Rule 22 which sets out the forms in which appeal has to be made to the Tribunal in respect of different matters. The appeals have to be verified, and false statements will attract prosecution under section 52.

Fees.—No fee is payable by the Commissioner when he appeals. If the assessee appeals, his appeal should be accompanied by a fee of Rs. 100.

Sub-section (4).—Nothing has been stated as to costs. 'Such orders as it thinks fit' will, it is presumed, not include costs. The Tribunal has to hear both parties (in the presence of each other) and communicate its orders to both parties.

Additional grounds.—It is open to the Tribunal to allow additional grounds of appeal at any stage; and an application to move such additional grounds need not be stamped or verified. The discretion, however, should be used judicially and not arbitrarily. So, when the Tribunal refused to allow a fundamental question of law as an additional ground and such question did not require new facts to be found, merely on the ground that the memorandum of appeal had not been amended and that the application was not stamped or verified, the High Court interfered, Byramji & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 1943 I.T.R. 286.

It should be noted, however, that there is no provision in section 33, as in sub-section (2-A) of section 31, authorising the Tribunal to permit the appellant to go into new grounds of appeal; so, the above decision would apply only to cases not involving any new finding of fact. The Tribunal, it should be remembered, is a Court of second appeal. In any case, when new grounds are allowed to be added, the opposite party should be given sufficient opportunity to meet the new grounds.

Points which were not, and which could not be, raised before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner could not be raised for the first time before the Tribunal. For example, in an appeal against an appellate order arising out of an assessment under section 23 (4) the assessee not having acted under section 27, it would not be open to the assessee to raise before the Tribunal questions relating to the invalidity of notices under sections 22 and 23 and consequently the illegality of the assessment under section 23 (4). Nabakumar Singh Dudhuria v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1944 I.T.R. 327.

Rule 21 of the Tribunal Rules is as follows:—The appellant shall not, except by leave of the Tribunal, urge or be heard in support of any ground of objection not set forth in the grounds of appeal; but the Tribunal in deciding the appeal, shall not be confined to the grounds of objection set forth in the grounds of appeal or taken by leave of the Tribunal under the rule:

Provided that the Tribunal shall not rest its decision on any other ground unless the party who may be affected thereby has had a sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground.

This rule merely recognises the principle that the judgment of the lower Court may be supported on any ground, even though not raised in the memorandum of appeal. It does not enlarge the powers of the Tribunal to raise new grounds or permit new grounds to be used against an appellant or to enhance an assessment when the Commissioner has not appealed against it or to suggest a new mode of assessment altogether. The word 'therein' in sub-section (4) merely means on the grounds raised in the appeal, Motor Union Insurance Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T. R. 272.

Sub-section (5).—Consequential on a similar amendment of section 31; supplies an omission.

Sub-section (6).—The orders of the Tribunal will be final and binding on both parties unless a reference is made to the High Court under section 66. As stated in R. v. Speyer, (1936) 1 K.B. 595, it is "respectful and proper" to assume that the departmental authorities will carry out the orders of the Tribunal.

33-A. (1) The Commissioner may of his own motion call for the record of any proceeding under this Act in which an order has been passed by any authority subordinate to him and may make such inquiry or cause such inquiry to be made and, subject to the provisions of this Act, may pass such order thereon, not being an order prejudicial to the assessee, as he thinks fit :

Power of revision by Commissioner.

Provided that the Commissioner shall not revise any order under this sub-section if—

(a) where an appeal against the order lies to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or to the Appellate Tribunal, the time within which such appeal may be made has not expired, or

(b) the order is pending on an appeal before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or has been made the subject of an appeal to the Appellate Tribunal, or

(c) the order has been made more than one year previously.

(2) The Commissioner may, on application by an assessee for revision of an order under this Act passed by any authority subordinate to the Commissioner, made within one year from the date of the order, call for the record of the proceeding in which such order was passed, and on receipt of the record may make such inquiry or cause such inquiry to be made, and, subject to the provisions of this Act, may pass such order thereon, not being an order prejudicial to the assessee, as he thinks fit :

Provided that the Commissioner shall not revise any order under this sub-section if—

(a) where an appeal against the order lies to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or to the Appellate Tribunal but has not been made, the time within which such appeal may be made has not expired, or, in the case of an appeal to the Appellate Tribunal, the assessee has not waived his right of appeal, or

(b) where an appeal against the order has been made to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, the appeal is pending before the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, or

(c) the order has been made the subject of an appeal to the Appellate Tribunal :

Provided further that an order by the Commissioner declining to interfere shall be deemed not to be an order prejudicial to the assessee.

(3) Every application by an assessee under sub-section (2) shall be accompanied by a fee of twenty-five rupees.

History.—This power of revision of the Commissioner formerly miscalled 'review' was withdrawn from the Commissioner when the Appellate Tribunal was set up and soon afterwards restored in a modified form. The corresponding old section was as below :—

33. (1) The Commissioner may of his own motion call for the record of any proceeding under this Act which has been taken by any authority subordinate to him or by himself when exercising the powers of an Appellate Assistant Commissioner under sub-section (5) of section 5.

(2) On receipt of the record the Commissioner may make such inquiry or cause inquiry to be made and, subject to the provisions of this Act, may pass such orders thereon as he thinks fit :

Provided that he shall not pass any order prejudicial to an assessee without hearing him or giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

There was another section 33-A from 1930 to 1939, dealing with Boards of Referees for Companies dealt with under section 23-A. An appeal lay in such cases to the Assistant Commissioner and from him to the Appellate Tribunal.

'Proceeding'.—There is no definition of the word. The expression may refer to any course of events happening under the Act, i.e., arising out of the liability or obligation imposed by the Act. The Commissioner can interfere not only in respect of assessments proper but in respect of any proceeding under this Act, e.g., refunds or penalties.

The validity of the view that the Commissioner can under no circumstances review his order passed under section 33 was questioned, but not decided in Sachchidananda Sinha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1 I.T.C. 381; 3 Pat. 664.

Res judicata.—As to the applicability of res judicata and estoppel to Income-tax proceedings, see notes under section 23.

Sub-section (1).—The section is in two parts, the first sub-section dealing with revision suo motu by the Commissioner and the second at the instance of the assessee.

The first sub-section, more or less, continues the provisions of old section 33 barring the important prohibition of 'prejudicial' orders now, and also codifies departmental practice in respect of matters not referred to in that section. The provisos fill certain gaps in that section.

Formerly, all action under section 33 was in theory suo motu by the Commissioner though in practice petitions were received from the assessee; sub-section (2) now gives the assessee a definite right to have his case considered in revision, but on payment of a fee of Rs. 25.

Should assessee be heard?—The section does not compel the Commissioner to hear the assessee or his representative, but it is not unusual to give a hearing.

Enquiries.—It is entirely for the Commissioner to decide whether he shall make any enquiries at all and if so by himself or through others.

Prejudicial orders.—The most important difference between the old section and the new is that the Commissioner cannot in the course of revision pass orders prejudicial to the assessee. Formerly he could but had to give the assessee a reasonable opportunity to be heard. Questions therefore arose as to what was a reasonable opportunity, e.g., Sachchidananda Sinha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 1 I.T.C. 381; 3 Pat. 664, and also from 1933, questions of law arising from the Commissioner's orders in revision could be referred to the High Court.

The High Courts differed in their interpretation of what constituted 'prejudicial orders', the Madras High Court in a Full Bench ruling, Voora Sriramulu Chetti v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1939 I.T.R. 263, holding that an order declining to interfere could itself be a prejudicial order. The second proviso to sub-section (2) counteracts this ruling and makes it clear that an order declining to interfere is not a prejudicial order. The large number of rulings as to what is a 'prejudicial order' is of little interest now. As section 33-A now stands, any additional assessment or any penal action that the Commissioner may wish to take as a result of his perusing the records in the cause of revision can only be taken under the other appropriate sections of the Act and in accordance with them, and not under the guise of orders in revision, which can now take only two forms either of benefiting the assessee or of declining to interfere. The Commissioner when acting under section 35 however, can correct mistakes obvious from the record, irrespective of whether the assessee is prejudiced or not but if the correction will be against the assessee the latter has to be heard before the orders are passed.

Where appeals are pending.—The provisos both in sub-sections (1) and (2)—restraining the Commissioner from revising proceedings in matters pending before appellate authorities are intended to avoid possible embarrassment from conflicting orders and also to protect the right of reference of the assessee to the High Court. Cf. Khemchand Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1938 I.T.R. 414 (P.C.).

Limitation.—The limit of one year codifies departmental practice which had judicial approval. Nanheral Jankiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1940 I.T.R. 437. Formerly, when the Commissioner could pass a 'prejudicial order' in revision it was decided (in several cases) that he could not override the limitation laid down in sections 34 and 35; e.g., Khemchand Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind, 1938 I.T.R. 414 (P.C.). This question does not arise now.

Authority subordinate.—The Appellate Tribunal is not an authority subordinate to the Commissioner, but an Appellate Assistant Commissioner is; see section 5 (7) even though no one, not even the Central Board of Revenue, can interfere with the appellate discretion of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner.

Where there is conflict of interest.—If, as a result of the Commissioner's orders in revision, the interest of some other party is adversely affected, e.g., cases of discontinuance of business, etc., or of succession, changes in partnership, etc., no proceedings can be started except under other provisions of the Act, e.g., section 34; for, under section 33-A, it is not open to the Commissioner to pass a prejudicial order against any one.

Penalties.—See section 28 which gives no power to the Commissioner to levy a penalty; in any case, the Commissioner is precluded by section 33-A from levying a penalty, for doing so would be passing a 'prejudicial order'.

Reference to High Court.—Before 1933, no reference lay to the High Court against orders of the Commissioner, in revision, even if the orders were prejudicial; in that year, provision was made for a reference on questions of law arising out of prejudicial orders in revision. This provision was omitted when the Commissioner's revisional powers were withdrawn but has not been restored when the powers were restored, because, under the present section, the Commissioner cannot pass an order prejudicial to the assessee. If, nevertheless, the Commissioner passes a prejudicial order, i.e., not merely that he declines to interfere, but placing the assessee in a worse position than before in any respect, a suit would lie against the Crown since section 67 would afford no protection, the order complained against not being in good faith or being made under the Act.

Questions pending before Courts.—With reference to old section 33, in which there was no limitation of time within which the Commissioner could pass orders in revision, it was held that, where an assessment for a particular year was held invalid by the Court (in this case the Privy Council), the Commissioner must not decline to use his revisional powers to set aside, the assessments of subsequent years, i.e., from the next year after the particular year to the date of pronouncement of judgment by the Court. The Commissioner's refusal in that case was based on the ground that in respect of the subsequent years the assessee had neither appealed to the Privy Council nor made arrangements with the Commissioner to hold the assessments in abeyance. According to the High Court, the later assessments in this case were ab initio void and could therefore be set aside at any time by the Commissioner under section 33. The Tribune Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 370. If a similar situation were to arise under present section 33-A the remedy, it would seem, is for the assessee to appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner (and to the Tribunal and to the High Court) in respect of each year unless the Commissioner agrees to hold over the assessments of subsequent years till the case before the High Court (or the Privy Council) is decided.

United Kingdom Law.—There is no corresponding provision in the English law. An appeal there, once determined by the Commissioners (whether General Commissioners or Special Commissioners) is final, and neither the determination of the Commissioners nor the assessment made thereon can be altered except by the order of the High Court to whom a case should be stated.

34. (1) If in consequence of definite information which has come into his possession the Income-tax officer discovers that income, profits or gains chargeable to income-tax have escaped assessment in any year, or have been under-assessed, or have been assessed at too low a rate, or have been the subject of excessive relief under this Act, the Income-tax Officer may, in any case in which he has reason to believe that the assessee has concealed the particulars of his income or deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars thereof, at any time within eight years, and in any other case at any time within four years of the end of that year, serve on the person liable to pay tax on such income, profits or gains, or, in the case of a company, on the principal officer thereof, a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 and may proceed to assess or re-assess such income, profits or gains, and the provisions of this Act shall, so far as may be, apply accordingly as if the notice were a notice issued under that sub-section :

Provided that the tax shall be charged at the rate at which it would have been charged had the income, profits or gains not escaped assessment or full assessment, as the case may be :

Provided further that when the income, profits or gains concerned are income, profits or gains liable to assessment for a year ending prior to the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, or where the assessment made or to be made is an assessment made or to be made on a person deemed to be the agent of a non-resident person under section 43, this sub-section shall have effect as if for the periods of eight years and four years a period of one year were substituted.

(2) No order of assessment under section 23 or of assessment or re-assessment under sub-section (1) of this section shall be made after the expiry, in any case to which clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 28 applies, of eight years, and in any other case, of four years from the end of the year in which the income, profits or gains were first assessable:

Provided that nothing contained in this Sub-section shall apply to an assessment made in pursuance of an order under section 31, section 33, section 66 or section 66-A.

Form of notice.

The following form has been laid down for the notice under section 34:—

Notice under section 34 of the Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922).

INCOME-TAX OFFICE,

Dated

To

Whereas in consequence of definite information which has come into my possession I have discovered that your income from*..... assessable to income-tax in the year ending the 31st March, 19 , has

- (a) escaped assessment,
- (b) been under-assessed,
- (c) been assessed at too low a rate,
- (d) been the subject of excessive relief, I propose to assess (re-assess) the said income that has,

- (a) escaped assessment,
- (b) been under-assessed,
- (c) been assessed at too low a rate,
- (d) been the subject of excessive relief.

I hereby require you to deliver to me not later than or within 30 days of the receipt of this notice, a return in the attached form, of your total income and total world-income assessable for the said year ending 31st March,

Seal.

Income-tax Officer.

Previous law.—This section corresponds to section 25 of the 1918 Act. Important changes were made in 1939:—(a) The period of limitation was raised from one year to eight in cases of concealment and four in other cases; (b) A time limit for the conclusion of assessment proceedings was laid down; (c) The doubt created in In re Mahaliram Ramjeedas, 1938 I.T.R. 265 as to the preliminary state of facts in which alone the section could be applied was removed; (d) Cases of excessive relief in the first instance, e.g., wrong refunds granted, can now be re-opened. The retrospective action of the new provisions was, however, limited. In 1941, the proviso to sub-section (2) was added in order to remove doubts.

Scope of section.—The section now covers four types of cases, viz., (1) 'Escaped assessment', i.e., to cases of income outside the cognisance of Income-tax Officer at the earlier stage; (2) 'under-assessed', i.e., to mistakes in computation, wrong allowances and exemptions and so forth (as to mistakes of law, see notes below); (3) 'assessed at too low a rate', i.e., mistakes in rate of tax; and (4) excessive relief, i.e., excessive refunds or exemptions. The expansion of the section in 1939, so as to cover all such cases, removed the difficulties caused by some of the earlier rulings.

Income-tax Officer alone can act under section 34.—See notes under section 33-A. Formerly when, under old section 33, the Commissioner had power to pass orders in revision prejudicial to the assessee the question arose to what extent he was bound by the other provisions of the Act, and it was held that he could not, under the guise of orders under section 33, start proceedings that should really be governed by other sections e.g., sections 34 and 35. Similarly it was not open to the Assistant Commissioner, who, at that time, exercised both appellate and inspecting functions, taking action, through his appellate orders, instead of under the appropriate other provisions of the Act. The initiation of proceedings under section 34 could be made only by the Income-tax Officer and subject to that section. There was considerable litigation on the subject, the most important ruling being Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Khemchand Ramdas, 1938 I.T.R.

441 (P.C.). See also Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Sheikh Abdul Kadir Marakkayar & Co., A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 257; 2 I.T.C. 372; Ganeshdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 2 I.T.C. 316; 8 Lah. 354; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Vednath Singh, 1940 I.T.R. 222; and Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Nawab Shah Nawaz Khan, 1938 I.T.R. 370. The Commissioner, acting under section 33-A, now, cannot pass an order prejudicial to the assessee, and an appellate Assistant Commissioner (or the Tribunal) cannot travel beyond the subject-matter of the appeal. The latter cannot, however, enhance an assessment in a manner that would normally fall to be made through section 34 or section 35; to that extent the above rulings are still of interest.

Original assessment under appeal.—The fact that the original assessment has been or is the subject of an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner or the Tribunal or has become final after the appellate or revisional orders passed by any of them or under revision by the Commissioner does not preclude the Income-tax Officer from making a supplementary assessment under this section. See Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Mahaliram Ramjidas, 1940 I.T.R. 442 (P.C.); In re Halder and Sons, 1942 I.T.R. 79 (All.).

Burden of proof.—The burden of proving that income has escaped assessment or that it was assessed at too low a rate is, according to the Bombay High Court, on the Income-tax Officer, and the mere fact that he thinks that his predecessor underestimated profits is no proof that profits escaped assessment, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. G. V. Manohar, 1935 I.T.R. 372. According to the Rangoon High Court this view is not correct; for, if such onus lay on the Income-tax Officer, the effect would be that the assessee would have an appeal to the Court on facts, which is neither intended nor provided. All that can be said is that if there is no misdirection in law and there are materials for a finding the Court will not interfere, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Dey Brothers, 1936 I.T.R. 209. According to a later view of the Bombay High Court, it is for the Income-tax Officer to satisfy himself and the appellate authorities, on evidence that income has escaped assessment. He cannot merely throw on the assessee the burden of proving that no evidence had escaped assessment. He cannot, for instance, issue a notice under section 34, wait for three years, and then, when the assessee claims that the relevant books had been destroyed, turn round and say that an additional assessment will be made because the assessee had not proved that income had not escaped assessment, Chimanram Motilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1943 I.T.R. 44.

Definite information.—With reference to this section as it stood before 1939—"If, for any reason, income has escaped assessment etc."—the Calcutta High Court had held varying views with reference to the conditions precedent to the application of section 34. See In re Ramjidas Mahaliram, 1936 I.T.R. 25; 62 Cal. 1011; In re The North British and Mercantile Insurance Co., 1937 I.T.R. 349; (1937) 2 Cal. 540; In re Mahaliram Ramjidas, 1938 I.T.R. 265; A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 557. The matter went before the Privy Council, who ruled that it was enough if the Income-tax Officer believed bona fide on the information before him that there was ground for thinking that income had escaped assessment or been underassessed. No formal preliminary enquiry, by way of convening the assessee or informing him of the nature of the escape or of giving him an opportunity to be heard, was necessary, before the Income-tax Officer set section 34 in motion. The section was one of machinery and should be construed so as to make it workable. An assessment under section 34 automatically involves an enquiry under section 23, and a preliminary enquiry before taking action under section 34 would merely duplicate the enquiry without any purpose. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Mahatiram Ramjidas, 1940 I.T.R. 442 (P.C.). See also In re The Indians National Tannery, 1941 I.T.R. 618 (Cal.) following the above.

Where a supplementary assessment was made on two main grounds, viz., (a) the profit was small in relation to the turnover, (b) the closing value of stock was understated, the High Court held that there were no materials to find that income had escaped assessment. Ground (a) was a non-sequitur; for, it was at least equally probable that other circumstances, which were not in dispute, could have accounted for the low profits. As for (b), since the opening and closing balances of each year had been valued on the same basis, and the opening balance of each year had agreed with the closing balances of the preceding year, no income could have escaped assessment, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Dey Bros., 1936 I.T.R. 209. Merely because (a) the expenditure is high in relation to the volume and value of trade and (b) the sales are smaller than in earlier years, it cannot be assumed that the accounts are false or that income has escaped assessment, Nawal Kishore Kharaitilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 287; 168 I.C. 181.

The present section, according to the Bombay High Court, must be taken as a whole; and when it is so taken, there must be definite information which has come into the possession of the Income-tax Officer, which results in his discovering that income has escaped assessment or been underassessed etc.; and there must be some information as to a fact. And the fact may be as to the state of the law e.g., that a case had been overruled or that a statute had been passed, of which the Income-tax Officer had not been aware; but a mere change of opinion on the part of the Income-tax Officer as to the meaning of the law or the correction of the opinion of the Income-tax Officer by a superior officer would not be such 'definite information'. Commissioner of Income-tax v. Sir Yusuf Ismail, 1944 I.T.R. 8.

In another case, proceedings were started on the ground that 'income from Madras branches of the assessee had escaped taxation'. The Appellate Tribunal found that the Income-tax Officer had in his mind the existence of the Madras branches when making the original assessment. In the absence of any other reason stated by the Income-tax Officer as inducing him to take action under section 34, it was held by the Patna High Court that there was no 'definite information' in the possession of the Income-tax Officer as required by this section and that therefore the notice issued under section 34 was not tenable in law. Fazl Dhala v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1944 I.T.R. 341. According to the Madras High Court, Raghavulu Naidu & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1945 I.T.R. 194, in view of the words "in consequence of definite information" the word 'discovers' means something more than 'has reason to believe' or 'satisfies himself'; the English decisions as to the meaning of 'discovers' were therefore not relevant. The definite information need not relate to a pure question of fact; and definite information with regard to the state of the law will bring the section into operation. No general rule can be laid down as to when the section can be applied, but it cannot be invoked merely because an Income-tax Officer changes his mind about the interpretation of the law or a new Income-tax Officer differs from the old. Accordingly when an Income-tax Officer applied to an assessment the rates of the Finance Act of a particular year and his successor sought to revise the rates with reference to the Act of the next year which in his view should have been applied, it was held that there was no 'definite information' to justify the reopening of the assessment, Income-tax Appellate Tribunal v. B. P. Byramji & Co., 1946 I.T.R. 175 (Nag.).

In a particular year, the share of profits of a minor admitted to the benefits of partnership was omitted to be aggregated with the father's income owing to a mistaken idea of the law; in the next year, it was so aggregated and the High Court held the aggregation to be in order. Before the High Court passed orders, a notice was issued under section 34 in respect of the omission in the first year; and the High Court held that there was no definite information before the Income-tax Officer to justify his notice. If the notice had followed the High Court's decision instead of preceding it, it would have been in order, for there would then have been definite information in respect of the state of the law, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Lakshmana Iyer, 1942 I.T.R. 242.

The word 'discovers' means that the officer should have formed an honest and reasonable belief on material that could reasonably support such belief; and which 'definite information' must be more than gossip or rumour, it need not necessarily be, though ordinarily it would be, information of fact, nor need it be information of actual escape of tax. It may be circumstantial evidence. Where, therefore, an officer in examining a return found that it was false and this made him suspect, for similar reasons that the assessee had escaped tax in earlier years, his action in reopening the earlier assessments was upheld, In re Badar Shoe Stores, 1946 I.T.R. 431 (All.).

Additional assessments can be more than one.—So long as the conditions of this section are satisfied i.e., within the time limit laid down on the basis of definite information, the Income-tax Officer may make as many additional assessments as the case may require. There is no estoppel or res judicata in respect of Income-tax matters.

It follows from the above rulings that if, having started proceedings under section 34, the Income-tax Officer, feels that there has been no under-assessment, he is under no obligation to continue the proceedings; and the assessee cannot insist on such continuation on the ground that he is eligible for some relief. The assessee's remedy in such a case is under section 35, section 48 or section 49-A et seq or section 25 or other appropriate section as may apply to his case.

To what extent the assessment is to be re-opened.—Section 34 refers to a specific case, viz., the case where an item of income chargeable to income-tax has escaped assessment or has been assessed at too low a rate. The section does not require the whole assessment to be re-opened. In one sense, of course, the Income-tax Officer must fix the taxable income to enable him to fix the rate of tax, but he is not bound to re-open the items which are not in question. On the other hand, he is bound to confine himself to the omitted item or items or to the enhancing of the rate, as the case may be, P. L. M. P. L. Palaniappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 126; 4 I.T.C. 196; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. T. S. T. S. Chettiyar Firm, 9 Rang. 28; 5 I.T.C. 194; Mayaram Durgadas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 5 I.T.C. 471. The words "assess or re-assess such income" refer only to the income which escaped assessment; and the section therefore does not give a general power of review, In re Kashinath Bobla, A.I.R. 1932 All. 1; 4 I.T.C. 472; Thackersey v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 7 I.T.C. 216; 1935 I.T.R. 457.

It is of course open to the assessee to show in any way he can that the income alleged to have escaped assessment has in fact not so escaped. He can therefore show that the income was really assessed under some other head or source, even though the Income-tax Officer has not re-opened the assessment under that head or source, but, if income has in fact escaped assessment the assessee cannot claim to have the assessment under other heads reopened merely on the ground that under those heads he had been overassessed, In re Satyendra Mohan Roy Chowdhury, 58 Cal. 326; 4 I.T.C. 447, Thackersey v. Commissioner of Income-tax, supra.

The question whether the income thought to have escaped has been included under some other head or not is a question of fact, but an assessee who denies the existence of a particular source of income and withholds relevant information cannot afterwards plead that the income was in fact included under some other head, Thackersey v. Commissioner of Income-tax, supra; see also Jawala Prasad Chobey v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1935 I.T.R. 295. If the additional assessment arises as a result of a complete change in the basis of computation or of the law as applied to the case, and it is not possible to isolate the additional items constituting the supplementary assessment, it is clear that the entire assessment must in effect be re-opened. Such cases, however, will be rare.

Law applicable.—An additional assessment has to be made in accordance with the law applicable in the assessment year during which the 'escaped' income should have been initially assessed in the normal course, Krishna Hydraulic Press v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1943 I.T.R. 504. The question of limitation within which proceedings should be started or furnished in respect of additional assessments would, however, be governed by the law at the time the proceedings are started or furnished.

Appeal against re-assessment.—It is clear from the foregoing that the Assistant Commissioner dealing with an appeal against an assessment made under section 34 read with section 23 (3) is precluded from granting any further relief beyond the extra tax imposed under section 34, In re Kashinath Bogla, 4 I.T.C. 472; A.I.R. 1932 All. 1. He cannot re-open the original assessment as a whole, i.e., except in regard to the disposal of the specific points arising out of the re-assessment, Rajendra Narayan Deo v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 2 I.T.C. 82; 5 Pat. 13; A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 581; Burjorjee v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 270; 9 Rang. 161; A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 101.

He cannot, also, enhance a supplementary assessment if that has been made without jurisdiction, In re North British & Mercantile Insurance Co., Ltd., 1937 I.T.R. 349; I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 540. Further, he cannot by way of enhancement add new items to those detected in the supplementary assessment on appeal, ignoring the limitations of sections 34 and 35, Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Nawab Shah Nawas Khan, 1938 I.T.R. 370; I.L.R. (1938) Lah. 359; A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 741.

The principles of the above rulings would seem to apply, with full vigour, to the Appellate Tribunal also.

Delayed completion of assessments.—Till 1939 this section was not intended to meet cases in which proceedings already begun under section 23 and connected sections had not been closed within the year. There was no limitation as to the period within which assessment proceedings, if begun in time, whether ordinary assessments or those under section 34 or 35, should be completed, Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab v. Nawal Kishore Kharaitilal, 1938 I.T.R. 61 (P.C.); Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Rajendranath Mukherjee, 1934 I.T.R. 71 (P.C.). The limitation laid down by this section applied only to the issue of the notice initiating the supplementary assessment proceedings, In re Kedarnath Kesriwal, 4 I.T.C. 407; 58 Cal. 254; In re Burn & Co., Calcutta, 1934 I.T.R. 30; 61 Cal. 132, and the rest of the proceedings was not further limited as to time. As to delay arising out of orders on agents of non-residents under section 43, see notes under that section.

Since 1939 with the insertion of sub-section (2), definite time limits have been laid within which assessments, both original and supplementary, have to be concluded. The proviso to sub-section (2) was added in 1941 in order to exclude from this time limit re-assessments made under appellate orders or under the orders of the High Court or the Privy Council. Such re-assessments are subject to no time limit, but it would stand to reason that they should be completed at least within four years of the receipt of the orders necessitating re-assessment. As already observed, re-assessments arising out of appellate and other orders are different from additional assessments governed by sections 34 and 35.

Once a final assessment has been made it cannot be re-opened except in accordance with sections 34 and 35 which are exhaustive and which prescribe the only circumstances in which and the only time within which supplementary assessments can be made and fresh notices of demand issued, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Khemchand Ramdas, 1938 I.T.R. 414; 65 I.A. 236; I.L.R. 1938 Bom. 487; A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 175. This was however, before the amendment of section 48. Under that section, in order to grant a refund, a re-assessment may often be necessary.

"In any year".—'In any year' refers to the twelve months in which the first assessment would be normally initiated, i.e., to the financial year, In re Burn & Co., Calcutta, 1934 I.T.R. 30; 38 C.W.N. 204; 61 Cal. 132; A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 515.

The end of the year.—The section does not prevent the income that escaped assessment being assessed during the year of original assessment itself. This section only defines the latest date up to which proceedings could be started for assessing the 'escaped' income.

The Income-tax Officer can rely on facts coming to his notice after the issue of a notice under this section, Muthappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1938 I.T.R. 725, but the supplementary assessment has to be concluded before the periods laid down in the section.

Assessment by estimate.—The question whether section 34 can be used to re-open assessments under section 23 (4)—assessments by estimate.

in cases of default of the assessee—was raised in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Sundaresa Iyer, 2 I.T.C. 173, and it was held that such an assessment can be re-opened if the Income-tax Officer finds that there has been under-assessment, i.e., that income has escaped assessment or been assessed at too low a rate of tax. This was followed by the Punjab High Court in Manoharlal Deokarandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 317; 10 Lah. 691; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 173; and by the Allahabad High Court in Haji Taj Muhammad Haji Abdul Rahman & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 6 I.T.C. 240. This section cannot however be used to revise an assessment based in the first instance on an estimate only [whether under section 23 (4) or under section 23 (3); examples under the latter sub-section are "flat rate" estimates under section 13] on the ground that the original estimate had been made too low, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. U Lu Nyo, 1933 I.T.R. 372; A.I.R. 1933 R. 350; 7 I.T.C. 47.

U Lu Nyo's case did not decide, as the Bombay High Court thought in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Manohar, 1935 I.T.R. 372, that income from a particular source, once having been assessed, could not be re-assessed under section 34. What it decided, as Manohar's case also did, was that a later Income-tax Officer could not use this section merely because he was inclined to estimate the profits higher than an earlier officer, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Dey Bros., 1936 I.T.R. 209. So long, however, as the action of the officer is not arbitrary or capricious, as explained by the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. and C.P. v. Laxminarain Badridas, 1937 I.T.R. 170; I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 191, it is open to him to re-open an assessment under section 34 even if it was made originally only on an estimate, Sheik Mubarak Ali v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 625. See also Madan Mohan Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1935 I.T.R. 438; 16 Lah. 937; A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 742.

If a person assessed in the first instance under section 23 (4) is re-assessed under section 34, the fact that he has furnished a return under section 34 will not enable him to get the original assessment under section 23 (4) cancelled automatically because, under section 34, only that part of the assessment will be re-opened in respect of which there has been under-assessment. The filing of a return under section 34 cannot cure the default which led in the first instance to an assessment under section 23 (4), Choteylal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 5 I.T.C. 466; A.I.R. 1932 All. 83.

All these rulings, however, relate to the law as it was before 1939; and as the law now stands, if the Income-tax Officer has definite information that there has been under-assessment he can start proceedings for an additional assessment and make such an assessment, subject of course to the right of appeal of the assessee against the new assessment.

Orders under this section appealable.—An order under section 34 can be appealed against, but not one under section 35.

Notice Obligatory—If the Income-tax Officer decides to act under this section he must issue a notice and follow the procedure in connection with original assessments as laid down by sections 22 and 23 unless he acts on clear admissions by the assessee.

The Income-tax Officer need not however issue a notice in the same terms as a notice under section 22 (2). The essential features of a notice under that section are that the assessee has to give the details of his income in a particular form and verify the information in a particular way. If the information on which the supplementary assessment is proposed to be made has already been furnished by the assessee himself, though in some other connection, and it had also been verified by him, it is strictly speaking unnecessary for the Income-tax Officer to issue a notice, though in practice the assessee is probably given an opportunity of being heard, on the analogy of the provision in section 35. On the other hand, if any of the information at the disposal of the Income-tax Officer has either not been furnished by the assessee or not verified by him, the notice is clearly necessary.

But the notice must not ask for more particulars than can be demanded under section 22 (2). If the Income-tax Officer requires such additional particulars he should proceed under section 37.

Period for compliance with notice.—Though a notice need issue only in the circumstances described above, once a notice has issued, it is governed so far as may be by the provisions of section 22 (2), that is, it will be necessary to give the assessee at least 30 days time to comply with the notice. Similarly the same penalties will follow non-compliance with the notice as in the event of non-compliance with a notice under section 22 (2), e.g., assessment under section 23 (4) and punishment under section 28 or 51.

Details of notice.—The notice under section 34 need not specify the detailed ground on which the assessment is proposed to be re-opened, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Sundaresa Iyer, 2 I.T.C. 173. Section 34 does not prescribe a standard form of notice; it leaves discretion to the Income-tax Officer as to how much of the requirements of a notice under section 22 (2) shall be included, and it will be valid in so far as it tells the person on whom it is served what he has to answer, deal with or furnish, In re Burn & Co., Calcutta, 61 Cal. 132; 1934 I.T.R. 30; Jawala Prasad Choubey v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1935 I.T.R. 295. A separate notice under section 22 (2) is not necessary, Vir Bhan Bansilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 111. The notice need not specify the income or the source that has escaped assessment or been under-assessed, etc., Istifer Khan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1942 I.T.R. 435 (Oudh); Chimanram Motilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay (Central), 1943 I.T.R. 44. (Bom.).

A belated notice under section 22 (2) issued after the end of the year, without any idea in the mind of the Income-tax Officer that the income had escaped assessment cannot be treated, automatically and alternatively as a notice under section 34, Maharaja of Patiala v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, (Central), 1943 I.T.R. 202.

Where an initial assessment was held, ab initio void, on the ground (as held by the High Court with reference to the law as it was before 1939) that a non-resident could not be assessed under section 42 except through an agent under section 43, and the Income-tax Officer subsequently appointed an agent under section 43 and issued a notice under section 34, the notice was held to be valid, Kunwar Bishwanath Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1942 I.T.R. 322 (All.).

Applicable to all kinds of escaped income.—The amendments in 1939 extend the ambit of the section widely, and the following rulings relate mainly to the difficulties that arose before the amendments.

"Counsel contends that this income in question has not 'escaped assessment'. These words, he maintains, cannot be applied to a portion of homogeneous income but only to income of a different class and to a case where the assessee derives his income from different sources, e.g., money lending and house property. In this case, the whole of the income of the assessee is derived from money lending. The words used, in my opinion, do not admit of this interpretation, and for every and any income whether it be of the same class or type as that originally assessed or of a different class or type, clearly comes within the scope of section 34."—Per Harrison, J., in Bulagi Shah v. Crown, 1 I.T.C. 256.

It makes no difference whether the "escaped" income escaped altogether or was taxed in the hands of some one else by mistake, Ganesh Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 2 I.T.C. 316; 8 Lah. 354; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Vednath Singh, 1940 I.T.R. 222, and the section clearly applies to cases in which the Income-tax Officer thinks in the first instance that the assessee has made a loss and then discovers that he has made profits, Vir Bhan Bansilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 111; 170 I.C. 607.

The section applies to cases in which:—(a) No assessment at all has been made on the person receiving the income; (b) an assessment has been made but some part of the income has, for some reason or other, not been assessed, and (c) the rate charged has been too low. In all other cases, the assessment already made is final and cannot be revised, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Dey Brothers, 1936 I.T.R. 209. The words are clearly wide enough to cover cases of concealment of income by the assessee in the first instance, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Lokumal Bhownal, 1939 I.T.R. 51 (Sind).

The remark of the Privy Council in Rajendranath Mukherjee's case, 1934 I.T.R. 71; 61 I.A. 10; 61 Cal. 285; 7 I.T.C. 143 that "has escaped assessment" is not equivalent to "has not been assessed" merely means that, in that case, as the assessment had not been completed or no final order of assessment made, it could not be said that income had "escaped assessment". It clearly does not mean that, if no notice has been issued under section 22 (2), no additional assessment can be made later under section 34, for the Privy Council say in the same judgment. "It may be that if no notice calling for a return under section 22 is issued within the tax year, then section 34 provides the only means available to the Crown of remedying the omission. Section 34 therefore can be applied in cases in which there has been no assessment at all, no notice having issued under section 22 (2)," Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Pirojbait Contractor, 1937 I.T.R. 338.

"Escaped assessment" is not confined to mistakes of omission only. The words in the second alternative 'assessed at too low a rate' show that the escape need not necessarily be due to inadvertence. It is therefore open to an Income-tax Officer to re-open an assessment deliberately wrongly made, In re Sri Krishna Chandra Gajapati Narayan Deo, 2 I.T.C. 104; 49 Mad. 22; A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 287.

The Madras view was endorsed by the Calcutta High Court, Anglo-Persian Oil Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1933 I.T.R. 129; 60 Cal. 840; A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 777 but not by the Lahore High Court who held that income known or disclosed to the authorities cannot be said to have "escaped" assessment. The word 'escape' connotes failure by the taxing authority to tax the income owing to accidental or deliberate omission of the assessee to declare it or to some similar circumstances. It does not, according to the Lahore view include cases where income is known or disclosed to the taxing authorities and has been the subject of assessment which has been set aside by superior authority owing to some mistake in procedure or to the income being treated in a wrong category, Diwan Kishan Kishor v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1933 I.T.R. 143; 6 I.T.C. 345; 14 Lah. 255; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 284. In a later case, the same High Court after reviewing all the rulings decided that in view of the words "for any reason" occurring before the words "escaped assessment" the interpretation placed by the Calcutta and Madras High Courts was the more correct one, Amar Singh Sher Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1935 I.T.R. 171; A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 361. The words 'have been under-assessed' now occurring in the section obviate these difficulties.

According to the Allahabad High Court, Choteylal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 5 I.T.C. 466; A.I.R. 1932 All. 83, if an individual is wrongly assessed in the first-instance as an undivided Hindu family, section 34 can be used later on to rectify the mistake and recover additional super-tax. While section 23 uses the word 'assess' to denote the determination of income, section 34 clearly refers to "assessed at too low a rate." A similar conclusion was reached by the Lahore High Court in In re Lakshminarain Gadodia, 1943 I.T.R. 491. Under the section as it now stands, the income of the assessee in such a case is ex hypothesi, either assessed at too low a rate or been the subject of excessive relief.

The remark of the Privy Council in Rajendra Nath Mukherjee's case, 1934 I.T.R. 71; 61 I.A. 10; 61 Cal. 285 that the words "escaped assessment" are not equivalent to "has not been assessed" was made in connection with the question of when an assessment should be completed; the Privy Council were concerned more with the word "assessment" to which they gave a wide interpretation than with the word "escaped", and all that they decided about the latter was that it was not wide enough to include income as to which no final assessment order had been made. The section therefore is not confined to cases where income had not been returned at all and applies to cases where an item has been returned but has not been assessed and to cases where items have been assessed but the assessment has been cancelled by the appellate or revisional authority, Madan Mohanlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1935 I.T.R. 438, Nawal Kishore Kharaitilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 281; 168 I.C. 181.

The Bombay High Court also have adopted the view that the section can be used to cover mistakes of law in the first instance on the part of the taxing authorities, Commissioner of Income-tax v. D. R. Naick, 1939 I.T.R. 362, also Calcutta; see In re Mallick and Aich, 1940 I.T.R. 236.

Where the Income-tax Officer allowed a credit (of tax collected at source) in the initial assessment and the assessee claimed a large credit on a different basis (the claim being eventually upheld by the High Court), it was held that it was not open to the Income-tax Officer to invoke section 34 in order to alter the initial basis, since no income had escaped assessment all of it having been checked and assessed, In re North British and Mercantile Insurance Co., Ltd., 1937 I.T.R. 349; I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 540. This ruling has been neutralised by the words 'have been under-assessed' which have been since added to the section.

Super-tax.—The section clearly applies both to super-tax and to income-tax, Choteylal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 5 I.T.C. 466; Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. D. R. Naik, 1939 I.T.R. 362. See section 58.

Discovers.—In the United Kingdom where the corresponding provisions are to the effect that: "If the surveyor discovers that . . . have been omitted from the first assessment, etc." (Section 125, Income-tax Act, 1918). It has been held even if all the facts were fully known to the Inspector (Surveyor) and he had wrongly decided at the first assessment not to tax some income, it would be open to him or to his successor to make a re-assessment. He need not discover any new facts, all that he has to discover is the fact of under-assessment, Williams v. Grundy, 12 A.T.C. 530; 1934 I.T.R. 236 (K.B.D.) (see also Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Trustees of Mckinlay, 17 A.T.C. 345 (C.S.); 22 Tax. Cas. 305). But this view was questioned by the Court of Appeal in British Sugar Manufacturers, Ltd. v. Harris, 16 A.T.C. 421; 21 Tax. Cas. 528.

The word "discovers" has been variously interpreted as equal to 'comes to the conclusion', Bray, J., in R. v. Kensington Commissioners (Ex parte Armayo), 6 Tax Cases 279 (H.I.) 'has reason to believe', Avory, J. in Grundy v. Dunham, 7 Tax Cases 12 and 'satisfies himself' Lush, J., in Williams v. Trustees of Grundy, 18 Tax Cases 271; (1934) 1 K.B. 524.

Irregular proceedings under sections 22 and 23.—If proceedings are started under sections 22 and 23 by the Income-tax Officer having jurisdiction, and these proceedings are continued by an Income-tax Officer not having jurisdiction, the proceedings can be resumed at any time by the first officer at the stage at which he left them, the subsequent irregular proceedings being ignored. In such cases section 34 does not apply since income cannot be said to have escaped assessment when assessment proceedings are still pending and there is no time limit for completing them. (Since these rulings were given, a time limit has been imposed by sub-section (2) of section 34 on assessments whether under section 23 or under section 34). 'Escaped assessment' is not the same as "has not been assessed" and 'assessment' is not confined to the definite act of making an order of assessment under section 23, In re Lachhiram Basantlal, 58 C. 909; 35 C.W.N. 310; A. I.R. 1931 Cal. 545; 5 I.T.C. 144; Rajendranath Mukerjee v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 61 I.A. 10; 61 Cal. 285; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 30; 1934 I.T.R. 71 (P.C.); In re Burn & Co., Calcutta, 1934 I.T.R. 30; 38 C.W.N. 204.

This however does not mean that an assessment is not concluded when the amount of tax payable by an assessee has been determined and a notice of demand (under section 29) issued. The words "cancel the assessment", "make a fresh assessment" "annul or enhance the assessment" in sections 27, 30 and 31 respectively show that proceedings after the issue of the demand notice do not form part of assessment. It is not therefore open to the Income-tax authorities to claim that the revision of the quantum of profits on the basis of the existing records is not the same as assessing income which has escaped assessment, Nawalkishore Kharaitilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 287.

Book-keeping problems.—As to questions arising under section 34 out of problems of book-keeping, see notes under section 13, especially in regard to Stock Values, Reserves and Bad Debts, Interest, Devices to conceal income and Double taxation due to change in accounting; also notes under 'previous year', section 2 (11).

In a case, the facts of which were unusual, the Income-tax Officer dealt with a part of the balance in a suspense account as if it was a secret profit, and in a later year, when the limitation under section 34 had expired, he sought to tax further amounts of the suspense balance when adjusted (not by credit to profit). The High Court disallowed the action of the Income-tax Officer, M. K. Muhammad Ibrahim v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1942 I.T.R. 64. This ruling by no means disallows the taxation of suspense items as and when credited to profits but merely held that on the facts the profit that escaped assessment had arisen long before.

Accrued interest.—Where interest accrues and is compounded and is not paid and no tax is levied on the interest each year as it accrues, section 34 does not come into operation when eventually tax is levied on the interest in the year of payment. But the onus would be on the Revenue to show that tax had not been levied in preceding years as the interest accrued, Rajah Bhunesh Pratap Narain Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 6 I.T.C. 167 (All.).

Calling for past accounts.—See Kandaveami Pillai's case, 3 I.T.C. 297 referred to under section 23 regarding the calling of accounts in the course of an assessment under section 23 with a view to finding out whether a supplementary assessment should be made in respect of the preceding year.

Default in complying with notice.—Since the procedure under this section is to be so far as may be the same as would be applied to an original notice under section 22 (2), the provisions of section 23 (4) would be attracted to re-assessments made under this section if any of the defaults referred to in section 23 (4) occur, In re Kedarnath Kesriwal, 4 I.T.C. 407; 58 Cal. 254; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 209.

Where an assessee lumped together his income from two branches and the Income-tax Officer afterwards suspected that a part of the income from one of the branches had escaped assessment and accordingly issued a notice under section 34 asking for a return of income of that branch, the assessee, instead of furnishing the return, merely drew the Income-tax Officer's attention to the fact that he had already submitted a return in the first instance. Held, that the assessee did not comply with the requirements of the Income-tax Officer whose object in issuing the notice was to know separately the income of the two branches and that an assessment under section 23 (4) was in order, Ramachandra Kashinath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 58. A mere reference to the previous return is not a valid return in response to the notice under section 34, so an assessment can be made under section 23 (4), In re Pitamber Prasad, 1942 I.T.R. 370.

Penalty for concealment of income.—As to penalties in respect of concealment at time of original assessment discovered at the time of supplementary assessment, see notes under section 28.

Registration of firm assessed under section 34.—Before 1928, a firm that was being assessed under section 34 could not claim the benefit of registration. The application for registration may be made now even in respect of assessments under section 34 if no part of the income of the firm has been assessed in the usual course under section 23. The benefit of registration is denied to a firm that conceals a part of its income or keeps quiet over a manifest mistake made by the Income-tax Officer, but not to a firm that was not assessed at all in the first instance.

Partners of firms.—The taxation of partners of firms at source is more a liability than a right; and a partner cannot claim that the firm must be assessed and not he. Therefore, if profits escape assessment through the firm not being taxed, proceedings can be started under section 34 against the partners direct without such proceedings being started against the firm, In re Neemchand Daga, 35 C.W.N. 534; 58 Cal. 120; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 686; 5 I.T.C. 206; In re Burn & Co., 6 I.T.C. 135 (Cal.); M. A. L. A. R. Aryan Chettiyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1937 I.T.R. 600. The Act does not say that a firm should be assessed first; and it is open to the Income-tax Officer to assess either the firm or the partners.

In such a case it is immaterial that the proceedings against the firm would be time-barred so long as the proceedings against the partner are not.

This question will seldom arise after 1939 in view of the new basis of taxation of firms adopted in 1939. See sections 14 and 23 (5).

Estoppel and res judicata.—See notes under section 23.

Insurance Company.—See notes under section 10 (7) and schedule.

Succession.—See notes under section 26 in regard to supplementary assessments in cases of succession.

Sections 34 and 35 not mutually exclusive.—Where both sections apply it is open to the Income-tax Officer to proceed under either section. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. D. R. Naik, 1939 I.T.R. 362.

Payment of tax by instalments.—In order to mitigate possible hardship in an assessee's having to pay additional tax for several past years all at once, Government promised to issue executive instructions to Income-tax Officers to allow payment by instalments in deserving cases.

35. (1) The Commissioner or Appellate Assistant Commissioner may, at any time within four years from the date of any order passed by him in appeal or, in the case of the Commissioner, in revision under section 33-A and the Income-tax Officer may, at any time within four years from the date of any assessment order or refund order passed by him, on his own motion, rectify any mistake apparent from the record of the appeal, revision, assessment or refund as the case may be, and shall within the like period rectify any such mistake which has been brought to his notice by an assessee :

Provided that no such rectification shall be made, having the effect of enhancing an assessment or reducing a refund unless the Commissioner, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Income-tax Officer, as the case may be, has given notice to the assessee of his intention so to do and has allowed him a reasonable opportunity of being heard :

Provided further that no such rectification shall be made of any mistake in any order passed more than one year before the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939.

(2) The provisions of sub-section (1) apply also in like manner to the rectification of mistakes by the Appellate Tribunal.

(3) Where any such rectification has the effect of reducing the assessment, the Income-tax Officer shall make any refund which may be due to such assessee.

(4) Where any such rectification has the effect of enhancing the assessment or reducing a refund the Income-tax Officer shall serve on the assessee a notice of demand in the prescribed form specifying the sum payable, and such notice of demand shall be deemed to be issued under section 29, and the provisions of this Act shall apply accordingly.

History.—Before 1922 the Collector could rectify mistakes only when brought to his notice by the assessee; in 1928 the power of rectification of mistakes which had been confined only to the Income-tax Officer in respect of original assessments was extended to other authorities. In 1939, the time limit was extended to four years, subject however to no retrospective effect for this limit, i.e., in respect of pre-1939 assessments and orders.

Scope of section.—This section does not confer on Officers a general power of review or revision or authorise any assessee to introduce any new facts in connection with the said assessment. Sections 34 and 35 are not mutually exclusive, and if both sections apply to a given case, the Income-tax Officer may proceed under either section, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Naik, 1939 I.T.R. 362.

Mistake.—"Mistake" is not mere forgetfulness (per Esher, M. R. Barrow v. Isaacs) ; it is a slip "made, not by design, but by mischance" (per Russell, C.J., Sandford v. Beal, 65 L.J.Q.B. 74; 74 L.T. 406); Prescott v. Lee, infra; Cf. 4 Bl. Com. 27 (Stroud.).

Appeals.—No appeal lies against an order under section 35, as indeed it cannot, when the object of the section is to provide for the correction of an obvious mistake. No reference to the High Court can be made in respect of cases under section 35. Before the Appellate Tribunal was set up, the Commissioner could refer suo moto any question of law for the opinion of the High Court; and a question under section 35 was so referred under the 1918 Act, in Jubilee Mills v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 2 I.T.C. 25; A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 257.

United Kingdom Law.—For similar provisions, see sections 120 (2) and 121 (6) of the United Kingdom Act of 1918.

Notice of demand.—If this rectification leads to an additional demand for tax, a fresh demand notice should be issued under section 29; and if it leads to a refund, a refund order will be issued.

Before 1939, the limitation in this section ran from the date of demand and not that of the assessment order; and a question arose as to what was the demand. See Tricumchand Dan Singh v. Chief Revenue Authority, 2 I.T.C. 436; 55 Cal. 565, which is of little interest now.

Revisional powers.—The Commissioner cannot under his powers of revision under section 33-A correct a mistake in the face of the time bar under section 35 even though the assessee had moved the Commissioner under section 33-A within the time-limit in respect of other matters, Jesaram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 8 Lah. 357; 2 I.T.C. 342; A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 421; Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Khemchand Ramdas, (P.C.) 1938 I.T.R. 414; 65 I.A. 236; I.L.R. (1938) Bom. 487; A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 175.

Mistakes apparent from the record.—In Jubilee Mills v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 25; A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 257 a case under section 26 of the 1918 Act, it was held that the section was intended only to rectify mistakes caused by the demand not corresponding to the assessment and not to provide appeals to the Commissioner from an order of the Collector under section 26, either rectifying a mistake or refusing to rectify it. The words “apparent from the record” bring out the substance of the first part of this decision. There were no such words in the 1918 Act.

A firm possessed five collieries which had been assessed separately in the names of three persons. When the Income-tax Officer came to know that the same firm possessed all the five collieries he issued a notice purporting to issue under section 35 (but really under section 34) a notice of proposed supplemental assessment. This evoked an application from the assessee firm (purporting to be heard under section 35) alleging that the previous returns had omitted certain losses and asking for a refund of excess tax paid. The Commissioner rejected the application for refund and also dropped the proceedings under section 34. Held, that there was no mistake apparent on the face of the record of the assessment within the meaning of section 35, Trikamji Jivan Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1 I.T.C. 406; 4 Pat. 224; A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 352.

Cases remanded on appeal.—In a case remitted by the Assistant Commissioner on appeal, the Income-tax Officer decided the points in issue in favour of the assessee but at the same time rectified a mistake without, however, giving an opportunity to the assessee to show cause against. The Assistant Commissioner cancelled this rectification but reduced the assessment to the original figure, instead of cancelling the assessment altogether. A question of law was held to arise out of the Assistant Commissioner's appellate order, Delhi Cloth and General Mills, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 117 I.C. 383; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 326.

36. In the determination of the amount of tax or of a refund payable under this Act, fractions of an anna less than six pies shall be disregarded, and fractions of an anna equal to or exceeding six pies shall be regarded as one anna.

Tax to be calculated to the nearest anna.

Departmental instructions.—Fractions of a rupee in income are disregarded in practice.

37. The Income-tax Officer, Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Commissioner and the Appellate Tribunal shall, for the purposes of this Chapter, have the same powers as are vested in a Court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, when trying a suit in respect of the following matters, namely :—

(a) enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath or affirmation ;

(b) compelling the production of documents ; and

(c) issuing commissions for the examination of witnesses ; and any proceeding before an Income-tax Officer, Appellate Assistant Commissioner, Commissioner or Appellate Tribunal under this Chapter shall be deemed to be a "Judicial proceeding" within the meaning of sections 193 and 228 and for the purposes of section 196 of the Indian Penal Code.

History.—Corresponds to section 27 of the 1918 Act and sections 28 and 37 of the 1886 Act.

The words " for the purposes of section 196 " were added by Act XXII of 1930. These words neutralise the effect of the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Lal Mohan Saha v. The Crown, 2 I.T.C. 428; 31 C.W.N. 996.

Scope of section.—This section does not by itself make an Income-tax Officer or Assistant Commissioner or Commissioner a Court or a Judge for all purposes. All that this section does is to confer specific powers on these officers in order to enable them to achieve a specified object, viz., the assessment of tax in as reasonable and equitable a manner as possible, which requires the eliciting of information, whether from the assessee or from others, which is necessary for the assessment. The ordinary rules of procedure in regard to evidence as followed in Courts do not necessarily apply to these proceedings before officers under the Income-tax Act. See, however, notes under section 23 and section 52.

Payment to witnesses.—Under departmental instructions, witnesses before Income-tax authorities summoned under section 37 are paid the same allowance as before civil courts in the same area.

Effect on section 61.—Though section 61 permits the assessee to appear through an agent, it does not exempt the assessee from being summoned by the Income-tax Officer under this section, if the Income-tax Officer considers the assessee's personal attendance necessary. If the Income-tax Officer needs the assessee's personal presence, he should issue a summons under section 37; it is not enough if he issues a notice under some other section, for in that case it is open to the assessee to appear through his representative.

Commissioner.—The Commissioner has been given powers under this section to enable him to dispose of matters under section 33-A (revision), section 64 (jurisdiction of Income-tax Officer), section 58-B (provident funds) and the like.

Commissions.—This section gives power to issue commissions only for the examination of witnesses and not for that of books, Bhiwani Sahai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1936 I.T.R. 222.

Penalties.—The penalties for disobeying the summons of the officers of the Income-tax Department issued under this section are the same as for disobeying similar summons issued by a Civil Court. An assessment cannot be made under section 23 (4) merely because an assessee fails to respond to a summons under this section, or even if he perjures himself. An assessment can be made under section 23 (4) only if the conditions therein set out are satisfied.

As regards the penalties for absconding in order to evade summons or notice being served, disobeying summons to appear or to produce documents, or for refusing to be sworn in, see section 172 et seq in Chapter X, Indian Penal Code.

See also sections 195 and 476 et seq of the Criminal Procedure Code, regarding the procedure for prosecuting such offenders, etc.

Civil Procedure Code—Applicability of—Details of.—Extracts from Orders V, XIII, XVI and XXVI of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, have been set out in an Appendix. The rules in these orders will apply to proceedings in the Income-tax Department to the extent set out in the section, viz.—(a) enforcing the attendance of persons and examining them on oath or affirmation; (b) compelling the production of documents; and (c) issuing commissions for the examination of witnesses.

Income-tax Officer—Revenue Court.—In re Punamchand Maneklal, 38 Bom. 642, it was held that an Income-tax Officer is a Revenue Court for the purpose of clauses (b) and (c) of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Following the above it was held by the Lahore High Court, that an Income-tax Officer is a 'tribunal' for the purpose of section 135 (2), Civil Procedure Code, and that a person on his way to appear before the officer in response to a notice from him is exempt from arrest, Basheshar Nath v. Amolak Ram, 1933 I.T.R. 9; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 214.

"For the purposes of this Chapter".—That is, in respect of matters connected with deduction at source, assessments, appeals, revision, etc. The powers cannot be exercised in respect of proceedings under other Chapters, e.g., Recovery of tax (Chapter VI); Penalties (Chapter VIII) or original order of refund (Chapter VII).

False evidence—Sections 193 and 196, Indian Penal Code.—"193. Whoever intentionally gives false evidence in any stage of a judicial proceeding, or fabricates false evidence for the purpose of being used in any stage of a judicial proceeding, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine; and whoever intentionally gives or fabricates false evidence in any other case, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to three years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Explanation 1.—A trial before a Court-martial . . . is a judicial proceeding.

Explanation 2.—An investigation directed by law preliminary to a proceeding before a Court of Justice, is a judicial proceeding, though that investigation may not take place before a Court of Justice.

Illustration.

A, in an enquiry before a Magistrate for the purpose of ascertaining whether Z ought to be committed for trial, makes on oath a statement which he knows to be false. As this enquiry is a stage of a judicial proceeding, A has given false evidence.

Explanation 3.—An investigation directed by a Court of Justice according to law, and conducted under the authority of a Court of Justice, is a stage of a judicial proceeding, though that investigation may not take place before a Court of Justice.

Illustration.

A, in an enquiry before an officer deputed by a Court of Justice to ascertain on the spot the boundaries of land, makes on oath a statement which he knows to be false. As this enquiry is a stage of a judicial proceeding, A has given false evidence."

196. Whoever corruptly uses or attempts to use as true or genuine evidence any evidence which he knows to be false or fabricated, shall be punished in the same manner as if he gave or fabricated false evidence.

Intentional insult or interruption to Income-tax Officer—Section 228, Indian Penal Code.—"228. Whoever intentionally offers any insult, or causes any interruption to any public servant, while such public servant is sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both."

Section 196, Indian Penal Code—Prosecution under.—The ruling of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Lal Mohan Saha, 2 I.T.C. 428; 31 C.W.N. 996; 104 I.C. 903, that in view of section 37 of the Income-tax Act no punishment was possible under section 196, Indian Penal Code, in respect of corrupt use of false or fabricated evidence before Income-tax authorities had overlooked the fact that the first part of section 193, Indian Penal Code, refers to giving or fabricating false evidence in a judicial proceeding and the second, to giving or fabricating such evidence in any other case; and that section 196, Indian Penal Code, which deals with the corrupt use of such evidence, applies as much to cases in which such use is made in judicial proceedings as to those in which it is made otherwise. This decision however is now obsolete in view of the insertion in section 37 of the Income-tax Act of the words "for the purposes of section 196."

United Kingdom Law.—Under section 144 of the United Kingdom Act of 1918, the General Commissioners can summon witnesses and examine them on oath. The penalty for disobedience or refusal to be sworn in or to answer questions is £20. But the Special Commissioners cannot, except in certain circumstances, summon witnesses. Their enquiries, however, are answered by affidavits before the local General Commissioners—see sections 67 (3) ibid.

Power to call for information.

38. The Income-tax Officer or Assistant Commissioner may, for the purposes of this Act,—

(1) require any firm, or Hindu undivided family to furnish him with a return of the members of the firm, or of the manager or adult male members of the family, as the case may be, and of their addresses ;

(2) require any person whom he has reason to believe to be a trustee, guardian, or agent, to furnish him with a return of the names of the persons for or of whom he is trustee, guardian, or agent, and of their addresses ;

(3) require any assessee to furnish a statement of the names and addresses of all persons to whom he has paid in any year rent, interest, commission, royalty or brokerage, or any annuity not being an annuity taxable under the head "Salaries," amounting to more than four hundred rupees together with particulars of all such payments made.

History.—Corresponds to section 28 of the 1918 Act. Sub-section (3), introduced in 1933, was substituted for another which has now been incorporated in section 22 (5). It crystallises previous departmental practice and obviates the inconvenient alternative of action under section 37.

Rent.—See notes under section 10 (2) (i). According to the Concise Oxford Dictionary "Rent" means "Tenants' periodical payment to owner or landlord for use of land or house or room".

Interest.—See notes under section 10 (2) (iii) and section 42 as to what is meant by 'interest'.

Annuity not being of the nature of salaries.—See section 7. The annuity contemplated is of the kind paid by an Insurance Company or out of an estate.

Penalties.—For penalties for failure to comply, see section 51 (c).

Form of notice.—No form of notice has been prescribed under this section ; at his option, the Income-tax Officer may summon any of these persons under section 37 and obtain the required information from them.

False statements.—Section 52 provides for prosecution only in respect of false declarations under sections 22, 30 (3) and 32 (2) ; however, a false statement furnished under section 38 could be dealt with under section 177, Indian Penal Code, i.e., the person proceeded against for giving false information.

Time-limit.—No time-limit has been fixed within which the information need be furnished under this section. Before a prosecution is started under section 51, the Income-tax Officer should give the persons concerned reasonable time within which to comply with his demands.

United Kingdom Law.—There are no directly corresponding provisions in the United Kingdom Law, but see the Fifth Schedule of the 1918 Act, Part XVI.

39. The Income-tax Officer or Assistant Commissioner, or any person authorised in writing in this behalf by the Income-tax Officer or Assistant Commissioner, may inspect and,

Power to inspect the register of members of any company.

if necessary, take copies, or cause copies to be taken, of any register of the members, debenture-holders or mortgagees of any company or of any entry in such register.

Fees not payable.—As the right is conferred on the officers of the department by statute, they need not pay any fees for inspection under sections 36 and 125 of the Indian Companies Act (1913).

CHAPTER V.

LIABILITY IN SPECIAL CASES.

40. (1) Where the guardian or trustee of any person being a minor, lunatic or idiot (all of which persons are hereinafter in this sub-section included in the term "beneficiary") is entitled to receive on behalf of such beneficiary or is in receipt on behalf of such beneficiary of, any income, profits or gains chargeable under this Act, the tax shall be levied upon and recoverable from such guardian or trustee as the case may be, in like manner and to the same amount as it would be leviable upon and recoverable from any such beneficiary if of full age or sound mind, and in direct receipt of such income, profits or gains, and all the provisions of this Act shall apply accordingly.

(2) Where the trustee or agent of any person not resident in British India, and not being a minor, lunatic or idiot (such person being hereinafter in this sub-section referred to as a 'beneficiary') is entitled to receive on behalf of such beneficiary, or is in receipt on behalf of such beneficiary of, any income, profits or gains chargeable under this Act, the tax if not levied on the beneficiary direct, may be levied upon and received from such trustee or agent, as the case may be, in like manner and to the same amount as it would be leviable upon and recoverable from the beneficiary if in direct receipt of such income, profits or gains, and all the provisions of this Act shall apply accordingly.

Previous Law.—This section corresponds to section 31 of the Act of 1918 and sections 20 and 21 of the Act of 1886. In 1939, the words "entitled to receive" replaced 'in respect of', and it was stated in items that a non-resident may be taxed either directly or through an agent. In 1941 the section was recast into two sub-sections dealing respectively with incapacitated persons on the one hand and with non-residents on the other, and the words 'or resident in British India' omitted. The failure to delete these words in 1939 led to the unintended result that a non-resident beneficiary would be taxed on his world income.

Machinery Chapter.—This chapter mixes up substantive provisions with those relating to machinery as will be seen from sections 41 and 42. Section 40 however is essentially a machinery section.

Scope of section.—The section applies only to four specific cases of trustees and agents, viz., of a minor, lunatic, idiot or non-resident. As regards other cases, section 41 applies; and in certain cases section 42.

Some of the questions which arise are common to both sections 40 and 41, and the notes below therefore overlap and cover both the sections.

Sub-section (2) of section 40 and sub-section (1) of section 42 also overlap and the agent of the non-resident may be caught by either section.

Property.—According to departmental instructions, where any 'property' (in the widest sense of the word and including a business) is held under trust, the owner of the property for the purposes of the Income-tax Act is the beneficiary and the income is the income of the beneficiary. The Act does not permit double taxation of the income of trusts, once in the hands of the trustees and again in those of the beneficiary.

United Kingdom Law.—See Rule 4 of the General Rules. The Rule does not require the trustee, etc., to be actually in receipt of profits; all that is necessary is that he should have the 'direction, control or management of the property or concern' of the beneficiary. But it has been suggested in Huxley's case, 7 Tax Cases 49; (1916) 1 K.B. 788 cited below that if the infant himself is directly taxed, the guardian will not be liable unless he is in receipt of the profits.

Rule 5 which relates to non-resident beneficiaries says that the resident trustee, agent, etc., shall be taxed, whether he is in receipt of the profits or not, as though the beneficiary were resident in England and in receipt of the profits or gains.

Rule 1 is as below: "Every body of persons shall be chargeable to tax in like manner as any person is chargeable under the provisions of this Act."

In the Hotz Trust case, 11 Lah. 724; A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 929; 5 I.T.C. 8 the Lahore High Court observed a propos of the taxation of associations (other than firm, companies, etc.), that there was little difference between this Rule 1 of the United Kingdom Law and sections 3 and 10 of the Indian Act.

Trusts not covered by sections 40 and 41.—The provisions in these sections and section 38 (2) do not exclude the taxation, whether as trustees finally or merely as agents on behalf of beneficiaries, of trustees not falling strictly within the provisions of sections 40 and 41. See Williams v. Singer, 7 Tax Cases 387, infra and the decision of the Privy Council in Currimbhoy Ebrahim Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1934 I.T.R. 148; A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 422; 6 I.T.C. 439. These special provisions are primarily machinery and of enabling nature and do not prevent the Revenue from proceeding under other sections at their option, Mrs. Saldanha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 55 Mad. 891; 6 I.T.C. 114; A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 378; Trustees of the Tribune, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 208; 16 Lah. 829; 1939 I.T.R. 415. Since these rulings were given, section 41 has been amended so as to cover all trusts under duly executed trust deeds, whether testamentary or otherwise, but cases not covered by deeds, still remain to be dealt with under section 3. Also, certain special types of trusts have to be dealt with under section 16.

Extent of liability of trustee.—In India before 1939 it was clear that the liability of the trustee should be confined to the profits that came into his hands; this was provided for by the words "being in receipt on behalf of the beneficiary of any income, etc." In 1939, the words were altered into 'entitled to receive', and in 1941, both the sub-sections adopted the words "is entitled to receive . . . or is in receipt of . . ." Thus a resident agent or trustee would, even apart from section 44-D, be liable, if being entitled to receive, but without himself receiving, the profits, he diverted them in such a manner that in the form of ultimate receipt by the beneficiary the income was not taxable, though if the non-resident had been in direct receipt of the profits he would have been taxable. On the other hand, income which merely accrues on paper and may not be received at all would not be ordinarily liable to tax. See notes under section 13. According to the notes on clauses attached to the Statement of Objects and Reasons in 1938, the object of the amendment was to "cover all cases". The Crown cannot in any case recover tax due from the beneficiary on other accounts through the trustee or guardian or agent, the liability of the latter being confined to what he is entitled to receive or receives under the trust. On the other hand the liability need not be confined to what the trustee has with him on the income account but may extend to what he has with him on the capital account of the trust since conceivably, the tax on profits may exceed actual profits as received in cash (because of the disallowance of various deductions for income-tax purposes).

Minor may be taxed direct if no guardian.—In R. v. Newmarket Commissioners, (Ex parte Huxley), 7 Tax Cases 49; (1916) 1 K.B. 788 in which the assessee was a minor without a guardian, it was contended on behalf of the assessee that though he earned substantial sums from his profession of a jockey he could not be taxed because he was not a 'person', and that a minor could be taxed only if there was a guardian or trustee. In the King's Bench Division, a bench of three judges unanimously held that the minor could not be taxed; but the decision was reversed unanimously by the Court of Appeal.

Per Phillimore, L.J.—"It was urged that the making of a return is a matter of difficulty and that an infant is not supposed by the law to be capable of doing such difficult business matters, that every subject who is assessed has a right of appeal and that an appeal is in the nature of a lis and that no lis in which an infant is concerned can be conducted in the Courts unless he has a guardian ad litem. I think the answer is that in most, if not quite all, of the rare cases in which an infant becomes chargeable . . . it would be because of his exceptional and precocious skill, that such infant may be presumed to be capable of either making a return or of instructing and paying some competent adviser, and that the analogy of a lis must not be pushed too far.

"It is not necessary to consider what might be the decision if the infant had a guardian having the direction and control or management of his property and the Crown was minded nevertheless to require a return from the infant. But in that case, the decision in another part of the same section, viz.—Tischler v. Apthorpe, 2 Tax Cases 89; 52 L.T. 814 approved as it was in this Court in the case of Werle & Co. v. Colguhoun, 2 Tax Cases 402; 20 Q.B.D. 753 would have to be reckoned with."

Per Warrington, L.J.—"Huxley contends that . . . the law treats all infants, whether babies in arms or men of twenty years of age, as equally incapable. . . . But I think the legal doctrine of equality of incapacity has reference to the question of status before the law, and for the purpose of construing such an Act as the present, it has no applicability."

Per Phillimore, L.J.—"But guardians will not be liable for the infant's default if they have not received or had the control of the infant's income."

Non-resident may be taxed direct if accessible.—The words "if not levied on the beneficiary direct" occurring in sub-section (2) codify the following decisions, viz. Chief Commissioner of Income-tax v. Bhanjee Ramjee & Co., 1 I.T.C. 147; 44 Mad. 773; A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 212; Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. National Mutual Life Association of Australasia, 1933 I.T.R. 350; 57 Bom. 519; A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 427; 6 I.T.C. 426, and Maharaja of Patiala v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, (Central), 1943 I.T.R. 202; and neutralise the decision in, Sir Aditya Narayan Singh (Maharaja of Benares) v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1938 I.T.R. 217; I.L.R. 1938 All. 432; A.I.R. 1938 All. 310, which held the contrary view. In view of the addition of these words to the statute, the corresponding rulings in the United Kingdom, on the subject in Tischler v. Apthorpe, 2 Tax Cas 89; Werle & Co. v. Colguhoun, 2 Tax Cas 402 (C.L.). Whitney v. Inland Revenue, 10 Tax Cas. 88 (H.L.), and Macidine & Co. v. Eccote, 10 Tax Cas. 481 (H.L.), are of little interest now.

Who should be taxed—Beneficiary or trustee.—Section 40 is not a charging, but a machinery, section; and under the law the person charged with tax is neither the trustee nor the beneficiary but whoever is in actual receipt of control of the income which it is sought to reach, Hotz Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 11 Lah. 724; A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 929; 5 I.T.C. 8; In re Probynabad Stud Farm, 1936 I.T.R. 114; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 602; 8 I.T.C. 439; Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Abu Baker Abdul Rahman, 1939 I.T.R. 139. The amendments in 1939 to sections 40 and 41 give explicit option to the Crown to recover tax either from the trustee or from the beneficiary.

In the case of the Hotz Trust, the trustees carried on business and administered the properties of the testatrix for the benefit of her children, all of whom were of full capacity and ordinarily resident in British India. The trustees had to keep proper accounts and get them audited. They had to set aside a part of the profits every year as a reserve for business purposes; and this reserve, if not utilised in the business, was to be divided among the beneficiaries at the end of ten years and thereafter periodically according to circumstances. The trustees could extend the business at their discretion and could borrow for this purpose. Half the profits was to be earmarked for the purpose of repaying such loans. No beneficiary could hypothecate or alienate his or her share except by selling it equally to all the other beneficiaries. Held, that the trustees should be taxed on the profits of the business, as an association of individuals, Hots Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 8; 11 Lah. 724; A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 929.

Following the above ruling the Madras High Court held that a business carried on by a Christian mother on behalf of herself and her minor sons of whom she was the guardian belonged to an association of individuals within the meaning of section 3 and was taxable under section 10, Mrs. Saldanha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 55 Mad. 891; 6 I.T.C. 144; A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 378.

A trust was created by statute to maintain the dignity of a Baronetcy. There were four trustees of whom the beneficiary Baronet was one and managed the properties. The trustees paid out certain sums, retained others and paid the balance to the Baronet. It was decided by the Privy Council, confirming the decision of the Bombay High Court that the trustees were taxable both in respect of what they spent or retained and what they paid to the Baronet, Trustees of Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1934 I.T.R. 148; 7 I.T.C. 195; 61 I.A. 209; 5 Bom. 317; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 166 (P.C.). It was suggested in argument before the Privy Council that the result would be that both the beneficiary and the trustee would be taxed, that the assessment of trustees involved the graduation of the tax with reference to the total income of the trustees, with reference to the income of other trusts or even the personal income of the trustees and that on the other hand there would be no graduation with reference to the total income of the beneficiary either in his favour if he enjoyed only a small benefit out of a large estate with slender other resources, or in favour of the revenue in other cases. As regards double taxation, the Privy Council declined to express an opinion, since the position as argued might or might not be correct. As regards graduation the Privy Council considered that it may be found compatible with the scheme and machinery of the Act to have the scale of tax adjusted according to the total income of the Baronet individually. Departmental practice is based on this ruling.

Remittances from non-resident trustees—Resident beneficiaries.—

In Drummond v. Collins, (1915) A.C. 1011; 6 Tax Cases 525, a non-resident left property situate abroad upon trust for the children of his deceased son. The trustees under the will were directed to accumulate the income of the respective shares of the children on certain conditions. The will also directed that "out of the net income of the proportionate share of the trust estate held in trust for any child" the trustees might in their uncontrolled discretion provide from time to time for maintenance and education of such child. The children lived with their guardian, the mother, in the United Kingdom. From time to time, the trustees remitted moneys to the mother on behalf of the children. It was contended that the moneys were not liable to tax, firstly because they were voluntary payments, and secondly because the mother had no control of the foreign property. Held, that the payments in question were taxable.

Per Lord Loreburn.—"I do not assent to the proposition that a voluntary payment can never be charged, but it is enough to say that these were not voluntary payments in any relevant sense. They were payments made in fulfilment of a testamentary disposition for the benefit of the children in the exercise of a discretion conferred by the will. They were in fact the children's income."

Per Lord Parker.—" Though they might be incapable, because of their age, of giving a receipt for the money, it is in my opinion none the less clear that the money in question was, as soon as the trustees had exercised their discretionary trust, held in trust for these infants as beneficiaries".

Per Lord Wrenbury.—"Let me however assume that the interest of the infants is contingent; that is to say, the income of another (the person entitled under the gift over) in another contingency. . . . It remains however that in this case the trustees exercise their discretion in favour of the child, the interest of the child ceases to be contingent and becomes vested. Whether the money is paid to the child or to the guardian of the child or to the school-master or to the tailor or other person who supplies the wants of the child, it is paid to or to the use of the child and is the income of the child."

Does liability of trustee depend on liability of beneficiary?—On the question whether the liability of the trustee depends on the liability of the beneficiary, the following judgments in the United Kingdom may be noticed:

" Indeed, I understood Mr. Cunliffe to go so far as to say that, when funds are vested in trustees, the Revenue authorities are entitled to look to those trustees for the tax, and are neither bound nor entitled to look beyond the legal ownership.

My Lords, I think it clear that such a proposition cannot be maintained. . . . If the legal ownership alone is to be considered, a beneficial owner in moderate circumstances may lose his right to exemption or abatement by reason of the fact that he has wealthy trustees, or a wealthy beneficiary may escape super-tax by appointing a number of trustees in less affluent circumstances. Indeed, if the Act is to be construed as Counsel for the appellant suggests, a beneficiary domiciled in this country may altogether avoid the tax on his foreign income spent abroad by the simple expedient of appointing one or more foreign trustees. Accordingly, I put this contention aside. On the other hand, I do not think it would be correct to say that, whenever property is held in trust, the person liable to be taxed is the beneficiary and not trustee. Section 41 of the Income-tax Act, 1842, renders the trustee, guardian or other person who has control of the property of an infant, married woman or lunatic chargeable to income-tax in the place of such infant, married woman or lunatic. . . . And, even apart from these special provisions, I am not prepared to deny that there are many cases in which a trustee in receipt of trust income may be chargeable with the tax upon such income. For instance, a trustee carrying on a trade for the benefit of creditors or beneficiaries. . . .

. . . or a trustee who is under an obligation to apply the trust income in satisfaction of charges or to accumulate it for future distribution, appears to come within this category, and other similar cases may be imagined. The fact is that, if the Income-tax Acts are examined, it will be found that the person charged with tax is neither the trustee nor the beneficiary as such, but the person in actual receipt and control of the income which it is sought to reach. The object of the Acts is to secure for the State a proportion of the profits chargeable, and this end is attained (speaking generally) by the simple and effective expedient of taxing the profits where they are found. If the beneficiary receives them, he is liable to be assessed upon them. If the trustee receives and controls them, he is primarily so liable. If they are under the control of a guardian or committee for a person not sui juris or of an agent or receiver for persons resident abroad, they are taxed in his hands. But in cases where a trustee or agent is made chargeable with the tax, the statutes recognise the fact that he is a trustee or agent for others, and he is taxed on behalf of and as representing his beneficiaries or principals. . . . In short, the intention of the Acts appears to be that, where a beneficiary is in possession and control of the trust income and is sui juris, he is the person to be taxed, and that, while a trustee may in certain cases be charged with the tax, he is in all such cases to be treated as charged on behalf or in respect of his beneficiaries, who will accordingly be entitled to any exemption or abatement which the Acts allow. . . .”—Per Viscount Cave in Williams v. Singer and others and Pool v. Royal Exchange Assurance, 7 Tax Cases 387 at 410; (1921) 1 A.C. 65.

“ . . . It was suggested by Counsel for the appellant that the Income-tax Acts, except in certain special and rather narrow instances, took no account of the position of trustees, but regarded only the legal ownership. On the other hand, from some of the language in the judgments of the Court of Appeal, especially that of Lord Justice Warrington, it would appear that a contention that the Income-tax Acts looked generally to the beneficiary and disregarded the trustee, except as a means of reaching the beneficiary in certain rare cases, had found favour. I do not propose to express an opinion whether either, or which, if either, of these two extreme views is right. . . .

It may perhaps be said that, where there is a trust for accumulation or for payment of debts, no person can be said to be entitled to the receipt of the profits and that in such case the trustee is to be the person to be assessed. It is possible also that, where trustees have the management of a business, they should be the persons to be assessed or charged. There are disbursements which may have to be made in the course of conducting a business which a prudent owner would consider as deductions from profits and which trustees would make before they paid the net income over to the beneficiary but which, nevertheless, for income-tax purposes, as the law at present stands, are not considered as legitimate deductions from income—cases of which the decision of this House in Strong & Co. v. Woodfield, 5 Tax Cases 215; (1906) A.C. 448, is an example. In these cases, if the Revenue is to receive its full quota, it would seem that the assessment must be put upon the trustee and not upon the beneficiary, and that in such cases the trustee is the person to be assessed. The case now before your Lordships is not one of such cases. . . .”
Per Lord Phillimore. (Ibid.)

“We hear of no matters in which a conflict between capital and income and their respective interests has arisen, nor of any business carried on by the trustee as to which the more complex case of trading profits would replace the plain case of dividends paid. If there had been annuitants with a prior right to be paid or several beneficiaries entitled to share in the income, if there had been reversioners who could claim that part of the annual profits were in the nature of accretions to capital; if there was a trust for accumulation or a power to vary the amounts payable from time to time as between minors, the impracticability of saying that any or all of the beneficiaries entitled to the income owned the whole or any part of that income from the moment it became payable and was paid to the full extent of the amount paid would be evident."—Per Lord Sumner in Baker v. Archer-Shee, 11 Tax Cases 749; (1927) A.C. 844.

In Williams v. Singer, 7 Tax Cases 387, it was decided that where the income is, under a mandate from the trustees, payable direct to the beneficiary or his bankers, the liability to tax should be determined by the circumstances (e.g., in respect of residence, domicile, allowances and reliefs) of the beneficiary, and this principle was recognised in later cases as of universal application, Reid's Trustees v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 14 Tax Cases 512; (1929 S.C. 439) approved in Kelly v. Rogers, (1935) 2 K.B. 446 (C.A.); 19 Tax Cas 692.

It will be noted that sections 40 and 41 of the Indian Act have specifically provided for the various contingencies referred to in the above rulings. It has to be ascertained with reference to the facts of each case whether the trustee is entitled to receive the income specifically on behalf of a beneficiary or not.

Expenses of management of trust.—It was held at one time that if a will or settlement created a trust providing for the payment of the cost of management and a gift of the remainder of the income to a beneficiary, the income of the beneficiary was the net income after deducting the expenses of management of the trust, Murray v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 11 Tax Cases 133, but this view was overruled by the House of Lords in Baker v. Archer-Shee, 11 Tax Cases 749; (1927) A.C. 844. If the trust does not provide for the expenses of management, the income of the beneficiary should be taken as the gross income of the trust in all cases irrespective of the circumstances. It is a different matter whether the trustee can claim to deduct from his taxable income as trustee, expenses of management of the trust in those cases in which he is taxed (and not the beneficiary). In such cases, expenses of management would not ordinarily be allowed as a deduction, as such expenses would not be necessary for earning the income that is the subject of charge, see Aikin v. Macdonald's Trustees, 3 Tax Cases 306.

Under a trust made by himself, as assessee was the life-tenant with remainders over. All the expenses and liabilities were to be met by the trustees out of the income. One of the terms of the trust gave the assessee the right to receive the whole or any part of the income and spend it on legitimate payments connected with the estate. It was held that this condition amounted to his being given a mandate to administer the estate on behalf of the trustees and that his own income was the net income after deduction of expenses, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Lord Hamilton of Dalzell, 10 Tax Cases 406.

Business carried on by trustees.—A testator who died in 1906 directed his trustees, inter alia, to pay to his sister the life-rent of certain insurance monies and to pay the full annual proceeds of the residue of the estate to his widow for her maintenance and that of his children. The widow died in 1908, leaving two minor daughters. (Both these daughters and the aunt, the testator's sister, were alive in 1914 when the case arose.) Under the will, each daughter was to acquire, on attaining majority, an absolute interest in one-half of the trust estate subject to the aunt's life-rent. If either sister died in minority leaving issue which attained the age of 21 years or married (if a female), such issue was to take the parent's prospective share. Failing issue, the prospective share of the pre-deceased was to go to the surviving sister. During minority the daughters had no absolute right to any part of the income; and the trustees had discretion to apply the whole or part of the prospective share of each sister to her maintenance and education. In addition to the insurance money, the estate consisted of heritable property and the wine merchants' business of the testator. The trustees, acting in the exercise of an express power to that effect, carried on the business. The entire net profits were paid over annually to or on behalf of the minor daughters. Held, that the business was that of the trustees and not that of the beneficiaries.

"The real reason why business has not been handed over by the trustees to the Misses Shiels was not any technical difficulty in the way of obtaining a discharge from minors unprovided with a guardian but the much more formidable difficulty that the trustees could not have denuded in favour of minor beneficiaries without committing a breach of trust. . . . Such a trustee could not have been regarded either as a simple trustee who was bound to denude in their favour when called upon", per Lord Sherrington in Fry v. Shiels' Trustees, 6 Tax Cases 583, 585.

Examples of trustees carrying on business, not for the benefit of specific beneficiaries, can also be found in clubs and institutions carrying on trade with outsiders. See Inland Revenue v. Stonehaven Recreation Trustees, 15 Tax Cas. 419; Carlisle and Silloth Golf Club v. Smith, 6 Tax Cas. 198 and other cases referred to under 'Mutual Concerns' in the notes under section 3.

Income—Whether belonging to trustee or beneficiary.—In Baker v. Archer-Shee, 11 Tax Cases 749, Lady Archer-Shee's father, who was a foreigner, had directed by his will that his estate should be held in trust and that the trustees should apply the whole of his income to the daughter's use. The trust fund consisted of American securities, and the trustees were in America where the income was realised. From time to time the trustees placed sums of money to the credit of Lady Archer-Shee in an American Bank, after retaining sums necessary to pay income-tax, etc., in America. The trustees had power to change the investments at their discretion. The question was whether having regard to the United Kingdom Law the assessment should be made only on the amount remitted to the United Kingdom or whether the whole of the amount placed to the credit of Lady Shee in America could be taxed. It was contended that the lady was entitled only to the interest from the estate, and that this interest was not a "foreign possession," and that the owners of the securities, viz., the trustees, were non-residents; and that therefore only the amounts actually brought into the United Kingdom by the lady could be taxed.

Rowlatt, J., (1927) 1 K.B. 109, while conceding that what the lady had was not a right to specific property but only the right in equity to compel the trustee to discharge his trust properly, held that the trustees should be dropped out for the purpose of determining liability to income-tax, and that, since, had the trustees been in England, they would have been assessed, the beneficiary should be assessed in the absence of the trustees who were outside the United Kingdom. His reading of the decision of the House of Lords in Williams v. Singer, 7 Tax Cases 410; (1921) 1 A.C. 65, was that in that case the beneficiary being abroad herself her interest was from a foreign source and as she was herself not taxable her trustees were also not taxable, and that if the beneficiary had been in England she would have been liable to tax on those stocks and shares on which it was held the trustees were not liable.

The Court of Appeal reversed Rowlatt, J.'s decision on the ground that what the beneficiary received was not the dividends in specie but the balance after the trustees had carried out their trust and defrayed expenses and the sums paid were "no longer clothed in the form in which it was originally received, having no trace of its ancestry" (per M. R. Hansworth). They followed Sudeley v. Attorney-General, (1897) A.C. 11 and emphasised the fact that Lady Archer-Shee had only an equitable right and not a specific right in the income.

The House of Lords in 11 Tax Cases 749; (1927) A.C. 844 reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal, by a majority of three to two. Lord Sumner considered that the stocks, etc., belonged only to the trust and not to the beneficiary who had only an equitable right. Lord Blanesburgh agreed with him and emphasised the fact that the assessee was sole beneficiary only by accident and that at one time her mother was also a beneficiary. Incidentally he approved of the ruling in Murray v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 11 Tax Cases 133. Lords Atkinson, Wrenbury and Carson, on the other hand, held that on the facts of the case the administration of the estate had been concluded, that Lady Archer-Shee's interest had become vested in her and that the trustees were only her agents. The majority's decision resulted in the overruling of the Scottish Court's decision in Murray's case referred to above.

Later on, with reference to further evidence on the American Law which, for English Courts, is a question of fact, the House of Lords unanimously held that the correct view was that taken by Lords Sumner and Blanesburgh above, Garland v. Archer-Shee, 15 Tax Cases 693; (1931) A.C. 212.

An educational endowment policy was taken out by trustees for the benefit of a child. If the child died before the age of fifteen, the trust funds were to revert to the father; otherwise the child received an annuity for four years from the age of fifteen and also the accumulated trust funds on attaining the age of twenty-one. The annual premiums covered the bulk of the trust fund. It was held by the House of Lords that the money spent on premiums was not the income of the child. Though the conclusion was unanimous, the judgments differed in the reasoning and what weighed most was the absence of provision in the trust that if the child died the balance of accumulated trust income was to belong to the child's estate, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Dewar and another (Charles Bruce's Trustees), (1931) A.C. 566; 16 Tax Cases 84 (H.L.).

Trustee—Correcting mistakes.—Under a will, several annuities were directed to be given free of deduction. The trustees had paid the annuities for some years without deducting income-tax. It was held that the annuities were not free of income-tax, and that the trustees were entitled to deduct the income-tax they had paid out of residue from future payments of annuities on the ground that the Court will always, when possible, allow the correction of errors of account as between trustees and their cestui que trust. The rule that a man cannot recover moneys paid under a mistake in law does not apply to cases of this kind, see In re Musgrave; Machell v. Parry, (1916) 2 Ch. 417. In India such annuities cannot be taxed at source—see notes under sections 7 and 12; but the main principle of this decision, regarding the right of a trustee to correct past mistakes on account of income-tax, will presumably apply in India also.

Agent of non-resident—Liability personal.—The liability of an agent of a non-resident to pay tax is personal. See Plunkett v. Narayan Parasuram, 1 I.T.C. 1; 22 Bom. 332; see Rigden v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue and Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Urwick's Executors, 19 Tax Cases 542. The ruling though decided under the 1886 Act is still applicable. The only change since made in the law is that the agent should be served with a notice (see section 43) and given an opportunity to show cause why he should not be treated as an agent. The fact that the liability of the agent is personal does not affect the right of the agent to recoup himself from his principal. All that the personal liability means is that the Crown does not look beyond the agent for the recovery of tax.

Indemnity.—The agent or trustee is protected under section 65 of the Act—q.v.

41. (1) In the case of income, profits or gains chargeable under this Act which the Courts of Wards, the Administrators-General, the Official

Court of Wards, etc.

Trustees or any receiver or manager (including any person whatever his designation who in fact manages property on behalf of another) appointed by or under any order of a Court, or any trustee or trustees appointed under a trust declared by a duly executed instrument in writing, whether testamentary or otherwise, (including the trustee or trustees under any Wakf deed which is valid under the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, 1913), are entitled to receive on behalf of any person, the tax shall be levied upon and recoverable from such Court of Wards, Administrator-General, Official Trustee, receiver or manager or trustee or trustees in the like manner and to the same amount as it would be leviable upon and recoverable from the person on whose behalf such income, profits or gains are receivable, and all the provisions of this Act shall apply accordingly.

Provided that where any such income, profits or gains or any part thereof are not specifically receivable on behalf of any one person, or where the individual shares of the persons on whose behalf they are receivable are indeterminate or unknown, the tax shall be levied and recoverable at the maximum rate: but where such persons have no other personal income chargeable under this Act and none of them is an artificial juridical person, as if such income, profits or gains or such part thereof were the total income of an association of persons.

Provided further that when part only of the income, profits and gains of a trust is chargeable under this Act, that proportion only of the income, profits and gains receivable by a beneficiary from the trust which the part so chargeable bears to the whole income, profits and gains of the trust shall be deemed to have been derived from that part.

(2) Nothing contained in sub-section (1) shall prevent either the direct assessment of the person on whose behalf income, profits or gains therein referred to are receivable, or the recovery from such person of the tax payable in respect of such income, profits or gains.

History.—That part of the section which does not refer to trustees generally is, the same as section 32 of the 1918 Act and corresponds to sections 22 and 23 of the 1886 Act. Till 1939, the section applied to the special cases mentioned and not to trustees generally. The section was extended to cover all trusts in 1939 when reference was also made to the receivability of income instead of actual receipt as before. The provisos to sub-section (1) as also sub-section (2) were added at the same time. In 1941, reference was made to testamentary trusts, which would otherwise not be covered by this section. See Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Venkatachalam Chettiar, 1944 I.T.R. 261. In 1946, the last part of the first proviso to sub-section (1) was added. The amendment of 1941 was not retrospective. See Income-tax Appellate Tribunal v. Shri Radho Madho, Trust, 1946 I.T.R. 470 (Nag.).

Executor—Under will.—I. Forbes v. Secretary of State 1 I.T.C. 8; 42 Cal. 151; 19 C.W.N. 138 a case under the 1886 Act, which however was substantially the same as the present Act in this particular matter, it was held that the income accruing to an executor of a will was taxable. The contention on behalf of the executor was that he was not the beneficial owner of the income and that there was no express provision in the Act to tax him as there was in the case of trustees, guardians, etc. See also In re P. C. Mullick, 65 I.A. 150; I.L.R. (1938) 2 Cal. 214; 1938 I.T.R. 206; A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 118 (P.C.).

Official Assignee.—The question whether the Official Assignee can be taxed under this section in respect of property falling under section 9 belonging to an estate under this management under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, has been raised but not decided, In re Official Assignee, Bengal (Estates of Jnanendranath Pramanik), 1937 I.T.R. 233; I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 192; 41 C.W.N. 683. This question cannot arise after the amendment of this section in 1939 which has enlarged the scope of section 41.

In the United Kingdom, according to Inland Revenue v. Fleming, 14 Tax Cases 78 a claim for the purpose of repayment of tax on the income from the estate of a bankrupt during its administration by a trustee cannot be made either by the trustee or by the bankrupt, if and when he is re-invested with the property.

Scope of section.—To bring a case under this section it is not enough that the property is managed by or under the order of a Court but it should be managed on behalf of another. Therefore, where co-owners (in definite shares) manage a property, even if under the orders of a Court, for their own benefit and not for that of an unascertained owner, the case does not fall under this section, In re Keshar Deo Chamria, 1937 I.T.R. 246; I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 358; A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 583 affirmed by the Privy Council on appeal in Keshardeo Chamria v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1939 I.T.R. 394 (P.C.); see also notes under section 9 as to ownership of property. The fact that one of the parties is a minor will make no difference, Jainalabdin v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1944 I.T.R. 285.

Whether section mandatory.—The question whether, if the conditions laid down therein are fulfilled, the tax can be assessed directly on the beneficiary at the option of the Crown was raised before 1939 but not decided, In re Keshar Deo Chamria, supra. Sub-section (2) now confers the option in terms.

Trustees under a duly executed deed.—Before 1939 the section applied only to Courts of Wards, Administrators-General, Official Trustees and Receivers and Managers appointed by or under the order of a Court. Now it extends to all trustees under duly executed deeds. The reference to the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act, is out of abundant caution. Before 1941, the section did not apply to testamentary trusts; now it does.

Cases of trusts without duly executed deeds—which, however, will be rare—should evidently be dealt with on the principles of Williams v. Singer, 7 Tax Cases 387; (1921) 1 A.C. 65 (H.L.) and Hotz Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 8; 11 Lah. 725; A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 929; i.e., in accordance with the facts of each case, tax being levied where income is found.

A receiver appointed by debenture holders is taxable, whether he is the agent of the company or of the debenture holders. Inland Revenue v. Thomson, (1935) 2 All.E.R. 651. The goodwill of a business cannot be separated from it, Inland Revenue v. Muller & Co.'s Margarin, Ltd., 1901 A.C. 217; therefore, if a share of the goodwill of a partnership is assigned to a non-partner, all that is meant is that if the partnership is sold, a share of the price attributable to the goodwill, should be given to the non-partner. The mere fact the partners are obliged to share the profits with the non-partner will not make the partners trustees for the non-partner; they are only debtors to that extent. Inland Revenue v. Harris Lebus' Executors, 1946 K.B.D.

Misdescription.—Mere description, for example, not relating the assessment note to a trustee as such, will not invalidate an assessment; for, he will be entitled to the equities arising from his trusteeship, if in fact he is a trustee, Martin v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 17 A.T.C. 513 (C.S.).

When section 16 (1) (c) and (3) apply.—To the extent that sections 40 and 41 are machinery provisions, they are obviously subject to the provisions of sections 16 (1) (c) and (3), 23-A, 44-D, et seq. which seek to treat the income of one person as that of another in certain stated circumstances. The primary charging section is section 3, of which all these sections are modifications and where a case is not covered by any of these specific sections, the income has to be assessed under section 3 on the person to whom on the facts of the case and the personal and other law applicable, the income belongs.

See notes under section 3 as to trustees generally and also under the heading 'Association of Individuals'.

Indeterminate shares.—The first proviso levies the maximum rate of income-tax (but not the maximum rate of super-tax—see section 58) on incomes of trusts where the income is neither received specifically on behalf of any one person nor the shares of the persons are defined and known. While in the case of a firm, the Crown has the option to treat it as registered if evasion is discovered, the Crown has no such weapon in respect of trusts used for evasion but not falling within section 16 (1) (c) or (3) or section (44-D).

Where a Waqf says that the beneficiaries shall "benefit concurrently and in the same proportion" and the number of beneficiaries can be determined the case is not governed by the first proviso of section 41 (1), and each beneficiary should be taxed separately, Khan Bahadur Habibur Rahman v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1945 I.T.R. 189 (Pat.). On the other hand where the income of each beneficiary year by year is dependent on the sole discretion of the trustees, the individual shares of the beneficiaries are necessarily indeterminate and the income of the trust as a whole will be taxed at the maximum rate. Estate Harendra Kumar Ray v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1944 I.T.R. 68. See also Arur v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 465. It will be noted that income-tax is levied not at the rate applicable to the total income of the trust (as in the case of an unregistered firm or similar association of persons) but at the maximum rate.

Also, the entire taxable Income of the trust from all sources (section 8 to 12) will be taxed. See Harendra Kumar Ray v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1944 I.T.R. 68. But if the beneficiaries have no other taxable income and none of them is an artificial juridical person the trust will be dealt with like an association or Hindu joint family and taxed at the rate appropriate to its total income, see the concluding part of first proviso to sub-section (1), which was added in 1946. The word 'or' in the first proviso must be read conjunctively; otherwise there is no point in the alternatives. Also, the use of the word 'individual' before shares, shows that what is to be determined is not only the quantum but the person beneficially entitled. Yakub Versey Lalji, etc. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1946 I.T.R. 548.

Partially taxed trusts.—The second proviso to sub-section (1) removes doubts that might otherwise arise as to the extent of taxability (also inclusion in total income) in the hands of the beneficiary of what he receives from the trustee who in turn derives income partly from sources taxable in British India and partly from sources not so taxable.

Specifically.—The word is used for mere emphasis obviously. Beneficiaries with contingent interests (not yet vested) will fall within the mischief of the first proviso. If the shares of the beneficiaries are indeterminate, the fact that the trustee in his discretion distributes specific amounts will not save such cases from the proviso. If A, B, C and D are beneficiaries, the shares of A and B specific and C and D indeterminate, the trustee should apparently be taxed with reference to C and D together at the maximum rate and with reference to A and B each separately at the appropriate rates.

Person.—Need not be an individual. See section 2 (9).

Refunds.—See section 48. Where the first proviso applies there will be no refund since no one can show that tax was paid at source on his behalf. In other cases, the tax will be paid on behalf of each beneficiary separately and the latter can claim refund, if any, admissible under section 48.

United Kingdom Law.—There is no provision in the United Kingdom statutes corresponding to the first proviso to sub-section (1), and there has been very considerable litigation as to who should be taxed and on what basis. Broadly speaking, if a Trustee spends for the benefit of a ward, the money spent is prima facie of the nature of the latter's income. Sutton v. Inland Revenue, (1929) 45 T.L.R. 565; 14 Tax Cas. 662, but the rights of the beneficiary have to be determined, not with reference to what the trustee has in fact done, but with reference to the deed of trust Archer Shee v. Baker, 15 Tax Cas. 19; see also Inland Revenue v. Kidston, etc., 20 Tax Cas. 610. The question when income accrues to a beneficiary will depend on the law of the country governing the trust as to when income vests in the beneficiary. Jones v. Down, 20 Tax Cas. 279. In the absence of specific appropriation by the trustee of particular items of capital or other items to meet particular payments, what a beneficiary receives comes out of the trust funds as a whole, and he cannot claim that his income came from a particular source, e.g., tax-free securities or (say) agricultural income, Inland Revenue v. Crawshay, 19 Tax Cas. 715.

Under his father's will an assessee was entitled (in the events which happened) during the subsistence of the trust of the residuary estate, to occupy a mansion house and grounds so long as the trustees should find it expedient to retain it in the hands unlet. The trustees were to hold it in trust 'for the life-rent use' of the assessee so long as his mother should remain alive, and subject to certain other conditions. The assessee had no power to let the property. The residuary estate was to be held in trust till the mortgages on the testator's estate had been reduced to a certain figure the ultimate remainder being to the assessee absolutely and in fee, if then living and in default to his issue. Assessments under Schedules A & B were made on the assessee but discharged by the trustees. Held for the purpose of supertax, that the annual value of the house and grounds was not part of the income of the assessee. Inland Revenue v. Wemyss, 8 Tax Cases 551.

Under his ante-nuptial marriage contract, an assessee assigned to trustees, his interest in certain shares in a company in trust to pay the income to himself for life but in the event of the yield from certain shares exceeding a certain limit, the excess was to be retained by the trustees and applied by them in reducing the charges created by the assessee on the funds. Subject to a life interest of the assessee's wife, the settled funds were to go to the children and in default of children to attain a vested interest to revert to the assessee. The assessee also had power to redeem the trust funds for a fixed sum to be held on the same trusts. Held that the excess income was not part of the assessee's income for super-tax, Inland Revenue v. Wemyss, 8 Tax Cases 551.

In 1916, an assessee decided to provide for his wife and daughter. A settlement was drafted in 1917, but the deed was completed only in 1919. He and his wife were the trustees. The trusts relating to property vested in the trustees on or before January, 1917 were to be effective from then, and those relating to other properties, when they were vested in the trustees.

As regards certain shares of a company included in the trusts, the directors of the company, in a meeting in February, 1917, sanctioned the transfer of the shares to the joint names of the assessee and his wife. The Company opened a joint account in the names of the trustees in March, 1917. Thereafter dividends were paid to the trustees, but till the trust deed was completed, the shares remained in the assessee's name. The assessee had orally told his wife that he was holding the shares in trust pending their transfer to trustees. Held, that an effective trust had not been created in January, 1917. The oral declaration merely showed an intention to settle the shares and was not an immediate and complete declaration of trust. Allen v. Inland Revenue, 9 Tax Cases 234 (H.L.).

Mr. Stott owned certain preference shares in a Company, which he transferred, by a deed, dated 29th April, 1919, to himself and Mr. B jointly as trustees for Mr. B's minor sons. A trust deed was executed on the 30th April, providing, inter alia, that 'the trustees will henceforth stand possessed of the said shares, and of the income thereof on trust' for the minors. On the same day, viz., the 30th April, Mr. Stott received arrears of dividends on the shares for several years. The cheque for the dividend was dated the 29th April. The Company registered the transfer of shares on the 6th of May. On the 9th of May, a dividend warrant was endorsed by Mr. Stott, and paid into the trustees' joint account. The Commissioners held, following Duncan v. Inland Revenue, 8 Tax Cases 433, that the trust became effective from the 30th April, and that the dividend belonged to Mr. Stott. Held, reversing the decision of the Commissioners, and following that part of the ruling of the Irish Court of Appeal in Allen v. Inland Revenue, 9 Tax Cases 234, which had not been appealed against to the House of Lords, that the trust became effective on the transfer of the shares. Trustees of Brennan Minors v. Scanlan, 9 Tax Cases 427; 41 T.L.R. 452.

Under a will certain lands of the testator were, subject to certain interests of the widow, to be held in trust for the eldest son living at the time of his death absolutely on his attaining the age of 21 years, and the residue of the estate, both personal and real, to be converted into money and invested. The capital and income of such investment was to be held in trust for all the children in equal shares and were an "interest or interests absolutely vested" on the testator's death. The trustees had discretion to apply the whole or part of the income to which any child was entitled to its maintenance; and the balance was to be accumulated by investment. There were three daughters and one son. The widow remarried and was entitled only to an annuity from the residuary estate. The son was sought to be assessed to super-tax on the income from real property plus one fourth of the income of the residuary estate, on the ground that the interest of the minor was vested and not contingent. Rowlatt, J., decided as follows: ". . . . it does not matter whether the interest is vested or contingent in as much as there is a trust to accumulate a fund during the infancy of the eldest son, subject to a power to the trustees to apply such sum as they think proper for his maintenance, the part of the income which is accumulated is not the income of the minor in a case of that kind the income must come to the infant in the end if the interest which he takes is a vested interest; but it will not come to him as income; it will come to him in future in the form of capital His income, which is held in trust for him in the sense, that he will ultimately receive it, but it is not in trust for him in the sense that the trustees have to pay the income to him year by year while he is an infant . . . the case is quite different from a case where the infant has the right to the money now but the money remains in the hands of his trustees, not because of any directions in the will which directed it to be accumulated, but because he is an infant and cannot receive the money and give a receipt for it." The Court of Appeal remanded the case for a definite finding as to whether the minor's interest was contingent or vested. The finding was that it was contingent, and the question as to the liability if the interest was vested was not considered by the Court of Appeal; and the obiter dicta of Rowlatt, J., have been, neither affirmed nor overruled: Inland Revenue v. Blackwell's trustees, 10 Tax Cases 235.

By a will, dated 1906, a testator, who died in 1908, gave the residue of his estate—containing real property under mortgages—after payment of legacies and annuities to servants and clerks, to his four children. Until the youngest child was 25—i.e., till 1916—the rents were to be used in reducing the mortgages, and then the property was to be divided, and not sold unless the trustees thought it advisable. The rents were spent, even after 1916 in reducing the mortgages, and no legacies were paid before December, 1919. The Crown taxed the children on their income from 1916 on the ground that they were entitled to the corpus from 1916 and could have enforced the conveyance of their shares to themselves subject to the charges. Held, that since the executors had power to pay off the mortgages—without the consent of the beneficiaries—before distributing the residue and they chose that course, the residue had not been ascertained in 1916; so no tax was payable by the children. Dave v. Inland Revenue; Duff-Dimber v. Inland Revenue, 14 Tax Cases 58.

Executors.—Income received by the executors of a will during administration is ordinarily their income and not that of the beneficiaries. A residuary legatee is entitled to nothing until the residue has been first ascertained. Therefore, when he receives the residue, even though it may include income during administration, he is not taxable as it is not his income. Marie Celesti Samaritan Society v. Inland Revenue, 11 Tax Cases 226; exp. Barnardo's Home, 7 Tax Cases 646 (H.L.). Similarly a residuary life tenant also is entitled to nothing until the residue has been ascertained. Rev. Lionel Corbett v. Inland Revenue, (1937) 4 All. E.R. 700 (C.A.). It is a different question, however, whether, when it has been ascertained, it is taxable, and if so, to what extent, and on what basis, whether on that of accrual or on that of receipt.

The position and the estate of trustees, however, differ from that of executors; for where trustees are in receipt of income which it is their duty to pay over to beneficiaries, either with or without deduction of something for the trustee's expenses on the way, the income is at its very inception the income of the beneficiaries. Rev. Lionel Corbett v. Inland Revenue, (1937) 4 All.E.R. 700 (C.A.).

This last ruling, however, has been nullified by the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1938 under which amounts paid during administration to beneficiaries with 'absolute interest' (which has been specially defined) will be deemed to be the income of the beneficiary.

Super-tax on trustees.—In Inland Revenue v. Pakenham, 13 Tax Cas. 573, it was held, by the House of Lords, that income-tax provisions relating to representative assessments on trustees and guardian were not applicable to super-tax. The latter was a tax on total income, while income-tax was schedular. The trustee may not be in a position to return the total income of the ward and even if he was, he might not be able to indemnify himself. In view of the words, 'so far as they are applicable' and not mutatis mutandis, the House of Lords considered that in view of the possible injustice otherwise, super-tax should be levied only on the beneficiary and not on the trustee. The Indian basis of super-tax and income-tax is, however, different. Under section 55, super-tax can be levied not only on individuals but on others; and both income-tax and super-tax are levied on the basis of 'total income'. The difficulty, however, about the trustees returning the total income of the beneficiary arises in India also; and this is an argument for taxing the beneficiary by preference where possible. Sections 40 and 41 as amended in 1939, give effect to this purpose. See also section 58 which excludes from super-tax the first proviso of section 41 (1).

In the United Kingdom, an association of individuals is not liable to super-tax. So, questions arise whether a trustee who is accumulating funds is receiving income year by year on behalf of the beneficiary, whether the latter has a contingent or vested interest and so forth; section 41 in India covers many of these difficulties.

Expenses of trustees.—Trustees in Scotland received remittance from abroad in respect of income from trust property abroad and distributed the net income to the beneficiaries. Held that the full amount received by the trustees was taxable, without any deduction for management expenses in the United Kingdom. Per the Lord President—'It is for them (the trustees) to point to the section of the statutes which entitled them to make such a deduction. I think they have entirely failed'—per Lord MacLaren. 'The management of the trustees is, I venture to think, of the nature of what is described in one of the rules as a private or domestic use . . . the only kind of deductions allowed is expenditure incurred in earning the profits . . . there is no distinction under any circumstances allowable for expenditure incurred in managing profits which have been already earned and reduced into money—pounds, shillings and pence. Aikin v. Macdonald's Trustees, 3 Tax Cases 306 (C.S.).

An assessee was entitled under a will to a share of the net annual income of the residuary estate. Legacy duty was paid by the trustees to the Crown, and the trustees paid the net amounts to the assessee after deducting the duty. Held, that though the trustees were accountable to the Crown for the duty, it was, in effect a personal obligation of the assessee. The income receivable under the bequest was therefore part of his taxable income; and the amount to be included was his full share of the net residuary income plus income-tax applicable thereto, without deduction of legacy duty paid on his behalf. Colville v. Inland Revenue, 8 Tax Cases 442 (C.S.).

42. (1) All income, profits or gains accruing or arising, whether directly or indirectly, through or from any business connection in British India, or through or from any property in British India, or through or from any asset or source of income in British India, or through or from any money lent at interest and brought into British India in cash or in kind, shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India, and where the person entitled to the income, profits or gains is not resident in British India, shall be chargeable to income-tax either in his name or in the name of his agent, and in the latter case such agent shall be deemed to be, for all the purposes of this Act, the assessee in respect of such income-tax :

Provided that where the person entitled to the income, profits or gains is not resident in British India, the Income-tax so chargeable may be recovered by deduction under any of the provisions of section 18 and that any arrears of tax may be recovered also in accordance with the provisions of this Act from any assets of the non-resident person which are, or may at any time come, within British India :

Provided further that any such agent, or any person who apprehends that he may be assessed as such an agent, may retain out of any money payable by him to such non-resident person a sum equal to his estimated liability under this sub-section, and in the event of any disagreement between the non-resident person and such agent or person as to the amount to be so retained, such agent or person may secure from the Income-tax Officer a certificate stating the amount to be so retained pending final settlement of the liability, and the certificate so obtained shall be his warrant for retaining the amount :

Provided further that the amount recoverable from such agent or person at the time of final settlement shall not exceed the amount specified in such certificate except to the extent to which such agent or person may at such time have in his hands additional assets of such non-resident person.

(2) Where a person not resident or not ordinarily resident in British India, carries on business with a person resident in British India, and it appears to the Income-tax Officer that owing to the close connection between such persons, the course of business is so arranged that the business done by the resident person with the person not resident or not ordinarily resident produces to the resident either no profits or less than the ordinary profits which might be expected to arise in that business, the profits derived therefrom or which may reasonably be deemed to have been derived therefrom, shall be chargeable to income-tax in the name of the resident person who shall be deemed to be, for all the purposes of this Act, the assessee in respect of such income-tax.

(3) In the case of a business of which all the operations are not carried out in British India, the profits and gains of the business deemed under this section to accrue or arise in British India shall be only such profits and gains as are reasonably attributable to that part of the operations carried out in British India.

RULES.

The relevant rules issued under this section are set out below.

Rule 33.—In any case in which the Income-tax Officer is of opinion that the actual amount of the income, profits or gains accruing or arising to any person residing out of British India whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connection in British India or through or from any property in British India, or through or from any asset or source of income in British India or through or from any money lent at interest and brought into British India in cash or in kind cannot be ascertained, the amount of such income, profits or gains for the purposes of assessment to income-tax may be calculated on such percentage of the turnover so accruing or arising as the Income-tax Officer may consider to be reasonable, or on an amount which bears the same proportion to the total profits of the business of such person (such profits computed in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act) as the receipts so accruing or arising bear to the total receipts of the business, or in such other manner as the Income-tax Officer may deem suitable.

Rule 34.—The profits derived from any business carried on in the manner referred to in section 42 (2) of the Act may be determined for the purposes of assessment to income-tax according to the preceding rule.

History.—The first two sub-sections of this section were first introduced in the 1918 Act, and were evidently influenced by the alterations in the English law in 1915, though, unlike the provisions in the United Kingdom law, these sub-sections were not mere machinery but imposed liability. The only change made in 1922 was the addition of the words 'or property' after the words 'business connection' in section 42 (1). In 1928, a sub-section (3) was added deeming the entire profits of sales in British India of imports into it to accrue or arise in British India and forbidding the deduction of notional commissions (not actually paid) from such profits (Steel Brothers' Case, 2 I.T.C. 119). This sub-section was replaced by the present sub-section in 1939. Extensive changes were also made in 1939 in sub-sections (1) and (2). The first part of sub-section (1) was extended so as to cover income whether of residents or non-residents (but the object has apparently failed—see Western India Life Insurance Case below) and income "through or from any asset or source of income in British India, or through or from any money lent at interest and brought into British India in cash or in kind." Explicit provision was also made to tax either the principal or the agent; and also for deduction of tax at source in certain cases. The second and third provisos to sub-section (2) were also added. Sub-section (2) was amended partly to place a British Subject (or a subject of an Indian State) in no worse position than a non-British subject or a non-Indian State subject and partly as a consequence of the recasting of the basis of taxation (see sections 4, 4-A and 4-B) with reference to residence and ordinary residence; also partly to strengthen the hands of the Income-tax authorities, viz.; by removing the former condition that the non-resident (or not ordinary resident) person should exercise control over the business of the resident. Now, 'close connection' and abnormally low profits are enough for the Income-tax Officer to take action.

Sub-section (3) which, from 1928, sought to tax the entire profits on sales in British India of imported goods was probably intended to be relaxed so as to tax 'merchandising' profits only; but, as drafted it applies only to income 'deemed' under sub-section (1) to accrue, etc., in British India and not to cases of accrual or receipt in British India which are caught directly by section 4. The latter will be taxable in full and only income 'deemed' to accrue in British India will be taxed in part. According to the Bombay decision in Western India Life Insurance Case, this sub-section can apply only to non-residents.

Residence and ordinary residence.—See sections 4-A and 4-B and notes under those sections.

Section applies only to non-residents.—Notwithstanding the amendment in 1939, it has been held that the section applies only to non-residents; for (1) the marginal note referring to non-residents has been retained (but it is not usual to amend marginal notes); (ii) if the first part of the section applied both to residents and non-residents, its proper place would be in the definition clauses, viz., section 2; (iii) by making the whole of the first paragraph as one and connecting it with the other by 'and', the statute makes it clear that the section applies only to non-residents; and (iv) the categories of income referred to in section 42 point to non-residents only; and (v) it is not a fair method of construing section 4 (1) (b), first to separate income into two parts, viz., (A) accruing within British India and (B) accruing outside and then to take a portion of (B) back into (A) by referring to some other part of this Act. Commissioner of Income-tax v. Western India Life Insurance Co., 1945 I.T.R. 405 (Bom).

Accruing or arising.—As to the meaning of these words, see notes under section 4. This section no longer (i.e., after April, 1939) refers to accrual to a person; and the first part of sub-section (1) makes no distinction between residents and non-residents. The sum and substance of the first part is, broadly, that even indirect accrual from sources in British India (of income which accrues, i.e., is receivable abroad) is equivalent to accrual in British India. The question can, obviously, arise only in respect of income receivable outside British India, for, otherwise section 4 would be sufficient to catch such income.

Though as pointed out in Rogers Pyatt Shellac Case, 52 Cal. 1; and National Mutual Association, 1 I.T.R. 350; 57 Bom. 519, section 42 is a charging section in the sense that it renders a non-resident liable to tax in respect of sources of income to which he would not be otherwise liable, the section cannot be read without reference to sections 3 and 4, which impose the charge generally. This general charge is merely given a particular application by section 42. Hira Mills v. Income-tax Officer, Cawnpore, 1946 I.T.R. 417.

Directly or indirectly, through or from.—These alternatives appear in this collocation in order to cast the net as wide as possible.

Business connection.—See decisions set out below. This phrase relates to something different from, but not unrelated to, business, of which there is a definition in section 2 (4) of the Act, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Currimbhoy Ebrahim and Sons, Ltd., 1935 I.T.R. 395 (P.C.) See In re Nandlal Bhandari Mills, Ltd., Cawnpore, 1939 I.T.R. 452; A.I. R. 1939 All. 593.

Property.—The word as it occurs in this sub-section is an ordinary English word to be taken in its usual signification subject to the context provided by the rest of the sub-section, and there is nothing in the sub-section to exclude from its scope any of the six classes of income mentioned in section 6. The property, however, should be something tangible and situate in British India; it would, therefore, exclude a chose-in-action (though the latter might, for purposes of administration or succession or for purposes of jurisdiction to attach a debt, be naturally considered to be situate in British India) but include furniture in British India the hire for which is paid outside British India. The phrase 'property in British India' should be taken literally and simply, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Currimbhoy Ebrahim and Sons, Ltd., 1935 I.T.R. 395 (P.C.).

Asset or source of income.—One of the alternatives would seem to be superfluous and has been put in evidently out of abundant caution.

Money lent at interest brought into British India.—The section will now apply to such cases even if there is no business connection as a consequence of the lending, see Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Currimbhoy Ebrahim and Sons, Ltd., 1935 I.T.R. 395 (P.C.). Cases of money borrowed in British India from a non-resident, i.e., not borrowed outside and then brought in, are not mentioned evidently because normally interest in such cases would be governed by a British Indian contract and payable in British India.

In cash or in kind.—See notes on remittances under section 4 (1), particularly on constructive remittances.

Should agent be entitled to receive the profits.—It will be seen that, while sections 40 and 41 require the trustee, agent or receiver to be entitled to receive or be in receipt of the profits, section 42 does not require the agent to be so entitled. Section 42 (1) seeks to catch profits that accrue or arise outside British India from a business connection in British India and are normally received outside British India; ex hypothesi the agent in British India would not ordinarily be entitled to receive the profits, though he may be in receipt of funds or goods belonging to his non-resident principal. Similarly section 42 (2) seeks to catch profits that actually accrue or arise in British India, but are not necessarily received there being concealed by the manipulation of transactions between the non-resident principal and the resident agent. In such cases the profits are more likely to be received by the non-resident principal abroad than by the resident dummy agent in British India. That is why the sub-section does not require the agent to be in actual receipt of the profits. In either case, i.e., under sub-section (1) as well as under sub-section (2) of section 42, the agent would have to recoup himself somehow from the moneys or assets in his hand belonging to his non-resident principal. But in cases falling under section 42 (1), the Income-tax Officer may at his option recover the tax direct from the assets in British India, of the non-resident principal. In cases falling under section 42 (2), the agent is really a creature of the non-resident, and no special provision is necessary to enable him to recover the tax from his principal.

See also notes under section 43.

In his name or in the name of his agent.—This removes the difficulty created by the ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Sir Aditya Narain Singh (Maharaja of Benares) v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1938 I.T.R. 217; I.L.R. (1938) All. 432; A.I.R. 1938 All. 310. See also notes under section 40. The option is evidently that of the Income-tax authorities.

Deductions at source.—The old proviso has been expanded in order to authorise explicitly deduction at source which is enjoined by section 18.

Certificate of estimated liability.—The second proviso explicitly authorises the agent to retain money to meet tax; if there is disagreement on this point between him and his principal, the Income-tax Officer, if approached, is bound to give a certificate to the agent stating the amount to be provisionally retained pending final assessment and the agent can thereafter retain the amount on the strength of the certificate. If the agent fails to retain money, it is at his own risk; for he is deemed, for all purposes, to be the assessee.

The third proviso restricts the liability of the agent to the amount of the certificate referred to above plus any other assets of the principal in his possession at the time of final assessment.

Computation of taxable profits.—The receipts in the hands of the local agent in cases falling under sub-section (1) will be ordinarily gross profits since all the relevant expenditure of the non-resident may not be incurred through him; the computation of taxable profits should be made under Chapter III, and if that is not possible, under Rules 33 and 34. Rule 33 is necessary because the actual records of profits received by non-residents through trading in this country will, generally speaking, not be available, and there must therefore be some arbitrary method by which such profits can be ascertained. Similarly, Rule 34 is necessary because ex hypothesi in cases in which as the result of artificial manipulation the true profits have been obscured, it is possible to ascertain the profits only by some arbitrary method.

Under the pre-1939 law, no deduction was permissible on account of manufacturing profits in the case of goods manufactured abroad and sold in British India, In re Port Said Salt Association, Ltd., 59 Cal. 1226; 6 I.T.C. 123; 36 C.W.N. 563. This ruling is obsolete in view of the amendment to sub-section (3) in 1939.

Sub-section (3).—Note the word 'deemed'. The sub-section, therefore does not apply to income, in fact accruing or arising in British India. Therefore if goods are sold in British India, this sub-section will not apply; but it will apply if the goods are brought or processed or manufactured in British India and sold abroad. See Hira Mills v. Income-tax Officer, Cawnpore, 1946 I.T.R. 417. How the profits attributable to British India are to be estimated is a different matter.

On the other hand, according to the Bombay High Court, see Commissioner of Income-tax v. Western India Life Insurance Co., 1945 I.T.R. 405, this section can apply only to non-residents.

Non-residents—Income arising from business in India.—The following executive instructions have been issued:

Indian branches of non-resident firms are liable to assessment under the Act. In order to secure an accurate assessment in such cases, sections 22 (4) and 37 enable an Income-tax Officer to require the production of the balance sheet and profit and loss account of the firm as a whole, in addition to that of the Indian branch and also to require the submission of a detailed statement of all the profits credited to the head office on account of transactions carried out on its behalf. In some instances, however, the form adopted for the accounts and balance sheets of the head office or the Indian branch does not enable the share of profits properly due to the Indian branch to be gauged accurately. Rule 33 gives the Income-tax Officer wide powers to determine how the profits of the Indian branch shall in these circumstances be calculated, and enables him to fix as the income of the Indian branch for assessment purposes either a percentage of the turn-over of the business done by the branch or, where this procedure proves unsuitable, an amount which bears the same proportion to the total profits of the business as the Indian receipts bear to the total receipts of the business, or in such other manner as he deems suitable.

Indian agents of non-resident firms of which they are not technically either branches or subsidiary firms are liable for the payment, on account of their principals, of the tax on their principals' Indian profits under the provisions of sections 42 (1) and 43 of the Act. It will be observed that these provisions permit the levy of the tax on a non-resident's business not only where he has established a regular agency in India but also where he conducts his business regularly through a particular agent or casually through various agents. Tax cannot, however, be levied on any part of the income of a non-resident, which does not accrue or arise or is not received in British India or which can not be deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India. No attempt will be made by the Income-tax Officer to deem the income of a non-resident to arise in British India, if it is clear that the business operations in which he is engaged consist entirely of trading with British India as distinct from trading, either wholly or partially in British India. It is the nature of the operations and not the nature of the agency which determines liability, and even though a person resident may regard the agency as of a casual nature, this will not exclude the possibility of assessment as an agent if the non-resident either through one or more persons is really trading in British India. Each case will be dealt with on its merits, and such factors as the bearing of bad debts by the resident, the non-existence of privity of contract between the non-resident principal and the principal in British India have to be taken into account but no one of them alone is conclusive. For general guidance a few examples are appended, but it must be understood that they are only for the purpose of general illustration, and having regard to the complexity of business relations, they cannot be comprehensive, nor must the precise wording in any illustration be taken as binding the department in any case in which the facts warrant the taking of a different view.

(a) B, a distiller in Glasgow, sells whisky direct to A, an importer in Bombay. The relationship is that of principal and principal, and not that of principal and agent. Moreover, as B has no agent or connection in British India, he must be treated as trading with British India and not trading in British India. Even if B agreed to sell to no other person in British India but A, the position for income-tax purposes is the same, provided that the selling in British India is definitely A's business and does not constitute sales by A on behalf of B.

(b) A, an Indian resident and a large supplier of mill stores, has a monopoly for the sale in India of the belting of a non-resident B. A is paid commission by B on all orders executed. A does not confine his purchases of belting to B. So long as B exercises any control over the pricing of goods or the method by which his agent A conducts the business, he (B) must be deemed to have a business connection in British India, and is assessable accordingly, either directly or through an agent (which may be A or somebody else). If, on the other hand, B sends the goods to A for sale at the best price obtainable, A undertaking for a commission to sell entirely at his discretion, how he likes and to whom he likes, and A bearing any bad debts, B is really trading only with British India and not in British India. The relationship between A and B may, however, be closer than the mere description of the terms of the agreement would indicate and in that event, the Income-tax Officer may determine that B is really trading in British India through an agent.

(c) A is the Indian agent for hardware and sundries of B, a British manufacturer. A receives salary and commission from B, and bad debts fall on B. Here, the position is that B is actually trading in British India through his employee, and quite clearly, he is liable to tax either directly or through any person (including A), who can be deemed to be agent under section 43.

(d) A is a broker in British India who, in the ordinary course of his business, agrees to sell on commission certain standardised commodities. B, C, D, and E and many other exporters of such commodities from England send their goods regularly to A who, entirely at his discretion and according to the rules of the market in which he deals, sells all such goods sent to him at current market prices. A is responsible for any bad debts incurred, and on the sale of goods remits the proceeds to B, C, D, E, etc., less his regular commission. B, C, D, E, etc., are trading with British India and not in British India.

In all these cases, A's own commission or profits as agent are of course liable to tax whether or not he has to pay as agent in respect of his foreign principal's profits.

Casual agents for non-resident firms to whom goods are from time to time consigned have been dealt with above, and no attempt should be made to tax the profits of a non-resident through the agent on his class of business.

As regards taxation of interest on money lent by a non-resident to a resident in British India, it has been held by the Privy Council in the case of the Bombay Trust Corporation as agent of the Hongkong Trust Corporation that there can be a business connection within the meaning of sections 42 and 43 of the Act between a resident borrowing money from a non-resident and a non-resident lending money to a resident, and that the former can be treated as the statutory agent of the latter, under section 43 of the Act. This decision is to be followed wherever it is applicable. Where, however, a resident takes for a short period, a casual and isolated loan from a non-resident with whom he has no regular or continuous dealings, it need not be held on the strength of that fact alone that there is a business connection within the meaning of the above section and that the resident is liable as agent on the interest paid to the non-resident. (Income-tax Manual.) The latest edition of the Income-tax Manual has omitted the above illustrations.

Special Income-tax Officers.—The Income-tax Manual has the following instructions:

Non-residents whose income arises in more than one province, and who are assessed direct, and not through statutory agents under section 43 of the Act, will be assessed by the Income-tax Officer, Non-resident Refund Circle, Bombay, who will also deal with applications from them for relief, whether under section 48 or under section 49 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922; or under any notification issued by Government under section 60 (1) of the Act and section 49-A of the Act, providing for relief on account of double payment of income-tax. Persons not resident in British India, who have income arising in more than one province and are assessed direct and not through statutory agents under section 43 and a part of whose income is derived from horse-racing will be assessed by the Income-tax Officer, Poona.

Non-residents whose income arises in a single province, and who are assessed direct, and not through statutory agents under section 43 of the Act, will be assessed by one or more Income-tax Officers to whom such assessments are specially assigned by the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Collection of tax—Limitation.—Under proviso to sub-section (1) arrears of tax may be recovered, in accordance with the provisions of the Act, at the option of the Income-tax Officer at any time from the non-residents assets in British India. See sub-section (7) of section 46 and notes thereunder.

Foreign Shipping Companies.—Rule 33 provides the manner of ascertaining the income, profits or gains of a non-resident person when the actual amount of income, profits or gains chargeable to tax in British India cannot be arrived at directly from the accounts.

In respect of foreign shipping Companies carrying on business in British India, the following instructions have been issued:

(1) If a company furnishes annual accounts for the whole of its business, Indian and foreign, the second method provided by Rule 33 will reasonably be applied. Depreciation has only to be considered in calculating the world profits. These are to be calculated according to the Indian Income-tax Act. Profits calculated according to the United Kingdom Act will, therefore, require, certain adjustments. Deductions permitted in the United Kingdom but not permitted in India will have to be added back and deductions permissible in India but not permissible in the United Kingdom will have to be allowed. If any company however prefers to claim the depreciation allowed by the United Kingdom Income-tax authorities, the Commissioners of Income-tax may adopt that figure. Otherwise depreciation will have to be calculated according to the Indian rules. What follows applies to the calculation of depreciation according to the Indian rules. For this purpose a complete depreciation record has to be maintained for the entire fleet. Depreciation begins to run from the first year in which the company is "assessed" in India, that is, the first year in which its profits (or loss) were determined for the purpose of deciding whether it was liable to Indian income-tax. Unabsorbed depreciation, i.e., any balance of depreciation which cannot be allowed in any year owing to the profits not sufficing to cover the full amount permissible under the Indian rules will be carried forward and allowed as far as possible in calculating the world-profits according to the Indian method in the following year and if necessary in subsequent years. [What has been said above about depreciation applies equally to obsolescence (discarding).]

The proportion Indian receipts / Total receipts is applied to the world-profits calculated according to the Indian method (if there are any such profits) and the result is the Indian income liable to tax. No further deduction is permissible from the amount thus arrived at on account of depreciation (unabsorbed or otherwise) or anything else. The due proportion of all allowances permissible is automatically set off against the Indian profits by the above method.

This method is equally applicable whether a Company works out the profits for each voyage or follows any other method of accounting provided that it prepares complete annual accounts for the whole business, Indian and foreign, and furnishes the accounts of gross receipts Indian and foreign.

Some lines do not furnish complete annual accounts for their world business. They keep separate complete annual accounts for their Indian trade—that is, for all “round voyages” to and from Indian ports. The proper course is then to apply the method just described treating the profits of the Indian trade and the gross receipts of the Indian trade as though they were the “world-profits” and the “world receipts” respectively. In fact the business other than the Indian trade is ignored.

(2) A difficulty sometimes arises in such cases owing to the fact that the ships employed in the Indian trade are constantly being changed. Unless United Kingdom depreciation is accepted as indicated above a depreciation record will have to be kept for every ship employed at any time in the Indian trade. Depreciation must be allowed on each ship employed in the Indian trade in a given year and the allowance must be a proportion of the annual rate calculated with reference to the number of days spent in the Indian trade whether at sea or in harbour. Any unabsorbed depreciation in any year must be distributed among the ships in the Indian trade in that year in proportion to the capital cost of each, and the unabsorbed depreciation thus allotted to any ship can only be allowed in any subsequent year against the same ship.

The allowance should cease:—

(a) on ships included in the fleet in the first year in which the Company becomes liable to assessment in India (irrespective of whether it was actually found to have a taxable income in that year or not), after the twentieth year beginning with that year.

(b) on ships subsequently added to the Company's fleet, after they have been borne on the fleet for 20 years.

In both cases the period may be extended proportionately where the United Kingdom depreciation is allowed in calculating the “profits of the Indian trade” which take the place as already explained of the “world-profits”.

Obsolescence (loss on discarding) cannot be allowed in these cases. (Income-tax Manual.)

The above instructions will only apply to ocean going ships; in other cases, depreciation will be on the written-down value. See section 10.

British Shipping Companies—Assessment of.—The following instructions have been issued:

When assessing British Shipping Companies, the Income-tax Officers should accept a certificate granted by the Chief Inspector of Taxes in the United Kingdom stating (1) the ratio of the profits of any accounting period as computed for the purposes of the United Kingdom income-tax (computed without any allowance for wear and tear) to the gross earnings of the Company's whole fleet, and the ratio of the United Kingdom allowance for wear and tear to the gross earnings of the whole fleet or (2) the fact that there were no such profits. The expression 'gross earnings of the Company's whole fleet' means the total receipts of the Shipping Company excepting only receipts from non-trading sources, such as income from investments. (Income-tax Manual.)

Whether section 42 (1) machinery section.—In Board of Revenue v. Madras Export Company, 1 I.T.C. 194; 46 Mad. 360; A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 422; 44 M.L.J. 290 a firm which had its headquarters in Paris purchased hides and skins in British India on the orders of constituents in various parts of Europe and America. The profit of the firm consisted of the commission received on the sales. The skins were bought in British India for the firm by an agency called the Madras Export Company, which was resident in Madras. This company bought the material at the lowest prices possible, subject, however, to a maximum fixed by the firm in Paris. The materials were shipped in the raw state as purchased. The Madras Export Company made no profits on the sales of the skins, and no part of the profits of the firm in Paris were remitted to Madras. The Madras Export Company received from the Paris firm the necessary funds for purchases from time to time. Held, by the Madras High Court, that the Madras Export Company was not assessable, section 33 (1) of the Income-tax Act, 1918 (similar in essential respects to section 42 (1) of the present Act) being a machinery section only and not a charging section. But this decision has not been followed by other High Courts, see Rogers Pyatt Shellac case, 52 Cal. 1; A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 34; 1 I.T.C. 363 and Steel Brothers' case, 2 Rang. 211; A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 337; 1 I.T.C. 326 cited infra.

Business connection.—There had been much litigation as to what is "business connection" but many of the rulings have been neutralised by the very wide extension of the section in 1939 so as to cover income from any "asset or source of income" in British India and in particular interest on money borrowed abroad and brought into British India.

The Rogers Pyatt Shellac Company was incorporated in the United States of America with its headquarters in the City of New York. The Company had a branch office in Calcutta to buy gum, shellac and other Indian products, and a factory at Wyndhamgunj in the United Provinces in which the raw produce purchased locally was worked into a form suitable for export. No sales were conducted in India by the Company; their transactions were limited to the purchase of shellac and other goods, some of which were purchased on account of a Gramophone Company which paid the Company a fixed percentage on the purchase plus expense, while the balance was sold in the open market. Held, that the profits arising out of the transactions were taxable.

Per Chatterjee, J.—"If by the expression 'business connection' in section 33 (1) was meant something different from 'business' in section 5, then it would be going beyond the 'classes of income' which alone according to section 5 are chargeable to income-tax. Section 6 of Act XI of 1922 uses the word 'heads' instead of 'classes'. The former expression seems to have been substituted to make it more comprehensive, we think the same thing was meant by the two expressions 'business' and 'business connection'. . . .

Per Mukherjee, J.—But even if it be argued that 'income derived from all other sources' may not refer to income of this description—a question, with regard to which I do not wish to pronounce any definite opinion, I do not see why 'profits and gains from business connection' should not be included in the general expression 'income derived from business' which is used in section 5. The expression, it must be admitted, is dangerously vague and it is much to be regretted that in a fiscal enactment a more precise expression has not been used. The meaning, however, does not admit of much doubt; for the context shows that it is such gains or profits as may be calculated to have been made as being that part of the income of the non-resident which is attributable to the connection he has with a business in British India. The word 'business' is one of large and indefinite import and connotes something which occupies the attention and labour of a person for the purpose of profit. The word means almost anything which is an occupation or a duty requiring attention as distinguished from sport or pleasure, and is used in the sense of an occupation continuously carried on for the purpose of profits, Smith v. Anderson, (1880) 15 Ch.D. 247 at page 258; Rolls v. Milner, (1884) 27 Ch.D. 71 at page 88; Re Marine Steam Turbine Co., (1920) 1 K.B. 193. A concern by reason of which one can be said to have connection with such an occupation is business connection," Rogers Pyatt Shellac & Co. v. Secretary of State, 1 I.T.C. 363.

A company registered in England with its headquarters in London and admitted by the Crown to be non-resident in British India, carried on business operations in Burma, especially in rice, timber and cotton. It exported the goods partly in their raw state and partly after subjecting them to some process of conversion in their mills. The company contended that none of the profits arising from the export of goods from Burma which were sold in England should be assessed to income-tax. Held,—

(i) following the Rogers Pyatt case and differing from the Madras Export Company's case that section 42 (1) is a charging section and not merely a machinery section; (ii) following Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk, (1900) A.C. 588, that in determining whether any income arises or accrues in British India one must look not only at the last stage of the accrual but also take into consideration the previous stages; (iii) that no distinction so far as liability to income-tax is concerned can be drawn between profits on produce which has undergone a process of conversion or working up in British India and profits on produce purchased by the assessee in British India and exported in the same form as when purchased; (iv) that in calculating the net profits though due deductions had been made by the Commissioner in respect of the cost of the Home establishment, this deduction was not sufficient; and that a further deduction should be made on account of the commission that would have been paid if the work at London had been done by a commission agent instead of by the Head Office; and (v) that profits arising on contracts of insurance entered into by the Head Office or rice cargoes consigned to it by the Rangoon branch did not accrue or arise from business connection with or in British India, inasmuch as the profits were not merely earned in England but the contracts were entered into in England, Steel Brothers v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 337; 2 I.T.C. 119; 2 Rang. 211.

" We admit the difficulty arising from the vague expression 'from any business connection'. Taken in its wide sense, it would render liable to Indian income-tax any profits made by a manufacturer in England on a single consignment of goods to an importer in India. This is the meaning which the Commissioner of Income-tax seems to have attached to the phrase, and is the meaning which, the learned Government Advocate contends, is the correct one. It is one, however, which we cannot adopt, as such a meaning would be repugnant to the word 'business' in section 6, as defined by section 2 (4), and we can assign no wider meaning to it than the latter words of the definition as 'any adventure or concern in the nature of trade, commerce or manufacture'. It was probably used, as Mr. Justice Chatterjee conjectures (in the Rogers Pyatt case) as a compendious expression to cover such concerns in the nature of trade, commerce, or manufacture as arise through a branch, factorship, agency, receivership or management," Steel Bros. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 2 I.T.C. 119.

Item (iv) in the above ruling was nullified by sub-section (3) inserted in 1928; the revision of this sub-section in 1939, however, has changed the basis of taxation in such cases.

A non-resident selling rice abroad obtained part of the rice from British India by purchase either through an agent or by himself at an office kept by him in British India and exported the rice to the place of sale. It was held that the profits made abroad on sale were taxable under this section, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Hajee Mahomed Haji Oosman, 1937 I.T.R. 657.

A non-resident systematically lending money to residents in British India derives income accruing to him from business connection in British India, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Bombay Trust Corporation, 57 I.A. 21; 54 Bom. 216; 58 M.L.J. 197 (P.C.); Oriental Investment Corporation, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 7 I.T.C. 211. If the main business of the non-resident is that of lending money, e.g., the case of a finance company, the income accrues not merely from business connection but from business in British India. In other cases it might arise from 'Other sources' as in the case of fixed deposits with banks or similar concerns in British India, Bombay Trust Corporation v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 3 I.T.C. 135; 52 Bom. 702; A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 448. On the other hand, where a non-resident having no general money-lending business in British India lends his accumulated capital to a resident, the transaction being an isolated one and the lender having no interest direct or indirect, (apart from the lending) in the business of the borrower, such lending is not business, however large; and the relationship between the resident and the non-resident is not a business connection, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Currimbhoy Ebrahim Co., Ltd., 1935 I.T.R. 395 (P.C.). The fact that the resident borrower uses the money in his business makes no difference.

A money-lender (assessee) residing outside British India who was also a partner in a money-lending business in British India made three loans to residents in British India and one to a non-resident who had a business in British India and used the loan in that business; but these loans were not made through the partnership in British India or the assessee's business connection with it but quite independently. It was held that in the absence of evidence to show that these loans were not isolated but part of a series or that the interest of the assessee in the business of the borrowers suggested a business connection there were no materials to find that any income accrued, in respect of the loans in question, to the assessee directly or indirectly through business connection in British India. Each separate loan does not emanate from a business connection with the borrower; and the fact that the borrower is a money-lender will not by itself create a business connection, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. P. V. R. M. Visalakshi Achi, 1937 I.T.R. 448.

“ . . . as, in this section the reference is to actual profits or gains, the expression ‘business connection’ must denote something which produces profits or gains, and not a mere state or condition which is favourable to the making of profit. Again if the word ‘business’ only qualifies the word ‘connection’ by describing the sort of connection (taking the word in the sense of a ‘being connected’) we meet with the same difficulty in the phrase “profits arising through or from” such connection since profits do not arise through or from the fact of connection. The word ‘business’, therefore, must have the same significance as indicated in section 2 (4) . . . and the word ‘connection’ must be used in the sense of ‘that with which one is connected’ . . . so that . . . we may expand it (‘business connection’) thus—“any adventure or concern, etc., being a business with which the non-resident is connected” (ibid.).

Raja A and his family effectively controlled two banks,—X in British India and Y in an Indian State, both being more or less family concerns. X had a branch R in British India and B in Malay States and Y had a branch at K in Malay States. Large sums (exceeding 130 lakhs) were advanced by K to B which B lent to R. The loans which were advanced without security and for indefinite periods were more than half the paid-up capital of Y, the main function of which was to finance B. It was held that there was a business connection between X and Y and that X could be taxed as agent of Y on the interest on the loans made to R, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Bank of Chettinad, 1939 I.T.R. 1. It is primarily a question of fact whether there is business connection or not, and it is not necessary either that there should be contracts in British India between the agent under section 43 and the non-resident principal or that the income should accrue in British India. In affirming this decision, the Privy Council referred to the Commissioners finding that “in substance these loans represent money lent by Y to X” and saw that the question was not whether ‘in substance’ they were so, but in fact, whether they were so. There was no doubt that on the facts in this case the transactions were loans from Y to X. The business connection contemplated by this section need not be confined to transactions in British India and the fact that the transactions in this case took place in Malay States (and were in Malay currency and to be repaid in it) made no difference, for the words of section 42 (1) were very wide. The words have become even wider since 1939.

A company at Indore was managed by a firm there which was remunerated, inter alia by a commission on sales and on net profits. The company but not the firm, had a branch at Cawnpore where sales were made. It was held that the branch could be taxed as agents of the Indore firm inasmuch as the profits of the latter arose from sales in British India, In re Nandlal Bhandari Mills, Ltd., 1939 I.T.R. 452; A.I.R. 1939 All. 593.

The Bombay High Court held that as a result of this section, in conjunction with section 4, a non-resident may be liable to tax in respect of income which neither accrues or arises in British India nor is received there. The income of an Insurance Company operating in British India arising from its foreign investments made out of its premia from British Indian business arises to the company directly or indirectly through or from a business connection in British India and is therefore taxable in British India. It being a mutual company will not enable it to escape tax since as a mutual company it can do business, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. National Mutual Life Association of Australasia, 1933 I.T.R. 351. On the last point the Court followed, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Cornish Mutual Life Insurance Co., (1926) A.C. 281. The judgment was reversed by the Privy Council in National Mutual Life Association of Australasia v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1936 I.T.C. 44 who held that in calculating the net assessable profit, the principle of Style's case (14 A.C. 381) should have been followed, (i.e., excluding so-called profits from mutual business).

Three closely connected companies—more or less “family” concerns—one a non-resident investment company H, another a resident one B and the third a resident one S with branches abroad, arranged a transaction as below. A huge “term” deposit of H lying for several years with B—interest on which was taxed on B as agent of H, after prolonged litigation going up to the Privy Council—was converted into a “call” deposit, and the loan paid off through a book adjustment with S who credited H and debited B. The loans were without security, the concerns being closely inter-related, and the Commissioner considered that the adjustment did not represent a real transaction. The High Court disagreed. While it was natural that such family concerns should adopt such a course to evade tax, there was no evidence to support the Commissioner's finding, Bombay Trust Corporation v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 7 I.T.C. 102. In affirming this decision, the Privy Council observed that if the entries in the assessee's books had been inconsistent or there had been positive evidence that certain entries were erroneous or fraudulent, the value of the books as evidence might be considered as overthrown. The only evidence in the case was the entries in the books and the connected correspondence with the parties, and a mere refusal to believe in that evidence cannot entitle the Income-tax authorities to assume that the repayment of the loan to H was a fiction and that its deposit with B continued. The question, therefore, should be decided according to the legal rights resulting to the parties from what they in fact did and agreed to; and in this case, the persons interested in the control of these closely associated companies had the strongest reasons for desiring to change their course of business and not merely for pretending to change it so as not in the future to attract the tax, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Bombay Trust Corporation, 1938 I.T.R. 323; 40 Bom.L.R. 1222.

Where an American Company owned almost all the shares in and controlled its Indian subsidiaries to whom it transferred its Indian business, the Revenue authorities successfully taxed in the hands of one of the local Indian companies (as agent under section 43 for the American company) not only the dividends of the American Company from its shares in the Indian Companies (to super-tax) but (both to super-tax and to income-tax) the manufacturing profits of the American Company (at an estimated percentage on the value of the goods), on its sales in India through its subsidiaries, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Remington Typewriter Co., 55 Bom. 243; 60 M.L.J. 609; A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 42, reversing the High Court decision in A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 465; 52 Bom. 726.

In all such cases the course of transactions and the provisions of the contracts should be considered as a whole, and their substance as distinct from form should be looked at. Merely calling a person vendor or vendee will not make him such. So, where there was neither a partnership between the resident agent and his non-resident principal, nor a sale from the one to the other, but something like a licence to exhibit the principal's pictures and the agent paid 70 per cent. of his gross earnings as the purchase price of the pictures, submitting at the same time to various close restrictions imposed by the principal and receiving various allowances given by him and, in particular rendering detailed accounts to the non-resident and receiving an allowance for bad debts it was held that there was a business connection. 'Business connection' involves some continuity of relationship, and a single transaction would not ordinarily constitute such a connection. On the other hand, the question is one of fact, taking all the facts of a case together, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Metro Goldwyn Mayer, Ltd., 1939 I.T.R. 176.

According to the Bombay High Court, Commissioner of Income-tax v. National Mutual Life Association of Australasia, 1933 I.T.R. 350 the connotation of 'business connection' is not restricted by the definition of 'business' in section 2 (4); but in any case, the latter definition is not exhaustive. A bare relationship of creditor and debtor cannot however, as decided by the same Court in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Currimbhoy Ebrahim, Ltd., 1933 I.T.R. 341 constitute business connection even though the debtor used the borrowed money in his business.

Where the local branch of a non-resident non-life insurance company remitted its receipts intact to its head office (apart from certain deposits in local banks carrying no interest), and received remittances from the head office to meet claims as they arose, it was held that the interest earned outside British India by the investment of funds sent from British India arose directly or indirectly through business connection in British India and out of assets of British India, Motor Union Insurance Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 272. It was also held that the interest could and should be divided into two portions with reference to sub-section (3) and tax levied only on the part attributable to operations in British India.

Some of the rulings referred to above have as already stated, been in effect neutralised by the very wide extension of the section in other directions made in 1939.

As regards the doctrine of looking at the 'substance' of transactions, see the remarks of the Privy Council in Bank of Chettinad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1940 I.T.R. 522, already referred to.

Mere sales from abroad by a non-resident to customers in British India through brokers in British India do not constitute a 'business connection'. Unless the brokers are retained by the non-resident or the latter has some special claim on the good will of the brokers, the 'connection' between the customers in British India and the non-resident in such a case is too loose to be a business connection. Hira Mills v. Income-tax Officer, Cawnpore, 1946 I.T.R. 417. It will be noted that this ruling follows the criterion of distinguishing between trade with a country and trade in a country.

One way of explaining 'business connection' on the lines of the hypothesis suggested by Chatterjee, J., in Rogers Pyatt Shellac case, 1 I.T.C. 363 and Rutledge, C.J., in Steel Brothers' case, 2 I.T.C. 119 is as follows:—

Though it is a question of fact whether business is carried on in British India or not, and it is difficult to lay down what is the minimum activity to be carried on in British India that would justify a finding that business is carried on there, cases often arise in which, while the whole chain of transactions that would constitute a finding that there is a business in British India is not completed in British India, there is no doubt that the transactions that so take place in British India give rise to a profit. In such cases the non-resident who completes the transactions outside British India and receives the profit derives a part of that profit from the transactions in British India. These transactions constitute his business connection with British India; and they are usually carried out in British India through branches, factors, agents, receivers or managers. Thus if transactions (say) A, B, C, D and E constitute the complete cycle constituting business, and profits emerge finally only after stage E, and transactions (say) A, B and C are carried on in British India, and D and E outside British India, the profits of the non-resident arise in British India, not from business since the cycle is not complete, but from business connection. This view no doubt, sweeps aside Lord Herschell's distinction (Grainger v. Gough, (1896) App. Cas. 32) between trading in a country and trading with a country, but there is certainly business connection in a country in trading with that country. The Government however have issued executive instructions (already quoted) not to tax profits if they arise from trading with British India.

Source in British India.—In interpreting the words "received from a source within the territories" in a Rhodesian statute, the Privy Council, said that "source means not a legal concept, but something which a practical man would regard as a real source of income". Therefore even though the head seat and directing power of a company was in the United Kingdom and all the contracts made there and the monies received there, it was held that the profits of the company from the purchase and sale of immoveable property in Rhodesia arose from a source there. Rhodesia Metals, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Taxes, 1941 I.T.R. (Sup.) 45. Mere purchases in British India would not, it is submitted constitute a source in British India; but a buying office or agency or other organisation might. In all such cases however, it is a difficult problem to estimate the profits attributable to the operations in British India, unless there is a free market in the goods or transactions with which the assessee's transactions are comparable.

Foreign Insurance Companies.—See notes under section 10 (7).

Per Wallis, C.J.—"The question referred to us is whether or not in arriving at the 'total profits' for the purposes of the rule, income-tax and Excess Profits Duty payable in England and income-tax payable at stations outside British India are to be deducted. Mr. Aingar for the appellant has referred us to Stevens v. Durban Roodeport Gold Mining Company, 100 L.T. 481 and to certain dicta in Scottish, etc., Insurance Company v. New Zealand Land Company, 89 L.J.C.P.

220 and Rover v. South Africa Breweries, (1918) 2 Ch. 233, which support the proposition that in England when profits arising abroad are liable under the English Income-tax Act to pay income-tax in England, a deduction is allowed in respect of the income or similar tax levied on such profits in the places where they arose; and if it were a question here of taxing under section 3 (1) of the Act profits arising outside British India on the ground that they were received in British India, those authorities would be applicable, but in my opinion they have no application to the present case. What have to be ascertained are the assessable profits arising in British India of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Company which is incorporated in England and has branches in India and elsewhere. But for the rule in question (corresponding to present rule 33) those profits would be ascertained by taking the Indian receipts and debiting against them the expenditure necessary to earn them, and in such a calculation the amount of the tax itself would not be allowed as a deduction. The taxes levied locally on the assessable profits arising in other countries would not enter into the calculation at all. As, however, it would be difficult if not impracticable in the case of a business such as this to ascertain the expenditure properly debitable against the Indian receipts, the Government in the exercise of its statutory powers has provided that the assessable profits of the Indian branch without deduction of the Indian income-tax shall be deemed to bear the same proportion to the total assessable profits of the company as the Indian receipts bear to the total receipts. As the Indian assessable profits are to be ascertained without deduction of the local income-tax, it must necessarily be the intention of the rule that the total assessable profits of the business should be arrived at in the same way, viz., without the deduction of the several local income-taxes and excess profits taxes which are enhanced income-taxes. Otherwise, the whole basis of comparison would be gone."

Per Kumaraswami Sastriar, J.—"There can be little doubt that as a matter of accountancy and book-keeping and as between shareholders entitled to a dividend and the company income-tax paid is always entered as an expense which has to be deducted before the amount divisible as profits can be ascertained and enters into the debit charges in the same way as any other item of expenditure. It is equally clear that for purposes of levying income-tax you cannot deduct the amount paid or payable as income-tax on the ground that it is only what remains that goes to the person carrying on the business. The fact that as between the shareholders and the company you would estimate profits in a particular way is no ground for estimating profits on which income-tax has to be calculated in a similar manner." The Chief Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Co., Ltd., 1 I.T.C. 120.

The case referred to was under the 1918 Act; section 3 (1) corresponds to present section 4 (1), and section 9 to present section 10.

United Kingdom Law.—Rules 5 and 6 of the general rules correspond to sections 42 (1) and 43; but there is nothing corresponding to the proviso under section 43 or to deeming income accruing abroad, to be income accruing within British India. In the United Kingdom, the provisions are machinery, while section 42 of that Indian Act is a substantive provision. Rule 7 is closely similar to section 42 (2). Rules 8 and 9 correspond to Rules 33 and 34. Rule 14 of the General Rules provides that the agent may recoup himself out of any money coming into his hands on behalf of the non-resident principal—not necessarily the income that is charged to tax.

The English law also provides that if a non-resident carries on transactions with other non-residents through the agency of a resident no liability to tax attaches unless the resident agent is in receipt of profits, see Rule 11 and Macline & Co. v. Eccot, 10 Tax Cases 481. Also, if the non-resident is a manufacturer, and his goods are sold in the United Kingdom the profit is divided into two parts, namely, the manufacturing profits and the selling profits; and the former part, viz., the profit that the non-resident manufacturer would have got had sold his goods to a merchant in England, are specifically exempted from tax—Rule 12. This corresponds to sub-section (3) of section 42 here, but it should be noted that under section 42 (3), the whole of the profits is taxable if the profits accrue or are received in British India and a part taxable only in cases where profits are deemed to accrue, etc., in British India. Also, under Rule 10 of the General Rules a non-resident principal cannot be charged in the name of a broker or a commission agent in respect of sales carried out by the latter as part of his ordinary business. This provision, therefore, gives rise to a complicated question as to what constitutes a regular agent as distinguished from a broker or a commission agent. See Wilcock v. Pinto, 9 Tax Cases 111 and Belfour v. Mace, 13 Tax Cases 539.

43. Any person employed by or on behalf of a person residing out of British India, or having any business connection with such person, or through whom such person is in the receipt of any income, profits or gains upon whom the Income-tax Officer has caused a notice to be served of his intention of treating him as the agent of the non-resident person shall, for all the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be such agent :

Agent to include persons treated as such.

Provided that where transactions are carried on in the ordinary course of business through a broker in British India in such circumstances that the broker does not in respect of such transactions deal directly with or on behalf of a non-resident principal but deals with or through a non-resident broker who is carrying on such transactions in the ordinary course of his business and not as a principal such first mentioned broker shall not be deemed to be an agent under this section in respect of such transactions.

Provided further that no person shall be deemed to be the agent of a non-resident person, unless he has had an opportunity of being heard by the Income-tax Officer as to his liability.

History.—Corresponds to section 34 of the Act of 1918. The words “or through whom such person is in the receipt of any income, profits or gains” were added in 1922 in order to get over the decision in the Imperial Tobacco Company case, 1 I.T.C. 169; 49 Cal. 721, infra; but see the Bombay Trust Corporation case, 57 I.A. 49; 54 Bom. 216; 4 I.T.C. 312 which arose later and went up to the Privy Council. There was no corresponding section in the Act of 1886.

The first proviso was added in 1939, in order to protect British Indian brokers transacting 'hedging and straddling' business on behalf of customers. The reason for such protection would seem to be that the profits accruing in British India cannot be easily ascertained, so that this person appointed agent under this section will not be in a position to retain the tax in his hands, when settling accounts with the non-resident. In Govindram Sekaria v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1938 I.T.R. 584, for example according to this proviso, the Bombay broker could not be held to be an agent of the New York broker (or broker's customers).

Through.—This word according to the Dictionary means "by means of", "through the instrumentality," and is evidently wider than and includes "from"; on the other hand it has been held that a person from whom a non-resident receives income. e.g., a person paying interest in British India to a money-lender abroad cannot be deemed to be an agent under this section merely because he pays the income, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. P. V. R. M. Visalakshi Achi, 1937 I.T.R. 448.

Having any business connection.—Means conducting a business being a business with which the non-resident is connected, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. P. V. R. M. Visalakshi Achi, supra.

Several agents.—If the non-resident has more agents than one, there is nothing to prevent the Income-tax Officer from serving notices on all the agents and finally selecting one among them and assessing him on the combined income of the principal through all the agents together. In such cases, naturally, the Income-tax Officer will select the most important of the agents.

Once the agent has been selected by the Income-tax Officer, the assessment of the agent must be made with reference to section 64, if the agent has more than one place of business; for, under sections 42 and 43, the agent steps into the shoes of the principal and is the assessee for all purposes.

In Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Longford; Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Pakenham & others, 13 Tax Cases 573, Rowlatt, J., observed that though an agent need not be in receipt of the profits taxed he cannot be taxed on profits not made through his agency. It will be observed that section 43 of the Indian Act is much wider than this; and that in cases not falling under section 40 but under section 42 an agent can be taxed even in respect of profits not made through his agency. The point however has not been before the courts in this country. In any case, the second and third provisos to section 42 (1) protect the agent and authorise him to retain the estimated tax from the amounts he owes the non-resident principal.

Machinery section.—This section is really machinery for giving effect to section 42; and if there is no liability to tax under the latter, the appointment of an agent under section 43 is of no object and cannot create liability, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Metro Goldwyn Meyer, Ltd., 1939 I.T.R. 176. Liability depends on sections 4 and 42; and if no agent is, or can be, appointed under section 43, there is nothing to prevent the assessment directly of the non-resident principal; and in fact sections 40, 41 and 42 expressly provide for such assessment. It should also be noted that unless there is some one who may be appointed agent under section 43, the duty imposed on makers of certain payments to non-residents to deduct tax at source and make over to Government cannot be avoided. See sections 8, 9 (2) (iii), 10 (2) (iii) and 12.

The agent contemplated by section 43 is an artificial creation, and actual agency is not necessary. Any person having a business connection or satisfying any of the conditions referred to in the section on whom the Income-tax Officer has served a notice and who has been given an opportunity to be heard as to his liability may be deemed to be agent under this section. Bank of Chettinad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1940 I.T.R. 522 (P.C.). Section 5 of a Trinidad Ordinance of 1940 provided for the levy of tax on the income of any person accruing in or derived from or received in the colony in respect of (inter alia) dividends, interest, discounts and section 30 provided that 'any resident agent, trust mortgagor or other person, who transmits rent, interest or income derived from any source within the colony, to a non-resident person shall be deemed to be the agent of such non-resident person and shall be assessed and pay the tax accordingly'. A non-resident company with a dominant interest in a resident company owed money for goods supplied by the resident company from the colony; and this debt was by mutual agreement set off against dividends declared by the resident company in favour of the non-resident company. The validity of section 30 was questioned as being extra-territorial, but this claim was rejected by the Privy Council. The person directly affected was the statutory agent; and the obligation was directly imposed on him. The dividend was a debt situated in Trinidad and the set-off in the books of the companies was not a formal affair but evidenced actual payment of debts on either side. Trinidad Lake Asphalt Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, (1945) I.T.R. 14 (Sup.) P.C.

Opportunity.—The assessment will be invalid unless the agent has been given an opportunity to represent his views. It is not necessary that orders should be passed under section 43 before a notice is issued on the agent under section 22 (2) and it is open to the Income-tax Officer to postpone the final determination of the question of agency until the time comes to make an assessment under section 23. Commissioner of Income-tax v. Nawalkishore Kharaitilal, 1938 I.T.R. 61 (P.C.) overruling 1934 I.T.R. 350. No form has been prescribed for the notice to be served under section 43; nor has any time-limit been laid down within which the agent should dispute the proposal to tax him. He is entitled to a reasonable time.

If a resident has been once declared to be the agent of a non-resident after proper opportunity given under this section, it is not necessary for the Income-tax Officer to issue a notice under this section year after year. It is for the agent to ask for an opportunity if circumstances have changed. If the agent keeps quiet in the first instance when he comes to be assessed as agent in a particular year, he cannot afterwards impeach the assessment on the ground that the want of notice under section 43 invalidated the assessment, Nawalkishore Kharaitilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Delhi, A. I.R. 1930 Lah. 1104; 4 I.T.C. 451.

The notice under this section is only a part of a series of facts which results in the resident being deemed agent by this section and if the notice under section 22 (2) details the particular year or years of reference, the mere fact that the notice under section 43 did not so refer to the year will not invalidate the assessment, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Nawalkishore Kharaitilal, 1938 I.T.R. 61 (P.C.) overruling 1934 I.T.R. 350. It should be noted that under section 28 no penalty may be imposed on the agent of a non-resident for failure to submit a return suo motu under section 22 (1).

A person deemed under section 43 to be an agent of a non-resident principal does not automatically continue as such for future years but a supplementary assessment under section 34 may be made on such agent without further notice under section 43, for, the supplementary assessment is really part of the original assessment. In re Govindram Seksania, 1943 I.T.R. 104 (Bom.).

Default.—If the agent returns the form of return unfilled on the ground that it is addressed to the non-resident principal, the Income-tax Officer is entitled to treat the case as one of failure to furnish the return and make the assessment under section 23 (4), Nawalkishore Kharaitilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1014; 4 I.T.C. 451.

The issue of a notice under section 43 will not prevent the Income-tax Officer from treating the income in question as that of the agent himself if the Income-tax Officer has sufficient reason to think so, and if the agent fails to respond to the notice. Nopechand Magniram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. and O., 2 I.T.C. 145.

Appeal.—There is no separate right of appeal to the Assistant Commissioner on the preliminary point of the selection of an agent in anticipation of the assessment on him but the question can be raised in the course of the appeal against the assessment, Gokuldas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 152; In re Sehgal Bros., 1943 I.T.R. 553 (Lah.). Under executive instructions, if the question of agency is in dispute, the assessment will not be held up but collection will be postponed till the dispute has been settled unless the agent has funds of the non-resident in his possession.

Should Agent be in receipt of profits.—It was held by the Calcutta High Court (Woodroffe and Greaves, JJ.; Ghose, J., dissenting) in the Imperial Tobacco Co. v. Secretary of State, 1 I.T.C. 169; 49 Cal. 721, that section 34 of the 1918 Act (corresponding to section 43 of the present Act) merely defined who may be included as an agent under section 31 (corresponding to section 40) and that the agent under the section must be in receipt of the income under the latter section. Accordingly, if a British Indian Company distributes British Indian profits to shareholders residing outside British India, the company cannot be deemed to be the agent of the foreign shareholders and assessed as such to super-tax in British India. But this difficulty has since been specially met by section 18 (3-C) and (3-D) (formerly section 57) of the present Act which make express provision for the collection of super-tax in such cases. Ghose, J., on the other hand, held that section 34 (present section 43) should be read with section 33 (present section 42) and not with section 31 (present section 40), and that section 34 merely extended the meaning of "agent" so as to include persons treated as such—who are not really agents—and to assess them under section 33 (1) [present section 42 (1)]. In this view, therefore, it was not necessary for the person treated as agent under section 34 (present section 43) to be in actual receipt of income, and the mere fact of agency as determined under section 34 makes him liable to assessment.

A non-resident's being in receipt of income through a resident may be different from the resident agent's being in receipt of income on behalf of the non-resident principal. Cf. Rye and Eyre v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 13 A.T.C. 173, in which the Court of Appeal held that a person through whom payment is received need not, under the ordinary law, be an agent of the ultimate recipient. A company does not receive its own dividends on behalf of its shareholders; they on the other hand, receive dividends through it. It will be seen therefore that the words added to the section in 1922 make the above Calcutta decision obsolete.

Section 43 should, no doubt, be read with all the three previous sections. As the law now stands, agents, etc., under sections 40 and 41 should be entitled to receive the profits; but not those under section 42. The object of section 42 is to catch profits not received or receivable in British India, and the object would be defeated if the agent against whom the Income-tax Officer had to proceed was to be entitled to receive the profits. That is why section 43, when it refers to persons having business connection with non-residents, says nothing as to their being entitled to receive profits. The words used are "any person . . . or through whom . . .", not "any person . . . and through whom . . .".

The Bombay High Court ruled in the Bombay Trust Corporation case, 3 I.T.C. 135, that sections 40 to 43 should be read together and that therefore the agent contemplated by section 43 should be in receipt, on behalf of the principal, of the profits sought to be taxed. [At that time sections 40 and 41 referred to trustees, agents, etc., being in actual receipt of profits.] But this view was overruled by the Privy Council on the ground that the plain meaning of section 43 cannot be set aside. The view taken by the High Court might have been tenable if section 42 had stood by itself; but section 43 which says nothing about the receipt of the profits on behalf of the principal is explicit to the effect that the agent satisfying the conditions of that section is to be deemed the agent of the principal for all the purposes of the Act. Section 42 is one of the purposes of the Act; and an agent under that section need not therefore be in receipt of profits on behalf of the principal, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Trust Corporation, 57 I.A. 49; 54 Bom. 216; 58 M.L.J. 197 (P.C.). Nevertheless to bring a person within section 43 as an agent, the relation between him and the non-resident should be something more than that of debtor and creditor, since the section should be construed reasonably. There are three categories contemplated by this section, viz., (i) a person employed on behalf of the non-resident, (ii) a person having business connection with him, (iii) a person through whom such person is in receipt of income and in the Bombay Trust Corporation case, the agent fell both under (ii) and (iii); and the Privy Council did not decide what is necessary to bring a person under (iii), Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Currimbhoy Ebrahim and Sons, 1933 I.T.R. 341.

An American Company doing business in India formed subsidiary Indian Companies to whom it sold its Indian business in consideration for shares in them. Practically all the shares belonged to the American Company, and though there was no contractual obligation on the Indian Companies to purchase goods only from the American Company, the flow of business was secured by the ultimate and complete control of the Indian Companies by the American Company. The question arose whether under section 43 one of the Indian Companies could be deemed to be the agent of the American Company for the purpose of taxing its profits; and was answered in the affirmative. The question was not whether the Indian Company was agent in-law of the American Company but whether on the facts could be deemed to be agent under section 43. The answer depended on the existence of a business connection; and in the case, there was clearly such connection; that being so, there was no objection to treating the Indian Company as the agent of the American Company, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Remington Typewriter Co., 55 Bom. 243; 5 I.T.C. 177 (P.C.).

44. Where any business, profession or vocation carried on by a firm or association of persons has been discontinued, or where an association of persons is dissolved, every person who was at the time of such discontinuance or dissolution a partner of such firm or a member of such association shall, in respect of the income, profits and gains of the firm or association, be jointly and severally liable to assessment under Chapter IV and for the amount of tax payable and all the provisions of Chapter IV, shall, so far as may be, apply to any such assessment.

Liability in case of a discontinued firm or association.

History.—This section first appeared in 1922 and was amended in 1939 so as to extend it to associations of persons and also to ensure that all privileges accorded by Chapter IV shall be available to persons assessed under this section.

Association of persons.—The reference apparently is only to association which are not firms, companies or Hindu undivided families.

Discontinuance.—As to what is 'discontinuance', see notes under sections 25 and 26. Section 44 applies only to a business, etc., which has been discontinued and not to one in which there has only been a succession, i.e., the business continues, Karuppiah Pillai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1941 I.T.R. 1.

Scope of section.—This applies to the business, etc., of a firm or association of persons that has been discontinued or dissolved. The partners and members will be jointly and severally responsible for the tax payable by the firm or association; that is, the tax will be calculated on the firm or association as such under sections 3 and 55 and the Schedule to the Finance Act, and this tax, payable by the firm or association as a whole, will be recovered from the partners or members.

CHAPTER V-A.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO CERTAIN CLASSES OF SHIPPING.

44-A. The provisions of this Chapter shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the other provisions of this Act, apply for the purpose of the levy and recovery of tax in the case of any person who resides out of British India and carries on business in British India in any year as the owner or charterer of a ship (such person hereinafter in this Chapter being referred to as the principal), unless the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that there is an agent of such principal from whom the tax will be recoverable in the following year under the other provisions of this Act.

Liability to tax of occasional shipping.

History.—The whole of this Chapter was inserted by the Income-tax (Further Amendment) Act, 1923, XXVII of 1923.

This Chapter applies to 'tramps' only. Regular liners have branches or agents in British India who are taxed under the other provisions of the Act. Under the 1886 Act, non-Indian shipping companies were specifically exempted. See section 5 (1) (a) of that Act. This exemption suggests that the profits were otherwise liable to tax under that Act. Under the 1918 Act, this exemption was given by a notification instead of by the statute itself. The exemption was withdrawn from foreign shipping companies in 1919 and from British and Dominion shipping companies in 1921. Now all shipping companies are taxed—tramp steamers under this Chapter and regular liners under the other provisions of this Act.

Occasional shipping—(Tramp steamers, etc.).—As regards assessment of Tramp Steamers, etc., the following instructions are found in the Income-tax Manual:

Only one person can be taxed under Chapter V-A in respect of a particular ship taking up passengers, live-stock or goods at ports in British India, and that person is the "principal" within the meaning of section 44-A. Such principal may be either the owner or the charterer of the ship. It will be a question of fact to be determined in each case in which the ship has been chartered whether the owner or the charterer is the principal. For such determination, some general questions to be taken into account are referred to below.

These sections (44-A to C) are only applicable where the principal—(1) carries on business in British India as the owner or charterer of a ship, (2) does not reside in British India, and (3) does not employ an agent from whom the tax would be recoverable under section 42. The business of which the profits are to be calculated and assessed for income-tax under section 44-A, is the business of carrying passengers, live-stock or goods shipped at ports in British India. The criterion to be applied is, 'who is the person to whom or on whose behalf money is paid or payable on account of carriage of passengers, live-stock or goods from a port in British India?'

Generally speaking, where there is what is known as a 'Time' Charter, under which the owners may be said to let the ship out to the charterer for a fixed sum for a certain period, during which the owner retains no further control over the vessel or her movements, the owners (if they are non-resident) cannot be held in respect of such a vessel to be carrying on business in British India, or even to have a 'business connection' in British India, and are therefore not liable to Indian Income-tax either under section 44-B or under section 42.

Where, however, the ship has been chartered under what is known as a 'Voyage' or 'Trip' Charter the position is different. Under this kind of Charter party, the charterers are practically in the position of brokers, who guarantee to secure a certain quantity of cargo for the owners at certain rates of freight. If the full amount of freight cannot be secured, the charterers are liable to make good the deficiency. Any such deficiency is to be paid by the charterers to the Master, on behalf of the owners, in cash, minus a certain percentage, at the time and place of loading. Similarly, if freight is secured in excess of that stipulated, the Master of the ship is to pay such excess to the Charterers, at the time and place of loading by demand draft on the owners. The Bills of Lading are signed by the Master on behalf of the owners; and the cargo as soon as shipped is therefore in the constructive possession of the owners; and at their risk. The ship is usually consigned to the Charterers or their agents, who look after its interests when in port, and for doing so are paid a commission by the owners. The owners also pay brokerage. In such a case, the owners are carrying on business in British India through their agent the Master, who receives cargo on their behalf, and receives and makes payments on their account in British India, and thus the owners if they have no regular or permanent agent in British India, are liable to tax under section 44-A on the profits of the business conducted by the Master on their behalf.

If a ship has arrived in a British Indian port, either on owner's account or under a charter and the non-resident owner, or the non-resident charterer, causes the ship to be chartered, or transfers the existing charter, or effects a sub-charter of the vessel, as the case may be, such a transaction, though it does constitute the carrying on of business in British India by the non-resident, does not of itself amount to carrying on business within British India as the owner or charterer of a ship within the meaning of section 44-A. But if the ship is loaded in any British Indian port the question whether the non-resident owner or the non-resident charterer is assessable to income-tax under section 44-B, must be decided on the principles stated above. Whoever of these two persons causes the ship to be loaded with cargo, and is paid the freight for carrying such cargo, is the person who carries on business within the meaning of section 44-A.

Double taxation—Not permissible.—Both the owner and charterer cannot be taxed simultaneously as principals. There is nothing, however, to prevent the owner being assessed as principal under this Chapter and the charterer under "income from business" under ordinary sections (Chapter III) each in respect of his own profits.

44-B. (1) Before the departure from any port in British India of any ship in respect of which the Return of profits and gains. provisions of this chapter apply, the master of the ship shall prepare and furnish to the Income-tax Officer a return of the full amount paid or payable to the principal, or to any person on his behalf, on account of the carriage of all passengers, live-stock or goods shipped at that port since the last arrival of the ship thereat.

(2) On receipt of the return, the Income-tax Officer shall assess the amount referred to in sub-section (1), and for this purpose may call for such accounts or documents as he may require, and one-twentieth of the amount so assessed shall be deemed to be the amount of the profits and gains accruing to the principal on account of the carriage of the passengers, live-stock and goods shipped at the port.

(3) When the profits and gains have been assessed as aforesaid, the Income-tax Officer shall determine the sum payable as tax thereon at the rate for the time being applicable to the total income of a company, and such sum shall be payable by the master of the ship, and a port-clearance shall not be granted to the ship until the Customs-Collector, or other officer duly authorised to grant the same, is satisfied that the tax has been duly paid.

Scope of Section.—The provisions are self-explanatory. As it is not possible to calculate the profits in such cases—even the Master of the ship cannot do it—an arbitrary rate of profit has been laid down at 5 per cent. of the freight payable to the principal. The Customs-Collector will not let the ship go until the tax has been paid.

44-C. Nothing in this chapter shall be deemed to prevent a principal from claiming, in the year following that in which any payment has been made on his behalf under this chapter, that an assessment be made of his total income in the previous year, and that the tax payable on the basis thereof be determined in accordance with the other provisions of this Act, and, if he so claims, any such payment as aforesaid shall be treated as a payment in advance of the tax and the difference between the sum so paid, and the amount of tax found payable by him shall be paid by him or refunded to him, as the case may be.

History.—The words “the year” was substituted for “any year” in 1939, removing an obvious drafting defect which laid down no limitation of time.

Scope of Section.—As the provisions in this Chapter are only rough and ready provisions for recovering the tax, at source so to speak, in respect of tramp steamers, option has been given to the recipients of such income to be regularly assessed in the next year in the usual course if they prefer it. All the adjustments under this section are made by the Non-Resident Refund Circle at Bombay. See notification under section 5.

CHAPTER V-B.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO AVOIDANCE OF LIABILITY TO INCOME-TAX AND SUPER-TAX.

44-D. (1) Where any person has, by means of a transfer of assets, by virtue or in consequence whereof, either alone or in conjunction with associated operations, any income which if it were the income of such person would be chargeable to income-tax becomes payable to a person not resident or to a person resident but not ordinarily Avoidance of income-tax by transactions resulting in the transfer of income to persons resident or ordinarily resident abroad.

resident in British India, acquired any rights by virtue or in consequence of which he has within the meaning of this section power to enjoy such income, whether forthwith or in the future, that income shall, whether it would or would not have been chargeable to income-tax apart from the provisions of this section, be deemed to be income of such first mentioned person for all the purposes of this Act.

(2) Where any person receives or is entitled to receive, whether before or after any transfer of assets by virtue or in consequence whereof either alone or in conjunction with associated operations any income becomes payable to a person not resident or resident but not ordinarily resident in British India, any sum paid or payable by way of a loan or repayment of a loan or any other sum, being a sum which is not paid or payable for full consideration in money or money's worth, paid or payable otherwise than as income, such income shall, whether it would or would not have been chargeable to income-tax apart from the provisions of this section, be deemed to be the income of the first mentioned person for all the purposes of this Act.

(3) Sub-sections (1) and (2) shall not apply if such first-mentioned person shows to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer either—

(a) that neither the transfer nor any associated operation had for its purpose or for one of its purposes the avoidance of liability to taxation ; or

(b) that the transfer and all associated operations were bona fide commercial transactions and were not designated for the purpose of avoiding liability to taxation.

(4) For the purposes of this section, an "associated operation" means, in relation to any transfer, an operation of any kind effected by any person in relation to any of the assets transferred or any assets representing whether directly or indirectly any of the assets transferred, or to the income arising from any such assets, or to any assets representing whether directly or indirectly the accumulations of income arising from any such assets.

(5) A person shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have power to enjoy income of a person not resident, or resident but not ordinarily resident, in British India, if—

(a) the income is in fact so dealt with by any person as to be calculated at some point of time, and, whether in the form of income or not, to enure for the benefit of the first-mentioned person, or

(b) the receipt or accrual of the income operates to increase the value to such first-mentioned person of any assets held by him or for his benefit, or

(c) such first-mentioned person receives or is entitled to receive at any time any benefit provided or to be provided out of that income or out of moneys which are or will be available for the purpose by reason of the effect or successive effects of the associated operations on that income and on any assets which represent that income, or

(d) such first-mentioned person has power by means of the exercise of any power of appointment or power of revocation or otherwise to obtain for himself, whether with or without the consent of any other person, the beneficial enjoyment of the income, or

(e) such first-mentioned person is able, in any manner whatsoever and whether directly or indirectly, to control the application of the income.

(6) In determining whether a person has power to enjoy income within the meaning of this section, regard shall be had to the substantial result and effect of the transfer and any associated operations, and all benefits which may at any time accrue to such person as a result of the transfer and any associated operations shall be taken into account irrespective of the nature or form of the benefits.

(7) For the purposes of this section—

(a) the expression “assets” includes property or rights of any kind, and the expression “transfer” in relation to rights includes the creation of those rights;

(b) the expression “benefit” includes a payment of any kind;

(c) references to income of a person not resident or of a person not ordinarily resident in British India shall, where the amount of the income of a company for any year or period has been deemed to have been distributed under sub-section (1) of section 23-A, include references to so much of the income of the company for that year or period as is equal to the amount deemed to have been distributed to that person;

(d) references to assets representing any assets, income or accumulations of income include references to shares in or obligations of any company to which, or obligation of any other person to whom, those assets, that income, or those accumulations are or have been transferred;

(e) any body corporate incorporated outside British India shall be treated as if it were resident out of British India whether it is so resident or not.

S. 4-D] AVOIDANCE BY TRANSFER OF ASSETS ABROAD. 1938

(8) The provisions of this section shall apply for the purposes of assessment to income-tax and super-tax for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1940, and subsequent years, and shall apply, in relation to transfers of assets and associated operations whether carried out before or after the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939.

(9) Where any person has been charged to tax on any income deemed to be his under the provisions of this section, and that income is subsequently received by him, whether as income or in any other form, it shall not again be deemed to form part of his income for the purposes of this Act.

History.—This section deals with a particular type of evasion. According to the notes on clauses in the statement of objects and reasons (1938).

“One of the methods of avoiding the payment of tax without breaking the law is to transfer the assets from which the income arises to a Company which is resident outside British India, and then to receive payments from that Company in a form and in such circumstances that the amounts received from the Company are never in fact repayable or repaid to it. The effect of these arrangements is that the real owner of the assets receives the income therefrom indirectly and in a capital form. These receipts cannot, as the law stands at present, be treated as income in the hands of the recipient, nor, since the Company is a non-resident Company, can it be subjected to the provisions of section 23-A which deals with a Company which, to enable its proprietor to avoid super-tax, fails to distribute its income.

It is the object of the present clause to prevent the loss of tax through such devices. It will be seen that the first effect of a device of this kind is that the income which in reality is the income of a person liable to pay income-tax or super-tax or both becomes the income of a non-resident person (which term, of course, includes a Company) which is either not liable or liable for only a smaller amount of tax. By means of the loans the real proprietor continues to have power to enjoy the income from the assets.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to draft a simple preventive clause which a skilled lawyer cannot evade. The clause has, therefore, been drafted in wide terms and follows the wording of section 18 of the United Kingdom Finance Act, 1936. Its terms are very comprehensive, and the net effect intended is that wherever income which really belongs to a person liable to income-tax and super-tax becomes by means of an artificial set of transactions the income of somebody liable to pay less tax or no tax at all, such income can for tax purposes be treated as the income of the person to whom it really belongs.” In fact the section follows also the amendments made in the United Kingdom, since 1936 by way of tightening up the provisions.

The changes made in Select Committee are as follows: “Transfers to persons resident in but not domiciled in British India are now covered, and by sub-section (2) evasion by transfers resulting in payment of income disguised in the form of loans, or payments made without adequate consideration, is provided for. By sub-section (3) it is provided that a transfer must be untainted by any purpose of avoidance in order to escape the mischief of the section, and the addition of a new clause in sub-section (7) clarifies the position of Companies incorporated outside but resident in British India."

References to 'domicile' were eventually amended as a consequence of the changes in section 4 giving up the criterion of domicile.

This section relates to transfers to non-residents and not—ordinarily—residents; transfers to ordinary residents will in certain circumstances be caught by section 16 (1) (c) and (3), q. v. Though there is nothing to prevent the application of section 16 to cases of transfers to non-residents etc., not covered by section 44-D, the terms of the latter section are so wide that there is little chance of a case being not covered by section 44-D, but by section 16.

Any person.—Not necessarily individuals, see section 2 (g). The corresponding provisions in the United Kingdom apply only to individuals, specially defined to include a 'spouse'.

"Which, if it were the income of such person, would be chargeable".—The corresponding words in the United Kingdom Act of 1936 are "which, if it were the income of that individual received by him in the United Kingdom, would be chargeable". It will be noted that the provisions in the Indian Act are wider.

Questions of fact.—The provisions of the section are so wide that, in practice, the only question of law that can arise is that of there being evidence for the findings of fact. There is no onus on the Income-tax authorities to prove any motive for the transfer of assets. Sub-sections (1) and (2) apply automatically if the conditions laid down therein are satisfied; and it is for the assessee to show to the satisfaction of the Income-tax authorities that the transactions were not made for the purpose of avoiding taxation or that they were bona fide commercial transactions, Corbett's executrices v. Inland Revenue, 25 Tax Cases 305 (C.A.); cf. also Cottingham Executors v. Inland Revenue, 22 Tax Cases 344 (C.A.); (1939) 1 K.B. 250.

Power to enjoy.—Redeemable debentures will be caught by these words. Latilla v. Inland Revenue, (H.L.) 1943 I.T.R. (Sup.) 78.

Payable to a person.—These words will include the share of profits of a partner. A partner can call on his other partner to draw a cheque and make over his share of profits; and undrawn profits would figure as a liability in the partnership accounts. That is enough to make it 'payable'. Latilla v. Inland Revenue, (ibid).

The technical view of the nature of partnership under the English Law does not however apply to taxation matters. In the above case, residents transferred their interests to a non-resident company which did partnership business with other non-residents, and received from the Company, inter alia, redeemable debentures which were redeemed from time to time. It was argued that nothing was 'payable' because a partnership was not a separate legal entity but only a group of persons and no one could pay oneself.

Whether it would or would not have been chargeable.—It was unsuccessfully contended in Macdonald v. Inland Revenue, (K.B.D.), that the section would not apply to cases of partial avoidance of taxation e.g., falling under one case of a schedule instead of under another. Sub-section 3 (a) of section 44-D makes no distinction between partial and complete avoidance.

"Taxation".—[See sub-section 3 (a)] has been held in the United Kingdom to include all kinds of taxes including death duties. Inland Re- venue v. Sasson, (1943) 25 Tax Cases 154 (C.A.), overruling Macdonald v. Inland Revenue, which had held on the strength of the preamble to the amending law that death duties were excluded.

Control.—With reference to sub-section 5 (e), a dominant shareholder who is in a position to make and unmake the directors in a non-resident company is in a position to control the application of the income of that company. See Lee v. Inland Revenue, 1941 K.B.D.

Income to be deemed to belong to the resident.—If the definition in sub-section (5) is written into sub-section (1), it is clear that the income of the non-resident to be deemed to belong to the resident is not limited to what the resident in fact receives or enjoys. There is equally little doubt that the whole of the income that can be connected with the assets transferred by the resident should be deemed to belong to the resident, but it is doubtful—and has yet to be decided—whether, by virtue of clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (5), the whole of the income of the non-resident can, in certain circumstances, be deemed to be that of the resident; for example, the accrual of other income of the non-resident may increase the value of the assets of the resident held by the non-resident. Lord Howard de Walden v. Inland Revenue, 1942 I.T.R. (Sup.) 90 (C.A.).

Retrospective effect.—Sub-section (8) is explicit that this section will apply to all transfers of assets whenever made, including those made before 1939, though the section will apply only to assessments made thereafter.

United Kingdom law.—An important difference between the United Kingdom law of 1936 and that of 1938 is that while the former let-off cases in which the transfer and associated operations were mainly for a purpose other than that of avoiding tax, the latter excuses only those cases in which the avoidance of tax is not one of the objects of the transfer and associated operations or if the operations were bona fide commercial operations with no purpose of avoiding tax. Since 1938, however, certain Defence of the Realm Regulations, which confer wide powers on the Treasury to acquire control over securities possessed abroad by residents in the United Kingdom make it different for such residents to transfer assets abroad with a view to avoiding tax.

Appeal.—There is a right of appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 30 against orders under this section.

Double taxation.—Sub-section (4) has been put in out of abundant caution, though similar provisions have not been made in respect of cases under section 16.

44-E. (1) Where the owner of any securities (in this sub-section and in sub-section (2) referred to as "the owner") agrees to sell or transfer those securities and by the same or any collateral agreement—

Avoidance of tax by certain transactions in securities.

(a) agrees to buy back or re-acquire the securities, or

(b) acquires an option, which he subsequently exercises, to buy back or re-acquire the securities,

then, if the result of the transaction is that any interest becoming payable in respect of the securities is receivable otherwise than by the owner, the interest payable as aforesaid shall, whether it would or would not have been chargeable to tax a part from the provisions of this section, be deemed for all the purposes of this Act to be the income of the owner and not to be the income of any other person.

(2) The references in sub-section (1) to buying back or re-acquiring the securities shall be deemed to include references to buying or acquiring similar securities, so, however, that where similar securities are bought or acquired, the owner shall be under no greater liability to tax than he would have been under if the original securities had been bought back or re-acquired.

(3) Where any person carrying on a business which consists wholly or partly in dealing in securities agrees to buy or acquire any securities, and by the same or any collateral agreement—

(a) agrees to sell back or re-transfer the securities, or

(b) acquires an option, which he subsequently exercises to sell back or re-transfer the securities,

then, if the result of the transaction is that any interest becoming payable in respect of the securities is receivable by him no account shall be taken of the transaction in computing for any of the purposes of this Act the profits arising from or loss sustained in the business.

(4) Sub-section (3) shall have effect, subject to any necessary modifications, as if references to selling back or re-transferring the securities included references to selling or transferring similar securities.

(5) For the purpose of this section—

(a) the expression “ interest ” includes a dividend ;

(b) the expression “ securities ” includes stocks and shares;

(c) securities shall be deemed to be similar if they entitle their holders to the same rights against the same persons as to capital and interest and the same remedies for the enforcement of those rights, notwithstanding any difference in the total nominal amounts of the respective securities or in the form in which they are held or the manner in which they can be transferred.

(6) The Income-tax Officer may by notice in writing require any person to furnish him within such time as he may direct (not being less than twenty-eight days) in respect of all securities of which such person was the owner at any time during the period specified in the notice, such particulars as he considers necessary for the purposes of this section and for the purpose of discovering whether his tax has been borne in respect of the interest on all those securities; and, if that person without reasonable excuse fails to comply with the notice, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five hundred rupees and to a further penalty of the like amount for every day after the infliction of such penalty during which the failure continues.

History.—This section and the next, both of which are modelled on similar provisions in the United Kingdom of recent origin, were both added in 1939 at the instance of the Select Committee, who wrote as follows:—

“The new sections 44-E and 44-F are designed to prevent avoidance of tax by what are known as “bond-washing” transactions, involving the manipulation of securities so that the securities will pass temporarily into the legal ownership of some second person who is either not liable at all or liable in a lesser degree to tax, under such conditions that the interest on the securities is the income of this second person. A common form of the process is the sale of securities cum interest with a simultaneous contract to repurchase them ex-interest. Where foreign securities are concerned this second person may be a foreigner resident abroad entitled to claim exemption from the tax on the interest. More often a financial concern in India is utilised whose computation of profits includes the results of realising securities, so that the concern can profitably offer “bond-washing” facilities to the owner of securities bearing fixed interest, where the owner himself is not liable to taxation on the realisation of the securities.”

Previous Rulings.—This section and the next nullify to a certain extent rulings referred to under sections 3, 8 and 13 as to the normal effect of such transactions.

Owner.—Not necessarily individual.

“Whether it would or would not have been chargeable.”—As regards the meaning of these words occurring in sub-section (1), see notes on the corresponding words in section 44-D.

By the same or any collateral arrangement—i.e., not if the second arrangement is entirely unconnected with the first; whether it is so or not will be a question of fact.

Option.—The option must be subsequently exercised in order to bring the case within the section.

Interest.—Note that by special definition this includes a ‘dividend’ which in turn has also been specially defined in section 2 (6-A).

Securities.—Note the special definition in clause (b) of sub-section (5), which differs from that in section 8.

Similar securities.—See clause (a) of sub-section (5). What matters is the right to capital and interest and the persons against whom recoveries lie, and not the nominal accounts of the securities and the like. If the owner buys or takes over ‘similar’ securities his liability would not be greater than if he had taken back the original securities. This is made clear by sub-section (2).

Limitation.—The notice under sub-section (6) must obviously not relate to a period anterior to what would be covered by section 34.

"No account should be taken"—Sub-section (3).—Transactions dealt with under this section will be entirely excluded from those of the person's regular business. This exclusion is obviously independent of whether action is taken against his customers under sub-section (1). Taking sub-section (1) and (3) together, the intention is that in such cases, the result of the transactions should be fathered on the customer and not on the broker or jobber. So, the net profits or loss as the case may be will be taken as that of the 'owner' under sub-section (1) and added to his other income if any. The object of sub-section (3) is to prevent double taxation of the same income—once as that of the broker or jobber and again as that of the customer. There is no similar provision as regards transactions between two persons neither of whom is a broker or jobber, but even so, on the analogy of section 16, it would not be open to the Crown to treat the same item of interest (or dividend) as the income of two persons at one and the same time.

Appeal.—An appeal lies against a penalty under sub-section (6) to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 30. As regards bringing the case within section 44-E, an appeal would automatically be a part of the appeal against the assessment under section 23.

Continuing offence.—See notes under section 51.

44-F. (1) Any person upon whom notice is served by the Income-tax Officer requiring him to furnish a statement of particulars relating to any securities, in which, at any time during the period specified in the notice he has had any beneficial interest, and in respect of which, within such period, either no income was received by him, or the income received by him was less than the sum to which the income would have amounted if the income from such securities had accrued from day to day and been apportioned accordingly, shall, whether an assessment to income-tax or super-tax in respect of his total income has or has not been made for the relevant year or years of assessment, furnish such a statement and such particulars in the form and within the time (not being less than twenty-eight days) required by the notice.

(2) If it appears to the Income-tax Officer by reference to all the circumstances in relation to the securities of any such person (including circumstances with respect to sales, purchases, dealings, contracts, arrangements, transfers, or any other transactions relating to such securities) that such person has thereby avoided or would avoid more than ten per cent. of the amount of the income-tax or super-tax for any year which would have been payable in his case in respect of the income from those securities if the income had been deemed to accrue from day to day and had been apportioned accordingly and the income so deemed to have been apportioned to him had been treated as part of his total income from all sources for the purposes of income tax or super-tax then those securities shall be deemed to be securities to which sub-section (3) applies.

(3) For the purposes of assessment to income-tax or super-tax in the case of any such person, the income from any securities to which this sub-section applies shall be deemed to accrue from day to day, and in the case of the sale or transfer of any such securities by or to him shall be deemed to have been received as and when it is deemed to have accrued :

Provided that this section shall not apply if such person proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer that the avoidance of income-tax or super-tax was exceptional and not systematic and that there was not in his case in any of the three preceding years any such avoidance of income-tax or super-tax or that the provisions of section 44-E have been applied in his case in respect of such income.

(4) If any person fails to furnish any statement or particulars required under this section, or if the Income-tax Officer is not satisfied with any statement or particulars furnished under this section, the Income-tax Officer may make an estimate of the amount of the income which, under the foregoing provisions of this section, is to be deemed to form part of the person's total income for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax.

(5) If any person without reasonable excuse fails to furnish any statement or particulars required under this section, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five hundred rupees, and to a further penalty of the like amount for every day after the infliction of such penalty during which the failure continues.

(6) For the purpose of this section the expression "securities" includes stocks and shares.

History.—See notes under section 44-E.

Scope of Section.—This section relates to a different set of circumstances from those contemplated by section 44-E, and is intended to apply to cases where a person systematically sells securities just on the eve of a dividend or interest payment and (without any simultaneous arrangement) buys them back soon after, so as to convert the dividends, etc., into Capital receipts. The section can be applied only if tax has been avoided at least to the extent of ten per cent. The section does not however require any buying back as a necessary condition.

Proviso.—Two cases are excepted: (1) if the avoidance was not systematic, as evidenced by the tax-payer's records for the three years preceding the year under consideration and (2) if section 44-E has been applied. The latter condition is intended to avoid double taxation in respect of the same income; but there is no provision against the double taxation of the same interest or dividend at the same moment, viz., once in the hands of the evader under this section and again in the hands of the persons with whom he had dealings, but such double taxation will presumably not be made.

Estimate.—If the person fails to furnish information, the Income-tax Officer has perforce to make an estimate.

Exceptional and not systematic.—With reference to these words occurring also in the corresponding United Kingdom Statute (section 33 of the Finance Act of 1927), it was held that the words primarily have relation to number: 'Systematic' did not mean planned or devised, (as the Crown argued), because the more planned or devised, the more exceptional the avoidance would be. In the context, the 'exception' is to the 'system', therefore, a single avoidance is not systematic but exceptional. Similarly avoidance will not be systematic merely because there are a number of sales at one time. On the other hand, in order to escape this section, the assessee has to show that the admitted avoidance is exceptional and not systematic, i.e., not a part of a system of avoidances, and that there has been no such avoidance in the last three years. Bilsland v. Inland Revenue, 20 Tax Cas 446; (1936) 2 K.B. 542.

Deemed to accrue.—The words show that in fact the income does not so accrue, and merely lay down a formula to estimate the tax avoided.

Penalty.—Compare sub-section (6) of section 44-E.

Limitation.—The limitation in section 34 will obviously apply to this section also.

Appeal.—An appeal against penalty under sub-section (5) lies under section 30. An appeal against the apportionment would obviously lie as part of the appeal against the assessment.

Continuing offence.—See notes under section 51.

CHAPTER VI.

RECOVERY OF TAX AND PENALTIES.

45. Any amount specified as payable in a notice of demand under sub-section (3) of section 23-A or

Tax when payable. under section 29 or an order under section 31 or section 33, shall be paid within the time, at the place and to the person mentioned in the notice or order, or if a time is not so mentioned, then on or before the first day of the second month following the date of the service of the notice or order, and any assessee failing so to pay shall be deemed to be in default, provided that, when an assessee has presented an appeal under section 30, the Income-tax Officer may in his discretion treat the assessee as not being in default as long as such appeal is undisposed of:

Provided further that where an assessee has been assessed in respect of income arising outside British India in a country the laws of which prohibit or restrict the remittance of money to British India, the Income-tax Officer shall not treat the assessee as in default in respect of that part of the tax which is due in respect of that amount of his income which by reason of such prohibition or restriction cannot be brought into British India, and shall continue to treat the assessee as not in default in respect of such part of the tax until the prohibition or restriction is removed.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section income shall be deemed to have been brought into British India if it has been utilised or could have been utilised for the purposes of any expenditure actually incurred by the assessee without British India or if the income whether capitalized or not has been brought into British India in any form.

History.—This section corresponds to section 29 of the 1886 Act and section 35 of the 1918 Act but is more detailed and elaborate. This section was amended in 1930 and again in 1939, when the proviso and the explanation were added.

Notice of Demand.—In respect of an initial demand by the Income-tax Officer, including penalties or interest under any of the appropriate sections, there can be no default unless a notice has been served by the Income-tax Officer as required by section 29, stating the demand payable by the assessee. As regards the form of notice, see rules under section 29.

The references to sections other than section 29 are unnecessary in view of the change made in section 29 in 1939, so as to extend the latter section to cover demands under all orders passed under the Act including demands for penalties and interest.

Appellate and Revisional Orders.—Where the amount assessed by the Income-tax Officer has not been paid pending the appeal and the appellate authority under section 31 enhances the demand, the authority is expected to fix the time within which the demand or the additional demand, as the case may be, should be paid. If no such time is fixed, the demand or the additional demand is payable on the first day of the second month following the date of service of the notice or order, see Mahomed Farid Mahomed Shaffee v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 67, regarding the issue of a demand notice under section 29 instead of under section 45.

Stay of enforcement of demand.—When an appeal has been presented, the Income-tax Officer is empowered to stay the collection of tax till the appeal has been decided. But no assessee can claim such postponement as a matter of right. Ordinarily, where such stay is granted it is restricted to the amount in dispute. It should be noted that the proviso applies only to appeals under section 30—and not to those under section 33.

Default.—As to the meaning of this word, see notes under section 46 infra. The time mentioned in the notice or order need not be later than the first day of the second month following the date of service of the notice or order.

Frozen assets abroad.—It is clear that the onus lies on the assessee to show that his case is covered by the second proviso. The 'laws' of the foreign country (which are questions of fact to the Courts of British India) will presumably include executive acts of Foreign Governments having the same effect, viz., that of prohibiting or restricting the remittance of money to British India.

Reading the proviso as a whole, it is clear, from the words "cannot be brought into British India", that the real test for the applicability of the proviso is whether the foreign money can be brought into British India either directly or through other countries, whether in cash or in kind. Obviously, it is not merely sufficient that the money could be taken out of the foreign country; for example, it may be possible under the laws of the foreign country to take the money to some other foreign country with similar restrictions about export of money but not to a country from where the money can be brought into British India.

That part of the tax.—The calculation of the tax is apparently to be made on the basis of section 17, that is, on a pro rata basis. This seems also to be the official view.

Default.—Default in respect of frozen assets will, according to the strict letter of the proviso, commence immediately after the frozen assets become liquid and not necessarily after the normal interval laid down in the main part of the section.

Explanation.—It will be noted that the explanation is qualified by the words 'for the purposes of this section'; it cannot therefore be extended as an explanation to section 4 as a matter of course. The words 'could have been utilised' and 'in any form' have been put in to make the provisions as wide as possible. The questions likely to arise out of the explanation will ordinarily be questions of fact, any differences between the assessee and the Revenue Authorities being composed by the usual appellate machinery.

46. (1) When an assessee is in default in making a payment of Income-tax, the Income-tax

Mode and time of recovery. Officer may in his discretion direct that, in addition to the amount of the arrears, a sum not exceeding that amount shall be recovered from the assessee by way of penalty.

(1-A) For the purposes of sub-section (1), the Income-tax Officer may direct the recovery of any sum less than the amount of the arrears and may enhance the sum so directed to be recovered from time to time in the case of a continuing default, so however that the total sum so directed to be recovered shall not exceed the amount of the arrears payable.

(2) The Income-tax Officer may forward to the Collector a certificate under his signature specifying the amount of arrears due from an assessee, and the Collector, on receipt of such certificate, shall proceed to recover from such assessee the amount specified therein as if it were an arrear of land revenue:

Provided that without prejudice to any other powers of the Collector in this behalf, he shall for the purpose of recovering the said amount have the powers which under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, a Civil Court has for the purpose of the recovery of an amount due under a decree.

(3) In any area with respect to which the Commissioner has directed that any arrears may be recovered by any process enforceable for the recovery of an arrear of any municipal tax or local rate imposed under any enactment for the time being in force in any part of the province, the Income-tax Officer may proceed to recover the amount due by such process.

(4) The Commissioner may direct by what authority any powers or duties incident under any such enactment as aforesaid to the enforcement of any process for the recovery of a municipal tax or local rate shall be exercised or performed when that process is employed under sub-section (3).

(5) If any assessee is in receipt of any income chargeable under the head "Salaries", the Income-tax Officer may require any person paying the same to deduct from any payment subsequent to the date of such requisition any arrears due from such assessee, and such person shall comply with any such requisition, and shall pay the sum so deducted to the credit of the Central Government, or as the Central Board of Revenue directs.

(6) If the recovery of income-tax in any area has been entrusted to a Provincial Government under section 124 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, the Provincial Government may direct with respect to that area or any part thereof, that income-tax shall be recovered therein with, and as an addition to, any municipal tax or local rate by the same person and in the same manner as the municipal tax or local rate is recovered.

(7) Save in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 42 or of the proviso to section 45, no proceedings for the recovery of any sum payable under this Act shall be commenced after the expiration of one year from the last day of the financial year in which any demand is made under this Act:

Provided that where the sum payable is allowed to be paid by instalments the period of one year herein referred to shall be reckoned from the date on which the last of such instalments was due.

History.—This section corresponds to section 30 of the 1886 Act and section 36 of the 1918 Act. Sub-section (1-A) was inserted in 1928 and the proviso to sub-section (2) in 1933. Sub-section (6) was altered by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937. The reference to section 45 in sub-section (7) was consequential on the amendment of section 45 in 1939. The word 'financial' was also added in 1939.

In 1941, the words "in respect of the attachment and sale of debts due to the assessee" and "in respect of the attachment and sale of debts due to a judgment-debtor" were omitted, thus making the powers wider.

Mode of recovery.—Section 46 (3) and (4) provide for cases where a special whole-time income-tax staff for the actual collection of the tax is employed in any area. Where such a staff is employed, the Commissioner of Income-tax may confer upon that staff any of the powers for the enforcement of any process for the recovery of a municipal tax or local rate imposed under any enactment which is in force in any part of the province, e.g., the powers of distraint, if the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that the failure to deduct tax was wilful. In other areas and, in the areas in which a special staff is employed where the powers for the recovery of municipal taxes or local rates have proved insufficient, the Income-tax Officer may, under section 46 (2), forward under his signature a certificate specifying the amount of arrears due from an assessee to the Collector of the district and the Collector of the district on receipt of such a certificate must proceed to recover the amount specified in the certificate as if it were an arrear of land revenue. The Collector has, without prejudice to any other power he may have, the power to attach and sell a debt due to a defaulter to recover the arrears.

Salaries.—Where the defaulter is a salaried person the Income-tax Officer may, under the provisions of section 46 (5), require the person paying "salary" to such assessee to deduct from any subsequent payments of "salary" any arrears of tax due from such assessee whether those arrears are due on account of tax on 'salary' or on income from any other sources or on account of any penalty.

Limitation.—No proceedings for recovery can be commenced after the expiration of one year from the last day of the year in which the demand is made, with the exception of the special cases referred to in sub-section (1) of section 42 and in the proviso to section 45. The former refers specially to arrears of tax due from a non-resident. For the collection of such arrears no time-limit is prescribed as such arrears may be recovered from any assets of the non-resident which may at any time come within British India.

The limitation applies only to the commencement of proceedings for recovery and has nothing to do with the time within which such proceedings should be completed. Where, pending a decision of a High Court or for some other reason, an assessee is allowed to defer payment, recovery proceedings will be commenced within the time limit in order to safeguard the revenue. In such cases if a recovery certificate is issued to the Collector, for example, he will be informed at the same time to defer taking action on it.

Proceedings.—The phrase "proceedings for the recovery of any sum payable under this Act" should be interpreted as relating to proceedings taken under section 46. The issue of a notice of demand under section 29 is not a proceeding for the purpose of this section.

Proceedings for recovery begin only when the Income-tax Officer forwards a recovery certificate to the Collector under sub-section (2) of section 46 or takes other action under sub-section (3), (5) or (6). The imposition of a penalty is not a commencement of recovery proceedings.

(vii) The above remarks regarding recovery of tax apply also, under the provisions of section 47 to the recovery of any penalty imposed under section 25 (2), section 28 or sub-section (1) and (1-A) of section 46.

Default—Sub-section (1).—‘Default’ is a French word.

“I don’t know a larger or looser word. . . . In its largest and most general sense it seems to mean ‘failing,’” per Eyre, C.J., in Doe and Dacre v. Dacre, 1 B. & P. 258.

“‘Default’ is a purely relative term like ‘negligence.’ It means nothing more, nothing less, than not doing what is reasonable under the circumstances—not doing something which you ought to do having regard to the relations which you occupy towards the other persons interested in the transaction”—per Brown, L.J., in Re Young and Harston, 31 Ch.D. 174, and Collins, L.J., in Re Woods and Lewis, (1898) 2 Ch. 211 (Stroud).

In this section ‘default’ simply means failure to pay. It should be noted that under the proviso to section 18 (7) a penalty cannot be levied under section 46 on a person who is bound to deduct tax at source and pay the tax but has not done so, unless there is wilful failure on his part to deduct and pay.

Payment of income-tax.—The words refer to the payment of the demand in a demand notice under section 29, and not only to tax proper as distinct from penalties or interest, and clearly include payment of sums arising out of appellate or revisional orders resulting in enhancement of demand. See section 47.

Attachment of debts.—Under the 1886 Act, not only could the Collector recover arrears of income-tax with arrears of land revenue or municipal taxes but his orders had the force of a decree of a Civil Court, and he could enforce them like such decrees. The power was taken away in 1918 but was indirectly available through some of the Provincial Acts governing the collection of arrears of land revenue or municipal taxes. The power was restored in 1933 through the proviso to sub-section (2) and was widened in 1941 by the omission of the words “in respect of attachment and sale of debts, etc.”

Appeal.—Since 1st April, 1939, an appeal lies to the Assistant Commissioner (and higher authorities) against penalties levied under this section; but only if the tax is first paid, see section 30.

Police Officer—Executing warrants.—In the absence of the Commissioner’s orders under sub-sections (3) and (4) of this section, the Collector has no power to issue a distress warrant for the realisation of arrear of income-tax as though they were arrears of Municipal tax. Nor has the Collector authority to issue such a warrant to an officer of the Police nor is such a Police Officer executing such a warrant acting in the execution of his duty as a Police Officer; consequently, resistance to such Police Officer is not an offence under section 353, Indian Penal Code, Jairam Sahu v. Emperor, 1 I.T.C. 201.

Arrear of Income-tax—Not same as arrear of Land Revenue.—The effect of the Act is not to convert income-tax into an arrear of Land Revenue due in respect of the land which may be brought to sale for the realisation of income-tax, but merely to extend the procedure prescribed by the Revenue Recovery Act to the recovery of arrears of income-tax.

A sale of land, therefore, for enforcement of payment of income-tax, even though made under the Rent Recovery Act, does not give the purchaser a preferential title free of all encumbrances, Chinnammal Achi v. Cheno Muthu Saithkkathi Rowther, 1935 I.T.R. 364.

In a case, again in which a mortgaged property was sold on account of the default of income-tax of one of the sharers, it was held that the sale affected only the defaulter's share in the mortgaged property and not the shares of the other sharers, Kadir Mohideen Maracayar v. Muthukrishna Iyer, 1 I.T.C. 6; 26 Mad. 230; 12 M.L.J. 368.

See also Ibrahim Khan v. Rangasami Naicken, 28 Mad. 420, a case of sale for abkari revenue, and Sankaran v. Ramaswami, 41 Mad. 691, a case of sale of land on which there was a charge on account of a Land Improvement Loan from Government. As to whether the Collector can attach or sell property held by the Income-tax Officer to belong to the assessee but claimed, and admitted by the assessee, to be the property of some one else, see Secretary of State v. Radha Swami Sat Sang, 1945 I.T.R. 520 (All.).

'Certificate' procedure under the Public Demands Recovery Act.—It is not necessary for the Certificate officer to offer evidence of any order having been made directing the certificate to be filed. When a statute directs a document to be filed in an office, the direction involves no formal or technical procedure. All that is required is that the document should be preserved in the office in such condition that it can be produced when required. Doorga Prasad v. Secretary of State, 1945 I.T.R. 285 (P.C.).

The arrear of tax under section 46 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act specified in the certificate sent to the Collector is a public demand payable to the Collector within the meaning of the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913 (ibid.).

The reference to the certificate holder as the 'Secretary of State for the Income-tax Officer' instead of 'the Secretary of State' does not vitiate the certificate (ibid.).

Priority—Claim of Crown—Income-tax.—In Collector of Moradabad v. Muhammad Din, 2 All. 196, it was held that the Common Law of England under which the Crown had a priority of claim in respect of debts was applicable to India also. This view was dissented from in Ramachandra v. Pitchaikanni, 7 Mad. 434, in which it was held that except in the case of a claim for land revenue which is definitely charged on the land by statute, the Crown had no priority of claim. This decision was given having regard to historical considerations under which the present Government in India merely succeeded to the rights and liabilities of the East India Company. A doubt however was expressed as to the position in Presidency towns which were under the jurisdiction of the old Supreme Courts and in which the English Common Law had been applied. The position was again reviewed in Bank of Upper India v. Administrator-General, 45 Cal. 653, in which it was held, following the cases below, Re Henley & Co., (1878) L.R. 9 Ch.D. 469, New South Wales Taxation Commissioners v. Palmer, (1907) A.C. 179 and Rex v. Wells, (1912) 16 East 278, 282, that the Crown had priority over a second mortgagee but not over a first mortgagee, both being English mortgages. The ratio decidendi was that the first mortgagee had a right of property whereas the second had only a right of redemption which the insolvent owner also had, and that as between concurrent claims the Crown had precedence. It was also held that the rule was of universal application in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary. It should be noted, however, that the Bank of Upper India case was a case in the original jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court.

Attention is also invited to the dicta of the Privy Council in Ragho Prasad v. Mewalal, 34 All. 223 (P.C.).

It was held in Soniram Rameshwar v. Mary Pinto, 1934 I.T.R. 58; 11 Rang. 467; A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 8 (followed in Secretary of State for India v. Ma Nyein Me and others, 1937 I.T.R. 560; A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 380, which reviews the authorities), that in respect of income-tax already assessed the Crown had a right of preference over unsecured debts and if there are funds in the Court's custody of which payment can be made, the Court can order payment without prior attachment. The fact that a creditor has attached the assessee's property can give him no preference over the Crown. An attachment confers no title to property. The question of precedence over secured creditors has not been decided.

A decision to the same effect as in Soniram Rameshwar v. Mary Pinto, 1934 I.T.R. 58, was given by the Bombay High Court in Governor-General in Council v. Chotalal Shivdas and another, 1939 I.T.R. 411 (Bom.).

Though the Collector acting under section 46 (2) can exercise all the powers of a Civil Court for the purpose of recovering income-tax, he is not really a Civil Court and there can be no question of rateable distribution between him and other creditors under section 73, C.P.C., Secretary of State v. Ma Nyein Me, 1937 I.T.R. 560 (Rang.).

Though income-tax relates to the income of a particular period, it becomes a debt due to the Crown, when demand is made under sections 29 and 45, and is not a debt due for any particular period. Doorga Prasad v. Secretary of State, 1945 I.T.R. 285 (P.C.).

Debts due to the Crown.—Under section 49 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, debts include not only debts already become due but also debts provable within section 46 (3) of the said Act, viz., "all debts and liabilities, present or future, certain or contingent, to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent or to which he may become subject before discharge by reason of an obligation incurred before the date of such adjudication." Accordingly, when a person who carried on business in 1934-35, was adjudged an insolvent in June, 1935, by which date no assessment had been made on him for 1935-36 on the income of 1934-35, it was held that tax for 1935-36, though assessed after June, 1935, should be given priority and paid in full before a dividend could be declared to other creditors. Secretary of State v. Official Assignee, 1937 I.T.R. 677 (Sind); see also Manickam Chettiyar v. Income-tax Officer, Madras, 1938 I.T.R. 180 (F.B.).

As regards the present position of the law in England regarding priority of Crown debts in the winding up of companies, see Food Controller v. Cork, (1923) A.C. 647. Income-tax is a necessary expense of liquidation and ranks prior to the liquidator's claim for remuneration, In re Beni Felkai Mining Co., Ltd., 12 A.T.C. 624; 18 Tax Cases 632. In Governor-General in Council v. Shiromani Sugar Mills, Ltd., 1946 I.T.R. 248, the Federal Court decided that in respect of companies the Crown is not entitled to any prerogative, priority or preferential rights of treatment, save those expressly conferred and limited by the Companies Act itself, in particular by sections 230 and 232 (2). In this respect the position in the United Kingdom is the same, i.e., the Crown is bound, in respect of liquidation of Companies "to a statutory scheme of administration wherein the prerogative right of the Crown to priority no longer exists" (per Lord Wrenbury in Food Controller v. Clerk).

Companies—Winding up—Priority of taxes.—Section 230, Indian Companies Act—

"(1) In a winding up there shall be paid in priority to all other debts—

(a) all revenue, taxes, cesses, and rates, whether payable to the Crown or to a local authority, due from the company at the date hereinafter mentioned and having become due and payable within the twelve months next before that date;

* * * * *

(2) The foregoing debts shall—

(a) rank equally among themselves and be paid in full, unless the assets are insufficient to meet them, in which case they shall abate in equal proportion;

* * * * *

(3) Subject to the retention of such sums as may be necessary for the costs and expenses of the winding up, the foregoing debts shall be discharged forthwith so far as the assets are sufficient to meet them.

(4) In the event of a landlord or other person distraining or having distrained on any goods or effects of the company within three months next before the date of a winding-up order, the debts to which priority is given by this section shall be a first charge on the goods or effects so distrained on, or the proceeds of the sale thereof:

Provided that in respect of any money paid under any such charge the landlord or other person shall have the same rights of priority as the person to whom the payment is made.

(5) The date hereinbefore in this section referred to is—

(a) in the case of a company ordered to be wound up compulsorily, which had not previously commenced to be wound up voluntarily, the date of the winding-up order; and

(b) in any other case, the date of the commencement of the winding-up."

Priority under this section can apparently be claimed only if the assessment has been made and also fallen due before the date referred to above. It will be noted that there is a difference in this respect between the Companies Act and the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. See Governor-General in Council v. Shiromani Sugar Mills Ltd., 1946 I.T.R. 248 (F.C.). Where the case is one of discontinuance of business or of succession to it the provisions of sections 25 and 26 of the Income-tax Act will come into operation.

Bankruptcy—Proof of.—In Calvert v. Walker, 4 Tax Cases 79 it was held that a proof made in bankruptcy by a Collector of Taxes in respect of arrears of income-tax due could not be expunged on the ground that the debtor had not in fact made the profit assessed. This decision was followed by the Oudh Chief Court in Dinshaw & Co. v. Income-tax Officer, Lucknow, 1941 I.T.R. 215, and definitely dissented from by the Lahore High Court in Governor-General in Council v. Sargodha Trading Co., 1943 I.T.R. 368.

See notes under section 23 (4) as to the reopening of assessments in such cases.

The words 'other legal proceeding' in section 171 of the Indian Companies Act include proceedings by revenue authorities under section 46 (2) of the Income-tax Act; therefore, before sending the requisite certificate under section 46 (2) to the Collector, the Revenue should apply for leave of the Court, regulating the liquidation, under section 171 of the Companies Act. Governor-General in Council v. Shiromani Sugar mills, 1946 I.T.R., 248 (F.C.).

In In re the Watchmaker's Alliance and Ernest Goodes Store, Limited, 5 Tax Cases 117 the liquidators of a company paid away all the assets to contributories and others without making provisions for a Crown debt for income-tax. Held, that the liquidators misapplied the assets, within the meaning of section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, and must pay the amount of the Crown debt; and that, in default of payment, a writ of attachment was issuable as a matter of right, the Court having no discretion in the matter. See section 230 of the Indian Companies Act set out supra.

Can Crown sue for recovering tax?—Section 46 is not exhaustive of the remedies of the Crown to recover arrears of income-tax, and does not preclude an application to a Court for payment out of funds in the hands of the Court; and it is not necessary for the Crown, before making such an application, to obtain a decree against the assessee or to effect an attachment, Manickam Chettyar v. Income-tax Officer, Madras, 1938 I.T.R. 180 (Mad.).

Section 46 prescribes a summary remedy, but it is not only remedy. The time limit laid down in section 46 (7) applies only to proceedings under that section.

When income-tax is assessed, it becomes a debt due to the Crown which as a creditor has the ordinary right of suit against the assessee; there is nothing in the Income-tax Act taking away this right.

A suit for recovery of arrears of income-tax, being a suit of a civil nature can be maintained under section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, and would be governed by Article 120, if not by Article 149 of the Indian Limitation Act.

It is open to the Income-tax Officer under section 49-A to set-off against refunds due to the assessee, arrears of income-tax due from him even though the limitation laid down in section 46 (7) may have expired. Indrachand v. Secretary of State, 1941 I.T.R. 673 (Pat.).

As to the right of the Crown to recover taxes generally by action:

"If the newly created duty is simply an obligation to pay money for a public purpose, the general rule would seem to be that the payment cannot be enforced in any other manner than that provided by the Act. . . . It is however a general rule that where an Act of Parliament creates an obligation to pay money, the money may be recovered by action, unless some other provision is contained in the Act; that is, unless an exclusive recovery is given; and the question may arise whether the particular remedy given by the Act is cumulative or substitutional for this right of action," Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, 6th edition, pp. 710 and 711.

In the United Kingdom, section 169 of the Act of 1918 expressly allows the Revenue to recover tax by suit as well as by summary means specially provided in the Act.

In In re Henley & Co., 1 Tax Cases 209 in which a Company was being wound up under the supervision of the Court, the Court of Appeal (James, L.J.) said: "There is nothing to prevent the Crown from suing the company or distraining their chattels, not only on the property, but anywhere else" for the purpose of recovering income-tax to which the Crown has under the English law a prior claim over other debts." But see Food Controller v. Cork, (1923) A.C. 647.

47. Any sum imposed by way of penalty under the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 25, Recovery of penalties. section 28, sub-section (6) of section 44-E, sub-section (5) of section 44-F or sub-section (1) of section 46 or any interest payable under the provisions of sub-sections (4), (6), (7) or (8) of section 18-A shall be recoverable in the manner provided in this Chapter for the recovery of arrear of tax.

History.—This section which appeared for the first time in 1922 was amended in 1939, and again in 1944. This section has been put in out of abundant caution; for it is clear from sections 29, 45 and 46 that 'income-tax' for the purpose of section 46 includes the various penalties under section 25 (2), section 28 and section 46 (1), and is the more so since the comprehensive amendment of section 29 in 1939.

CHAPTER VII.

REFUNDS.

48. (1) If any individual, Hindu undivided family, company, local authority, firm or other association of persons, or any partner of a firm or member of an association individually satisfies the Income-tax Officer or other authority appointed by the Central Government in this behalf that the amount of tax paid by him or on his behalf or treated as paid on his behalf for any year exceeds the amount with which he is properly chargeable under this Act for that year, he shall be entitled to a refund of any such excess.

(2) The Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Appellate Tribunal in the exercise of their appellate powers if satisfied to the like effect shall cause a refund to be made by the Income-tax Officer of any amount found to have been wrongly paid or paid in excess.

(3) Where income of one person is included under any provision of this Act in the total income of any other person such other person only shall be entitled to a refund under this section in respect of such income.

(4) Nothing in this section shall operate to validate any objection or appeal which is otherwise invalid or to authorise the revision of any assessment or other matter which has become final and conclusive, or the review by any officer of a decision of his own which is subject to appeal or revision, or, where any relief is specifically provided elsewhere in this Act, to entitle any person to any relief other or greater than that relief or to entitle any person to claim a refund of tax payable before the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, which he would not be entitled to claim but for the passing of that Act.

Rules.

The following are the rules relevant to this section:

R. 36 prescribing the form of application in the case of a person residing in British India.

R. 36-A in the case of a person not resident in British India, latter being divided into two parts, viz., (a) applications for the first time as non-resident and (b) applications in later years as such.

Rule 37 requiring returns of income to accompany applications under Rules 36 and 36-A.

Rule 38 similarly requiring the production of certificates granted under section 18 (9) (deduction of tax at source) and section 20 (dividends).

Rule 39 prescribing the Income-tax Officer to whom the application has to be made.

Rule 40 permits applications for refund to be presented in person or through an agent or by post.

History.—There were no statutory arrangements for refunds under the 1886 Act based on the total income and on difference of rates. The first provision for such refunds was made in 1916, when higher rates were introduced and the graduation made steep. In the first instance, the procedure was regulated by rules made by the Local Governments. In 1918 the Act itself provided for refunds—see section 37 of that Act. The section was amplified in 1922 and again successively in 1928, 1930 and 1933 and was completely recast once again in 1939.

Scope of Section.—The section is now simple. All that one has to see is (1) the amount of tax properly chargeable on the claimant, i.e., with reference to his total income and the relevant provisions of exemption, etc., and (2) the amount of tax already paid by him (i.e., whether at source under section 18 or otherwise) or on his behalf (i.e., dividends etc., after deducting relief received by the company if any). But when the income of one person is treated as that of another, e.g., sections 16, 44-D, 44-E, refund will be given only to the latter person.

Applies to super-tax also.—Section 48, as it stood before 1939, provided only for refund of Income-tax, and even of that, only so far as it was collected or suffered at source, i.e., in respect of partners of registered firms, owners of securities and shareholders of companies.

Also the section applied only when the claimant's own rate of tax was lower than the maximum. Other cases, i.e., not covered by the section were dealt with under section 48-A (introduced in 1933 but now deleted).

The section now applies both to super-tax and to income-tax.

Dividends.—Before 1939, dividends were not taxed in the hands of the shareholder who, however, could claim a refund (of income-tax only as at present). Now dividends are not so exempt but credit is given to the shareholder for the income-tax appropriate to the dividend on the assumption that the dividends had been taxed at the maximum rate of income-tax. See sections 16 (2) and 18 (5).

Who can claim refund.—Under the section now, any category of assessee can claim a refund, if the amount of tax paid by him or on his behalf is in excess of what is properly chargeable.

On his behalf.—For examples of payment on behalf of another, see sections 18, 24-B, 40 to 42, 44-A to F, 49-B, and 49-C; also proviso to section 23 (5), sections 23-A (2) (ii) and 26.

The general plan of the Act, and in particular the deliberate amendment of section 24 (1) (about set-off of losses) so as to neutralise judicial rulings and change departmental practice founded on such rulings, would seem to show that tax is not in any sense paid by an unregistered firm on behalf of its partners, or by a non-descript association of persons on behalf of its members; but the question has not been before the Courts.

'Properly chargeable.'—These words obviously mean chargeable with reference to his total income and total world income as computed in accordance with the Act. These words are reminiscent of the words "all relevant circumstances" in section 24 of the United Kingdom Finance Act, 1923.

The main reason why claims for refund arise is the system of deduction at source or taxation at source, when the deduction is made at the maximum rate or some other rate higher than the payee's appropriate rate of which the payer has no knowledge; but that is not the only reason.

Indian States.—The section does not cover cases of refunds to Indian states (holding securities, for instance, as part of a business) taxed under the Government Trading Taxation Act, but a claim for refund cannot arise so long as a company is taxed at the maximum rate of income-tax.

Change from accrued to cash basis.—Any case of double taxation, i.e., of the same income in the hands of the same person can no doubt be dealt with under this section; but as to whether the taxation of the same item of income twice, once in each year on a different basis will amount to double taxation, see notes under section 13 and also under section 14.

Review or revision.—Under the guise of a claim for refund an assessee cannot demand a review or revision of his assessment which is otherwise not open to him. See sub-section (4). It remains to be decided, however, whether a re-examination on fresh facts will be a revision or review. A strict view of sub-section (4) would mean that sub-section (1) is operative only in cases where the applicant had not been assessed before; while on the other hand, a lenient view would put a premium on the negligence of an assessee in failing to place before the authorities in the first instance all the evidence on which he relies for his reliefs. There is really a lacuna in this Act, viz., to cover cases where owing to sufficient cause the assessee is unable to produce such evidence in the first instance and this gap seems to be filled in practice by a liberal application of section 35 to cases to which that section does not literally apply.

With effect from 1st April, 1940, refunds to non-residents are allowed by the same officer as has jurisdiction to assess them. See notes under sections 42 and 43.

Anticipatory certificates of deduction of tax.—The necessity for making a claim for refund of tax on interest on Government securities (and also in respect of the tax on salaries paid to non-residents) can in many cases be avoided, by obtaining a certificate from the Income-tax Officer under section 18 (3) to the effect that the total income or total world income of the recipient is not liable to tax or is liable only at a rate less than the maximum rate.

Cash refund procedure.—"In cases where a cash refund is necessary, the procedure laid down in rules 36 to 39 must be followed. The application must be made in the form prescribed in rule 36 by persons resident in British India and in that prescribed by rule 36-A by persons not resident in British India, and verified in the manner laid down in those rules and must, under rule 37, be accompanied by a return of the "total income" or of the total world income as the case may be in the form prescribed in rule 19 (or in rule 19-A, if the refund claim relates to an assessment year earlier than 1939-40) unless such a return has previously been made. A false statement in such a return or in such a verification is punishable under the provisions of section 182 of the Indian Penal Code The application must also, where necessary, be accompanied by the certificates mentioned in section 18 (9) or section 20. Rule 39 prescribes the Income-tax Officer to whom an application under section 48 should be made.

Where the applicants reside in India, instead of issuing a refund order payable at a Treasury or a branch of the Imperial Bank of India, the amount of refund due may be remitted by money order if the Income-tax Officer concerned is satisfied that this course is more convenient. In that event the cost of the money order will be borne by Government and should not be deducted from the amount to be refunded. If the applicant resides out of India, the amount of refund under section 48 or 49 of the Act will be remitted to them by a bank draft or money order at their cost unless they appoint agents to receive payment in India." (Income-tax Manual.)

Application by agents.—If an agent wishes to make a refund claim on behalf of a non-resident who is being assessed through him, he will be required to show that he has been duly authorised in proper legal form to send the necessary forms so that his act will bind his principal. (Income-tax Manual.)

In other words the fact that the Income-tax Officer appoints a person to be the agent of a non-resident under section 43 will not enable that agent to claim refund of tax due to the non-resident unless the latter authorises the agent to claim and receive the refund on the non-resident's behalf.

Limitation period.—See section 50.

Dividends and Interest on Bonds.—The person eligible for refund of tax in respect of these items is the person to whom the income belongs and who is taxable on them. See notes under sections 3 and 8 as regards sales cum interest or dividend.

If however the case is dealt with under sections 44-E or 44-F then the person actually taxed on the interest or dividend would be eligible for the refund also.

Onus of proof.—"The onus of proving the claim to refund (and therefore of adducing satisfactory evidence of his total income and of total world-income) of course lies on the claimant, and if he fails to discharge it, his claim should be rejected. Certificates by income-tax authorities in the United Kingdom or a Dominion, will normally be accepted as proof of the income assessing or assessable in that country. Certificates of responsible officials in Indian States will also normally be accepted in support of claims presented by subjects of Indian States." (Income-tax Manual.)

The Certificates granted under section 20 and rule 14 are however, not conclusive evidence by which the Income-tax Officer is bound. He may, if he likes, take further steps to check the correctness of those certificates before granting a refund.

Company wound up.—What a shareholder receives in the winding up of a company is capital. If a preference shareholder should receive arrears of dividend at the time of winding up, such arrear dividends are nevertheless capital. That is, they are not dividends at all but represent a share of capital computed in a particular manner, In re Dominion Tar and Chemical Co., Ltd., 8 A.T.C. 587. No refund of tax will be allowed on such dividends.

See, however, the special definition of 'dividend' under section 2 (6-A); if, under that definition, a dividend is treated as income, it will clearly be eligible for such refund as may be due.

Deceased person's estate—Title to refund.—See section 49-F, Dicta in various rulings like Govind Saran v. Commissioner of Income-tax, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 465; 105 I.C. 556, are now obsolete.

Appeals.—There was a right of appeal under section 50-A (since deleted) till 1st April, 1939, in respect of refunds but there was no further right of reference to the High Court since the appeal was not under section 30 or 32. As from 1st April, 1939, an appeal lies in this respect also under section 30 together with further consequential rights arising out of appeals under that section.

False applications for refunds.—As regards the penalty for false application, see notes under section 52.

Trustees.—In the United Kingdom, where there are special provisions in this respect, if the trustee is resident and the beneficiary non-resident, the right of the latter to refund depends on whether particular assets (securities) have been appropriated for the benefit of the particular beneficiary and such appropriation cannot be assumed, Crawshay v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 19 Tax Cases 715.

In India the law is laid down in sections 40, 41 and 48. If the shares of beneficiaries are ascertainable, they will be entitled to refund if any is admissible; if not, no refund will be given.

Cumulative refunds under sections 48 and 49.—As to refunds not being granted cumulatively under both sections 48 and 49 or 49-A or the Burma Relief Order, see section 49-C.

Dividends free of tax in the United Kingdom and India.—Before the advent of section 49-B in 1939, the position was that if a dividend was paid free both of the United Kingdom and the Indian Income-tax, the total income for the purpose of section 48 did not include United Kingdom income-tax because section 16 authorised the inclusion of Indian Income-tax only. The fact that for relief under section 49 the United Kingdom tax was not deducted in computing the income eligible for relief did not affect the issue. Section 49-B now makes a difference since according to it the tax paid by the company whether in British India or elsewhere is deemed to be paid on behalf of the shareholder; it can be assumed from this that the total income should include the income-tax in respect of the dividend payable to the United Kingdom or other Government.

United Kingdom Law.—In the United Kingdom there is no provision corresponding to section 48 of the Indian Act. Relief is claimed by assesses, and granted either by adjustment during assessment or by refund or by both. The right of a shareholder to refund on account of the tax paid by the company on his dividends rests on judicial pronouncements and not on any express provision as in India.

See notes under sections 16 and 18.

There is a limited provision in section 24 of the Finance Act of 1923 (subsequently amended) under which a person assessed under schedule E or schedule D may apply for relief if he has paid tax in excess because of a mistake in his return or statement; and according to Taxation "Typical cases in which repayment under this section has been made are the following:

- (a) omission to claim for certain admissible expenses, e.g., depreciation not claimed in accounts or net annual value of business premises owned by the trader not deducted;
- (b)
- (c) item returned as income which was clearly of a capital nature;
- (d) A trader including extraneous receipts (e.g., betting profits) in his takings;
- (e) Purchases having been understated by reason of the omission of invoices;
- (f) Errors in stock sheets;
- (g) Duplication of amounts in lists of sundry debts or the inclusion therein of bad debts previously written off;
- (h) The return of an item of income which was legally the income of an exempt person."

In a case, however, in which an assessee had included certain rents in his trading receipts and been taxed thereon, and claimed later that the assessment should have been on the basis of schedule A (i.e., notional rents), his claim was rejected. Carrimore Six Wheelers Ltd. v. Inland Revenue, (1944) 2 All.E.R. 158; (C.A.) 172 L.T. 11; 26 Tax Cases 301.

- 49. (1) If any person who has paid by deduction under section 18 or otherwise Indian income-tax for any year on any part of his income proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer that he has paid by deduction or otherwise United Kingdom

Income-tax for the corresponding year in respect of the same part of his income, and that the rate at which he was entitled to, and has obtained, relief under the provisions of section 27 of the Finance Act, 1920, is less than the Indian rate of tax charged in respect of that part of his income, he shall be entitled to a refund of a sum calculated on that part of his income at a rate equal to the difference between the Indian rate of tax or the appropriate rate of United Kingdom income-tax, whichever is less, and the rate at which he was entitled to, and obtained, relief under that section :

Provided that in no case shall the rate at which such refund is calculated exceed half the Indian rate of tax appropriate to the income of the person entitled to relief.

(2) In sub-section (1)—

(a) the expression "Indian income-tax" means income-tax and super-tax charged in accordance with the provisions of this Act ;

(b) the expression "Indian rate of tax" means the amount of Indian income-tax exclusive of super-tax after deduction of any relief due to a claimant under the other provisions of this Act but before deduction of any relief due to him under this section, divided by his total income after deducting therefrom any income (including income from a share in an unregistered firm) exempted from tax by or under the provisions of this Act, added to the amount of Indian super-tax before deduction of any relief due to the claimant under this section divided by his total income ;

(c) the expression "United Kingdom income-tax" means income-tax and super-tax chargeable in accordance with the provisions of the Income-tax Acts ;

(d) the expression "appropriate rate of United Kingdom income-tax" has the meaning assigned to that expression in section 27 of the Finance Act, 1920, as amended by the Finance Act, 1927.

Rules.

Rule 40 lays down the form in which an application for refund under section 49 should be made; and Rule 41 permits of the application being presented in person or through an agent or by post.

History.—There was no arrangement for Double Income-tax Relief in India before 1922. The words 'or the appropriate rate of United Kingdom Income-tax, whichever is less' were added in 1934, in order to remove the anomaly of cases in which double-taxed income after getting relief from both countries ultimately bore a lighter tax than if it had been taxed only once in the country with the higher rate. In 1939 the proviso to sub-section (1) which had been dropped in 1934, was restored and 'Indian rate of tax' was redefined more on the basis of the United Kingdom Act. Also in order to remove doubts, "by deduction or otherwise" was added after 'paid', and the 'corresponding year' substituted for 'that year'.

Dominions and Indian States.—As regards similar relief in respect of income taxed both in British India and in the Indian States (or British Dominions) see section 49-A which dates from April, 1939. Formerly such relief was granted by notification under section 60.

United Kingdom Law.— "27 (of Finance Act of 1920) , (1) If any person who has paid, by deduction or otherwise, or is liable to pay United Kingdom income-tax for any year of assessment on any part of his income proves to the satisfaction of the Special Commissioners that he has paid Dominion income-tax for that year in respect of the same part of his income, he shall be entitled to relief from United Kingdom income-tax paid or payable by him on that part of his income at a rate thereon to be determined as follows:—

(a) if the Dominion rate of tax does not exceed one-half of the appropriate rate of United Kingdom tax, the rate of which relief is to be given shall be the Dominion rate of tax.

(b) in any other case the rate at which relief is to be given shall be one half of the appropriate rate of the United Kingdom tax.

For the purpose of this section, the expression "the appropriate rate of United Kingdom tax" means the rate at which the claimant for the year to which the claim relates has borne or is liable to bear United Kingdom income-tax and where the claimant is liable to United Kingdom super-tax the expression "the appropriate rate of United Kingdom tax" means a rate equal to the sum of the rates at which he has borne or is liable to bear United Kingdom income-tax and super-tax, respectively, for that year.

(2) Where a person has not established his claim to relief under this section for any year of assessment before the first day of January in that year, the relief shall be granted by way of repayment of tax.

(3) Where by reason of the allowance of relief under this section the rate of United Kingdom income-tax deducted from or paid in respect of any part of the income of any individual is less than the standard rate, and the rate of the relief so allowed is greater than the rate appropriate to the case of that individual, such an adjustment shall be made in allowing to that individual any relief to which he may be entitled under the provisions of this part of this Act relating to the rate of tax on the first two hundred and twenty-five pounds of taxable income as may be necessary to secure that the amount of United Kingdom income-tax finally paid or borne by him shall be equal to the amount which would have been paid or borne if the relief under this section had in the first instance been given at the rate appropriate to his case.

(4) Notwithstanding anything in the Rules applicable to Case IV or Case V of Schedule D or in any other provision of the income-tax Acts, no deduction shall be made on account of the payment of Dominion income-tax in estimating income for the purposes of United Kingdom income-tax, and where income-tax has been paid or is payable in any Dominion either on the income out of which income subject to United Kingdom income-tax arises or is received, or as a direct charge in respect of that income, the income so subject to United Kingdom income-tax shall be deemed to be income arising or received after deduction of Dominion income-tax and an addition shall, in estimating income for the purposes of the United Kingdom income-tax, be made to that income of the proportionate part of the income-tax paid or payable in the Dominion in respect of the income out of which that income arises or is received together with the full amount of any Dominion income-tax directly charged or chargeable in the Dominion in respect of that income:

Provided that—

(a) where any income arising or received as aforesaid consists of dividends which are entrusted to any person in the United Kingdom for payment and the Special Commissioners are satisfied that the person so entrusted is not in a position to ascertain the amount of the addition to be made under this sub-section, the assessment and charge may be made on the amount of the dividends as received by the person so entrusted, but in any such case the amount of the addition shall be chargeable on the recipient of the dividends under Case VI of Schedule D; and

(b) where, under the laws in force in any Dominion, no provision is made for the allowance of relief from Dominion income-tax in respect of the payment of United Kingdom income-tax, then in assessing or charging income-tax in the United Kingdom in respect of income assessed or charged to income-tax in that Dominion deduction shall be allowed in estimating income for the purpose of United Kingdom income-tax of an amount equal to the difference between the amount of the Dominion income-tax paid or payable in respect of the income and the total amount of the relief granted from the United Kingdom income-tax in respect of the Dominion income-tax for the period on the income of which the assessment or charge to United Kingdom income-tax is computed.

In this sub-section the expression 'dividends' includes any interest, annuities, dividends, shares of annuities, pensions, or other annual payments or sums in respect of which tax is charged under the Rules applicable to Schedule C or under Rule VII of the Miscellaneous Rules applicable to Schedule D.

(5) Where under Rule 20 of the General Rules applicable to Schedules A, B, C, D and E, a body of persons is entitled to deduct income-tax from any dividends, tax shall not in any case be deducted at a rate exceeding the rate of the United Kingdom income-tax as reduced by any relief from that tax given under this section in respect of any payment of Dominion income-tax.

(6) Where under the law in force in any Dominion provision is made for the allowance of relief from Dominion income-tax in respect of the payment of United Kingdom income-tax, the obligation as to secrecy imposed by the Income-tax Act upon persons employed in relation to Inland Revenue shall not prevent the disclosure to the authorized officer of the Government of the Dominion of such facts as may be necessary to enable the proper relief to be given in cases when relief is claimed both from United Kingdom income-tax and from Dominion income-tax.

(7) The Commissioners of Inland Revenue may from time to time make regulations generally for carrying out the provisions of this section, and may, in particular by those regulations provide—

(a) For making such arrangements with the Government of any Dominion to which the last preceding sub-section applies as may be necessary to enable the appropriate relief to be granted.

(b) For prescribing the year which in relation to any Dominion income-tax is, for the purposes of relief under this section, to be taken as corresponding to the year of assessment for the purposes of United Kingdom income-tax.

(8) In this section:—

(a) The expression "Dominion" means any British possession, or any territory which is under His Majesty's protection or in respect of which a mandate is being exercised by the Government of any part of His Majesty's dominions.

(b) The expressions "United Kingdom income-tax" and "United Kingdom super-tax" mean respectively income-tax and super-tax chargeable in accordance with the provisions of the Income-tax Acts.

(c) The expression "Dominion income-tax" means any income-tax or super-tax charged under any law in force in any Dominion, if that tax appears to the Special Commissioners to correspond with United Kingdom income-tax or super-tax.

(d) The expression "Dominion rate of tax" means the rate determined by dividing the amount of the Dominion income-tax paid for the year by the amount of the income in respect of which the Dominion income-tax is charged for that year, except that where the Dominion income-tax is charged on an amount other than the ascertained amount of the actual profits the Dominion rate of tax for the purposes of this section shall be determined by the Special Commissioners.

For the purposes of this section, the rate of United Kingdom income-tax shall be ascertained by dividing by the amount of the taxable income of the person concerned the amount of tax payable by that person on that income before deduction of any relief granted in respect of life assurance premiums or any relief granted under the provisions of this section, and the rate of United Kingdom super-tax be ascertained by dividing the amount of the super-tax payable by any person by the amount of that person's total income from all sources as estimated for super-tax purposes."

Scheme of relief.—Taking the laws both in the United Kingdom and in British India together, the broad scheme of relief is that the United Kingdom gives relief at a rate up to the Indian rate or half the United Kingdom rate whichever is less and British India gives further relief so that the assessee finally bears tax at either the United Kingdom rate or the British Indian rate whichever may be higher but the relief in British India will not exceed half the Indian rate.

Burma.—Double taxation relief in respect of Burma is governed neither by section 49 nor by section 49-A but by a special Order in Council, viz., The India and Burma (Income-tax Relief) Order, 1936, this order taking the place of section 49 of the Indian Income-tax Act. The scheme provides both for double and for treble income-tax relief. The Order has been set out under section 49-A.

The form of application for relief under this Order is given in Rule 40-A and the form of appeal against refusal of relief in Rule 40-B.

Preliminary conditions.—An assessee must have obtained relief from the authorities in the United Kingdom and must prove that he has done so and at what rate the relief was granted before any relief can be given to him in India. He is required in practice to produce the official receipt for the United Kingdom tax paid, the notice of assessment showing the basis on which the liability has been computed and a certificate of the Income-tax authority showing what relief has actually been given to him in that country.

Payment of tax in instalments.—When during an assessment it taxation on any part of his income, the amount of the relief will, if possible, be calculated by the Income-tax Officer in advance, and the assessee will normally be allowed to pay the demand in two instalments, the second of which will represent the amount of relief calculated to be due. The date of the first instalment will be that ordinarily fixed for the payment of a demand of income-tax, while the second will be payable two or, if possible, three or four months from the date of the notice of demand. If the assessee produces the necessary British certificates and establishes his claim to relief under section 49 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the demand for the second instalment will be modified by cancellation or reduction or, if the relief is greater than the second instalment and the first instalment has been paid, a refund will be granted of the tax overpaid. (Income-tax Manual.)

The above procedure will also be followed in granting relief from double taxation to incomes taxed in British India and in a Dominion or Indian State included in reciprocal arrangements. See section 49-A.

Provisional claims.—The time limit for making claim for refund under section 49 is mentioned in section 50. Since, however, there is often great delay in settling assessments and claims to relief in the United Kingdom, provisional claims for double income-tax relief unsupported by proof that relief has actually been obtained in the United Kingdom will be accepted if presented within the limitation period if the assessee definitely undertakes to produce such proof as soon as relief in the United Kingdom has actually been obtained. When this undertaking is punctually fulfilled, the claim will be treated as one presented in due time. (Income-tax Manual.)

Proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer.—The nature of the evidence must depend on the circumstances of each case and the discretion of the Income-tax Officer, but the certificates of the Revenue Officers in the United Kingdom would ordinarily be accepted as satisfactory evidence by the Income-tax Officer. The onus of proof lies on the applicant.

Appeals.—As regards right of appeal against orders under this section, see section 30.

Limitation.—See section 50.

Indian rate of tax.—The definition as now revised closely follows the similar definition in the United Kingdom Act. Before 1st April, 1939, the definition was as follows: "means the amount of Indian income-tax divided by the income on which it was charged".

Any part of his income.—In Rolls Royce, Ltd. v. Short, 10 Tax Cases 59, the Company was taxed in India but not in England because at that time under the English law taxable income was computed on the average of the preceding three years. A claim for refund of tax from the British Exchequer failed because the company had in fact paid no tax to the United Kingdom. Incidentally Rowlatt, J., observed: "We have not heard hitherto in the history of the Income-tax Acts of any such thing as part of an income, and it is painful to reflect that a new chapter of difficulties may be opened". See also Assam Railways and Trading Co., Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 1934 A.C. 445; 12 A.T.C. 123; 18 Tax Cases 509.

In the case of Rolls Royce v. Short, supra certain observations were made by Warrington, L.J., to the effect that having regard to the different modes of assessment in India and in England the profits chargeable in the two countries would seldom be identical and that as a consequence one should look rather to the source than to the exact amount. On the other hand, it was stated in the Assam Railway case, (1935) A.C. 445; 1934 I.T.R. 467 (affirming 1934 I.T.R. 9), that these observations were to be read with reference to the special facts of that case.

In the Assam Railways case, the company had income from tea gardens and also paid interest on debentures. In India a part of income from tea is not taxed, and interest on debentures is deductible from taxable profits. In England on the other hand, these two items are taxable, though the person paying interest can recoup himself by deducting tax when paying interest. The Company claimed relief from the United Kingdom tax in respect of income from tea and the interest on debentures on neither of which it had in fact paid tax in India, and the claim was rejected. The House of Lords declined to refer to the report of the Royal Commission on Income-tax as an aid to the construction of the statute. The ratio decidendi was that 'part' is not the same as 'source', and that it refers to "so many pounds, shillings and pence out of a larger amount" (per Lord Warrington; the observations of Lord Wright are very similar). At the same time, Lord Wright thought that there may be cases in which a reduction in the amount of the assessment in the Dominion may be consistent merely with a difference in computation, so that it may be said that the larger sum taxed in the United Kingdom ought to be regarded as taxed in toto in the Dominion by the smaller assessment, and that the taxpayer in that event has paid tax on the same part of his income taken at the larger figure both in the United Kingdom and the Dominion.

In National Mortgage and Agency Co. of New Zealand, Ltd. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 14 A.T.C. 37, Finlay, J., examined the various judgments in the Assam Railways case, in the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords and opined that the House of Lords had approved not only the conclusion but the reasoning of the Special Commissioners. He held, therefore, that no tax need be refunded by the United Kingdom in respect of debenture interest for which allowance is made in New Zealand but not in the United Kingdom. Under the New Zealand Income-tax Law, while debenture interest is allowed as a deduction from the taxable income the payer is taxed as agent of the payee from whom he can deduct tax. But in this particular case the interest on the debentures was payable in the United Kingdom under an English contract and the Company had no power to deduct the tax. The Company therefore bore the tax finally. It was held that, notwithstanding the inability of the Company to recoup itself, it was not entitled to double income-tax relief since it had paid New Zealand tax as agent and not for itself.

In the Court of Appeal in the same case, 16 A.T.C. 20, L. J. Romer interpreted the Assam case to mean that "Nothing need be regarded except the two statutory incomes, of the business, taking care, of course, to see that neither includes income from any other source. Relief will then be given to the extent of the smaller of the two sums without enquiry into the reasons for the difference between them." That is to say, (a) the incomes must be from the same source; (b) the "statutory" and not actual incomes are to be considered; (c) no enquiry is to be made into the causes of the difference of the figures in the two countries, i.e., into the varying allowances under the two laws; and (d) relief will be given on the smaller of the two statutory incomes. The Court of Appeal allowed the appeal of the Company, i.e., (a) the allowances or deductions under the laws of the two countries should be ignored in determining the comparable incomes so long as they are from the same source and (b) since there can be no agency without a principal, and since in the case the debenture holders were not liable to pay, the debentures being English (not New Zealand) contracts, the Company did not pay tax to New Zealand on these debentures as agents. The House of Lords confirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal, 17 A.T.C. 116; 1938 A.C. 524; 22 Tax Cases 223.

Where under section 18 (3-A) and the other connected provisions of the Indian Act, tax is deducted at source in British India on interest paid to a non-resident and at the same time the taxing authorities in the United Kingdom hold that the interest is not taxable in British India, Double Income-tax relief will not be given in the United Kingdom. This difference of opinion will perhaps remain till the outcome of the appeals to the Privy Council in the Raleigh Investments and Wallace's cases (see notes under sections 4 and 4-A) in which the extra-territorial powers-of the Indian legislature have been questioned.

The following executive instructions have been issued. "In order to determine the 'same part of income' which has suffered tax both in India and in the United Kingdom and on which relief is allowable, the sources of 'incoming profits' included in both the assessments will alone be compared. Income from any source included in the assessment by one country and not by the other will be excluded. No comparison, however, will be necessary between allowances or deductions permissible in one country and those in the other.

The amount of income eligible for relief will then be the amount of the Indian assessment as reduced by such deductions or the amount of the comparable United Kingdom assessment whichever is less."

It is necessary, to emphasise that relief is based upon a comparison (1) of the assessments in both the countries being based on the same period of accounts and (2) of the rates of tax employed in those assessments in the two countries and not upon a comparison of the amounts of tax paid in the two countries.

Carry forward of loss.—If a carry forward of loss is allowed in one country but not in the other the income considered in the assessment of the country in which the loss is allowed (besides being reduced on account of other allowances, if any) will be reduced by the loss allowed as a set-off.

The finally reduced income will be compared with the reduced income of the other country and relief will be allowed on the lower of the two incomes thus compared (Income-tax Manual).

Remittances.—If the difference between the incomes charged in the two countries is due to the fact that remittances only are taxed in British India and the whole income in the United Kingdom, the remittances alone should be regarded as having suffered double taxation (Income-tax Manual).

Exempt blocks of income.—Where a defined part of the income is exempted from tax or falls altogether outside the scope of the tax in either country, for example, interest on tax free Securities in either country, or agricultural income in British India, relief will not be allowed in respect of the tax on such part of the income. It may be, however, that the exempted or untaxed part of the income is not defined or separable but forms an element in the income doubly taxed. For example remittances may be made to the United Kingdom from British Indian income derived from both taxed and tax free sources in British India, and it may not be possible to say how much is derived from each. In such circumstances relief will be allowed on that part of the remittances proportionate to the part of the income in British India that is derived from sources subject to tax. The statutory deduction from total income (e.g., Rs. 25,000 in the case of an individual) allowed in super-tax assessments in British India will not be treated as exempt from super-tax for the purpose of computing the rate of tax suffered or for giving relief (Income-tax Manual).

Joint assessments.—In the case of companies assessed separately, in India but jointly in the United Kingdom, and one of which makes a loss and the other a profit, it will be necessary for the Income-tax Officer to scrutinise the United Kingdom assessment to see how much of the income of the same accounting period from each source has been taxed. Since one company has made a loss which has been allowed in the United Kingdom assessment, it is clear that only part of the Indian profits of the other company which has made profit has paid tax in the United Kingdom. It is only on this part that relief is allowable since that part only has suffered double taxation. (Income-tax Manual).

Shareholder—Position of.—See sections 49-B and 49-C.

Unregistered firm—Partner in.—A partner in an unregistered firm does not, it is submitted, pay income-tax within the meaning of this section. It is the firm that pays the tax, and not the partner, see notes under section 48.

Taxes corresponding to income-tax.—Where a mining corporation paying a royalty was expressly excluded from the operation of an Income-tax Act in a Dominion, a claim that for the purposes of Double Income-tax relief from the United Kingdom, the corporation must be deemed to pay income-tax in the Dominion was rejected, even though the intention of the exclusion of the Corporation from the income-tax may have been the consideration that the royalty was equivalent to the tax, Ashvtil Goldfields, Ltd., v. Merrifield, 13 A.T.C. 641; 19 Tax Cases 52.

10 "Paid by deduction or otherwise".—The object of the addition of these words is to cover cases of dividends, see Enquiry Committee's Report, 1936, Chapter XI, Section 1. See also sections 18 (5) and 49-B. The question had been raised in an English case, Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Dalgety & Co., (1930) A.C. 527, in which the question arose whether 'paid' meant actually paid or effectively borne, and it was decided that it meant the former. The question in that particular case was whether relief should be given (1) on the whole of the profits earned in the Dominions or (2) on the balance of such profits after deducting the excess of the interest paid in the United Kingdom on its debentures over the income arising in the United Kingdom; and it was decided to allow relief on (1), notwithstanding that as a consequence the Company would receive back a sum which would cause the profits distributed as dividends to escape the full burden of United Kingdom tax. As Lord Macmillan said in this case (p. 542) "actual payment, not ultimate incidence, is the criterion both of the right to relief and of the right to deduct". The words "or otherwise" obviously cover cases of payment after direct assessment. The words will also cover cases in which tax is paid by one person on behalf of another or the income of one person is taxed as that of another and cases in which, as laid down in section 18 (5) and section 49-B, tax paid by a Company is deemed to have been paid on behalf of the shareholder. There is little doubt, however, that the words cannot cover cases of tax being "suffered," i.e., being borne indirectly in the sense that the ultimate incidence of the tax is on the person concerned.

Whether Company should pass on double income-tax relief to shareholder.—Ever since the Finance Act of 1916, there has been considerable litigation in the United Kingdom, on the above subject, namely, Rover v. South African Breweries, (1918) 2 Ch. 233; The New Zealand and Australian Land Co. v. Scottish Union and National Insurance Co., 57 Sc.L.R. 15, (1931) A.C. 172; Wakefield v. Whitcaway Laidlaw & Co., 37 T.L.R. 569; Sheldrick v. South African Breweries, (1923) 1 K.B. 173 (C.A.); Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Dalgety & Co., (1930) A.C. 527, and there have been also several amendments in the Statutes from time to time. The principle against double taxation applies only to the payment of tax by the same person in respect of the same income; so, a preference shareholder who receives his full dividend in a foreign company cannot claim any relief on the ground that resident companies of which the foreign company was a shareholder had borne tax, Barnes v. Hutchinson, (1939) 3 A.E.R. 803, (H.L.), overruling (1938) 3 All.E.R. 98.

The position in British India before 1st April, 1939, was obscure, but since that date the position has been made clearer by sections 49-B and 49-C. It should be noted, however, that while section 49-C merely deems the shareholder for the particular purpose of regulating his own relief, to have obtained the relief, obtained in fact by the Company, the actual rights of the different classes of shareholders inter se would depend on their contractual rights. See Purushothamdas Harkisandas v. The Central Indian Spinning, etc., Co., 1 I.T.C. 11; 42 Bom. 579, which, however, was decided under the 1886 Income-tax Act.

Corresponding year.—It is observed from the Report of the Enquiry Committee, 1936, that the intention is that the Central Board of Revenue should frame a rule. The suggested definition is "the United Kingdom year of assessment corresponding to a British Indian tax year is the year for which an assessment is made by reference to the same basic period of accounts as that of the Indian assessment on which relief is claimed."

According to executive instructions, an Indian assessment on which relief is claimed will be compared with the United Kingdom assessment based on the same period of accounts, and where the accounts on which the Indian assessment is based enter into United Kingdom assessments for two different years, the Indian assessment will for the purposes of relief, be divided into two portions relief on each being allowed by reference to the taxation of that particular portion in the United Kingdom.

Examples.—The following are some examples given in the Income-tax Manual illustrating the method to be adopted in calculating relief due under section 49 of the Act. The calculation of the United Kingdom relief is subject to changes which may be made in the rates of tax, personal allowances, etc., granted in that country.

Example 1.—A, a married man with one child, is resident in the United Kingdom; he has a fixed income of Rs. 10,500 from property in India and has no other income; his liability to tax is:—

	In the United Kingdom.			In India.
	Rs.	A.	P.
Assessable income	10,500	0	0	Income tax on Rs. 10,500 at 11.29 pies in the rupee equals Rs 67-3-0
Less personal allowance Rs. 2,400
Deduction for child 800	3,200	0	0
Taxable income	7,300	0	0
Tax on the 1st Rs. 1,800 at 16 pies in the rupee	150	0	0
Tax on balance Rs. 5,500 at 4-4 annas in the rupee	1,512	8	0
*Total tax (before relief in respect of Indian Income-tax)	1662	8	0

* For the purposes of calculating "the appropriate rate of United Kingdom tax" this amount is not to be reduced by any relief granted in respect of any life assurance premium.

The United Kingdom tax (Rs. 1,662-8-0), divided by the taxable income (Rs. 7,300) gives an "appropriate rate of United Kingdom tax" of 3 annas 8 pies. A has paid Indian income-tax in respect of the same income at a rate of 11.29 pies in the rupee, that is, a rate which is less than half the United Kingdom rate and the relief from United Kingdom tax will, therefore, be a sum equal to the Indian rate (11·29 pies) on Rs. 7,300. No further relief will be due in India.

Example 2.—B is a bachelor resident in the United Kingdom with no dependents and has an earned income of £1,000 assessable to United Kingdom income tax. He has no other income and pays income-tax in India in respect of the income in question. His liability to tax is as follows:—

				United Kingdom
Total income	1,000	0	0
Less earned income allowance one-fifth of £1,000	200	0	0
Assessable income	800	0	0
Less personal allowance	100	0	0
Taxable income	700	0	0
Tax on 1st £195 at 1s. 8d.	11	5	0
Tax on balance £565 @ 5.6d	155	7	6
Total tax (before relief in respect of Indian income-tax).				166	12	6

The tax (£166-12-6) divided by the taxable income (£700) gives an "appropriate rate of the United Kingdom tax" of 4s. 9d. or 3·8 annas in the rupee; Indian income-tax is payable on his income (@ exchange 1s. 6d. = Rs. 13,333) at a rate of 13·99 pies in the rupee, so that B is entitled to get relief from the United Kingdom at the rate of 13·99 pies in the rupee (that is, 1s. 5d. in the pound) on £700 and there is no balance of relief to be given in India.

Example 3.—C is a company the whole profits of which are taxed both in the United Kingdom and in India. The Indian rate of tax (including company super-tax) paid by the company is 3 annas and 6 pies in the rupee while the "appropriate rate of United Kingdom tax" for the company is 5s. 6d. in the pound. The company can get relief at the rate of 2/9 in the pound (or 2 annas 2·4 pies in the rupee) in the United Kingdom and, on proof of payment of United Kingdom tax and of the grant of United Kingdom relief, can claim from the income-tax authorities in India the balance of relief, namely, 1 anna 3·6 pies in the rupee. This makes the total rate of relief given in the two countries 3 annas 6 pies so that the aggregate rate of tax paid in the two countries is equal to the United Kingdom rate (5s. 6d. in the pound).

49-A. (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make provision for the granting of relief in respect of income on which has been paid both income-tax (including super-tax) under this Act and Dominion income-tax.

Relief in respect of Indian State and Dominion Income-tax.

(2) for the purposes of this section 'Dominion income-tax' means any income-tax or super-tax charged under any law in force in any Indian State or in any part of His Majesty's Dominions (other than the United Kingdom) where the laws of that State or part provide for relief in respect of tax charged on income both in that State or part and in British India which appears to the Central Board of Revenue to correspond to the relief which may be granted by this section.

History.—This section which was added in 1939, provides for the grant of relief to income taxed in British India and in an Indian State or in a Dominion of His Majesty (other than the United Kingdom). Formerly, such relief was granted by Notification under section 60, and that section cannot be utilised for this purpose hereafter.

Notifications.—It should be noted that relief is granted by notification and not by rules, i.e., the proposals do not need to be previously published for criticism. Arrangements have been made under this section (or section 60 formerly) with the following States or Dominion.

Aden—See Notification No. 18 I.T. dated 21—2—1942
 Ceylon—do. No. 17 I.T. dated 21—2—1942
 Certain African Dominions do. dated 4—1—1941
 Various Indian States do. No. 69. dated 1—9—1939

While the procedure is similar in most of these cases, the basis of relief and the fact of relief under the different notifications, it will be seen, differ. The basis in the case of Indian states however, which have come into the scheme of reciprocal relief is uniform barring Mysore in respect of which there are special arrangements, dating from a long time.

Reciprocity.—This section applies only to cases where the State or Dominion agrees to give relief; otherwise section 49-D will apply.

Appeal.—There is no provision in section 30 for appeals in respect of claims under this section. The respective notifications and orders provide for an appeal.

Relief in respect of Burma however, is regulated by a special Order in Council; and in view of the provisions in it which make that order take the place of section 49, it is considered that an appeal under that order is an appeal in respect of section 49 and therefore falls under section 30 with the consequential rights of further appeal to the Tribunal under section 33 and of a reference to the High Court under section 66.

In the absence of an appeal however under section 30, the assessee or claimant has no right of reference to the High Court under section 66, or even of appeal to the Appellate Tribunal under section 33.

Paid.—The words “whether by deduction or otherwise” occurring in section 49 do not occur in this section, but the absence is immaterial, and the respective notifications incorporate these words.

Which appears to the Central Board of Revenue.—While the Government make the notification it is left to the Central Board of Revenue to decide which State or Dominion tax corresponds to income-tax and super-tax. There is no provision for an appeal against the orders of the Board.

Officers to whom refund applications are to be made.—In the case of residents, it is the same officer as would assess them; in the case of non-residents, the Central Board of Revenue appoints the officer. For these appointments, see notes under section 48 and Appendix.

THE INDIA AND BURMA (INCOME-TAX RELIEF) ORDER 1936.

PART I.

INTRODUCTORY AND GENERAL.

1. This Order may be cited as “The India and Burma (Income-tax Relief) Order, 1936”.
2. The Interpretation Act, 1889, applies for the interpretation of this Order as it applies for the interpretation of an Act of Parliament.
3. Any reference in this Order to, or to any provisions of, the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, shall be construed as a reference to that Act or those provisions as for the time being in force in India, as for the time being in force in Burma, or as for the time being in force both in India and in Burma, as the context and the circumstances may require, or, if that Act or those provisions have been repealed and re-enacted, either with or without modifications, to the re-enacting Act or provisions as in force as aforesaid.
4. In this Order, “Income-tax”, or “tax”, in relation to India or Burma, means income-tax payable in accordance with the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and includes super-tax so payable; and other expressions have, except where the context otherwise requires, the same meanings as in the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.
5. References in this Order to the rate of tax shall—
 - (a) in relation to India or Burma, be construed as references to a rate determined by dividing the amount of income-tax paid in India or Burma, as the case may be, for the year in question (before deduction of any relief granted under section forty-nine of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, or under this Order) by the amount of the income on which tax was charged;
 - (b) in relation to the United Kingdom, mean the appropriate rate of United Kingdom income-tax for the year in question as defined for the purposes of section twenty-seven of the Finance Act, 1920.
6. Any reference in this Order to the lower of two rates shall, where the rates are equal, be construed as a reference to either of those rates and any reference in this Order to the two lowest of three rates, shall, where the three rates are equal, be construed as a reference to any two of them, and where two of the three rates are equal and the third is less, be construed as a reference to the lowest rate and one of the equal rates.

7. This Order shall have effect with respect to the financial year beginning on the date of the commencement of Part III of the India Act and every subsequent financial year:

Provided that if, at any time after the expiration of three years from the commencement of Part III of the India Act, the Governor-General of India gives to the Governor of Burma, or the Governor of Burma gives to the Governor-General of India, notice of his desire that this Order shall cease to operate, the Order shall not have effect with respect to any financial year subsequent to the financial year next following that during which the notice is given.

PART II.

RELIEF IN INDIA.

1. If any person who has paid Indian income-tax for any year on any part of his income proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer that he has paid for that year Burman income-tax, or Burman income-tax and United Kingdom income-tax, in respect of that part of his income, he shall be entitled to a refund of Indian tax calculated on that part of his income at the appropriate rate of relief.

In this paragraph "appropriate rate of relief" means—

(a) in relation to income taxed in India and Burma and not in the United Kingdom, a rate bearing to the Indian rate of tax or the Burman rate of tax, whichever is the lower, the same proportion as the Indian rate of tax bears to the sum of the Indian rate of tax and the Burman rate of tax;

(b) in relation to income taxed in India, Burma and the United Kingdom, a rate bearing to the difference between the total rate at which he was entitled to, and obtained, relief in the United Kingdom under section twenty-seven of the Finance Act, 1920, in respect of that income, and the sum of the two lowest of the three rates of tax the same proportion as the Indian rate of tax bears to the sum of the Indian rate of tax and the Burman rate of tax.

2. No refund of tax shall be payable in India under section forty-nine of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, in respect of any income which is taxed under that Act in Burma, and if any such refund is made it shall be repaid.

3. Any sums repayable under the last foregoing paragraph and any sums overpaid by way of refund under this Part of this Order shall be recoverable as if they were arrears of income-tax.

4. No income which an assessee proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer to have been charged in his hands to income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for any year preceding the commencement of Part III of the India Act shall be included in India in the assessment of his income for any subsequent year.

5. In the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, (other than the provisions of section forty-nine thereof)—

(a) any reference to that Act or to section forty-nine thereof shall be construed as including a reference to this Part of this Order;

- (b) any reference to section twenty-seven of the Finance Act, 1920, shall be construed as including a reference to Part III of this Order;
- (c) any reference to the United Kingdom in relation to relief under the said section twenty-seven, or in relation to refunds under the said section forty-nine shall be construed as including a reference to Burma in relation to refunds under Part III of this Order or this Part of this Order, as the case may require.

PART III.

RELIEF IN BURMA.

1. If any person who has paid Burman income-tax for any year on any part of his income proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer that he has paid for that year Indian income-tax or Indian income-tax and United Kingdom income-tax, in respect of that part of his income, he shall be entitled to a refund of Burman tax calculated on that part of his income at the appropriate rate of relief.

In this paragraph "appropriate rate of relief" means—

- (a) in relation to income taxed in Burma and India and not in the United Kingdom, a rate bearing to the Burman rate of tax or the Indian rate of tax, whichever is the lower, the same proportion as the Burman rate of tax bears to the sum of the Burman rate of tax and the Indian rate of tax;
- (b) in relation to income taxed in Burma, India and the United Kingdom, a rate bearing to the difference between the total rate at which he was entitled to and obtained, relief in the United Kingdom under section twenty-seven of the Finance Act, 1920, in respect of that income, and the sum of the two lowest of the three rates of tax the same proportion as the Burman rate of tax bears to the sum of the Burman rate of tax and the Indian rate of tax.

2. No refund of tax shall be payable in Burma under section forty-nine of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, in respect of any income which is taxed under that Act in India, and if any such refund is made it shall be repaid.

3. Any sums repayable under the last foregoing paragraph and any sums overpaid by way of refund under this Part of this Order shall be recoverable as if they were arrears of income-tax.

4. No income which an assessee proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer to have been charged in his hands to income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for any year preceding the commencement of the Burma Act, shall be included in Burma in the assessment of his income for any subsequent year.

5. In the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, (other than the provisions of section forty-nine thereof)—

- (a) any reference to that Act or to section forty-nine thereof shall be construed as including a reference to this Part of this Order;

- (b) any reference to section twenty-seven of the Finance Act, 1920, shall be construed as including a reference to Part II of this Order;
- (c) any reference to the United Kingdom, in relation to relief under the said section twenty-seven or in relation to a refund under the said section forty-nine, shall be construed as including a reference to India in relation to refunds under Part II of this Order,
- or this Part of this Order, as the case may require. (Note.—The forms prescribed under this order are in Rules 40-A and 40-B.).

ADEN.

(Notification No. 18, Income-tax, dated the 21st February, 1942).

In exercise of the powers conferred by section 49-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), the Central Government is pleased to make the following rules for the granting of relief in respect of income on which tax has been paid both in British India and in Aden, namely:—

1. These rules may be cited as the Income-tax (Double Taxation Relief), (Aden) Rules, 1942.

2. In these rules:—

- (a) The expression "Aden Income-tax" means income-tax and super-tax charged for any year in accordance with the provisions of the Aden Income-tax Ordinance, 1937.
- (b) The expression "Aden rate of tax" means the amount of Aden income-tax divided by the amount of the income on which it was charged.
- (c) The expression "Indian income-tax" means income-tax and super-tax chargeable in accordance with provisions of any law in force in British India.
- (d) The expression "Indian rate of tax" means the rate determined by dividing the amount of income-tax paid in British India for the year in question by the amount of income on which tax was charged.
- (e) The reference to the lower of the two rates shall, where the rates are equal, be construed as a reference to either of those two rates.

3. If any person who has paid by deduction under section 18 or otherwise Indian Income-tax for any year on any part of his income proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer that he has paid for that year Aden income-tax in respect of that part of his income he shall be entitled to the refund of Indian Income-tax calculated on that part of his income at a rate bearing to the Indian rate of tax or the Aden rate of tax whichever is the lower, the same proportion as the Indian rate of tax bears to the sum of the Indian rate of tax and the Aden rate of tax.

4. (1) The application for refund of income-tax under these rules will be made as follows:—

- (i) If the applicant is resident in British India, to the Income-tax Officer of the district in which the applicant is chargeable directly to income-tax or if he is not chargeable directly, to the Income-tax Officer of the district in which the applicant ordinarily resides;

- (ii) if the applicant is resident outside British India to the Income-tax Officer appointed by the Central Board of Revenue.
- (2) Such application may be presented by the applicant in person or by a duly authorised agent or may be sent by post, and shall be in form I appended to these rules—

CEYLON.

Notification No 17, Income-tax, dated the 21st February, 1942.

In exercise of the powers conferred by section 49-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), the Central Government is pleased to make the following rules for the granting of relief in respect of income on which tax has been paid both in British India and in Ceylon, namely:—

1. These rules may be cited as the Income-tax (Double Taxation Relief) (Ceylon), Rules 1942.

2. In these rules—

(a) the expression "Ceylon tax" has the meaning assigned to it in section 45 (4) (b) of the Ceylon Income-tax Ordinance, 1932 (II of 1932),

(b) the expression "Indian Income-tax" has the meaning assigned to it in clause (a) of section 49 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922).

3. If any person, who has paid by deduction under section 18 or otherwise Indian Income-tax for any year on any part of his income, proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer that he has paid Ceylon tax for the corresponding year in Ceylon on the same part of his income he shall be entitled to the refund of a sum equal to half the Ceylon tax after deducting therefrom any relief due under sub-section (2) of section 45 of the Ceylon Income-tax Ordinance, 1932, calculated on that part of his income on which relief is admissible under the Ceylon Income-tax Law, or to

*The form of appeal and the form of verification appended thereto shall be signed—

- (a) in the case of an individual by the individual himself.
- (b) in the case of a Hindu undivided family by the Manager or Karta.
- (c) in the case of a company or local authority by the principal officer;
- (d) in the case of a firm, by a partner, and
- (e) in the case of any other association, by a member of the association.

half the Indian Income-tax on the same part of his income, whichever is less: Provided that where any person is entitled to further relief in British India on that part of his income on which relief is admissible under the Ceylon Income-tax Law on account of its having been also taxed in some other country besides Ceylon, the relief in respect of the Ceylon tax shall not exceed the difference between half the Indian Income-tax and such further relief as may have been granted in British India owing to that part of his income having been taxed in some other country besides Ceylon.

4. (1) The application for refund of income-tax under these rules shall be made as follows:—

(i) If the applicant is resident in British India, to the Income-tax Officer of the district in which the applicant is chargeable directly to income-tax or if he is not chargeable directly to income-tax to the Income-tax Officer of the district in which the applicant ordinarily resides, or

(ii) If the applicant is resident outside British India to the Income-tax Officer appointed by the Central Board of Revenue.

(2) Such application may be presented by the applicant in person or by a duly authorized agent or may be sent by post, and shall be in Form I appended to these rules.

CEYLON.

A—TAX.

As regards Ceylon, according to executive instructions, the following points have to be borne in mind in regard to this grant of relief under this section.

(1) Under section 45 (4) (b) (1) of the Ceylon Income-tax Ordinance, "Ceylon Tax" does not include, for purposes of relief either in India or Ceylon, the additional percentage charged on non-resident companies under section 20 (6) of the Ordinance.

(2) "Ceylon Tax" does not include, for purposes of relief either in British India or Ceylon, tax on interest or other charges on income included in the Ceylon assessment [Ordinance section 45 (4) (b) (ii)].

* The form of appeal and the form of verification appended thereto shall be signed—

(a) in the case of an individual by the individual himself;

(b) in the case of a Hindu undivided family by the Manager or Karta;

(c) in the case of a company or local authority by the principal officer;

(d) in the case of a firm by a partner and

(e) in the case of any other association, by a member of the association.

(3) "Indian Tax" includes personal Super-Tax, both in India and Ceylon.

(4) "Indian Tax" in India includes Company Super-Tax as regards companies themselves, but not as regards shareholders.

(5) Relief is given in both countries of half the smaller tax. The amounts of tax and not the rates of tax are considered.

B.—"PART OF HIS INCOME" (INDIA). "HIS INCOME FROM ANY SOURCE" (CEYLON).

(1) As the British Indian Notification No. 14 (Finance Department—Central Revenues), dated the 2nd April, 1932, is drafted, relief will be allowed in British India "on that part of the income on which relief is admissible under the Ceylon Income-tax law". The practical result of this is that the expressions "part of his income" in the Indian Notification, and "his income from any source" in the Ceylon Ordinance, refer to the same thing, and the British Indian relief is automatically regulated by the Ceylon relief.

The British Indian and Ceylon authorities alike ignore in granting relief all differences between the computation of the income in the two countries due to—

- (a) Certain expenses being allowed in one country and not in the other.
- (b) The allowances for depreciation being higher in one country than in the other.
- (c) Depreciation being carried forward in one country and not in the other.
- (d) Losses being carried forward in one country and not in the other.
- (e) The fact that assessment is made on the "income arising" in one country and on "remittances" in the other.
- (f) The fact that the assessments are based on different accounting periods in the two countries.
- (g) Where a Tea Estate is taxed on 40 per cent. of its profits in British India and on the whole profits in Ceylon, there will be only one source of income from the Ceylon point of view and the relief allowed in each country will be half the lower amount of tax: ignoring this difference in the basis of assessment.

(2) No relief can be given unless tax is paid for the same year in each country on the source in question, e.g., in the first year of a business, tax will be levied on its profits in Ceylon but not in British India; in the year after a business ceases, its profits will be liable to tax in British India but not in Ceylon. No relief can be given in these cases.

C.—"ANY PERSON".

(1) In Ceylon, the income of married women is treated as that of their husbands. If the wife is separately assessed in British India on the same income she will be entitled to relief in British India.

(2) Partnership.—Ceylon charges tax on individual partners and not on partnerships at all. No difficulty will arise in British India in regard to registered firms. If partners of an unregistered firm are assessed in Ceylon and the firm is assessed in India, no relief will be due either to the partners or to the firm except to the extent that the partners pay super-tax in British India on their shares from the firm.

SHAREHOLDERS.

(1) If a resident in India has dividends from a Company in Ceylon from which Ceylon tax is deducted at source and is assessed in India on those dividends, he will be entitled to relief in India.

(2) If a resident in Ceylon is a shareholder in an Indian Company and is taxed in Ceylon on dividends which he receives from the Company, Ceylon will regard him as having suffered Indian tax and he will be entitled to relief in India.

Relief in British India in respect of income taxed in British India and Aden.—The following procedure has been agreed upon between the Government of India and the Government of Aden and should be followed for the grant of relief in respect of double taxation in India and in Aden:—

(i) Any assessee who is liable to tax in both countries and whose head office is in British India may submit in British India with his British Indian return of income a copy of his Aden return of income, subject to his clearly distinguishing in the former any income which he claims to be taxable in British India only and in the latter any which he claims to be taxable in Aden only. The Income-tax authorities in Aden will then be informed that this has been done and will ordinarily postpone further assessment enquiry until a further reference is made by the Income-tax authorities in British India. The British Indian Income-tax Officer will examine the accounts relating to all the income and in his assessment order will distinguish between (i) what he holds to be income taxable only in British India and (ii) income taxable in both countries. He will then issue his British Indian demand and forward to the Government of Aden a copy of his assessment order, accompanied by a note regarding his examination of the accounts relating to (iii) income taxable in Aden only, if any. The Aden Income-tax Officer then will, if satisfied, issue his assessment order and demand on the basis of (ii) and (iii) as reported; if not satisfied he will make further enquiries. In each country the original demand will, for form's sake, be for the total tax payable in that country but with a note to the effect that the amount in excess of.....being the sum of the estimated share of that country in the tax at the higher rate on (ii) and of the tax on (i) or (iii) as the case may be, need not be paid pending the completion of discussions between the Income-tax departments of the two countries as to the final amount each is to receive after setting off double income-tax relief.

(ii) The above procedure will, it is understood, be adopted mutatis mutandis by the Aden Income-tax authorities in respect of assessee who are liable to tax in both countries and whose head office is in Aden.

OTHER DOMINIONS.

Notification No. 1, Dated the 4th January, 1941, of the Finance Department (Central Revenues).

1. (1) These rules may be cited as the Income-tax (Double Taxation Relief) (Dominions) Rules, 1939.

(2) They extend to the whole of British India including Berar; and every reference therein to British India shall be construed as including a reference to Berar.

2. In these rules,—

- (a) "Dominion" means any of the territories specified in the first column of the Schedule annexed to these rules,
- (b) the expression "Dominion Income-tax" means tax charged for any year in accordance with the provisions of the dominion enactment specified in the second column of the said Schedule,
- (c) the expression 'Dominion rate of tax' has the meaning assigned to it in the section of the retrospective dominion enactment specified in the third column of the said Schedule,
- (d) the expressions 'Indian Income-tax' and 'Indian rate of tax' have the same meaning as in clauses (a), and (b), respectively of sub-section (2) of section 49 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

3. If any person who has paid by deduction under section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 or otherwise Indian income-tax for any year on any part of his income proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer that he has paid by deduction or otherwise Dominion Income-tax for that year in respect of the same part of his income, he shall be entitled to a refund of a sum calculated on that part of his income at a rate to be determined as follows:—

(i) If he is resident in British India the rate at which refund is to be given shall be—

- (a) the dominion rate of tax when the rate does not exceed half of the Indian rate of tax, and
- (b) half the Indian rate of tax, in any other case.

(ii) If he is not resident in British India the rate at which refund is to be given shall be—

- (a) half of the dominion rate of tax when the rate does not exceed the Indian rate of tax, and
- (b) in any other case, the amount by which the Indian rate of tax exceeds half of the Dominion rate of tax.

Provided that in no case shall the rate at which such refund is calculated exceed half the Indian rate of tax appropriate to the income of the person entitled to relief or be greater than the excess of the lower of the Indian and the dominion rate of tax over the rate at which relief is given in the dominion.

4. The application for refund of income-tax under these rules shall be made as follows:—

(1) If the applicant is resident in British India, to the Income-tax Officer of the district in which the applicant is chargeable directly to income-tax or if he is not chargeable directly to the Income-tax Officer of the district in which the applicant ordinarily resides.

(2) If the applicant is resident outside British India, to the Income-tax Officer appointed by the Central Board of Revenue.

(3) Such application may be presented by the applicant in person or by a duly authorised agent or may be sent by post, and shall as far as circumstances permit be in Form I appended to these rules.

5. No claim to any refund of Indian Income-tax or super-tax under these rules shall be allowed unless it is made within four years from the last day of the financial year commencing next after the expiry of the previous year in which the income arose, accrued or was received or was deemed to have arisen, accrued or been received or was brought into British India.

Provided that where the claim is to a refund of Income-tax or super-tax paid prior to the 1st April, 1939, the claim shall not be allowed unless it is made within one year from the last day of the year in which such tax or the Dominion Income-tax was recovered whichever is later.

6. An applicant for refund under these rules may appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax from any order of the Income-tax Officer disallowing the claim for refund either wholly or in part.

7. The appeal shall be presented within thirty days of the date on which the order of the Income-tax Officer was communicated to the applicant, and shall, as far as circumstances permit, be in Form II appended to these rules.

INDIAN STATES.

Notification No. 69, 16th September, 1939.

1. These rules may be cited as the Income-tax (Double Taxation Relief) (Indian States) Rules, 1939.

2. In these rules,—

- (a) the expressions "Indian income-tax" and "Indian rate of tax" have the same meanings as in clauses (a) and (b) respectively of sub-section (2) of section 49 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922;
- (b) "State" means any of the Indian States specified in the Schedule to these Rules;
- (c) the expression "State income-tax" means income-tax and super-tax charged in accordance with the provisions of the law relating to income-tax for the time being in force in the State; and
- (d) the expression "State rate of tax" means the amount of State income-tax divided by the amount of the larger of the two

* The form of appeal and the form of verification appended thereto shall be signed—

- (a) in the case of an individual by the individual himself;
- (b) in the case of a Hindu undivided family by the Manager or Karta;
- (c) in the case of a company or local authority by the principal officer;
- (d) in the case of a firm by a partner and
- (e) in the case of any other association, by a member of the association.

incomes on which income-tax and super-tax respectively have been charged by the State.

- (e) the expression "corresponding year" in relation to a year of assessment in British India means the year for the purposes of State income-tax which by order of the Central Board of Revenue shall be demand to correspond with such year of assessment in British India;
- (f) the reference to the lower of the two rates shall, where the rates are equal, be construed as a reference to either of those two rates.

3. If any person who has paid by deduction under section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, or otherwise, Indian income-tax for any year on any part of his income proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer that he has paid for the corresponding year by deduction or otherwise State income-tax in respect of that part of his income, he shall be entitled to the refund of Indian income-tax calculated on that part of his income at a rate bearing to the Indian rate of tax or the State rate of tax whichever is the lower, the same proportion as the Indian rate of tax bears to the sum of the Indian rate of tax and the State rate of tax.

Provided that where in respect of that part of the income relief has already been obtained under this rule on account of taxation in another State or further relief is admissible in British India on account of taxation in the United Kingdom or Ceylon, the refund should be so regulated that together with such other relief, the aggregate relief shall not exceed half the Indian rate of tax.

4. (1) The application for refund of income-tax under these rules shall be made as follows:—

- (i) if the applicant is resident in British India, to the Income-tax Officer of the district in which the applicant is chargeable directly to income-tax, or, if he is not chargeable directly to the Income-tax Officer of the district in which he ordinarily resides,
- (ii) if the applicant is resident outside British India to the Income-tax Officer appointed by the Central Board of Revenue.

(2) Such application may be presented by the applicant in person or by a duly authorized agent or may be sent by post, and shall be in Form I appended to these Rules.

5. No claim to any refund of Indian income-tax or super-tax under these rules shall be allowed unless it is made within four years from the last day of the financial year commencing next after the expiry of the previous year in which the income arose, accrued or was received or was deemed to have arisen, accrued or been received or was brought into British India:

Provided that where the claim is to a refund of income-tax or super-tax paid prior to the 1st April, 1939, the claim shall not be allowed unless it is made within one year from the last day of the year in which such tax or the State income-tax was recovered, whichever is later.

6. An applicant for refund under these rules may appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax from any order of the Income-tax Officer disallowing the claim for refund either wholly or in part:

7. The appeal shall be presented within thirty days of the date on which the order of the Income-tax Officer was communicated to the applicant, and shall be in Form II appended to these Rules.

MYSORE.

As regards Mysore, there are special arrangements dating from a long-time as given below :

(1) Salaries and pensions.—Servants of the Government of India living in Mysore are allowed on their salaries or pensions rebate from the Indian income-tax of an amount equal to the Mysore tax, while Mysore darbar servants living in British India pay the Indian income-tax only and are not liable to pay any tax to the Mysore darbar on their salaries or pensions.

(2) Interest on securities.—Interest on the Mysore darbar securities received or paid in British India is exempt from the payment of Indian income-tax; and similarly interest on securities of the Government of India received or paid in Mysore is exempt from the Mysore tax.

(3) Businesses.—In the case of businesses whose headquarters are in British India but which have branches in Mysore or carry on business in Mysore, a deduction is allowed from the Indian income-tax payable on the profits of such businesses of the amounts of Mysore income-tax that would be payable on such portion of the same profits as appears to the Income-tax Officer in British India to be due to transactions in Mysore. Businesses with headquarters in Mysore which have branches or dealings in British India are assessed by the Income-tax authorities in British India to the full amount of Indian income-tax due on the profits realised in British India only, while the Mysore Income-tax authorities in computing the profits or gains of all such businesses for purposes of Mysore tax allow a deduction of the amount of profits or gains appearing to the assessing officer to be due to transactions in British India.

(4) Dividends.—The Government within whose jurisdiction tax is charged on the profits out of which a dividend is paid, retains the tax on the part of those profits represented by the dividends and allows such refund on the dividends as may be due under the provisions of its Income-tax law, corresponding to section 48 of the Indian Income-tax Act, while the Government in whose jurisdiction the dividend is received includes it in the "total income" of the assessee concerned for purposes of fixing the rate of, and the liability to tax but waives its claim to levy tax in respect of the dividend.

(5) Income from profession or vocation.—As regards income derived from the practice of a profession or vocation, the Government within whose jurisdiction it arises or accrues taxes it, while the Government in whose jurisdiction it is received includes it in the "total income" of the assessee for purposes of determining liability to and the rate of, tax provided that (i) the income earned in Mysore by a resident in British India or in British India by a resident in Mysore is charged to tax in British India or Mysore, as the case may be, if it has not already been or will not be, charged to tax in Mysore or British India on the ground for example that in either area the income is below the taxable limit; (ii) in cases where such professional earnings have been, or will be, taxed in Mysore or British India, they shall be taken into account for the calculation of "total income" in British India or Mysore whether received in British India or Mysore.

49-B Where any dividend has been paid, credited or distributed or is deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed to any of the persons specified in section 3, who is a shareholder of a Company which is assessed to income-tax in British India or elsewhere, such person shall be deemed in respect of such dividend himself to have paid income-tax (exclusive of super-tax) at the rate applicable to the total income of a Company for the financial year in which the dividend has been paid, credited or distributed or is deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed, on so much of the dividend as bears to the whole of the same proportion as the amount of income on which Company is liable to pay income-tax bears to the whole income of the company.

History.—This section, introduced in 1939, was redrafted in 1941 in order to make its intention clear. Cf. Explanation (3) to sub-section (1) of section 4 and sub-section (2) of section 16. To a certain extent this section overlaps and repeats sub-section (5) of section 18.

Deemed.—See definition of 'dividend' in section 2 (6-A); and also section 23-A.

Grossing up.—If r is the full rate of company income-tax in pies per rupee and x the percentage of the Company's profits liable to tax, the gross dividend for every unit of dividend will be $\frac{1}{1 - \left(\frac{x}{100} \times \frac{r}{100} \right)}$

Exclusive of super-tax.—These words should be noted.

Object.—Sections 49-B and 49-C together are intended to provide against the grant of excessive relief and for the recovery of such relief when given.

Amount of income on which the Company is liable to pay Income-tax.—The words used are 'amount' not 'part' of income as in section 49. See in particular, Assam Railways case, (1934) A.C. 445; 1934 I.T.R. 467 (affirming 1934 I.T.R. 9) referred to under that section.

Applies to all cases.—The section applies to all cases whether falling under section 48, 49 or 49-A; and any notification issued under section 49-A must be in consonance with section 49-B.

49-C. (1) Where any dividend is paid, credited or distributed or is deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed to a shareholder of a company which has obtained the relief referred to in section 49 or granted under section 49-A or under the India and Burma (Income-tax Relief) Order, 1936, the shareholder shall be deemed in respect of such dividend himself to have obtained such relief at the rate at which such relief has been granted, in respect of income-tax only, to the company for the financial year preceding the year in which the dividend was paid, credited or distributed or is deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed.

Relief granted to a company to be deemed relief granted to shareholder.

(2) If the rate at which a shareholder is deemed under sub-section (1) to have obtained relief exceeds the rate at which he would have been entitled to relief had such relief been given direct to him by or under the said sections or order, any excess shall be recovered from him either as an addition to the tax payable by him on any assessment made on him under section 23 or section 34 or by setting it off against any relief due to him under section 48.

History.—This section was added in 1939 and altered in 1941, along with section 49-B.

Sub-section (1).—This removes a defect in the Act under which it was possible for a shareholder to get excessive relief. The Burma (Income-tax Relief) Order has been set out in the notes under section 49-A.

Income-tax only—i.e., not in respect of super-tax. The separation of the relief obtained by a company into parts representing income-tax and company super-tax respectively been made by executive orders. The Income-tax Enquiry Committee, 1936, suggested that 'as a practical measure the total rate of relief allowed to a company shall be divided between income-tax and company super-tax in the proportions that the rates of these taxes paid by the company bear one to the other before any relief is granted'. See Chapter XI, section 5 of the Committee's report and the illustrative examples given therein.

Illustration.—The combined effect of this section and of sections 16 (2) and 49-B is illustrated as below:—

Suppose 30 per cent. of the income of a company has been charged to income-tax (Company super-tax has to be ignored for this purpose) at 30 pies per rupee and 70 per cent. of its income is derived from tax-free securities, and suppose a shareholder of the company gets a dividend of Rs. 12,000 (net) from the company. If the company has not received, and is not entitled to receive, any double taxation relief, the amount of the dividend when grossed up according to the formula referred to in the notes on section 49-B will be $\text{Rs. } 12,000 \times \frac{32}{32 - (5 \times \frac{30}{100})} = \text{Rs. } 12,590$ of which Rs. 3,777 (representing 30 per cent.) has suffered income-tax on behalf of the shareholder at 30 pies per rupee, while the balance of Rs. 8,813 has not suffered any income-tax.

Supposing next that the company has obtained double taxation relief at 15 pies per rupee on the portion of the income charged to income-tax, the position of the shareholder (assuming he has no other income) will be as shown below:—

	Rs.
Total income	12,590
Income-tax suffered by the company in respect of the profits represented by this dividend	590	(excluding fractions).
Double Income-tax Relief in respect of Income-tax (not Super-tax) obtained by the company..	295	" "
Net Income-tax suffered by the company	295	" "

S. 49-E] REFUNDS TO ESTATE OF DECEASED PERSONS. 1079

Income-tax payable by the shareholder at the rate of 13.39 pies per rupee on 30 per cent. of Rs. 12,590, i. e., on Rs. 3,777	Rs.	263
Double income-tax relief obtainable at half the effective rate of the shareholder ..		131
Net tax payable by the shareholder ..		132
Refund due to the shareholder 295-132 ..		163

(in round figure).

Recovery of excessive relief.—Sub-section (2) gives powers to the Revenue to recover excessive relief. The limitation of time is obviously the same as in respect of assessments under section 34 or of refunds under section 48. If, for any reason, no assessment is being made under section 23 or section 34, it would not be open to the Income-tax Officer to recover the excess relief. Section 34 clearly authorises the Income-tax Officer to make an additional assessment in cases of excessive relief, but sub-section (2) of section 49-C with its reference to "addition to tax payable" under 'any' assessment made under section 34 reads as though the Income-tax Officer cannot make an ad hoc assessment under section 34 solely to recover the excessive relief. The clear terms of section 34 cannot, however, be reduced to a nullity by the bad drafting of section 49-C.

49-D. If any person who has paid by deduction or otherwise Indian Income-tax for any year in Relief in respect of tax charged in country not providing for relief in respect of British Indian Income-tax.

respect of any income arising without British India in a country the laws of which do not provide for any relief in respect of income-tax charged in British India proves that he has paid income-tax by deduction or otherwise under the laws of the said country in respect of the same income, he shall be entitled to the deduction from the Indian Income-tax payable of a sum equal to one-half of such Indian income-tax or to one-half of such tax payable in the said country, whichever is the less.

Explanation.—The expression 'Indian income-tax' in this Section means income-tax and super-tax charged in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

History.—This section was added in 1939, and the explanation in 1941.

'Country.'—The word would seem to cover any State, whether British or Foreign including such Indian States, Colonies and Dominions as are not covered by section 49-A.

By deduction or otherwise.—See notes under section 49.

Laws.—Will presumably include executive orders.

The same income.—not the same part of income as in section 49 but the general trend of the principles in the Assam Railways case, (1934) A.C. 445; 1934 I.T.R. 467 and other cases will probably apply.

49-E. Where under any of the provisions of this Act, a refund is found to be due to any person, the Income-tax Officer, Appellate Assistant Commissioner or Commissioner, as the case may be, may, in lieu of payment of the refund, set off the amount to be refunded, or any part of that amount against the tax, if any, remaining payable by the person to whom the refund is due.

Power to set off amount of refunds against tax remaining payable.

History.—This section was inserted in 1933. It merely regularised departmental practice. There has been an omission to provide for a similar power for the Appellate Tribunal. If the omission is deliberate on the ground that the Tribunal is not concerned with the collection of tax, so is the Appellate Assistant Commissioner.

Limitation.—The words “remaining payable by” do not mean “legally recoverable from”; and where proceedings under section 46 are barred by limitation under section 46 (7) it is open to the Income-tax Officer under section 49-E to set off arrears of income-tax against refunds due. Inder Chand v. Secretary of State, 1941 I.T.R. 613 (Patna).

49-F. Where through death, incapacity, bankruptcy, liquidation or other cause, a person who would but for such cause have been entitled to a refund under any of the provisions of this Act, or to make a claim under section 48 or 49, is unable to receive such refund or to make such claim his executor, administrator or other legal representative, or the trustee or receiver, as the case may be; shall be entitled to receive such refund or to make such claim for the benefit of such person or his estate.

Power of representative of deceased person or person disabled to make claim on his behalf.

Refund in special cases.—Prior to 1933, the Act did not provide for a refund where through death, incapacity, bankruptcy, liquidation or other cause a person could not receive it or claim it. There is an obvious omission to provide for cases under section 49-A and 49-D.

As regards the right of appeal against an order of an Income-tax Officer refusing to grant the refund, see section 30.

Sections 49-E and 49-F render obsolete almost all the previous decisions one of the latest of which was Zenab Kaderbhoi v. Secretary of State, 1936 I.T.R. 389 (Sind) about the rights and liabilities of the representatives of deceased and disabled persons in regard to refund of income-tax.

Death, etc.—See notes under section 24-B. Section 49-F, it should be noted, deals with claims which the deceased, etc., could have made and not to claims in respect of income which accrued or arose after death, incapacity, etc. In respect of such claims, the executor or trustee himself is eligible under sections 3, 40 and 41 read with section 48 et seq.

50. No claim to any refund of income-tax or super-tax under this Chapter shall be allowed, unless it is made within four years from the last day of the financial year commencing next after the expiry of the previous year in which the income arose, accrued or was received or was deemed to have arisen, accrued or been received or was brought into British India:

Provided that where the claim is to a refund of income-tax or super-tax paid prior to the commencement of the Indian Limitation of claims for refund.

Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, the claim shall not be allowed unless it is made within one year from the last day of the year in which the tax was recovered or before the last day of the financial year commencing after the expiry of the previous year as defined in clause (11) of section 2 in which the income arose on which the tax was recovered, whichever period may expire later :

Provided further that a claim to refund under section 49 of tax paid prior to the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, may be admitted after the period of limitation herein prescribed, when the applicant satisfies the Commissioner, or an Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax specially empowered in this behalf by the Central Board of Revenue, that he had sufficient cause for not making the claim within such period.

History.—The provision dates from 1916 and has been amended successively in 1918, 1930 and 1939. In 1939, the time limit was extended to four years along with transitional provisions in regard to anterior claims.

Limitation—How applied.—The limitation in this section applies only to the date of the claim by the assessee. Once the claim has been admitted, it is not necessary that the refund should actually be paid within the period fixed under this section. A claim would be in order if presented on the very last day on which the year prescribed in this section expired.

It should be noted that whereas in respect of tax paid before 1st April, 1939, limitation is to be reckoned from the date of recovery of tax, it is reckoned for tax paid after that date with reference to the date of origin of the income.

Recovered—Meaning of.—It was argued in Commissioner of Income-tax v. Binny & Co., 2 I.T.C. 466, that 'recovered' meant a taking back of what had been given, and that consequently the word referred, in a claim under section 49, to the repayment of the tax in the United Kingdom. This interpretation was not accepted, since a similar meaning would make no sense in reference to a claim under section 48 to which section 50 equally applied. 'Recovered' is used in this section merely as meaning 'received by Government.' In other sections also it is used in senses not implying any taking back of what has been given. See, for example, sections 18, 41 and 44-A.

Dividends of companies.—The question, when tax is recovered in respect of dividends from companies was raised in Amratlal Gandhi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 48 in which the Bombay High Court ruled that tax is 'recovered' when the dividend is declared.

In Dhanbai Dadabai Kanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 76 the same High Court held that 'the year in which tax was recovered' means the financial year in respect of assessee's not maintaining accounts or those maintaining them by the financial year. As regards others, the Court left the question open. The principle of this decision partly appears in the first proviso.

Alternative periods of limitation.—In the first proviso, the words “the year” which are used along with the words ‘financial year’ in the same section evidently refer to the calendar year. Cf. section 3 (59) of the General Clauses Act X of 1897. The alternative periods of limitation therefore are (a) one year from the end of the calendar year in which the tax was recovered, and (b) the last day of the financial year commencing after the expiry of the previous year, i.e., the accounting year in which the income arose on which the tax was recovered.

If the person claiming relief has been assessed in British India the period of limitation for the purpose of section 50 in respect of tax paid before 1st April, 1939 will run from the date of recovery of tax after the assessment notwithstanding the fact that a part of the income had been taxed at source on an earlier date. But if the person has not been assessed and his entire income had been taxed at source, the period would run from the date of taxation at source or of payment of dividend. In respect of tax paid after 1st April, 1939, limitation is reckoned with reference to the date of origin of the income and not with reference to the date of recovery of tax. The above remarks apply to relief under all the sections in this chapter.

Provisional claims.—See notes under section 49. Under departmental instructions, in view of the delay in obtaining the necessary documents, provisional claims are allowed to be made within the due date, the evidence being produced afterwards.

Second Proviso.—The proviso was inserted in order to meet cases of hardship which were formerly dealt with under executive orders. The Madras High Court drew attention to the need for this amendment when dealing with Commissioner of Income-tax v. Binny & Co., 47 Mad. 837; 3 I.T.C. 466. The Select Committee which considered Amending Act XXII of 1930 recommended that the Assistant Commissioner in outlying areas like Sind should be specially empowered to act under this proviso so as to reduce delay in the disposal of claims.

Though it may be impossible for an assessee to ascertain whether or not he is entitled to a refund (under section 48) until an assessment has been made upon him (but, he is supposed to know his own income?), the Court has no power to extend the period of limitation laid down in this section, Adam Haji Dawood & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1936 I.T.R. 100.

Double Income-tax relief—Supplementary assessments.—Section 49 does not distinguish between original assessments and supplementary assessments under section 34. In the absence of such a distinction, an assessee is, it would appear, not deprived of relief under section 49 if, otherwise, supplementary assessment gives him a title to relief. The period of limitation would be that laid down in the main part of the section or that in the provisos according as the claim, relates to tax paid before or after 1st April, 1939.

CHAPTER VIII.

OFFENCES AND PENALTIES.

Failure to make payments or deliver returns or statements or allow inspection.

51. If a person fails without reasonable cause or excuse—

(a) to deduct and pay any tax as required by section 18 or under sub-section (5) of section 46 :

(b) to furnish a certificate required by sub-section (9) of section 18 or by section 20 to be furnished ;

(c) to furnish in due time any of the returns mentioned in section 19-A, section 20-A, section 21, sub-section (2) of section 22, or section 38 ;

(d) to produce, or cause to be produced, on or before the date mentioned in any notice under sub-section (4) of section 22, such accounts and documents as are referred to in the notice ;

(e) to grant inspection or allow copies to be taken in accordance with the provisions of section 39 ;

he shall, on conviction before a Magistrate, be punishable with fine which may extend to ten rupees for every day during which the default continues.

History.—In the 1886 Act there was a provision enabling the Commissioner of the Division to remit wholly or in part any fine imposed under the corresponding section. Clause (b) was introduced in 1922. The reference to section 19-A was inserted in 1928 and that to section 20-A in 1933, when those sections were inserted in the Act.

As a consequence of the amendment of section 22 in 1939 making it obligatory for assesses to submit returns suo motu, section 51 was amended so as to attract it only to failure to submit a return when called for by the Income-tax Officer and not to failure to submit a return suo motu.

Reasonable cause.—As to the meaning of 'reasonable cause or excuse', compare the notes under section 27. It is for the Magistrate to decide whether there has been 'reasonable cause or excuse' or not.

If a company is not liable to pay tax, a certificate under section 20 would be untrue, and that would be a reasonable cause for not issuing it. Bari Lalita v. Tata Iron and Steel Co., 1940 I.T.R. 337 (Bom.).

Magistrate.—As to the meaning of 'magistrate', see section 2 (8) and notes on it; only certain magistrates can try cases under sections 51 and 52 of the Income-tax Act.

Previous sanction.—See section 53 under which no prosecution can be launched under section 51 except at the instance of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.

Compounding of offences.—See the same section.

Fines—How levied.—A fine for a continuing offence cannot be levied prospectively.

"The proper course seems to me to be to institute further prosecution, if there is occasion for it, and allow the accused an opportunity of defending before the further fine is imposed" per Best, J., in R. v. Veeramma, 16 Mad. 230, (a case under the Municipalities Act). "He could, of course, be convicted with having persisted in the failure only as regards the past; he could not be convicted of a failure in regard to the future"—per Heaton, J., in R. v. Byramjee, 43 Bom. 836, (a case under the Cantonment Act).

" The order for payment of so much fine per day so long as the building continues to stand is illegal. The addition of such an order is premature. There must be proof of a continuing offence before the jurisdiction of a Magistrate to make such an order arises"—per Blair, J., in R. v. Wazir Ahmad, 24 All. 309, following Ramakrishna Biswas v. Mazumdar, 27 Cal. 565 (which cites earlier cases), (a case under the Municipalities Act). "Clearly this necessitates a separate prosecution for a distinct offence—a prosecution in which a charge must be laid for a specific contravention for a specific number of days for which charge, if proved, the Magistrate is to impose a daily fine of an amount which is left to him in his discretion to determine. The orders in the present case are bad as being conviction and punishments for offences which the accused persons had not committed, with which they were not and could not have been charged at the time the sentences were passed. The effect of such orders would be to deprive the accused persons of the opportunity to deny the commission of the offence or plead extenuating circumstances and to take away from the Magistrate, who might have afterwards to levy the fine, the discretion vested in him by law to determine the amount that should be inflicted after investigation of the case"—per Parsons and Ranade, JJ., in In re Limbaji Tulsiram, 22 Bom. 766, (a case under the Municipalities Act).

" The liability to daily fine in the event of a continuing breach has been imposed by the legislature in order that a person contumaciously disobeying an order lawfully issued may not claim to have purged his offence once and for all by payment of the fine imposed upon him for neglect or refusal to comply with the said order. The liability will require to be enforced, as often as the Revenue authority may consider necessary, by the institution of a second prosecution, in which the question for consideration will be, how many days have elapsed from the date of the first conviction under this section during which the offender is proved to have persisted in the offence, and secondly, the appropriate amount of daily fine to be imposed under the circumstances of the case, subject to the maximum of Rs. 10 per day." Per Piggott, J., in Emperor v. Amir Hasan Khan, (1918) 40 All. 569. "A person cannot again be prosecuted for the continuance of the same offence before conviction nor can he be separately prosecuted for the continuance of the same offence for each day the offence is continued as a separate and distinct offence under that section before conviction," Calcutta Corporation v. Mattoo Bewah, 13 Cal. 108.

Effect of penal assessment.—A penal assessment under section 28 for false statement is no bar to prosecution for failing to produce accounts.

The two are different offences, R. v. Hoosanelly & Co., 1 I.T.C. 48; 43 Mad. 498. It is evidently for the department to decide whether to act under section 28 or under section 51 or 52. When the above case was decided, a penal assessment could not be made because of non-production of accounts. Since 1st April, 1939 such an assessment can be made but, even so, all that section 28 (4) bars is a prosecution in respect of the same facts on which a penalty has been imposed.

Service of notice.—A conviction under section 34 (b) of the Income-tax Act, 1886 [partly corresponding to section 51 (c) of the present] was not maintained because there had been no formal service of notice as required by section 46 of the 1886 Act [corresponding to section 63 (1) of the present Act read with section 27 of the General Clauses Act X of 1897], the letter having been sent by ordinary post unregistered, Emperor v. Ramacharan, 1 I.T.C. 21.

Imprisonment in default of fine.—The question whether a Magistrate can sentence a person to imprisonment in default of payment of fine imposed under this section has not been decided. In In re Lakmia, 18 Bom. 400, it was held that a penalty levied under a Municipalities Act is a 'fine', and that imprisonment in default of payment of fine was legal. In R. v. Rappel, 18 Mad. 490, a case under a Town Nuisances Act, it was held that a Magistrate could sentence a defaulter to imprisonment. On the other hand, in R. v. Kutrappa, 18 Bom. 440 and R. v. Subramania Iyer, 20 Mad. 385, both cases under the Railways Act, it was held that the fact that excess charges were recovered like a fine by the Magistrate did not justify the imprisonment of a defaulter. In Basantakumari v. Calcutta Corporation, 15 C.W.N. 906, a case under a Municipal Act, it was held that in that particular case, in which the penalty consisted of a lump fine in the first instance and a continuing fine for the period of continuance of the offence, the Magistrate could not impose a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine. But the Court avoided giving a general interpretation of section 25 of the General Clauses Act and the connected sections in the Indian Penal and Criminal Procedure Codes (sections 63-70, Indian Penal Code, and 386, et seq., Criminal Procedure Code), which govern the subject.

United Kingdom Law.—Section 55 of the United Kingdom Act, 1842 [sub-sections (1) and (3) of section 107 of the 1918 Act] enacted that "if any person who ought, by this Act, to deliver any list, declaration or statement as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect so to do within the time limited in such notice" he shall be liable to a penalty, etc. Section 52 [sub-sections (1) and (3) of section 100 of the 1918 Act] requires the assessee to deliver a 'true and correct' statement in writing of his income, etc.

Inaccurate return—Liable to penalty.—A solicitor who had bought the business of another deceased solicitor for a consideration which included an annuity to the widow of the deceased married the widow and discontinued the annuity. Nevertheless, he continued to show the annuity as a deduction from his income, as solicitor, in his income-tax returns. No fraud was alleged but it was considered that an inaccurate return furnished through negligence was liable to a penalty.

Per Lord Loreburn, L.C.—"The revenue is protected against procrastination and carelessness which if practised on any large scale would make this collection of the tax an intolerable business. . . . But I do not think it is true that an innocent mistake exposes a man to these penalties. . . . On the other hand, the making of the return or statement is not always easy, and mistakes may occur notwithstanding that care may have been used to avoid them; still more when proper care has not been used. Accordingly, provision is made for penalties which are to fall in the event either of unpunctuality or of inaccuracy in the return or statement required. But alongside of that are found to be provisions to relieve a man from the penalty if he mends his mistake."

Per Lord Atkinson.—"The law) provides that the person shall declare the truth of the statement, and that the profits are fully stated upon every description of property appertaining to the declarant estimated to the best of his judgment and belief according to the directions and rules of the Act. If, in making this estimate, he applies these rules and directions according to the best of his judgment or belief, he is not liable to those penalties though he may have perchance fallen into error. . . . I do not think there is anything in section 129 (section 140 of the 1918 Act) inconsistent with this construction of section 160: (Section 207 and Fifth Schedule of 1918 Act). . . .

Accordingly, section 129 provides that when he discovers any defect or wrong statement in the statement he has delivered, he may correct it. No doubt the words "and such person shall not afterwards be subject to any proceedings by reason of such omission or wrong statement" would seem to suggest that the person would be liable if he had made a statement not true in fact, though true and accurate according to his belief, but I do not think this is enough to override the plain words of section 190 and the rules. In this case, the question left to the jury was not framed precisely as it should have been. They should, in my opinion, have been asked whether, in their opinion, the respondent in making the return applied the Rules in the Schedule according to the best of his judgment and belief. They have found . . . that he was guilty of negligence which I think must be taken to be finding that he did not estimate his gains and profits 'to the best of his judgment and belief according to those rules'."

Per Lord Gorrell.—"It would seem therefore that section 55 was intended to impose penalties for breach of the duties imposed, and not merely for non-delivery. . . . It may be that if a statement is made to the best of the declarant's judgment and belief according to the directions and rules of the Act he is not liable to a penalty merely because there is an innocent error or omission; but that is not the case before your Lordships where a return has been negligently made. It is not necessary in my opinion to decide any such point in this case. Moreover it is difficult to suppose that the Crown in such a case would seek to impose a penalty, and even if the attempt were made, the relieving section 129 would come into play. . . .", Attorney-General v. Till, 5 Tax Cases 440.

In the above case both Lord Gorrell and Lord Shaw quoted with approval the following remarks of Lord Stormouth Darling in Lord Advocate v. Sowers, 3 Tax Cases 617:—

"If a man were to put in piece of blank paper and call it a statement, or if he were to lodge a statement flagrantly and extravagantly different or incorrect, then according to the argument of the Defender he would be exempt from prosecution, at all events under section 55. The reasonable reading of section 55 is that if there is a failure to deliver the kind of statement required by section 52 either by failure to deliver any statement at all or by delivery of a statement which is untrue or incorrect, then the penalty is incurred."

Inaccurate return—Whether punishable in India.—Section 22 (2) prescribes the obligation to furnish a return, in compliance with a notice to be issued by the Income-tax Officer. Rules 19 and 19-A prescribe the forms of returns and the manner in which they shall be verified. As in the United Kingdom, the person filing the returns here should certify that the return is correct according to the best of his knowledge and belief. Under section 22 (3) mistakes can be rectified; and under section 51 (c) an inaccurate return not prepared to the best of the declarant's judgment and belief can apparently be penalised. The fact that under section 52 a deliberately false return can be proceeded against under the Indian Penal Code does not affect this point. In the United Kingdom also, a person can be indicted under the criminal law of the country for furnishing a deliberately false statement or return. The failure under section 51 (c) is not only to furnish the return within the time but to furnish the kind of return contemplated by sections 19-A, 21, 22 and 38. A person could not put in a mere blank piece of paper as his return and seek to escape the penalty under section 51 (c). Similarly, he cannot put in a return which obviously is not prepared according to the best of his knowledge and belief and try to escape section 51 (c). In all such cases, of course, the onus would be on the Crown to prove that the offence had been committed.

Prosecution—Neglect to deliver correct returns—Stigma of crime.—"If I thought that a judgment against the defender would affix upon him a stigma of crime, then I should certainly be in favour of sending the case to a jury, even though the amount involved is small; but I do not take the view that the result of an adverse judgment would be of that nature. I think, practically speaking, it may leave the defendant's character uninjured. . . .", per the Lord Ordinary in Lord Advocate v. A.B., 3 Tax Cases 617.

52. If a person makes a statement in a verification mentioned in section 19-A or section 20-A or section 21 or section 22 or sub-section (2) of section 26-A or sub-section (3) of section 30 or sub-section (3) of section 33 which is false, and which he either knows or believes to be false, or does not believe to be true, he shall be punishable, on conviction before a Magistrate, with simple imprisonment which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both.

False statement in declaration.

History.—Corresponds to section 35 of the 1886 Act and section 40 of the 1918 Act. This section has undergone several amendments, consequential on changes in other parts of the Act.

The words 'be punishable' onwards were substituted in 1939 for 'be deemed to have committed the offence described in section 177 of the Indian Penal Code.'

References.—Section 19-A refers to statements of dividends paid. Section 20-A to those of interest paid, section 22 to the return of income and sections 30 and 33 to appeals. There is an omission to refer to section 33-A (application to the Commissioner for revision) and also to section 12-A (sharing of managing agency commission).

Scope of this section.—Section 51 is designed merely to secure the proper performance of certain duties imposed by the Act on various persons; so the section creates offences out of the non-performance of such duties without reasonable excuse. Section 52, on the other hand, deals with offences per se.

This section applies only to the items specified. In respect of other false statements, e.g., in respect of returns under section 38 (names of partners, beneficiaries, etc.), all that the Income-tax Officer can do is to proceed under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, or under some other provision.

This section has nothing to do with offences under the Indian Penal Code, e.g., under sections 177, 196, 465, etc., thereof. It was held in Halkhoriram v. Rex, 1941 I.T.R. 209 (Pat.) that having been acquitted under section 465, the accused could not be placed on trial again under section 196 for an offence based on the identical facts.

Two conditions are precedent to the application of this section, viz., (a) the statement should be false and (b) the person making it should have known or believed it to be false or not believed it to be true. The section applies only to wilful falsification of statements and not to cases of inadvertence, mistake or misunderstanding to cover which the Act contains provisions in sections 22 (3) and 34, Patel v. Emperor, 1933 I.T.R. 363.

As to bona fide mistakes, see section 22 (3) and notes thereunder.

Person.—The word 'person' is used in its ordinary meaning and includes an agent of an assessee making a return on the latter's behalf. Inspecting Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax v. Chotabhai Jhaveribhai, 1941 I.T.R. 604 (Mad.).

Section 476, Criminal Procedure Code.—The provision in this section is without prejudice to that in section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, under which a 'Court' can direct a prosecution in respect of the offences mentioned in that section and committed before the 'Court'. All Income-tax Officers, Assistant Commissioners and Commissioners are evidently 'Courts' for this purpose, see In re Nataraja Aiyar, 36 Mad. 72 and In re Punamchand Maneklal, 38 Bom. 642.

"It is not necessary that there should be two parties arrayed as opponents in the matter to be decided by the officer. The petitioner had a right that he should not be made to pay a heavier tax than was properly assessable on his income. The officer had to decide as between the petitioner and Government what the petitioner's income was. It is immaterial that in the appeal the Government would not be named as a respondent. Suppose a trustee or a guardian of an infant makes an application to a Court for leave to sell certain properties of the beneficiary or the ward. There might not be any respondent in the application; yet it cannot be doubted that the order passed would be that of a Court", per Sundara Aiyar, J., in In re Nataraja Aiyar, 36 Mad. 72.

"The Divisional Officer has been empowered by Government to do justice between itself and the payer of an income-tax on the question as to the extent of his liability to pay such tax and I am therefore clear that he is a Revenue Court. The question who or what is a Court within the meaning of particular enactments is frequently a very difficult question and even the highest tribunals seem to be loth to give any definition which would be comprehensive and exhaustive", per Sadasiva Aiyar, J., ibid.

Therefore an Income-tax Officer can direct a prosecution, without the sanction of the Assistant Commissioner, in respect of offences committed before him under sections 182, 193 and 196 of the Indian Penal Code, Hazarilal v. Emperor, 1937 I.T.R. 610 (Nag.).

The legal obligation to submit a return will not save a person from prosecution under section 182, Indian Penal Code, if the return of income submitted by him is false, Hazarilal v. Emperor, supra.

Jurisdiction—Magistrate—Who should try.—A person making a verification in a statement under section 22 or 30 (3) can legally be tried under section 52 only by a Court having jurisdiction over the place where the verification was made and not by a court having jurisdiction over the place where the Income-tax appeal was presented, In re Mohidin Pakkiri Marakkayar, 1 I.T.C. 193; 45 Mad. 893; A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 50.

Offence—When committed.—The offence under this section in respect of a return made under section 22 (2) is committed on the day on which the return is verified by the assessee. A revised return filed under section 22 (3) cannot condone the offence under section 52 though it might mitigate it, Ganga Sagar v. Emperor, A.I.R. 1929 All. 919; 4 I.T.C. 97.

It has been held however that where an incomplete return is made openly with qualifications and under protest a prosecution cannot be made for false verification since, there is no valid return out of which the offence can arise, Champalal Girdharilal v. Emperor, 1933 I.T.R. 384.

Special Act—Construction in favour of subject.—"The person who is supposed to have made a false statement is certainly entitled to have set out the particular statement which is supposed to be false and before an action can be taken under section 193, Indian Penal Code, it is necessary that that statement should be a statement made by a person who was legally bound on oath or by some express provision of law, to state the truth, or being bound by law to make a declaration upon any subject makes any statement which is false and which he either knows or believes to be false or does not believe to be true. The law as ascertained in section 25 of Act II of 1886 lays down how these statements are to be verified and the Act being a Special Act it is to be construed in favour of the subject", per Knox, J., in Jagdeo Sahu v. Rex, 38 I.C. 993.

Proceedings before an Income-tax Officer do not start till he enquires into the assessee's income and a statement in a return of income is not, therefore, evidence given in a proceeding before the Income-tax Officer. A false statement in the verification clause in a return of income is therefore not governed by section 193 of the Indian Penal Code but by section 52 of the Income-tax Act which brings it within section 177 of the Indian Penal Code. False evidence produced before the Income-tax Officer under sections 22 (4), 23 (2) and (3) and 37 to support the return of income can be dealt with under section 196, Indian Penal Code, irrespective of whether the evidence is produced voluntarily or at the instance of the Income-tax Officer, Hasarilal v. Emperor, 1937 I.T.R. 610 (Nag.). This case was before 1939, when section 52 merely deemed an offence to be committed under section 177 of the Indian Penal Code.

Returns by persons under no obligation to do so.—If a person has not received a notice under section 22 (2), he is under no obligation to furnish a return of income and is “not legally bound to furnish any information” within the meaning of section 177 of the Indian Penal Code. It has been held accordingly that if such a person submits a false return of income, he does not fall within the provisions of section 52 of the Income-tax Act and section 177 of the Indian Penal Code, Harichand v. Emperor, 1934 I.T.R. 336. This case also was before 1939 when the amended section 22 (1) laid down the obligation on assessee to submit returns suo motu.

53. (1) A person shall not be proceeded against for an offence under section 51 or section 52 except at the instance of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.

Prosecution to be at instance of Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.

(2) The Inspecting Assistant Commissioner may either before or after the institution of proceedings compound any such offence.

Previous law.—This section corresponds to section 36 of the 1886 Act and section 41 of the 1918 Act. This section was amended in 1939 so as to place this power in the hands of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner and to let him compound the offence at any stage. The Select Committee desired that leave of the Court should be necessary to compounding in cases already before the Court but this was not accepted.

When assessee does not gain.—In Attorney-General v. Lillicraps' Executors, 26 Tax Cases 100, it was held that so long as the conditions laid down in the law (corresponding to sections 51 and 52 of the Indian Act) were fulfilled, penalty could be levied irrespective of whether or not the assessee intended in any way to benefit by the false return or statement.

Sub-section (2).—The power in sub-section (2) is intended to save the harassment of persons, but no one can claim that the Assistant Commissioner should use this power in his favour. It is a matter entirely within his discretion. The power can be exercised both before and after proceedings under sections 51 and 52 have commenced and this has been made clear in terms by the amendment in 1939. It would be an abuse of this power to attempt to squeeze the maximum money possible out of the assessee by holding out a threat of prosecution, Ganga Sagar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 97.

Scope of section.—The Assistant Commissioner's sanction is required only for the prosecutions referred to in sections 51 and 52. Other prosecutions started under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Income-tax Officer, as a Court, do not require the Assistant Commissioner's intervention. See Hazarilal v. Emperor, 1937 I.T.R. 610 (Nag.).

The nature of offences under section 51 is quite different from that of offences under section 52; and if a prosecution under both the sections is contemplated, the Assistant Commissioner should expressly sanction prosecution under both the sections. If the Assistant Commissioner has sanctioned prosecution only under one section, it is not open to the Court to convict the accused for an offence under the other section, Champalal Girdharilal v. Emperor, 1933 I.T.R. 384 (Nag.).

Who should lodge complaint.—There is nothing to prevent the Income-tax Officer having jurisdiction over the assessment from lodging a complaint (with the sanction of the Assistant Commissioner) in respect of offences committed in the time of the officer's predecessor in office. It is not necessary that the complaint should be made by the same officer as made the assessment on or otherwise dealt with the false statement in question, Patel v. Emperor, 1933 I.T.R. 363 (Rang.).

United Kingdom Law.—Prosecutions are instituted at the instance of the assessing Commissioners; the administrative machinery for assessment in that country is so radically different from that here as already pointed out in the notes under section 5.

Informers.—Though under section 32 of the Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (provisions like which do not exist in India), the Revenue authorities have power to sanction rewards to informers, there can be no contracts with informers as to the terms on which information would be given or received; for such a contract would be against public policy and could not be permitted except by express enactment, Edward Riach v. Lord Advocate, 10 A.T.C. 321.

Withholding of prosecution.—A compromise entered into between the Revenue and an assessee is binding on the latter, the withholding of prosecution being adequate consideration for the compromise, Attorney-General v. Midland Bank, 13 A.T.C. 602 (K.B.D.). On the other hand if a subject voluntarily pays tax without an assessment on him and such payment is accepted by the Revenue, there is nothing to prevent a formal assessment being made on him and the subject being charged again, Cokerline & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 9 A.T.C. 244 and 396. See also Shyam Sundar Beharilal's case, 6 I.T.C. 290 referred to under section 31.

54. (1) All particulars contained in any statement made, return furnished or accounts or documents produced under the provisions of this Act, or in any evidence given, or affidavit or deposition made, in the course of any proceedings under this Act other than proceedings under this Chapter, or in any record of any assessment proceeding, or any proceeding relating to the recovery of a demand, prepared for the purposes of this Act, shall be treated as confidential, and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, no Court shall, save as provided in this Act, be entitled to require any public servant to produce before it any such return, accounts, documents or record or any part of any such record, or to give evidence before it in respect thereof.

by a public servant.

(2) If a public servant discloses any particulars contained in any such statement, return, accounts, documents, evidence, affidavit, deposition or record, he shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to six months, and shall also be liable to fine.

(3) Nothing in this section shall apply to the disclosure—

(a) of any such particulars for the purposes of a prosecution under the Indian Penal Code in respect of any such statement, return, accounts, documents, evidence, affidavit or deposition, or for the purposes of a prosecution under this Act, or

(b) of any such particulars to any person acting in the execution of this Act where it is necessary to disclose the same to him for the purposes of this Act, or

(c) of any such particulars occasioned by the lawful employment under this Act of any process for the service of any notice or the recovery of any demand, or

(d) of any such particulars to a Civil Court in any suit to which Government is a party, which relates to any matter arising out of any proceeding under this Act, or

(e) of any such particulars to the Auditor-General of India for the purpose of enabling him to discharge his functions under section 144 of the Government of India Act, 1935, or

(f) of any such particulars to any officer appointed by the Auditor-General of India or the Central Board of Revenue to audit income-tax receipts or refunds, or

(g) of any such particulars, relevant to any inquiry into the conduct of an official of the Income-tax Department, to any persons appointed Commissioners under the Public Servants (Inquiries) Act, 1850, or to an officer otherwise appointed to hold such enquiry, or to a Public Service Commission established under the Government of India Act, 1935, when exercising its functions in relation to any matter arising out of any such inquiry, or

(gg) of any such particulars, relevant to any enquiry into a charge of misconduct in connection with income-tax proceedings against a lawyer or registered accountant to the authority referred to in sub-section (3) of section 61, when exercising the functions referred to in that sub-section, or

(h) of any such particulars occasioned by the lawful exercise by a public servant of his powers under the Indian Stamp Act, 1899, to impound an insufficiently stamped document, or

(i) of such facts, to an authorised officer of the United Kingdom, or of any Indian State or of any part of His Majesty's Dominions which has entered into an agreement with British India for the granting of double taxation relief, as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling such relief or a refund under section 49 of this Act to be given, or

(j) of such facts, to an officer of a Provincial Government, as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling that Government to levy or realise any tax imposed by it on agricultural income, or

(k) of such facts, to any authority exercising powers under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, or any Act of the Central Legislature imposing a duty of excise as may be necessary for enabling it duly to exercise such powers, or

(l) of such facts, to any person charged by law with the duty of enquiring into the qualifications of electors, as may be necessary to establish whether a person is or is not entitled to be entered on an electoral roll, or

(m) of so much of such particulars, to the appropriate authority, as may be necessary to establish whether a person has or has not been assessed to income-tax in any particular year or years, where under the provisions of any law for the time being in force such fact is required to be established.

(4) Nothing in this section shall apply to the production by a public servant before a Court of any document, declaration or affidavit filed, or the record of any statement or deposition made in a proceeding under section 25-A or section 26-A, or to the giving of evidence by a public servant in respect thereof.

(5) No prosecution shall be instituted under this section except with the previous sanction of the Commissioner.

History.—Corresponds to section 42 of the 1918 Act and section 38 (2) and (3) of the 1886 Act. The section was expanded in 1922, again twice successively in 1933, and again in 1939, 1940 and 1941.

Applies to all records.—While the Act of 1918 merely penalised the disclosure by a public servant of the particulars contained in any statement or return furnished under the Act, section 54 further penalises the disclosure of any particulars contained in any accounts or documents produced under the Act or in any evidence given or deposition made in the course of proceedings under the Act or in any record of an assessment proceeding or proceedings for recovery of a demand, and debars the Court except in the specified cases from requiring public servants to produce income-tax records or to give evidence respecting the same.

Apart from the particular cases referred to in sub-section (3) all records are strictly confidential. This prohibition applies to furnishing information to other Government departments and local authorities except to the extent specifically authorised in sub-section (3). The following persons are in practice, allowed to inspect income-tax returns, viz., (a) the person who made the return, (b) a partner (known to be such) in a firm—whether registered or not—to which the return relates and (c) the manager of a Hindu undivided family to whose income the return relates or an adult member of the family on whom a notice or requisition has been served under section 63. (See Income-tax Manual.)

Supply of copies to agents.—See notes under section. 61.

"Public Servant".—See S. 2 (13).

United Kingdom Law.—There is no similar provision in the English Acts, but every officer charged with duties under the Income-tax Act has to make a declaration as to secrecy, and the Courts have almost invariably upheld the privilege of the Crown not to produce such evidence. There are numerous cases on the subject of which a few may be cited: Christie v. Craik, 37 Sc.L.R. 503; Keir v. Outram, 51 Sc.L.R. 8; In re Joseph Hargreaves, 4 Tax Cases 173.

Prosecution of assessee.—In R. v. Barker, (1941) 2 K.B. 381; (1941) 3 All.E.R. 33, it was held that disclosures made by an assessee to the Revenue authorities in response to the promise of the latter not to prosecute the assessee must not be used in criminal proceedings against the assessee; but this decision has been modified by section 34 of the United Kingdom Finance Act of 1942.

Returns—When admissible in evidence.—A certified copy of an Income-tax Return obtained by a person other than the assessee is not admissible as evidence under the Indian Evidence Act, because the disclosure of the return is prohibited by section 54 of the Income-tax Act, Anwar Ali v. Tafazal Ahmad, 1 I.T.C. 377 (Rang.). A Court is precluded not only from calling for documents, etc., produced before Income-tax authorities but even from asking public servants to depose that particular accounts or documents have been produced before such authorities, Sayad Ashgar Ali Shah v. Achrumal and another, 1934 I.T.R. 384 (Lah.).

The object of this section being to make the income-tax returns confidential as between the assessee and the Income-tax Department and against the whole world except for certain limited purposes provided by the section itself it would clearly be an evasion of this prohibition if a party in a Court of law were to force the other party to obtain and furnish information from the Income-tax Officer against the interest of the (second) party which the first party could not obtain for himself. If, somehow, such information has been obtained by the first party, it is inadmissible in evidence unless the second party desires its retention, Ma Hla Mra Khine v. Ma Hla Kra Pru, 1938 I.T.R. 663.

According to the Calcutta High Court, Pramathanatha Pramanick v. Nirode Chandra Ghose, 1939 I.T.R. 570, while an assessment order is a public document within the meaning of section 74 of the Evidence Act, it is not covered by section 76 since no one has a right to inspect it or to demand a certified copy of it. Therefore, even if the Income-tax Officer gives a certified copy, such copy is not covered by section 77. An assessee can no doubt waive the privilege of secrecy provided by section 54 of the Income-tax Act, but it would be a startling thing if a joint assessee were to be permitted to use a copy of an Income-tax document to the detriment of his co-assessee and in contentious proceedings between them. The judgment made no reference to the exception in sub-section (4) of section 54 of the Income-tax Act, in respect of proceedings under section 25-A and section 26-A of the same Act.

According to the Bombay High Court also, Devidut Ramniranjandas v. Shriram Narayandas, 56 Bom. 324, certified copies of Income-tax returns are not admissible as evidence, since no one has a right to inspect such documents and the Income-tax Officer is under no obligation to give certified copies. The Court considered, however, that it was open to the assessee or other person concerned to produce secondary evidence on such matters to the extent permitted by the Evidence Act.

There have been several cases before the Madras High Court. In Noone Varadarajan Chetti v. Vutukuri Kanakiah, 1939 I.T.R. 331, it was held that inasmuch as section 54 while laying a prohibition on the Court confers no exemption on the Income-tax Officer who is amenable to the processes of the Court, secondary evidence of the contents of Income-tax documents was admissible as evidence. The judgment did not consider the rulings of other Courts. In Pentapathi Venkatramana v. Pentapathi Varahulu, 1939 I.T.R. 560, it was held that the record of a statement on oath before an Income-tax Officer by an assessee is a public document and that a certified copy thereof, if granted by the Income-tax Officer is admissible in evidence. Section 76 of the Evidence Act, according to this ruling was merely permissive, and not exhaustive; and there was nothing illegal in granting certified copies of such statements to assessee, including partners in a firm under assessment. In Mythili Ammal v. Janaki Ammal, 1939 I.T.R. 657, it was held that a return of income is not a public document within the meaning of section 74 of the Evidence Act since it is neither part of the act, nor part of the record of the act, of the Income-tax Officer, which is performed only when he assesses the income of the assessee and determines the sum payable by him. The record of this act is the notice of demand under section 29 of the Income-tax Act. Therefore, though an Income-tax Officer could give certified copies of returns for the private use of the assessee a third person who has somehow come into possession of these certified copies cannot use them to his own advantage by tendering them as evidence.

The position was reviewed by a Full Bench of the same Court in Ramarao v. Venkataramayya, 1940 I.T.R. 450. According to this ruling not only records of statements on oath before the Income-tax Officer but returns, accounts and other documents forming part of the record of assessment in the office of the Income-tax Officer are public documents, since they form a part of the records of his acts, just as plaints, written statements and the like are the records of a case in a Court. In this respect, there is no difference between the parts of the record prepared by the Income-tax Officer himself and the parts which contain the information called for by him or admitted by him into the record for the purpose of assessment. It is also not correct to say that no one has a right to inspect such documents, for the Income-tax Officer would not be doing his duty if he refused to an assessee this right and thus made it difficult for him to object to a wrong assessment. Moreover, there is nothing unlawful in giving a certified copy to the assessee himself. It was accordingly held that certified copies of such documents, when presented by the assessee, can be admitted as evidence under section 65 (c) of the Evidence Act. While an assessee may produce such certified copies as evidence, others cannot compel him to produce them. Velayudam Pillai v. Subramania Pillai, 1941 I.T.R. 275. Even in a dispute between partners, the Income-tax Officer is precluded from disclosing particulars of Income-tax records except to the extent expressly permitted by section 54 of the Income-tax Act (e.g., sub-section (4)), Rangasami Naicker v. Raju Naicker, etc., 1941 I.T.R. 693.

According to the Bombay High Court in R. v. Osman Chotani, 1942 I.T.R. 429, section 54 enjoins secrecy on the part of Income-tax authorities and prohibits Courts from calling for Income-tax records; the section does not say that such records must not be admitted as evidence, if otherwise admissible. It only prohibits those public servants to whom disclosure has been made under the Income-tax Act, from disclosing information and not all public servants. And, therefore, where a police officer searched certain premises of an Income-tax Office, seized certain documents and produced them before the Court, the documents were admitted as evidence.

According to the Allahabad High Court also, Suraj Narain v. Seth Jhabulal, etc., 1945 I.T.R. 13, section 54 is intended only to prevent Income-tax Officers from betraying the confidence vouchsafed to them, and not to prevent the assessee from himself disclosing the contents of the documents relating to his assessment. An assessment order is a public document under section 74 of the Evidence Act and a certified copy of it is admissible in evidence under section 65 ibid. A certified copy of the assessment order is therefore admissible to prove that the assessee is a partner in a firm.

CHAPTER IX.

SUPER-TAX.

55. In addition to the income-tax charged for any year, there shall be charged, levied and paid for that year in respect of the total income of the previous year of any individual, Hindu undivided family, company, local authority, unregistered firm or other association of persons, not being a registered firm, or the partners of the firm or members of the association individually, an additional duty of income-tax (in this Act referred to as super-tax) at the rate or rates laid down for that year by Act of the Central Legislature :

Provided that where under the provisions of clause (b) of sub-section (5) of section 23 an unregistered firm has been assessed in the manner applicable to a registered firm, super-tax shall be payable by each partner of the firm individually on his share in the income, profits and gains of the firm and not by the firm itself:

Provided further that, where the profits and gains of an unregistered firm or other association of persons not being a company have been assessed to super-tax, super-tax shall not be payable by a partner of the firm or a member of the association as the case may be, in respect of the amount of such profits and gains which is proportionate to his share.

History.—Super-tax was first imposed in India in 1917. The tax was then levied on much the same lines as now, except that companies were taxed on a graduated scale exactly like individuals, but only on the undistributed profits and gains (there was also no distinction between registered and unregistered firms) or the profits not paid or allotted to partners. The law was altered in 1920, and companies were taxed on the whole of their profits (with a free allowance till 1939) but at a flat and comparatively low rate. The rates are, since 1922, regulated by the Finance Act and not by the Income-tax Act itself. The reference to "other association of individuals" was inserted by Act XI of 1924. The word 'Central' was substituted for 'Indian' by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937. Further changes were made in 1939 making the second proviso cover cases of non-descript associations also and also altering the main part of the section and inserting the first proviso so as to be in consonance with sections 3, 23 (5) and other sections which were also amended.

Super-tax.—The provisions of the Act regarding income-tax other than those specially excepted in section 58 apply also to super-tax which is merely, as stated in section 55, "an additional duty of income-tax." Super-tax is levied at the rates specified in the Finance Act.

How levied.—The super-tax on companies and on local authorities is levied at a flat rate on the whole of the profits. No refund on account of super-tax on companies is allowed to shareholders.

Super-tax on assesseees other than companies and local authorities is levied on a scale of graduated rates.

Hindu undivided families are treated, for purposes of super-tax, as for income-tax purposes, as separate assesseees.

Unregistered firms and non-descript associations are also treated as separate assesseees. Where, however, such a firm or association is not assessed to super-tax, i.e., if the total income of the firm or association is below the taxable limit or if an unregistered firm is treated as registered under section 23 (5), the income or share which any individual member of the unregistered firm or association is entitled to or receives from the firm or association is included in his total income.

Registered firms are not assessed to super-tax, but the shares of partners in registered firms are included in the total income of the individual partners, on which super-tax is levied, and similarly, the dividends of shareholders received from companies are included in the individual income of those shareholders.

Total income.—The tax is levied on "total income", and "total income" in all cases means exactly the same thing as total income calculated for income-tax purposes with the exception that where an unregistered firm or non-descript association is itself assessed to super-tax, the share of the profits of a member of the firm or association is excluded from his total income for super-tax purposes. See however sections 56 and 58.

No separate assessment for super-tax.—An assessment made under section 23 or 34 can include both the assessment for super-tax and for income-tax; and it is not necessary for the Income-tax Officer to pass two separate assessment orders. English decisions as to the effect of an income-tax assessment on the super-tax assessment are not relevant, the machinery and procedure in England for the two taxes being different from each other.

References.—See also notes under section 2 (6)—Company; 2 (9)—Hindu Undivided Family; 2 (14)—Registered firm; 2 (16)—Unregistered firm; section 3—Association of persons; Also, under section 16—Definition of 'total income' and 'previous year'; section 2 (11) and section 4 (3) (iii)—local authorities.

Registered firms.—The registration of a firm in the manner prescribed under the Act is a condition precedent to the right of the Revenue to proceed under this section, i.e., to tax the partner instead of the firm, C.T. A.C.T. Nachiappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1933 I.T.R. 330. Since 1939, if an unregistered firm is treated as registered under section 23 (5), it shall be so treated for super-tax also.

Individual.—This word was used in the proviso before 1939 in referring to a partner in an unregistered firm and it was held that it was used in a wide sense, and under the proviso, a Hindu undivided family having a share in an unregistered firm was not liable to pay super-tax in respect of its share of profits if the firm had been taxed, In re Ramratandas v. Madangopal, 1935 I.T.R. 183 (All.). Though the same word had been used both in the main section and in the proviso it was considered permissible to interpret it in two different senses in order to obviate the anomaly that would otherwise arise. This question of the meaning of the word 'individual' does not arise now. The adverb 'individually' now occurring can only mean separately as distinguished from the group. See also notes under section 2 (6-B) and in particular Chandrika Prasad Ram Sarup v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1939 I.T.R. 269 (All.) as to firms being partners.

Free of super-tax.—As regards payments 'free of super-tax', see notes under section 3. Also the cases referred to infra.

Deduction of super-tax at source.—See section 18, sub-sections (2), (2-B), (3-B), (3-C), (3-D) and (3-E); and also section 58-H. See also section 58 (2).

United Kingdom Law.—In the United Kingdom no super-tax is paid by companies or firms; the tax is levied on individuals only. A tax corresponding to the company super-tax in British India called the Corporation Profits Tax was levied on companies between 1920 and 1924, and this was permitted to be deducted from the profits as a business expense for the purpose of computing income-tax. It was treated for the purpose like the Excess Profits Duty and the present Excess Profits Tax.

Super-tax was replaced by a sur-tax in the United Kingdom with effect from 1929-30. In essential features the old super-tax and the new sur-tax are the same despite differences in mode of incidence and of collection, see per Bennett, J., in Hulton, In re: Hulton v. Midland Bank Executor & Trustee, Ltd., (1930) 99 L.J.Ch. 316; (1931) 1 Ch. 77, and per Lord Hanworth, M. R., in Reckitt, In re: Reckitt v. Reckitt, (1932) 2 Ch. 144.

In the United Kingdom, when income due over a long period is accumulated and received at one time, the Acts and certain rulings, e.g., Hawley v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue, 9 Tax Cases 331 and Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Earl Haddington, 8 Tax Cases 711, permitted the spreading of the income over the years to which is related. The law was amended in 1927. Such spreading had at no time been authorised in India, where the liability is governed by sections 7, 8 and 13.

Super-tax—Reimbursement of—Whether included in income.—Under the will of her late husband an assessee received a certain income, and in addition an annuity just enough to reimburse all super-tax payable by her. She was assessed to super-tax for the year 1913-14, and the Trustees under the will paid the tax charged under the assessment out of the Trust moneys held by them from which income-tax had been deducted at the source. An additional assessment to super-tax for the year 1914-15 in respect of the super-tax thus paid by the Trustees on the assessee's behalf and of the income-tax applicable thereto was made upon the assessee. Held, that the additional assessment had been correctly made, and that the amount of the super-tax paid for the assessee plus the income-tax applicable to that amount formed part of her total income for the purpose of super-tax, Mrs. M. M. A. S. Meeking (In the names of J. C. M. A. Wilson and H. Johnson) v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 7 Tax Cases 603.

Dividends—Free of income-tax—Gross dividend chargeable to super-tax.—An assessee owned certain ordinary shares in a company, and, under the authority of a resolution of the Directors duly confirmed by the company at its annual general meeting, the dividends upon these shares had been paid 'free of income-tax'. In making the super-tax assessments, the Special Commissioners computed the income derived from these dividends as follows:—Assuming the amount of the "tax-free" dividend to be £100 and income-tax at a uniform rate of 1s. 2d. to apply the whole period in respect of which such dividend was paid.

Actual amount of dividend received "free of tax"	..	£100	0	0
Add Income-tax at 1s. 2d., i.e., 1s. 2d. for every 18s. 10d.	..	£	6	3 10
Gross amount of dividend receivable	..	£106	3	10

Held, that the amount to be included in the assessee's return of total income for purposes of super-tax was not the amount of dividend actually received by him, but that amount, with the addition thereto of the amount of income-tax in respect of it as above set out, Ashton Gas Company v. Attorney-General, (1906) A.C. 10, followed in Samuel v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 7 Tax Cases 277; (1918) 2 K.B. 553.

(Section 16 of the Indian Act directly provides for this, and under section 56 the total income for income-tax is also the total income for super-tax.)

56. Except in cases to which section 15-A applies or to which by-clause (a) of the proviso to sub-sections (3) and (4) of section 25, those sub-sections do not apply, and subject to the provisions of this Chapter, the total income of any individual, Hindu undivided family, company, local authority, unregistered firm or other association of persons shall, for the purposes of super-tax, be the total income as assessed for the purposes of income-tax, and where an assessment of total income has become final and conclusive for the purposes of income-tax for any year, the assessment shall also be final and conclusive for the purposes of super-tax for the same year.

History.—See section 2 of the Super-tax Act of 1917 and section 3 of the Super-tax Act of 1920. The section was amended in 1924, 1925, 1928, 1939 and 1944. The beginning words referring to section 25 were added in 1944 in order to remove an anomaly dating from a long time. See notes under section 25. The reference to section 15-A was made by the Amending Ordinance of 1945 relating to earned income relief.

United Kingdom Law.—See section 5 of the Income-tax Act of 1918 and National Provident Institution v. Brown, 8 Tax Cases 57 and Fitzgerald v. Inland Revenue, 7 Tax Cases 284.

Section 57 which provided for the recovery of super-tax from the share of profits of a non-resident partner in a registered firm from the resident partners who are held jointly and severally liable for the same, was deleted in 1939 as these provisions have been incorporated in other parts of the Act.

58. (1) All the provisions of this Act, relating to the charge, assessment, collection and recovery of income-tax except those contained in section 3, the second proviso to sub-section (1) of section 7, the second and third provisos to section 8, clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (2) of section 14, and sections 15, 15-A, 19 and 20 and the first proviso to sub-section (1) of section 41 and section 58-F and sub-section (2) of section 58-G shall apply, so far as may be, to the charge assessment, collection and recovery of super-tax.

(2) Save as provided in sub-sections (2), (2-A), (2-B), (3-B), (3-C), (3-D) and (3-E) of section 18, and section 58-H super-tax shall be payable by the assessee direct.

History.—See sections 3 and 6 of the 1920 Act and section 8 of the 1917 Act. Subsequent changes were made in 1926, 1929, 1933 and 1939 and in 1941 all of them consequential on changes in other parts of the Act. The last change made in 1941 was consequent on the amendment of sections 14 and 17 seeking to tax income in Indian states of residents in British India on a remittance basis; clause (c) of sub-section (2) of section 14 relates to such income. The reference to section 15-A was added by the Ordinance of 1945 relating to earned income relief.

Sub-section (1).—Section 3 is the charging section for Income-tax. The second proviso to sub-section (1) of section 7 relates to the exemption of deductions, under the authority of Government, from the salary of a person for the purpose of securing to him a deferred annuity or of making provision for his wife or children.

The provisos to section 8 referred to relate to tax-free securities.

Clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (2) of section 14 relate to the exemption from tax of the share of a person's income from an unregistered firm or non-descript association which has paid tax. Section 15 relates to the exemption of provision for life insurance, and section 15-A to earned income relief.

Section 19 relates to the payment direct of Income-tax in cases other than those falling under section 18; section 20 to the issue of certificates on account of Income-tax to shareholders by companies; the first proviso to section 41 (1) refers to taxation at the maximum rate of income-tax of trustees in cases where the shares of beneficiaries are indeterminate; section 58-F to the exemption of annual accretion in certain provident funds from income-tax; and sub-section (2) of section 58-G to the exemption from income-tax of accumulated balances in the above funds.

All the other provisions of the Act apply in respect of super-tax. The case of Batuk Prasad Khatri, 5 I.T.C. 138 (All.) referred to under section 28 is obsolete in view of the amendment of that section in 1939.

Sub-section (2).—With the exceptions in the specified sub-section of section 18, and section 58-H, super-tax cannot be deducted at source but should be collected only from the assessee, including an agent who is assessed, after an assessment under section 23 or other appropriate section and the issue of a notice of demand under section 29.

United Kingdom Law.—In the United Kingdom also, no abatement is made for super-tax on account of premia paid for Life Insurance or subscriptions to Provident Funds or interest from Tax-free Securities. But the administrative machinery for assessing Super-tax is different from that for assessing Income-tax, see notes under section 5.

CHAPTER IX-A.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO CERTAIN CLASSES OF PROVIDENT FUNDS.

General.—This Chapter, along with consequential amendments in sections 4 (3), 15 and 58, was introduced by Act XII of 1929 and has been since amended in detail in a few places. The concessions were extended in 1939 to employees of a person exercising a profession or vocation.

The main features of the concessions are: (a) The contributions of the employer and the employee together will be exempt from income-tax up to a limit of one-sixth of the employee's salary or Rs. 6,000 whichever is less. (b) In addition to the above, the employee can get abatement of income-tax on account of insurance premia on the difference between one-sixth of his total income (Rs. 6,000 if less) and one-sixth of salary or such lower amount on which he may receive exemption under section 58-F. (c) Interest on contributions including accumulations is exempt from income-tax up to a rate laid down by the Central Government, now 6 per cent. per annum. (d) The interest on the investments of the funds is exempt from income-tax. (e) The annual accretion to an account, that is, the increase in the balance both on account of contributions and on account of interest is deemed to be received by the employee every year and taxed accordingly subject to the above exemptions. (f) The accumulated contributions including interest are exempt from both income-tax and super-tax, when paid, except in the case of employees with less service than five years who however can be exempted in certain circumstances by the Commissioner.

The conditions of recognition of funds are set out in sections 58-C and D. The most important conditions are the vesting of the fund in trustees under irrevocable trusts, the regularity of saving, i.e., of contributions and the non-recoverability by the employer, except in specified circumstances and within strict limits, of sums from the fund.

58-A. In this Chapter, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

Definitions.

(a) a "recognised provident fund" means a provident fund, which has been and continues to be recognised by the Commissioner in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter;

(b) an "employer" means—

(i) a Hindu undivided family, company, firm or other association of persons, or

(ii) an individual engaged in a business, profession or vocation whereof the profits and gains are assessable to income-tax under section 10, maintaining a provident fund for the benefit of his or its employees ;

(c) an "employee" means an employee participating in a provident fund, but does not include a personal or domestic servant ;

(d) a "contribution" means any sum credited by or on behalf of any employee out of his salary, or by an employer out of his own monies, to the individual account of an employee, but does not include any sum credited as interest ;

(e) the "balance to the credit" of an employee means the total amount to the credit of his individual account in a provident fund at any time ;

(f) the "annual accretion" to the balance to the credit of an employee means the increase to such balance in any year, arising from contributions and interest ;

(g) the "accumulated balance due" to an employee means the balance to his credit, or such portion thereof as may be claimable by him under the regulations of the fund, on the day he ceases to be an employee of the employer maintaining the fund ; and

(h) the "regulations of a fund" means the special body of regulations governing the constitution and administration of a particular provident fund.

Notes.—These definitions are special ones intended for this Chapter only.

(a) "Has been and continues to be recognised." As regards the according and withdrawal of recognition—see section 58-B.

(b) "Association of persons"—this is intended to cover cases like Chambers of Commerce which are associations of associations. See notes under section 3.

In (i) it is not necessary that the employer should engage in a business or a profession. For example a University, School, Hospital or Public Library can obtain the benefits of this Chapter. It is only in (ii), i.e., when the employer is an individual that he should be engaged in business or in a profession.

(c) All employees whether paid salaries or wages are eligible excepting domestic and personal servants, see notes under section 58-C (b).

(d) Popularly and also in the Provident Funds Act, 1925, the employee's contributions are usually called 'Subscriptions', and the employers' 'Contributions.' The Act uses 'Contributions' to cover both.

(e) The balance obviously includes interest.

(f) The need for and the importance of this definition will be seen from section 58-E.

(g) This definition has been framed so as to be applicable to all funds, and has no reference to the regulations embodied in this Act and the rules thereunder.

58-B. (1) The Commissioner of Income-tax may accord recognition to any provident fund which, in his opinion, satisfies the conditions prescribed in section 58-C, and the rules made thereunder, and may, at any time, withdraw such recognition if, in his opinion, the provident fund contravenes any of those conditions.

The according and withdrawal of recognition.

(2) An order according recognition shall take effect on such date as the Commissioner may fix in accordance with any rules the Central Board of Revenue may make in this behalf, such date not being later than the last day of the financial year in which the order is made.

(3) An order withdrawing recognition shall take effect from the day on which it is made.

(3-A) An order according recognition to a provident fund shall not, unless the Commissioner otherwise directs, be affected by the fact that the fund is subsequently amalgamated with another provident fund on the occurrence of an amalgamation of the undertakings in connection with which the two funds are maintained, or that it subsequently absorbs the whole or a part of another provident fund belonging to an undertaking which is wholly or in part transferred to or merged in the undertaking of the employer maintaining the first-mentioned fund.

(4) An employer objecting to an order of the Commissioner refusing to recognise or an order withdrawing recognition from a provident fund may appeal, within sixty days of such order, to the Central Board of Revenue.

The appeal shall be in the form and shall be verified in the manner prescribed by the Central Board of Revenue.

RULES.

Rule 10 of the rules made by the Central Government lays down that the application for recognition shall be made by the employer and prescribes the procedure for obtaining recognition and Rule 14 of the same rules lays down that before withdrawing recognition the Commissioner shall give an opportunity to show cause to the contrary to the employer and to the trustees of the fund.

Rule 3 of the rules made by the Central Board of Revenue gives the date from which an order of recognition shall take effect.

Changes in the section.—Sub-section (2) was deleted and sub-section (4) as renumbered was amended in 1939 so as to provide in terms for an appeal against an order withdrawing recognition. Sub-section (3-A) was added in 1940.

Limitation.—See section 67-A as regards the computation of limitation for the purposes of appeal.

Appeal to Appellate Tribunal and reference to High Court.—No appeal lies under this section 30; hence no appeal lies to the Tribunal or a reference on questions of law to the High Court.

Withdrawal of recognition by the Central Government.—The special, overriding power (in old sub-section (2)) which Government kept in reserve against possible abuse of the spirit of the concessions while satisfying the letter of the various conditions laid down was removed in 1939.

Amalgamations.—It will be seen that sub-section (3-A) does not require the second fund to be a recognised one.

58-C. (1) In order that a provident fund may receive and retain recognition, it shall satisfy the conditions set out below and any other conditions which the Central Government may, by rule, prescribe,— Conditions to be satisfied by a recognised provident fund.

(a) All employees shall be employed in India, or shall be employed by an employer whose principal place of business is in British India.

Provided that the Commissioner may, if he thinks fit, and subject to such conditions, if any, as he thinks proper to attach to the recognition, accord recognition to a fund maintained by an employer whose principal place of business is not in British India notwithstanding that a proportion not exceeding ten per cent. of the employees is employed outside India.

(b) The contributions of an employee in any year shall be a definite proportion of his salary for that year, and shall be deducted by the employer from the employee's salary in that proportion, at each periodical payment of such salary in that year, and credited to the employee's individual account in the fund.

Provided that an employee who retains his employment while serving in His Majesty's Forces or when taken into or employed in the national service under the National Service (European British Subjects) Act, 1940, or the National Service (Technical Personnel) Ordinance, 1940, may, notwithstanding that he receives from the employer no salary or a salary less than he would have received had he not entered His Majesty's Forces, or been so taken into or employed in the national service, contribute to the fund during his service in His Majesty's Forces or while so taken into or employed in the national service a sum not exceeding the amount he would have contributed had he continued to receive from the employer the same salary (including increments, if any) as he would have received had he not entered His Majesty's Forces or been taken into or employed in the national service.

(c) Subject to the provisions of section 58-D the contributions of an employer to the individual account of an employee in any year shall not exceed the amount of the contributions of the employee in that year, and shall be credited to the employee's individual account at intervals not exceeding one year.

(d) The fund shall consist of contributions as above specified and of donations, if any received by the trustees, of accumulations thereof, and of interest (simple and compound), credited in respect of such contributions, donations and accumulations, and of securities purchased therewith and of no other sums.

(e) The fund shall be vested in two or more trustees or in the Official Trustee, under a trust which shall not be revocable save with the consent of all the beneficiaries.

(f) The employer shall not be entitled to recover any sum whatsoever from the fund, save in cases where the employee is dismissed for misconduct or voluntarily leaves his employment otherwise than on account of ill-health or other unavoidable cause before the expiration of the term of service specified in this behalf in the regulations of the fund.

In such cases the recoveries made by the employer shall be limited to the contributions made by him to the individual account of the employee, and to interest (simple and compound) credited in respect of such contributions and accumulations thereof, in accordance with the regulations of the fund.

(g) The accumulated balance due to an employee shall be payable on the day he ceases to be an employee of the employer maintaining the fund.

(h) Save as provided in clause (g), or in accordance with such conditions and restrictions as the Central Government may, by rules, prescribe, no portion of the balance to the credit of an employee shall be payable to him.

(2) Where there is a repugnance between any regulation of a recognised provident fund and any provision of this Chapter or of the rules made thereunder, the regulation shall, to the extent of the repugnance, be of no effect.

The Commissioner may, at any time, require that such repugnance shall be removed from the regulations of the fund.

Changes.—The provisos to clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (1) and the reference to 'donations' in clause (d) were all added in 1940.

"Any other conditions".—The following rule has been made by the Governor-General in Council:—

R. 3—Where the employer is not a company as defined in Clause (2) of section 2 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, the contributions made by employees after the date of recognition of a provident fund and the interest on the accumulated balances of such contributions shall be wholly invested in securities of the nature specified in clauses (a), (b), (c), (d) or (e) of section 20 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, and payable both in respect of capital and of interest in British India or in a Post Office Savings Bank Account in British India.

Section 20 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882.—"Where the trust property consists of money and cannot be applied immediately or at any early date to the purposes of the trust, the trustee is bound (subject to any direction contained in the instrument of trust) to invest the money on the following securities, and on no others:—

(a) in promissory notes, debentures, stock or other securities of the Government of India, or of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland;

(b) in bonds, debentures and annuities charged by the Imperial Parliament on the revenues of India;

(c) in stock or debentures of, or shares in, Railway or other Companies the interest whereon shall have been guaranteed by the Secretary of State for India in Council;

(d) in debentures or other securities for money issued by, or on behalf of, any municipal body under the authority of any Act of a legislature established in British India;

(e) on a first mortgage of immovable property situate in British India; Provided that the property is not a leasehold for a term of years and that the value of the property exceeds by one-third, or, if consisting of buildings, exceeds by one-half, the mortgage money; or

(f) on any other security expressly authorised by the instrument of trust, or by any rule which the High Court may from time to time prescribe in this behalf:

Provided that, where there is a person competent to contract and entitled in possession to receive the income of the trust-property for his life, or for any greater estate, no investment on any security mentioned or referred to in clauses (d), (e) and (f) shall be made without his consent in writing."

Notes.—The securities referred to above exhaust the investments that can be made. Other securities, however sound, e.g., securities on which the Imperial Bank of India is authorised to lend are excluded. It should be particularly noted that the restriction applies only to employee's contributions and interest thereon after the date of recognition. There is no restriction on the investment of other sums, i.e., "transferred balances" see section 58 (J) (2) and employers' contributions.

The condition that the securities should be payable in British India both in respect of capital and of interest is also important.

A reasonable time will be allowed within which to invest the amounts.

Clause (a).—"All employees" evidently refers to all employees subscribing to the fund (see definition in section 58-A) and not all employees whether subscribing to the fund or not, of the particular employer. If the foreign staff of an employer whose principal place of business is in British India subscribe to the fund, they will, as the law stands, get the benefit of exemption from tax of income from investments of the fund, though not any rebate of tax on salary except in the rare cases in which under section 18 (2-B) tax is deducted at source. It is doubtful however whether the employer can deduct from his British Indian profits the contribution made by him to his non-British Indian staff unless the foreign profits also are taxed in British India; for obviously no allowance can be claimed in respect of non-taxable income. See notes under section 10 (2):

Note the use of the word 'India' in the first part of the clause and of 'British India' in the second part. Under the first part, it is immaterial where the principal place of business of the employer is located, so long as all the employees are employed in India, i.e., British India or Indian States. Under the latter part it is immaterial where the employees are employed so long as the principal place of business is in British India.

The proviso to the clause, added in 1940, is intended to deal with cases in which only a small minority of employees of an employer whose principal place of business is outside British India are employed outside British India. Where such employees outside British India exceed ten per cent., the Commissioner will not recognise the fund unless the employees serving outside are excluded from the fund.

Clause (b).—Definite proportion should not fluctuate at anybody's discretion but should be laid down—even though within varying limits—by the regulations of the fund. See section 58-D as regards contributions of a contingent nature.

A fund will not be ineligible for recognition merely because its securities are revalued periodically and the changes in the value of the securities taken into account before allocating to each member his share of profit

Deducted at each periodical payment, etc.—The employee's contributions must be deducted when salary is paid, and at once credited to his account in the fund. It cannot be collected at longer intervals.

"Salary" as used in this Chapter is not used in the same sense as in section 7, but is confined to regular, periodical payments of salary, wages, etc. The definition of 'employee' in sub-section (c) of section 58-A which excludes only one class of wage-earners, viz., personal and domestic servants, makes it clear that 'salary' as used in this Chapter includes "wages" also. As regards the distinction between "salary" and "wages", see notes under section 7.

Clause (c).—The object of this sub-section is to prevent abuse which is otherwise possible by private companies and firms who might give nominal salaries and disproportionately high contributions to their employees. The scope of the abuse is, however, limited by section 58-F which restricts the exemption to one-sixth of salary.

The employer should part with his money every year and make it over to the trustees.

Clause (d).—The changes made in 1940 make it clear that the receipt of donations by a fund will not render it ineligible for recognition.

Forfeitures to the fund do not put anything into the fund taken as a whole, for they merely reduce the amounts due to particular members. The Commissioner will not withdraw or refuse recognition merely because he is doubtful of the validity as between the fund and its members of regulations as to forfeitures, e.g., forfeiting to the fund balances at the credit of intestate members.

Clause (e).—This contains two important conditions. The words “or the official Trustee” were inserted by Act IV of 1931. If he is the trustee, a second trustee is not required. So long as the trust is not revocable except with the consent of all the beneficiaries, the fund can be recognised even if it can be closed at will by the employer or by the Trustees.

Clause (f).—Compare section 6 of the Provident Funds Act (XIX of 1925) on which it is modelled.

While forfeitures to the fund i.e., for the benefit of other members will not render a fund ineligible for recognition, forfeitures to the employer of any monies other than his own contributions and interest thereon, and even of them in circumstances other than these allowed in this Act will render the fund ineligible. This clause deals with forfeitures to the employer; it is left to the regulations of each fund to govern forfeitures to the fund.

Clause (g).—No exemption from tax is admissible after the date on which the accumulated balance is due to be paid. If membership is optional, the rules should provide for the payment of accumulated balances immediately to members discontinuing; otherwise recognition will not be given. By definition, section 58-A, an employee is one, who participates in the fund; and an optional subscriber who ceases to subscribe ceases to be an ‘employee’. This clause will not prevent the recognition of a fund the rules of which provide for the transfer—not to the employer but to the fund—of sums at credit of subscribers who transgress certain rules and then leave service or forfeit the benefits of the fund.

Also according to the definition of ‘accumulated balance’ in section 58-A, the amount payable to an employee is not necessarily identical with the contributions of both employer and employee and interest on both contributions; therefore so long as clause (f) of section 58-C (1) is not broken the regulations of the fund may provide for forfeitures to the fund to be disposed of in any manner other than for the benefit of the employer, e.g., to be given to the family of the member.

Clause (h).—The rules made by the Governor-General in Council under this sub-section restrict withdrawals by employees while still in service. See Rules 4 and 9.

These rules are modelled on the rules of the Government General Provident Fund regulating temporary withdrawals therefrom. But they differ in some details, e.g., in allowing permanent withdrawal for house building.

Repayments of advances are not income and cannot therefore be taxed as addition to income or exempted from tax.

Rule 9-A deals with accounts of funds kept outside British India.

Sub-section (2).—If the repugnance were not removed, it would be open to the Commissioner—in fact it is his duty—to withdraw recognition—see section 58-B (1).

58-D. Subject to any rules which the Central Government may make in this behalf, the Commissioner may, in respect of any particular fund, relax the provisions of condition (c) of sub-section (1) of section 58-C—

Power to relax, restrictions of employer's contribution in certain cases.

(a) so as to permit the payment of larger contributions by an employer to the individual accounts of employees whose salary does not exceed five hundred rupees per mensem; and

(b) so as to permit the crediting by employers to the individual accounts of employees of periodical bonuses or other contributions of a contingent nature, where the calculation and payment of such bonuses or other contributions is provided for on definite principles by the regulations of the fund.

Notes.—Rules which provide for forfeiture in favour of the employer in a manner repugnant to the provisions of section 58-C (1) (f) will render the fund ineligible for recognition, but rules which provide for forfeiture to the fund will not, nor will rules providing for payment of forfeited amounts to families of employees.

No rules have been framed under this section.

Sub-section (b).—The bonuses and contributions referred to are those granted yearly or half-yearly by the employer at the time of closing accounts and ascertaining his profits but, unless these are provided for in the regulations of the fund and given to the employees irrespective of the employer's volition, the contributions will not be eligible for the concession. A contribution, say, at the same percentage of salary as the dividend of the employer-company on its capital would be eligible for the concession if provided for by the regulations but a contribution which the employer can withhold at his option will not be eligible. The law has not expressly provided for contributions of the following nature, e.g., lapsing of forfeitures of contributions of dismissed employees in favour of other employees, and increases due to appreciation of the fund's securities. The former is really an employer's contribution of a contingent nature even if it is not considered to be already a part of the fund into which nothing new is put by the forfeiture while the latter is a mere accretion to capital (often compensated automatically by shrinkage in other years).

58-E. The annual accretion in any year to the balance at the credit of an employee participating in a recognised provident fund shall be deemed to have been received by him in that year and shall be included in his total income for that year, and, subject to the exemptions specified in section 58-F, shall be liable to income-tax and super-tax.

Annual accretion deemed to be income received.

Provided that, for the purpose of sub-section (3) of section 15, out of such annual accretion only the employee's own contributions shall be included in his total income.

Notes.—It will be seen that the total income is deemed to include certain items—employer's contribution and interest—which might never be received by the employee at all. This plan was deliberately adopted by the

Select Committee in order to allow the whole of the employee's accumulation to be paid to him intact at the end of his service without any delay.

As a consequence of this provision, employees whose salaries are just below the taxable minimum might become liable to tax, and similarly persons just below the lines at which rates of tax change might be liable to pay higher rates.

The Bill as originally introduced by Government was drafted on the principle that all excess contributions and interest above the limit which is to be exempt from the payment of tax should be accumulated year by year and taxed as a lump sum at the end of the employee's service. The Select Committee considered that, even to the limited extent of the excess contributions, this principle would be inconvenient in practice and would be inequitable in those cases where the receipt of large lump sums might render an employee, otherwise exempt, liable to pay income-tax, or raise his rate of income-tax, or even render him liable to super-tax.

They therefore preferred the plan provided by this section.

Proviso.—While for all other purposes, the total income of the employee will include the whole of the annual accretion, only his own contributions will be included for ascertaining his total income for the purpose of section 15 (3). If this were not done a subscriber to a recognised provident fund would be in a more favourable position than other persons.

It will be seen that section 58-R relating to superannuation funds is somewhat differently framed though the effect is similar.

Exemption of balances not paid.—By notifications under section 60, the Governor-General in Council has directed that when in any year an employee participating in a recognised provident fund has ceased to be an employee of the employer maintaining the fund and has been declared by such employer not to be eligible to receive the whole of the accumulated balance due to him, so much of his income as is assessable for that year shall be exempted from income-tax and shall be excluded from the computation of his total income for the purposes of the said Act as is equivalent to so much of the accumulated balance due to him as has not been paid or is not payable to him and, if such amount exceeds the amount of his income in that year, so much of his income in the following year or years as is equal to the amount of such excess shall be so exempted and excluded from income-tax in such year or years.

A credit or debit in a subscriber's account, consequent on the appreciation or depreciation of securities of the fund, is prima facie of a capital nature, though, from section 58-A (f) and section 58-C (1) (d), it might seem to be of the nature of interest and contributions. It is clear, however, that the debit or credit is not income of the employee, though it may be part of the fund.

58-F. (1) An employee shall not be liable to pay income-tax on contributions to his individual account in a recognised provident fund, in so far as the aggregate of such contributions in any year does not exceed one-sixth of his salary in that year or six thousand rupees, whichever is less.

(2) Interest credited on the accumulated balance of any employee in a recognised provident fund shall be exempt from payment of income-tax, if and in so far as it does not exceed one-third of the salary of the employee for the year concerned and in so far as it is allowed at a rate not exceeding such rate as the Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, fix in this behalf.

History.—Sub-section (1) was amended in 1939 consequentially on the amendment of section 15 imposing an absolute money limit of rupees six thousand. Sub-section (2) was amended at the same time, a limit of one-third of salary being imposed.

Income-tax.—Under section 58, 'income-tax' in section 58-F does not include super-tax, the concession, therefore, relates to income-tax only.

Sub-section (1).—The employee can obtain further abatement of tax on account of insurance premia. See sections 15 (3) and 58-E (proviso).

Sub-section (2).—Under Notification No. 10, dated 15th March, 1930, the maximum rate of interest now in force is 6 per cent. per annum. It is of course open to an employer to allow a higher rate of interest but the concessions of this Chapter will be allowed only in respect of the first 6 per cent. of the interest so allowed.

It should be noted that the two limits laid down are cumulative, i.e., whichever is less.

Salary 'in that year' means salary as computed under section 7 i.e., under the 'due' or 'paid' basis as may be, but can only include specific, monetary amounts paid or falling due periodically and not include everything taxable under section 7, e.g., fluctuating bonuses and commissions.

As regards the form of accounts, see section 58-I and rules made thereunder.

Where interest allowed to individual employees varies, for example with reference to length of service, exemption is allowed in respect of interest so long as the average interest earned by the fund as a whole does not exceed the prescribed rate.

Interest on amounts credited to individual accounts as the result of appreciation of investments is not taxable income but appreciation of capital, even though it may form part of the fund [see section 58-A (f) and section 58-C (1) (d)].

Accounts.—Where only part of the contributions and interest are allowed under the Act, it is not necessary to keep separate accounts; and the full interest, whether computed on allowable contributions or not, will be allowed by the Income-tax Officer, so long as the limit of one-third of salary and the limit of rate of interest are not exceeded.

58-G. (1) Where the accumulated balance due to an employee participating in a recognised provident fund becomes payable, such Exemption of accumulated balance from income-tax and super-tax.

accumulated balance shall be exempt from payment of super-tax except to the extent of an amount equal to the aggregate of the amounts of super-tax on annual accretions that would have been payable under section 58-E up to the first day of April, 1933, if the Indian Income-tax (Second Amendment) Act, 1933, had come into force on the 15th March, 1930.

(2) Where an employee participating in a recognised provident fund has rendered continuous service with his employer for a period of not less less than five years, and the accumulated balance due to him becomes payable, such accumulated balance shall be exempt from payment of income-tax, and shall be excluded from the computation of his total income :

Provided that the Commissioner of Income-tax may allow such exemption and exclusion where the employee has rendered continuous service with the employer for a period of less than five years, if, in his opinion, the service has been terminated by reason of the employee's ill-health, or by the contraction or discontinuance of the employer's business, or other cause beyond the control of the employee.

(3) Where exemptions from payment of income-tax is not allowed under the provisions of sub-section (2) the Income-tax Officer shall calculate the total of the various sums of income-tax and super-tax which would have been payable by the employee in respect of his total income for each of the years concerned if the fund had not been a recognised provident fund, and the amount by which such total exceeds the total of all sums paid by or on behalf of such employee by way of tax for such years shall be payable by the employee in addition to any other income-tax and super-tax for which he may be liable for the year in which the accumulated balance due to him becomes payable.

History.—Sub-section (1) was added in 1933 and sub-section (3) amended in 1939.

Sub-section (1).—Sub-section (1) together with the amendments made at the time to section 58 and to sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 58-G are intended to make it clear that contributions are liable to super-tax from year to year though exempt to the extent specified in section 58-F from income-tax, and to ensure that super-tax shall not be levied a second time when an accumulated balance is paid to the employee. The super-tax payable up to 1st April, 1933, is to be computed with reference to the rates in force between 1930 and 1933, and is payable only when the balance is paid to the employee.

Sub-section (2).—There is no definition of "continuous service". Authorised leave of absence will evidently not be an interruption of continuous service.

The accumulated balance when paid will both be exempt from tax and also be excluded from total income, i.e., not affect the rate of tax on the employee's other income for the year. The Commissioner can use his discretion under the proviso and allow exemption only if the cause of termination of service was beyond the employee's control.

The decision in In re S. R. Mitra, 1942 I.T.R. 259 (Pat.), has been rendered obsolete by the subsequent amendment of Explanation 2 under section 7 (1), avoiding all reference to termination of service.

Sub-section (3).—As it now stands after amendment in 1939, it places the employee in the same position as he would have been in if the fund had not been recognised.

58-M. The trustees of a recognised provident fund, or other person authorised by the regulations of the fund to make payment of accumulated balances due to employees, shall, at the time an accumulated balance due to an employee is paid, deduct therefrom any income-tax payable under sub-section (3) of section 58-G and any income-tax and super-tax payable on an employee's total income as determined under sub-section (3) of section 58-I and sub-sections (4) to (9) of section 18 shall apply as if the sum to be deducted were income-tax payable under the head "salaries."

Deduction at source of income-tax payable on accumulated balance due.

This section enjoins on the persons making payment of accumulated balances the duty of collecting tax due, if any, at source and making it over to the Government. As regards the powers and liabilities of the trustees, see sub-sections (4) to (9) of section 18 and section 51 (a).

The tax to be recovered should be computed under section 58-G (3) and under section 58-J (3).

58-I. (1) The accounts of a recognised provident fund shall be maintained by the trustees of the fund and shall be in such form and for such periods, and shall contain such particulars as the Central Board of Revenue may prescribe.

Accounts of recognised provident funds.

(2) The accounts shall be open to inspection at all reasonable times by Income-tax authorities, and the trustees shall furnish to the Income-tax Officer such abstracts thereof as the Central Board of Revenue may prescribe.

Rules.—The rules relating to accounts are contained in Rules 5 to 7 of the Central Board of Revenue (Provident Fund) rules.

As regards power to extend the date beyond the 15th June in the case of funds the accounts of which are kept outside British India, see rule 9-A of the rules made by the Governor-General in Council.

Among other things the accounts should show separately the debits or credits, as the case may be in individual accounts consequent on the revaluation, if any, of the securities of the fund; and if a concern has several branches, a copy of the annual abstract of the accounts of the fund should be sent to every Income-tax Officer who assesses the employees.

58-J. (1) Where recognition is accorded to a provident fund with existing balances, an account shall be made of the fund up to the day on which the recognition takes effect, showing the balance to the credit of each employee on such day, and containing such further particulars as the Central Board of Revenue may prescribe.

Treatment of balances in newly recognised provident funds.

(2) The account shall also show in respect of the balance to the credit of each employee the amount thereof which is to be transferred to that employee's account in the recognised provident fund, and such amount (hereinafter called his transferred balance) shall be shown as the balance to his credit in the recognised provident fund on the date on which the recognition of the fund takes effect, and sub-sections (3) and (4) shall apply thereto.

Any portion of the balance to the credit of an employee in the existing fund which is not transferred to the recognised fund shall be excluded from the accounts of the recognised fund and shall be liable to income-tax and super-tax in accordance with the provisions of this Act other than this Chapter.

(3) Subject to such rules as the Central Board of Revenue may make in this behalf, the Income-tax Officer shall make a calculation of the aggregate of all sums comprised in a transferred balance which would have been liable to income-tax if this Chapter had been in force from the date of the institution of the fund, without regard to any tax which may have been paid on any such sum, and such aggregate (if any) shall be deemed to be income received by the employee in the year in which the recognition of the fund takes effect, and shall be included in the employee's total income for that year; and, for the purposes of assessment, the remainder of the transferred balance shall be disregarded, but no other exemption or relief, by way of refund or otherwise, shall be granted in respect of any sum comprised in such transferred balance:

Provided that, in cases of serious accounting difficulty, the Commissioner shall have power subject to the said rules, to make a summary calculation of such aggregate.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in condition (h) of sub-section (1) of section 58-G, an employee, in order to enable him to pay the amount of tax assessed on his total income as determined under sub-section (3), shall be entitled to withdraw from the balance to his credit in the recognised provident fund a sum not exceeding the difference between such amount and the amount to which he would have been assessed if the transferred balance had not been included in his total income.

(5) Nothing in this section shall affect the rights of the persons administering an unrecognised provident fund or dealing with it, or with the balance to the credit of any individual employee, before recognition is accorded, in any manner which may be lawful.

Rules.—See Rule 8 of the Central Board of Revenue (Provident Funds) Rules.

Extract from Select Committee's Report.—"We have cast the duty on employers of making up final accounts of existing funds, and of showing in them the portion of each employee's balance which is to be transferred to the recognised fund. Subject to the reservation that no tax already paid on an employee's own contribution will be refunded, the portion so transferred will receive retrospectively exemption from tax up to the same limit as will be given to the employee's future account. As regards any excess over and above the exempted portion which may be transferred, in order to avoid inconvenience in individual cases arising from the payment of a large amount of income-tax on such a lump sum, we have provided that an employee may withdraw the amount of the excess tax payable by him for that year from his balance in the recognised provident fund."

58-K. (1) Where an employer who maintains a provident fund (whether recognised or not) for the benefit of his employees and has not transferred the fund or any portion of it, transfers such fund or portion to trustees in trust for the employees participating in the fund, the amount so transferred shall be deemed to be of the nature of capital expenditure.

(2) When an employee participating in such fund is paid the accumulated balance due to him therefrom, any portion of such balance as represents his share in the amounts so transferred to the trustee (without addition of interest, and exclusive of the employee's contributions and interest thereon) shall, if the employer has made effective arrangements to secure that tax shall be deducted at source from the amount of such share when paid to the employee, be deemed to be an expenditure by the employer within the meaning of clause (xii) of sub-section (2) of section 10, incurred in the year in which the accumulated balance due to the employee is paid.

Notes.—The words "if the employer has made employee" were added in 1939, consequentially on the amendment of section 7.

When clause (xii) of section 10 (2) was changed to clause (xv), the consequential change in this section was omitted to be made.

See notes under section 10 (2) (xv) and in particular British Insulated and Helsby Cables, Limited v. Atherton, 10 Tax Cases 155, set out under that section.

"His share" includes interest up to the date of transfer and is not restricted to contributions only, Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. v. Cen- tral India Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd., 1939 I.T.R. 187. When an employee is paid out, the full amount (including interest) paid out of the fund will be allowed as a deduction in the employer's assessment. Where the fund is not an irrevocable trust, the employer will be allowed to deduct from his income only what he pays to the employees each year, (both contributions and interest) and not what he credits to the accounts of the employees. See notes under section 10 (2) (xv), formerly (xii).

This section has no retrospective effect and applies only to transfers made after this section came into force.

The object of this section is to prevent an employer getting undue advantage in reducing his taxable income in a single year by the accident of his employees' provident fund being recognised in that year. The deduction on account of past accumulations is therefore spread over several years and allowed gradually as employees receive their accumulations, the deduction being limited to the amount of the employer's share in the past accumulations at the time of recognition of the fund. After the recognition, the contributions made every year by the employer will be allowed as a deduction from his taxable profits year by year.

It should be specially noted that the section applies to all private provident funds whether recognised under his Chapter or not.

As regards 'effective arrangements', see notes under section 10 (4) (c).

58-L. (1) All rules made under this Chapter shall be subject to the provisions of sub-sections (4) and (5) of section 59.

Provisions relating to rules.

(2) In addition to any power conferred by this Chapter, the Central Government make rules—

(a) prescribing the statements and other information to be submitted with an application for recognition ;

(b) limiting the contributions to a recognised provident fund by employees of a company who are shareholders in the company ;

(c) providing for the assessment by way of penalty of any consideration received by an employee for an assignment of, or creation of a charge upon, his beneficial interest in a recognised provident fund ;

(d) determining the extent to and the manner in which exemption from payment of income-tax and super-tax may be granted in respect of contributions and interest credited to the individual accounts of employees in a provident fund from which recognition has been withdrawn; and

(e) generally, to carry out the purposes of this Chapter and to secure such further control over the recognition of provident funds and the administration of recognised provident funds as it may deem requisite.

Rules by Central Government.—It will be noted that rules are made by the Central Government under the Act in respect of this Chapter only. All other rules are made by the Central Board of Revenue subject to the control of the Central Government.

Sub-section (1).—Sub-section (4) of section 59 requires previous publication of the rules; and sub-section (5) of section 59 requires publication in the Gazette of India and the rules have effect as if enacted in the Act.

Sub-section (2).—(a) See rules referred to under section 58-B.

(b) Rule 11.—Where an employee of a Company owns shares in the Company with a voting power exceeding ten per cent. of the whole of such power the sum of the exempted contributions of the employee and employer to the recognised provident fund maintained by the Company shall not exceed Rs. 250 in any month.

Extract from Select Committee's Report.—"We have deleted the word 'private' before the word 'company', as in our opinion there may be cases of shareholders in public companies just as well as in private companies who should properly come within the scope of the clause. We have been assured that it is the intention of Government that the rules to be framed under this provision will apply only to employees who are shareholders holding a substantial portion of the shares of a company."

(c) Rule 12.—If an employee assigns, or creates a charge upon his beneficial interest in a recognised provident fund, the Income-tax Officer shall, on the fact of the assignment or charge coming to his knowledge, give notice to the employee that if he does not secure the cancellation of the assignment or charge within two months of the date of receipt of the notice the consideration received for such assignment or charge shall be deemed to be income received by him in the year in which the fact became known to the Income-tax Officer and shall be assessed accordingly.

(d) Rule 13.—If the Commissioner withdraws recognition from a recognised provident fund, the balance to the credit of each employee at the end of the financial year prior to the date of the withdrawal of recognition shall be paid to him free of income-tax and super-tax at the time when such employee receives the accumulated balance due to him. The remainder of the accumulated balance due to him shall be liable to income-tax and super-tax as if the fund had never been recognised.

58-M. This Chapter shall not apply to any provident fund to which the Provident Funds Act, 1925, applies.

Note.—The provisions relating to funds to which the Provident Funds Act, 1925, applies are contained in sections 4 (3), 7 and 15.

CHAPTER IX-B.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO CERTAIN CLASSES OF SUPER-ANNUATION FUNDS.

General.—This chapter, which was introduced in 1939, extends to certain classes of superannuation funds, concessions similar to those given to recognised provident funds under chapter IX-A. The provisions, it will be seen, are more elastic than those in chapter IX-A and a great deal is left to the discretion of the Central Board of Revenue who alone can recognise a superannuation fund and against whose orders, by the way, there is no appeal as in respect of orders passed by the Commissioner with reference to provident funds.

Definitions.

58-N. In this Chapter, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) 'approved super-annuation fund' means a super-annuation fund or any part of a superannuation fund which has been and continues to be approved by the Central Board of Revenue in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter ;

(b) 'employer', 'employee' and 'contribution' have, in relation to superannuation funds, the meanings assigned to those expressions in section 58-A in relation to provident funds ;

(c) 'ordinary annual contribution' means an annual contribution of a fixed amount or an annual contribution computed on some definite basis by reference to the earnings, the contributions or the number of members of the fund.

Part of a fund.—It should be noted that a part of a fund can be approved under this chapter. Contrast Chapter IX-A in this respect.

Ordinary annual contribution.—Compare sections 58-A (a), 58-C (b) and 58-D.

58-O. (1) The Central Board of Revenue may accord approval to any superannuation fund or any part of a superannuation fund which in its opinion complies with the requirements of section 58-P, and may at any time withdraw such approval, if in its opinion the circumstances of the fund or part cease to warrant the continuance of the approval.

Approval and withdrawal of approval.

(2) The Central Board of Revenue shall communicate in writing to the trustees of the fund the grant of approval with the date on which the approval is to take effect, and, where the approval is granted subject to conditions, those conditions.

(3) The Central Board of Revenue shall communicate in writing to the trustees of the fund any withdrawal of approval with the reasons for such withdrawal and the date on which the withdrawal is to take effect.

(4) The Central Board of Revenue shall neither refuse nor withdraw approval to any superannuation fund or any part of a super-annuation fund unless it has given the trustees of that fund a reasonable opportunity of being heard in the matter.

Subject to conditions.—It should be noted, that unlike Chapter IX-A. this section provides for approval on condition.

Appeal.—Though the section gives an opportunity to the fund to show cause against withdrawal of approval and also compels the Board to give reasons for withdrawing approval, there is no provision for an appeal against orders of withdrawal. If the Board refuses even to consider an application without applying its mind to the merits of the case, it will be a question whether an order cannot be made against it under the Specific Relief Act.

58-P. In order that a superannuation fund may receive and retain approval the following conditions shall be satisfied, namely :—

(a) the fund shall be a fund established under an irrevocable trust in connection with a trade or undertaking carried on in British India ;

(b) the fund shall have for its sole purpose the provision of annuities for employees in the trade or undertaking on their retirement at or after a specified age or on their becoming incapacitated prior to such retirement, or for the widows, children or dependants of persons who are or have been such employees on the death of those persons ; and

(c) the employer in the trade or undertaking shall be a contributor to the fund :

Provided that the Central Board of Revenue, may, if it thinks fit and subject to such conditions, if any, as it thinks proper to attach to the approval, approve a fund or any part of a fund—

(i) notwithstanding that the rules of the fund provide for the return in certain contingencies of contributions paid to the fund, or

(ii) if the main purpose of the fund is the provision of such annuities as aforesaid, notwithstanding that such provision is not its sole purpose, or

(iii) notwithstanding that the trade or undertaking in connection with which the fund is established is carried on only partly in British India.

"Or undertaking".—These words are evidently intended to cover cases of business, profession or vocation not covered by "trade", i.e., to include an enterprise of any kind.

Under the corresponding law in the United Kingdom, section 32 of the Finance Act of 1921, the trade should not only be carried on in that country but by a resident, though this latter condition can be relaxed.

General.—It will be observed that this section is more elastic than section 58-C, its counterpart in respect of provident funds.

Dependants.—There is no definition of this word as, for example, in the Provident Funds Act. It will apparently be for the Central Board of Revenue to satisfy itself that there is no abuse.

58-Q. (1) An application for approval of a superannuation fund or part of a superannuation fund for Application for approval. any year of assessment shall be made in writing before the end of that year by the trustees of the fund to the Income-tax Officer, and shall be accompanied by a copy of the instrument under which the fund is established and by two copies of the rules and of the accounts of the fund for the last year for which such accounts have been made up. The Central Board of Revenue may require such further information to be supplied as it thinks proper.

(2) If any alteration in the rules, constitution, objects or conditions of the fund is made at any time after the date of the application for approval the trustees of the fund shall forthwith communicate such alteration to the Income-tax Officer, and in default of such communication any approval given shall, unless the Central Board of Revenue otherwise orders, be deemed to have been withdrawn from the date on which the alteration took effect.

58-R. Income derived from investments or deposits of an approved superannuation fund shall be exempt from payment of income-tax, and any sum paid by an employer or an employee by way of contribution towards an approved superannuation fund shall, in the case of an employer, be deducted in computing his income, profits or gains for the purpose of assessment, and, in the case of an employee, be treated for all the purposes of this Act as if it were a sum to which the provisions of section 15 apply.

Provided that no such exemption shall be allowable to an employee in respect of any sum which is not an ordinary annual contribution :

Provided further that where a contribution by an employer is not an ordinary annual contribution it shall, for the purposes of this section, be treated, as the Central Board of Revenue may direct, either as an expense incurred in the year in which the sum is paid, or as an expense to be spread over such period of years as the Central Board of Revenue thinks proper.

Exemption.—(1) The employee's contribution to the extent it is an ordinary annual contribution, will be dealt with under section 15. (2) The employer's contribution will be allowed to the same extent as a deduction from his profits irrespective of the amount of contribution or of its proportion to his profits. (3) Other contributions by the employer (not by the employee) will be allowed either as a deduction in the year of payment or spread over some years as the Board may desire; but they will be allowed to be deducted at some time or other. (4) Income of the fund from its investments will be exempt.

Super-tax.—In the absence of any reference to section 58-R, by way of exception, in section 58, it would seem that the income of the fund from its investments is exempt both from income-tax and from super-tax, and that the employer can claim a deduction for both. The employee, however, will get relief for income-tax only under section 15 (which is excepted in section 58). See, also, notes under section 58-S.

Total income.—It will be seen that there is no provision in this sec. corresponding to the proviso in section 58-E. The contribution by the employee will obviously be part of his total income while that by the employer will not be part of the employee's income.

"Or deposits".—These words are really superfluous.

58-S. (1) Where any contributions (including interest on contributions if any,) are repaid to an employee, the amount so repaid shall be deemed for the purposes of income-tax to be income of the employee for that year.

Treatment of repaid contributions.

(2) Where any contributions (including interest on contributions, if any) are repaid to an employee during his lifetime but not at or in connection with the termination of his employment, income-tax on the amount so repaid or paid shall except in the case of an employee whose employment was carried on abroad, be deducted by the trustees of the fund at the average rate of tax at which the employee was liable to income-tax during the preceding three years or during such period, if less than three years, as he was a member of the fund, and shall be paid by the trustees to the credit of the Central Government within the prescribed time and in such manner as the Central Board of Revenue may direct.

Changes.—The references to 'super-tax' were omitted in 1940. As contributions to recognised superannuation funds by an employee will have been exempted only from income-tax (see sections 15, 58 and 58-R), no super-tax will be levied when the contributions are refunded to the employee. The omission to amend section 58 is probably an oversight; for even after the deletion in section 58-S of the reference to super-tax, it could still be held that 'income-tax' would include super-tax.

Repaid contributions.—This corresponds to section 58-A (3).

Employees abroad.—The Act does not say how repaid contributions should be treated in such cases. The position is obscure and requires to be cleared up.

Liability of trustees.—Will default on the part of trustees attract the provisions of sections 18 and 51? If not what is to be the method of recovery? Can a demand notice under section 29 be issued on the ground that the tax is due in consequence of an order passed under or in pursuance of this Act.

58-T. Where an employer deducts from the emoluments paid to an employee or pays on his behalf any contributions of that employee to an approved superannuation fund, he shall include all such deductions or payments in the return which he is required to furnish under section 21.

Deduction from pay of, and contributions on behalf of, employee to be included in return under section 21.

58-U. If a fund or a part of a fund for any reason ceases to be an approved superannuation fund, the trustees of the fund shall nevertheless remain liable to account for tax on any sum paid—

Liabilities of trustees on cessation of approval of fund.

(a) on account of returned contributions (including interest on contributions, if any), and

(b) in commutation or in lieu of annuities, in so far as the sum so paid is in respect of contributions made before the fund or part of the fund ceased to be an approved fund under the provisions of this Chapter.

General.—Compare sections 58-I and 58-L. (2) (a) and the rules made under section 58-L (2) (d).

58-V. The trustees of an approved superannuation fund and any employer who contributes to an approved superannuation fund shall, when required by notice from the Income-tax Officer, within twenty-one days of the date of such notice :—

Particulars to be furnished in respect of superannuation funds.

(a) furnish to the Income-tax Officer a return containing such particulars of contributions made to the fund as the notice may require ;

(b) prepare and deliver to the Income-tax Officer a return containing—

(i) the name and place of residence of every person in receipt of an annuity from the fund,

(ii) the amount of the annuity payable to each annuitant,

(iii) particulars of every contribution (including interest on contributions, if any) returned to the employer or to employees; and

(iv) particulars of sums paid in commutation or in lieu of annuities ;

(c) furnish to the Income-tax Officer a copy of the accounts of the fund to the last date prior to such notice to which such accounts have been made up, together with such other information and particulars as the Central Board of Revenue may reasonably require.

General.—No similar provision will be found in Chapter IX-A. because such information is not necessary in respect of provident funds. It should be noted that while approval is granted only by the Board, the information in this section can be called for by the Income-tax Officer.

CHAPTER X.

MISCELLANEOUS.

59. (1) The Central Board of Revenue may, subject to the control of the Central Government, make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act and for the ascertainment and determination of any class of income. Such rules may be made for the whole of British India or for such part thereof as may be specified.

Power to make Rules.

(a) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may—

(b) prescribe the manner in which, and the procedure by which, the income, profits and gains shall be arrived at in the case of—

(i) incomes derived in part from agriculture and in part from business ;

(ii) persons residing out of British India ;

(b) prescribe the procedure to be followed on applications for refunds ;

(c) provide for such arrangements with His Majesty's Government as may be necessary to enable the appropriate relief to be granted under section 27 of the Finance Act, 1920, or under section 49 of this Act ;

(d) prescribe the year which, for the purpose of relief under section 49, is to be taken as corresponding to the year of assessment for the purposes of section 27 of the Finance Act, 1920 ; and

(e) provide for any matter which, by this Act is to be prescribed.

(3) In cases coming under clause (a) of sub-section (2), where the income, profits and gains liable to tax cannot be definitely ascertained, or can be ascertained only with an amount of trouble and expense to the assessee which, in the opinion of the Central Board of Revenue, is unreasonable, the rules made under that sub-section may—

(a) prescribe methods by which an estimate of such income, profits and gains may be made, and

(b) in cases coming under sub-clause (i) of clause (a) of sub-section (2), prescribe the proportion of the income which shall be deemed to be income, profits and gains liable to tax, and an assessment based on such estimate or proportion shall be deemed to be duly made in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(4) The power to make rules conferred by this section shall, except on the first occasion of the exercise thereof, be subject to the condition of previous publication.

(5) Rules made under this section shall be published in the Official Gazette, and shall thereupon have effect as if enacted in this Act.

Rules.—With the exception of the rules first made under the Act, the power to make rules is, under section 59 (4), subject to the condition of “previous publication”. The meaning of the phrase “subject to the condition of previous publication” is given in section 23 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897), viz. :—

“Where, by any Act of the Governor-General in Council or Regulation, a power to make rules or bye-laws is expressed to be given subject to the condition of the rules or bye-laws being made after previous publication, then the following provisions shall apply, namely :—

(1) the authority having power to make the rules or bye-laws shall, before making them, publish a draft of the proposed rules or bye-laws for the information of persons likely to be affected thereby;

(2) the publication shall be made in such manner as the authority deems to be sufficient;

(3) there shall be published with the draft a notice specifying a date on or after which the draft will be taken into consideration;

(4) the authority having power to make the rules or bye-laws shall consider any objection or suggestion which may be received by the authority having power to make the rules or bye-laws from any person with respect to the draft before the date so specified;

(5) the publication in the Gazette of a rule or bye-law purporting to have been made in exercise of a power to make rules or bye-laws after previous publication shall be conclusive proof that the rule or bye-law has been duly made.”

History.—The Central Board of Revenue took the place of the Board of Inland Revenue in 1924. This section is radically different from the corresponding ones in the previous Acts, section 38 of the Act of 1886 and section 43 of the Act of 1918. Under these sections, the rules were made by the Governor-General in Council and the power could be delegated to Local Governments. The Central Board of Revenue cannot delegate this power.

Sub-section (3) was added in 1927.

The reference to insurance companies in sub-section (2) was deleted in 1939, the relevant rules being transferred to the schedule to the Act referred to in section 10 (7).

Rules by other authorities.—Rules under section 59 as made by the Central Board of Revenue. Rules are made by the Central Government under specific sections which give power to make rules.

Any class of income.—Rules cannot be nor are intended to be made for the purpose of regulating individual cases.

Sub-section (3).—In the absence of this sub-section doubts had arisen as to the validity of certain rules made under sub-section (2). While sub-section (2) gives powers only to describe "procedure" and "the manner in which" certain things could be done, the new sub-section explicitly empowers the framing of rules to ascertain income when it cannot be easily ascertained. The object of such arbitrary formulæ is convenience both to Revenue and to the assessee.

Unreasonable.—The Central Board of Revenue has absolute discretion as to whether the trouble to the assessee is unreasonable, Indian Relief and Benefit Insurance Company, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind, 1939 I.T.R. 352.

Agriculture and business.—This section, at first sight, suggests that agriculture and business as contemplated by this Act—see definitions in section 2 (1) and in section 2 (4)—are mutually exclusive categories; but see rulings cited in notes under section 2 (1) in connection with usufructuary mortgages and in particular, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Mathias, 1939 I.T.R. 48 (P.C.), which will show that there is no inherent contradiction between business and agriculture.

Scope of section.—If the rules are made and published in accordance with this section, they have the force of law and have effect "as if enacted in this Act." The section is clear on this point; but see also Garnett v. Bradley, (1878) 3 A.C. 944; Brandford v. McAnnully, (1883) 8 A.C. 456; R. v. Walker, (1875) 10 Q.B. 355; Patents Agents Institute v. Lockwood, (1894) A.C. 347 and Kandasami Pillai v. Emperor, 42 Mad. 69. If the rules do not strictly comply with the provisions of the section, they will be ultra vires. The authority to make rules is given to the end that the provisions of the Act may be better carried into effect and not so as to contradict or neutralise its provisions. Where a power to make regulations is given by a statute no regulations made under the statute can abridge a right conferred by the statute itself. Thus an assessee cannot be deprived of his right of appeal by the Central Board of Revenue not prescribing forms of appeals nor of his right to refund of tax by the Central Board of Revenue not appointing an Income-tax Officer. But the rules would be intra vires if the Act expressly gave permission to the rule-making authority to regulate and if necessary abridge the right, see R. v. Bird: ex parte Needles, (1898) 2 Q.B. 340; Queen v. Marain, 17 Mad. 118; Secretary of State v. Venkatesalu, 30 Mad. 113; Madurai v. Muthu, 38 Mad. 823. So long as the rules can be reconciled with the Act they will be construed to be intra vires, see Baker v. William, (1898) 1 Q.B. 23. If, as the result of objections received, the rules as finally made differ slightly from the first draft published, it would not affect the validity of the rule, Guru Charan v. Har Sarup, 34 All. 391. But the draft rule must not be altered so substantially as to make it almost a new rule in which case republication would be necessary. See also the Introduction—"Rules of Construction" particularly as regards Rules, Schedules and Forms.

How far rules and statute alternative.—It was ruled by the Lahore High Court in the case of Lakshmi Insurance Company, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 24 that though the provisions of section 59 were enabling provisions only, once a Rule had been made of mandatory character giving no alternatives, that rule must prevail and it would not be open to the Crown to rely on the ordinary provisions of the Act as an alternative.

60. (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette make an exemption, ^{Power to make exemptions, etc.} reduction in rate or other modification, in respect of income-tax in favour of any class of income, or in regard to the whole or any part of the income of any class of persons.

(2) Where, by reason of any portion of an assessee's salary being paid in arrears or in advance, or by reason of his having received in any one financial year salary for more than twelve months or a payment which is under the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 7 a profit in lieu of salary his income is assessed at a rate higher than that at which it would otherwise have been assessed, the Central Government may grant the appropriate relief.

(3) After the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act 1939 the power conferred by sub-section (1) shall not be exercisable except for the purpose of rescinding an exemption, reduction or modification already made.

History.—Sub-section (1) is practically the same as section 6 of the 1886 Act and section 44 of the 1918 Act. Sub-section (2) was inserted in 1930, and added to in 1933 and in 1939. Sub-section (3) was inserted in 1939.

Individuals—Exemptions in favour of—Inadmissible.—“Other modification” cannot obviously be made against the subject. The exemption or other favour can only be made in respect of a class of income or a class of persons. The exemption cannot therefore be made in respect of individuals except under sub-section (2). Also the exemption can be made only by notification in the Gazette of India.

Partial exemptions.—Though, under section 58, ‘income-tax’ includes super-tax, it is open to the Central Government under section 60 to exempt, reduce in rate or otherwise modify income-tax alone or super-tax alone, A. C. T. Nachiappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 1933 I. T.R. 241.

No fresh standing exemptions in future.—It will be seen from sub-section (3) that while the Central Government will continue to exercise powers (in respect of individual cases relating to ‘salaries’) it cannot grant fresh general exemptions under sub-section (1).

Free of tax.—The Indian Income-tax Act does not recognize contracts for payments ‘free of tax’. In such cases, the tax would be levied on the gross income of the recipient, and it would be a matter of arrangement between the contracting parties that the recipient was paid such gross income as would, after deduction of tax, leave him the stipulated net income. See notes under section 3.

Appropriate relief.—These words take the place of 'such relief as it, the Central Government, may think fit': and if the object of the change is to limit the discretion of the Government and regulate relief on an objective and uniform basis, it is not clear what basis is contemplated; for no other part of the Act throws light on such basis. It is presumed however that accumulated receipts will be apportioned over the relative years in which the sums were earned. In any case, if salaries are taxed, every year on the due ('accrued') basis, the occasion for relief because of receipt of salary in a year for more than twelve months cannot arise.

According to the Income-tax Manual, in calculating relief to be granted to an assessee in respect of any year under sub-section (2), any advantage gained by him in a previous year in which part of his salary was short paid (e.g., in respect of an assessment for a year prior to 1st April, 1939) will be taken into account. The sub-section applies to all cases irrespective of the consideration that the payment of salary in advance or in arrears was in accordance with rules governing the payment. 'Salary' in this sub-section has the same meaning as in section 7.

An official liquidator of a Company holds an office to which he is appointed by the Court; and his emoluments are 'salary' within the meaning of section 7, even though he may be paid only by commission. He is accordingly entitled to relief under section 60 (2). In re Bhagwati Shankar, 1944 I.T.R. 193 (Lah.).

Exemptions by statute.—See sections 4 (3) regarding complete exemptions given by the statute itself and the limited exemptions under proviso to section 7 (1), provisos to section 8, section 14, section 15 and section 17.

See also the Introduction regarding exemptions conferred by statutes outside the Income-tax Act.

Exemption and modifications.—See Notifications below. The exemptions, it will be seen, are either (a) complete, i.e., the income is ignored for all purposes, or (b) partial in which case it may be (i) included in 'total income', i.e., to regulate the rate on other blocks of income but is itself exempted both from super-tax and from income-tax, or (ii) exempted from super-tax only, or (iii) from income-tax only: There are also a few modifications permitting the computation of profits on a special basis.

The reference to sub-section (4) of section 48 (which refers to the old section) in the Notification No. 878-F, —the main one—is obsolete.

Co-operative Societies.—The meaning of the word 'profits' in the Notifications relating to such societies gave rise to litigation. Madras Central Urban Bank case, 3 I.T.C. 357; English and Scottish Wholesale Co-operative Society's case, 3 I.T.C. 385; The Madras Provincial Co-operative Bank case, 1933 I.T.R. 158; and The Bengalee Urban Co-operative Credit Society's case, 1934 Rang. 27. These rulings are not of much interest now, in view of the departmental instructions, which say that 'profits' in the case of such societies refers only to 'profits' in the strict sense (i.e., section 10) and not to 'income' from securities or dividends, and which permit set-off under section 24 of loss under an exempted head against gain under a non-exempted head.

Interest on debentures of a co-operative institution taken up by another such institution in the open market and not as a loan under the bye-laws (which may require the general or special sanction of the Registrar constitutes taxable income, not being income arising from the ordinary business of co-operative lending. Madras Provincial Co-operative Bank v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1942 I.T.R. 490.

Notifications—Total Exemptions.—The following are the existing exemptions under sub-section (1).

"The following classes of income shall be exempt from the tax payable under the said Act and they shall not be taken into account in determining the total income or salary of an assessee for the purposes of the said Act except for the purposes of sub-section (4) of section 48:—

(1) Omitted.

(2) Sums paid in pursuance of Article 3 of the agreement dated the 17th August, 1825 between the British Government and the King of Oudh.

(3) Income derived from the Bua tax defined in clause (c) of section 2 of the Teri Dues Regulation, 1902.

(4) The salary and allowances paid by a State in India during the period of deputation to any person deputed by the State for training in British India.

(18) The salaries of the Organiser and Manager of the Branch Office of the League of Nations, Bombay, and his staff.

(19) The salaries of Khasadars, Levies and Badraggas employed in the tribal territory on the North-West Frontier and of all persons employed in the tribal levy service in Baluchistan.

(20-23) Omitted. (These relate to leave salaries paid abroad.)

(24) The pensions of officers of Government residing out of India drawn from any Colonial Treasury or paid in the United Kingdom whether such pensions are paid in sterling or by means of negotiable rupee drafts on a bank in India.

(25) The salaries of the light-house keepers of light-houses in the Red Sea.

(26) The pensions paid in the United Kingdom or in a Colony to officers of local authorities or employees of companies or of private employers, such officers or employees being resident out of India.

(27) The interest on Mysore Durbar Securities.

(28) Pensions granted to officers of His Majesty's Naval, Military or Air Forces, British or Indian, or of the Auxiliary Force, India, or of the Indian Territorial Force, or of the Royal Indian Marine in respect of wounds or injuries received in action or in the performance of their duties as members of such forces otherwise than in action.

(28-A) Extraordinary pensions granted to Civil Officers (excluding family pensions granted as the result of the death of such an officer) under Chapter XXXVIII of the Civil Service Regulations, or the Army Regulations, India, as the case may be, in respect of wounds or injuries received in the performance of their duties.

(29) Pensions granted to members of His Majesty's Naval, Military or Air Forces. British or Indian or of the Auxiliary Force, India, or of the Indian Territorial Force, or of the Royal Indian Marine, who have been invalided from service with such forces on account of bodily disability attributable to, or aggravated by, such service.

(30) Value of rations issued in kind or money allowances paid in lieu thereof, to any officer or other rank in His Majesty's Naval, Military or Air Forces, British or Indian, or in the Auxiliary Force, India, or in the Indian Territorial Force, or in the Royal Indian Marine.

(31) Value of rent-free quarters occupied by, or money allowance paid in lieu thereof to, Indian officers, British Warrant and non-commissioned officers and men of His Majesty's Military or Air Forces, and British and Indian Warrant Officers of His Majesty's Naval and Marine Forces; in all cases irrespective of whether the individual concerned is married or single.

(32) Conservancy allowance granted in lieu of free conservancy to non-departmental Warrant and non-commissioned officers of the India Unattached List, departmental non-commissioned officers of the India Unattached List not in receipt of consolidated rates of pay and Warrant and non-commissioned officers of the permanent staff of the Auxiliary and Territorial Forces.

(33) The value of the free education provided for the children of British Warrant and non-commissioned officers and any grants-in-aid made to British Warrant and non-commissioned officers in lieu of the provision of free education for their children.

(34) Deleted.

(35) Deferred pay within the meaning of para. 254, Pay and Allowance Regulations for the Army in India, Part II paid to soldiers or non-commissioned officers of the Army in India.

NOTE.—Indian Warrant Officers, class II, who are also non-Commissioned officers, though not called as such, are entitled to the deferred pay and are also eligible for exemption.

(35-A) Shore allowance granted to Warrant Officers of the Royal Indian Navy when employed in Marine Survey Duties under para. 89 (c) of the Regulations for the Royal Indian Navy Vol. I.

(36) The income of indigenous hillmen, other than persons in the service of Government residing in the following areas as Assam:—

The Naga Hills District.

The Lushai Hills District.

The Sadiya Frontier Tract.

The Balipara Frontier Tract.

The Lakhimpur Frontier Tract.

The Garo Hills.

The Jowai sub-division of the Khasi and Jaintia Hills District and

The North Cachar Hills in the district of Cachar.

(37) The perquisite represented by the right of any of the officers specified in the annexed list to occupy free of rent as a place of residence any premises provided by the Central Government, the Crown Representative, or the Provincial Government as the case may be.

List of officers.

The Governor-General.

The Commander-in-Chief.

The Governor of a Governor's Province.

The Chief Commissioner of any of the following Provinces, namely:—

British Baluchistan, Delhi, Ajmer-Merwara,
Coorg,

The Andaman and Nicobar Islands, and any first class Resident in the Political Department.

(38) Such part of income in respect of which the said tax is payable under the head "property" as is equal to the amount of rent payable for a year but not paid by a tenant of the assessee and so proved to be lost and irrecoverable, where—

- (a) the tenancy is bona fide;
- (b) the defaulting tenant has vacated, or steps have been taken to compel him to vacate the property;
- (c) the defaulting tenant is not in occupation of any other property of the assessee;
- (d) the assessee has taken all reasonable steps to institute legal proceedings for the recovery of the unpaid rent or satisfies the Income-tax Officer that legal proceedings would be useless; and
- (e) the annual value of the property to which the unpaid rent relates has been included in the assessed income of the year during which that rent was due and income-tax has been duly paid on such assessed income.

(39) The lump grants made by Government to the Indian Church—

- (1) for the provision of episcopal supervision and ministrations;
- (2) for the payment of allowances to clergymen entertained in lieu of Chaplaincies reduced; and
- (3) in lieu of the grants-in-aid at present given for the entertainment of clergymen of the Additional Clergy Society under articles 602 and 603 of the Civil Service Regulations.

(40) When in any year an assessee has ceased to be an employee participating in a recognised Provident Fund and has been declared by the employer maintaining the fund not to be eligible to receive the whole of the accumulated balance due to him, so much of his income as is assessable for that year shall be exempted from income-tax and shall be excluded from the computation of his total income for the purposes of the said Act as is equivalent to so much of the accumulated balance due to him as has not been paid or is not payable to him, and if such amount exceeds the amount of his income in that year, so much of his income in the following year or years as is equal to the amount of such excess shall be so exempted and excluded in such year or years.

(41) Income of a Service Fund derived from interest on Government securities or interest on funds deposited with the Central or any Provincial Government.

For the purpose of this exemption, a Service Fund means a fund established under the authority of, or with the permission of, the Central or any Provincial Government for the purpose of securing deferred annuities to the subscribers, or payments to them in the event of their resignation or dismissal from the service in which they are employed, or provision for their wives or children after their death, or payments to their estate or their nominees upon their death, to which servants of the Crown are alone admissible as subscribers or members and the funds of which are either deposited with the Central or any Provincial Government or invested in Government Securities.

Incomes included in "total income" and exempt from both super-tax and income-tax.—The following classes of income shall be exempt from the tax payable under the said Act, but shall be taken into account in determining the total income of an assessee for the purposes of the said Act:—

- (1) The interest on Government securities purchased through the Post Office, and held in the custody of the Accountant-General, Posts and Telegraphs provided that the exemption shall apply only to interest on securities so held on account of any one assessee upto a face value of Rs. 22,500. [This shall cease to have effect in respect of interest paid after the 31st March, 1939.]
- (2) The profits of any Co-operative Society other than the Sanikatta Salt-owners' Society in the Bombay Presidency for the time being registered under the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912 (II of 1912), the Bombay Co-operative Societies Act, 1925 (Bombay Act VII of 1925), the Burma Co-operative Societies Act, 1927 (Burma Act VI of 1927), or the Madras Co-operative Societies Act, 1932 (Madras Act VI of 1932), or the dividends or other payments received by the members of any such Society out of such profits.

Explanation.—For this purpose the profits of a Co-operative Society shall not be deemed to include any income, profits or gains from—

- (1) investments in (a) securities of the nature referred to in section 8 of the Indian Income-tax Act, or (b) property of the nature referred to in section 9 of that Act;
- (2) dividends, or
- (3) the 'other sources' referred to in section 12 of the Indian Income-tax Act.

The above exemption which extends both to income-tax and super-tax applies only to "profits" in the strict sense of the word as used in the Act and does not include "income" derived by Co-operative Societies from interest on securities or dividends. The Societies whose income liable to income-tax is not taxable at the maximum rate or who have no income liable to tax should apply to the Income-tax Officer concerned for the issue of exemption certificates authorising persons paying interest on securities not to deduct any tax at source or to deduct tax at a lower rate than the maximum, as the case may be.

Where a Co-operative Society incurs a loss under any head of income that has been exempted from tax by notification under section 60 (1) of the Act, such loss may be set-off under section 24 against any income that is not so exempted.

Income included in total income and exempt from income-tax but not from super-tax.—

- (1) Sums received by an assessee on account of salary, bonus, commission, or other remuneration for services rendered, or in lieu of interest on money advanced, to a person for the purposes of his business, where such sums have been paid out of, or determined with reference to, the profits of such business, and, by reason of such mode of payment or determination, have not been allowed as a deduction but have been included in the profits of the business on which income-tax has been assessed and charged under the head "business":

Provided that such sums shall not be exempt from the payment of super-tax unless they are paid to the assessee by a person other than a company and have already been assessed to super-tax.

- (2) Such part of the profits or gains of a firm which has discontinued its business, profession or vocation as is proportionate to the share of an assessee in the firm at the time of such discontinuance, if income-tax has at any time been charged on such business, profession or vocation under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918 (VII of 1918), or if an assessment has been made on the firm in respect of such profits or gains under sub-section (1) of section 25 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922).

The above exemption applies only to income-tax and not to super-tax.

Income exempt from super-tax but not from income-tax.—The Governor-General in Council is pleased to exempt from super-tax.

"So much of the income of any Investment Trust Company as is derived from dividends paid by any other Company which has paid or will pay super-tax in respect of the profits out of which such dividends are paid.

Explanation.—For this purpose an investment trust company means a company in respect of which the Governor-General in Council is satisfied that—

- (i) it is a company having for its principal business the acquisition and holding of investments in the stocks, shares, bonds, debentures, or debenture-stocks of other companies or in securities issued by public authorities,
 - (ii) it is not a company formed for the purpose of, or engaged in acquiring or exercising control over any other company or group of companies or enabling any other persons to acquire or exercise such control,
 - (iii) it is a company deemed under clause (b) of the Explanation to sub-section (2) of section 23-A, of the said Act, to be a company in which the public are substantially interested."
- Notification No. 47, dated 9th December, 1933.

The above exemption applies only to super-tax and not to income-tax.

Depreciation—Railways and Tramways.—The following modification has been made in respect of income-tax in favour of income derived from railway or tramway business (other than an electric tramway):—

An assessee deriving income from a railway or tramway business may at his option require that in computing the profits or gains of such business the following allowance shall be made in lieu of the allowances specified in clause (v), clause (vi) and clause (vii) of sub-section (2) of section 10 of the said Act, namely, the actual expenditure incurred by the assessee during the previous year on repairs, replacements and renewals of plant, machinery, buildings and furniture which are the property of the assessee:

Provided that an assessee who in any year has exercised the option hereinbefore conferred shall not be entitled, save with the consent of the Commissioner of Income-tax to withdraw that option in any subsequent year:

Provided further that nothing in this Notification shall apply to an electric tramway. (Notification No. 23, dated 11th June, 1927.)

Marginal relief.—Where owing to the fact that the total income of an assessee has reached or exceeded a certain limit, he is liable to pay super-tax or to pay super-tax at a higher rate, the amount payable by him on account of income-tax and super-tax shall, where necessary, be reduced so as not to exceed the aggregate of the following amounts, namely,

(a) the amount which would have been payable on account of income-tax and super-tax if his total income had been a sum less by one rupee than that limit, and

(b) the amount by which total income exceeds that sum. (Notification, No. 12, dated 4th April, 1931.)

61. (1) Any assessee, who is entitled or required to attend before the Appellate Tribunal or any Income-tax Authority in connection with any proceeding under this Act otherwise than when required under section 37 to attend personally for examination on oath or affirmation, may attend by a person authorised by him in writing in this behalf, being a relative of or a person regularly employed by the assessee or a lawyer or accountant or Income-tax practitioner, and not being disqualified by or under sub-section (3).

Appearance by authorised representative.

(2) In this section,—

(i) a person regularly employed by the assessee shall include any officer of a Scheduled Bank with which the assessee maintains a current account or has other regular dealings;

(ii) 'lawyer' means a Barrister-at-law or Solicitor or any other person entitled to plead in any Court of law in British India;

(iii) 'accountant' means a registered accountant enrolled in the Register of Accountants maintained by the Central Government under the Auditors Certificate Rules, 1932, or a holder of a restricted certificate under the Restricted Certificate Rules, 1932, or a member of an association of accountants recognised in this behalf by the Central Board of Revenue;

(iv) 'Income-tax practitioner' means—

(a) any person who, before the 1st day of April, 1938 attended before an Income-tax authority on behalf of any assessee otherwise than in the capacity of an employee or relative of that assessee ;

(b) any person who has passed any accountancy examination recognised in this behalf by the Central Board of Revenue ; or

(c) any person who has acquired such educational qualifications as the Central Board of Revenue may prescribe for this purpose.

(3) No person who has been dismissed from Government service after the 1st day of April, 1938, shall be qualified to represent an assessee under sub-section (1) ; and if any lawyer or registered accountant is found guilty of misconduct in connection with any income-tax proceedings by the authority empowered to take disciplinary action against members of the profession to which he belongs, or if any other person is found guilty of such misconduct by the Commissioner of Income-tax, the Commissioner of Income-tax may direct that he shall be thenceforward disqualified to represent an assessee under sub-section (1) :

Provided that—

(a) no such direction shall be made in respect of any person unless he is given a reasonable opportunity of being heard,

(b) any person against whom such direction is made may, within one month of the making of the direction, appeal to the Central Board of Revenue to have the direction cancelled, and

(c) no such direction shall take effect until one month from the making thereof or when an appeal is preferred, until the disposal of the appeal.

Rules.—See Rules 44, et seq.

History.—Before 1939, the assessee could attend by any person authorised by him in writing in this behalf. The present section dates from 1939. The reference to the Tribunal was added in 1940.

Signing returns.—This section applies only to attendance before the authorities on behalf of an assessee and does not authorise the signing of returns or verifications by a representative, which can be done only by the assessee.

Authorised in writing.—Departmental instructions require that in all cases a power of attorney, on stamped paper, must be filed, even in cases where the assessee sends his own employee or an officer of a scheduled Bank, and that there should be a declaration both by the assessee and by this representative that the latter is competent to appear under section 61.

See also Appendix about stamp fees.

The word "relative" has not been defined and whatever the degree of kinship, a relative can evidently represent the assessee.

Persons other than these mentioned in this section will not be allowed to appear.

Regularly employed.—Not necessarily employed whole time; all that is needed is regularity of employment, as distinguished from casual employment, e.g., ad hoc for representing before the Income-tax authorities. See also sub-section (2) (i).

Scheduled Bank.—I.e., with reference to the Reserve Bank of India Act. "Other regular dealings" is a vague expression.

When Income-tax Officer requires personal appearance of an assessee.—The words "otherwise than where required under section 37" added in 1939 make it clear that the assessee must appear in person if the Income-tax Officer acting as a Court under section 37 summons him personally. An ordinary notice under the other sections of the Income-tax Act, which does not explicitly summon the assessee personally, would not be sufficient for this purpose. In response to such a notice, the assessee would be entitled to send a representative.

Asking for copies of orders.—It has been held by the Patna High Court that, because Income-tax proceedings are confidential, the mere fact that an agent appeared before the authorities at earlier stages on behalf of the assessee does not ipso facto authorise the agent to obtain copies of orders passed. To enable him to obtain them, the agent should be expressly authorised to do so by the assessee by writing, Basantilal Ramjidas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 383.

Power to compromise.—A vakalatnama, authorising a pleader to represent his client in an application under section 66 (2), and also ('for all purposes under all sections of the Act') gives the pleader power to compromise regarding the application, and his action binds the client who cannot afterwards ask for a case to be stated to the High Court Mussammat Hasshn Banu Bibi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1940 I.T.R. 482. In this case, the pleader had informed the Commissioner that the compromise had the consent of the client.

Receipts to be given.

62. A receipt shall be given for any money paid or recovered under this Act.

63. (1) A notice or requisition under this Act may be served on the person therein named either by post, or, as if it were a summons issued by a Court, under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

Service of Notices.

(2) Any such notice or requisition may, in the case of a firm or a Hindu undivided family, be addressed to any member of the firm or to the manager, or any adult male member of the family and, in the case of any other association of persons, be addressed to the principal officer thereof.

History.—Corresponds to section 46 of the 1886 Act and section 46 of the 1918 Act. The reference to “any other association of individuals” was made by Act XI of 1924; and the word ‘persons’ was substituted for ‘individuals’ in 1939.

By Post.—“By post” means “by registered post”. Section 27 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) is as below:—

“Where any act of the Governor-General in Council or Regulation made after the commencement of this Act authorizes or requires any document to be served by post, whether the expression “serve” or either of the expressions, “give” or “send” or any other expression is used, then, unless a different intention appears, the service shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, pre-paying and posting by registered post, a letter containing the document, and, unless the contrary is proved, to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post.”

This section however creates only a presumption which can be rebutted, DeSouza v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 6 I.T.C. 130; 54 All. 548.

Where a letter of authority had been given to the Post Office to deliver all postal articles addressed to the assessee to a named person and that person in fact received all such articles, it was held that a registered notice delivered to the named person had been validly served on the assessee. In re Kisorilal Makundilal, 1941 I.T.R. 193 (All.).

Notice—How to be served—Alternative forms.—See Appendix as to how summonses are to be served under the Civil Procedure Code. Intimation of adjournment of proceedings in compliance with the request of an assessee is not a notice under the Act requiring to be served in accordance with this section, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Perianna Pillai, 4 I.T.C. 217; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 113; Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Laxminarain Badridas, 1937 I.T.R. 170 (P.C.); see also notes under section 23 as regards adjournments.

This section does not require that service of a notice must be by its being placed in the hands of the person named therein by the officer of the court and does not exclude ‘other forms of service’ permitted by Order V of the Civil Procedure Code, per Halifax, A.J.C., in Ismail Bhai v. Government, 1 I.T.C. 192.

The section is permissive and not exhaustive, and it is open to the Income-tax Officer to adopt any method of service that is effective so long as the assessee is not prejudiced thereby. Thus the signature on the margin of an order sheet of the Income-tax Officer by the assessee would be equivalent to due service of notice, Ramkhelawan Ugamlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 3 I.T.C. 225; 7 Pat. 852.

Similarly, the service of a notice under section 22 (4) for the production of certain accounts on the gumastha of the assessee who produced certain other accounts before the income-tax Officer, was held to be valid service, Jangi Bhagat Ramavtar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 3 I.T.C. 418; 8 Pat. 877; A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 127. On the other hand, the Nagpur Court held that service of notice on an accountant, who was not a recognised agent or empowered in writing to act as agent, though, he had in fact received notices on some occasions, was not valid notice, Basiram Radhmal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P., 1934 I.T.R. 438; 7 I.T.C. 254; so also, the Rangoon High Court, that the mere fact that a particular employee had accepted previous notices or that according to the practice of the business the employees were expected to hand over all communications to the manager (authorised agent of the employer) was not sufficient evidence to find that the manager had been duly served with notice, Dey Bros. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1935 I.T.R. 213; 8 I.T.C. 186.

An Income-tax Inspector went several times to the place of business of an assessee to serve a notice in person on his agent but the agent was away and his assistants would not give any information as to his whereabouts. The Inspector had reason to believe on other information which reached him that the agent was avoiding the notice and thereupon posted the notice on the door of the business premises and made an affidavit before the Income-tax Officer as to the service of notice. The Income-tax Officer then declared that the notice had been properly served. Held, that the service was legal and that it was immaterial when the agent actually saw or obtained the notice, S. P. N. C. T. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 191. The actual service of notice is a question of fact, Abdul Rahman and Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P.

Under Rule 12 of Order V and Rule 3 of Order III of the Civil Procedure Code service on a recognised agent is sufficient and has the same effect as service on the principal unless the Income-tax Officer otherwise directs. Authority to accept service on behalf of a principal can be implied from the nature of the agent's duties; and in the case of a recognised agent carrying on the business of the principal, this is well implied because the acceptance of the notice is connected with the business, Hinatram Paliram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 133; Sundarlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 282; 10 Pat. 441.

Whether or not a receiver appointed by a Court, ad interim or permanently as such without more authority, can be regarded as "manager or agent" within the meaning of Rule 10, Order V of the Civil Procedure Code, an assessee who has ratified the acts of the receiver as manager or agent cannot ask for the setting aside of proceedings under the Income-tax Act (under section 27) solely on the ground that the receiver had been appointed only ad interim and not been confirmed, A.L.A.R.N. Firm (by the Official Receiver) v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1936 I.T.R. 97.

If a person is absent or cannot be personally served, service may be made on any adult male member of the family residing with him. See Order V, Rule 15, Civil Procedure Code, Pandit Manoharlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 6 I.T.R. 101.

Failure to serve a notice in strict accordance with this section renders subsequent proceedings void—see Emperor v. Ramcharan, 49 I.C. 781; 1 I.T.C. 21, cited under section 51; also Berry v. Farrow, (1914) 1 K.B. 632. The fact that in some way or other the notice reached the person on whom it was to be served is not in itself sufficient compliance with this section, Dey Bros v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1935 I.T.R. 213; 8 I.T.C. 186.

Partners of firms.—A notice under section 23 (2) need not be served on the particular partner of a firm who signed the return under section 23 (2), Commissioner of Income-tax v. Chidambara Nadar, 2 I.T.C. 27; 48 Mad. 602; A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1047.

Notice need not specify section of Act.—It was ruled in Ramkhelawan Ugamlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 3 I.T.C. 225; 7 Pat. 852, that a notice is not bound to state the section or sections under which it is issued and that in the absence of this detail the notice is not illegal.

Notice on minor son.—A minor son can be agent of his father in certain defined circumstances (cf. section 184, Indian Contract Act); and delivery of notice sent by registered post to a minor son who used to take delivery of registered letters addressed to his father has been held to be valid service, De Souza v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 6 I.T.C. 130; 54 All. 548.

Trust.—Under section 2 (12) (a) and section 63, a notice can be served on the managing trustee of a trust, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Ibrahimji Hakimji, 1940 I.T.R. 501.

Hindu undivided family.—Sub-section (2) does not override sub-section (1); the word used is only 'may' and not 'shall'; it only enables the notice to be served on a single person instead of several, which might be necessary otherwise. There is nothing therefore to prevent a notice being served under sub-section (1) on an agent of a Hindu undivided family doing business. Where such a family resided in Madras and the business was carried on at Rangoon, service on the agents at Rangoon was held to be legal, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. A. R. A. N. Chettiar Firm, 6 Rang. 21; 2 I.T.C. 477. The second sub-section is not surplusage, since it fastens personal responsibility so that the penal provisions of section 51 can be set in operation, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. V. D. M. R. M. Chettiar, 2 I.T.C. 474.

A trading Hindu undivided family carried on business in the name of X, Y, the names of two members. After the death of X and Y, the family continued to trade under the same name, and notices were issued under the Income-tax Act in the name of X, Y on the karta of the family who appeared in the proceedings and filed a return. Later on, he challenged the legality of the notices and it was held that as the family in its trading capacity was known as X, Y and the notices were served on the karta, there was no defect of procedure, either in substance or in form, Sonulal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1938 I.T.R. 94.

64. (1) Where an assessee carries on a business, profession or vocation at any place, he shall be assessed by the Income-tax Officer of the area in which that place is situate or, where the business, profession or vocation is carried on in more places than one, by the Income-tax Officer of the area in which the principal place of his business, profession or vocation, is situate.

(2) In all other cases an assessee shall be assessed by the Income-tax Officer of the area in which he resides.

Place of assessment.

(3) Where any question arises under this section as to the place of assessment, such question shall be determined by the Commissioner, or, where the question is between places in more provinces than one, by the Commissioners concerned, or, if they are not in agreement, by the Central Board of Revenue :

Provided that, before any such question is determined, the assessee shall have had an opportunity of representing his views :

Provided further that the place of assessment shall not be called in question by an assessee if he has made a return in response to the notice under sub-section (1) of section 22 and has stated therein his principal place of business, profession or vocation, or if he has not made such a return shall not be called in question after the expiry of the time allowed by the notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 or under section 34 for the making of a return :

Provided further that if the place of assessment is called in question by an assessee the Income-tax Officer shall, if not satisfied with the correctness of the claim, refer the matter for determination under this sub-section before assessment is made.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, every Income-tax Officer shall have all the powers conferred by or under this Act on an Income-tax Officer in respect of any income, profits or gains accruing, or arising or received within the area for which he is appointed.

(5) The provisions of sub-section (1) and sub-section (2), shall not apply and shall be deemed never at any time to have applied to any assessee—

(a) on whom an assessment or re-assessment for the purposes of this Act has been, is being, or is to be made in the course of any case in respect of which a Commissioner of Income-tax appointed without reference to area under sub-section (2) of section 5 is exercising the functions of a Commissioner of Income-tax, or

(b) where by any direction given or any distribution or allocation of work made by the Commissioner of Income-tax under sub-section (5) of section 5, or in consequence of any transfer made by him under sub-section (7-A) of section 5, a particular Income-tax Officer has been charged with the function of assessing that assessee, or

(c) who or whose income is included in a class of persons or a class of income specified in any notification issued under sub-section (6) of section 5, but the assessment of such person, whether the proceedings for such assessment began before or after the 1st day of April, 1939, shall be made by the Income-tax Officer for the time being charged with the function of making such assessment by the Central Board of Revenue or by the Commissioner of Income-tax to whom he is subordinate, as the case may be.

History.—This corresponds to section 47 of the 1886 Act and section 47 of the Act of 1918. The section was expanded in 1922 so as to cover all cases. Sub-section (1) was expanded in 1939 so as to cover cases of profession or vocation and the second and third provisos were also then added. The Calcutta High Court decision in Hajee Adam v. Secretary of State, 5 C.W.N. 257 (under the 1886 Act) is now obsolete. Sub-section (5) was added in 1940 as a result of the decision of the Bombay High Court, in Dayaldas Kushiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1940 I.T.R. 139, that the jurisdiction of the officer of the principal place of business had not been ousted. The amendment which is retrospective was made first by an ordinance and then by an Amending Act.

See also notes under section 5.

Question when to be raised.—The second proviso to sub-section (3) lays down the limit of time within which the assessee can question the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer; and the third proviso compels the Income-tax Officer to refer the point to the Commissioner, if the claim of the assessee is not accepted by the Commissioner. Sub-section (3) comes into operation only if there is a dispute between the assessee and the Income-tax Officer; and if there is no dispute, there is no need for any reference to the Commissioner. In re Bisheshwar Nath and Co., 1942 I.T.R. 103 (All.). The sub-section, obviously, cannot apply when a transfer is made in accordance with the wishes of the assessee, Tarak Nath Bagchi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1946 I.T.R. 319.

Specific Relief Act.—The right to be assessed by a particular officer is a right to which section 45 of the Specific Relief Act applies, Dayaldas Kushiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1940 I.T.R. 139.

Assessee to be bound by his own admission.—The new form of return [see section 22 (5)] requires the assessee to state his principal place of business, etc., and if he has made a statement, he should obviously be bound by it.

If return not submitted.—Where a person defaults in submitting a return even though asked to do so under section 22 (2), he is deprived of the right to raise any question about his principal place of business, etc.

Concurrent jurisdiction.—The provisions of the fourth sub-section do not oust the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of business to assess the profits of a branch business in an area in the jurisdiction of another Income-tax Officer. In such cases both Income-tax Officers have jurisdiction, Lachmandas Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 35; 47 All. 631. In re Abey Ram Chunni Lal, 1933 I.T.R. 126 (All.). It is open, therefore, to the Income-tax Officer at the principal place of business to call for the accounts of branches irrespective of whether they have been produced before the local Income-tax Officers or not and of whether the branches have submitted returns of income to them. Further, the Income-tax Officer at the principal place of business is not bound to accept the reports, if any, made by the Income-tax Officers at the branches and need not refer back to them the points on which he is not prepared to accept their reports, Lachmandas Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 4 I.T.C. 61; A.I.R. 1930 All. 49. Where notices have been issued by one officer, it is unnecessary for the other officer to issue them again, Tarak Nath Bagchi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1946 I.T.R. 319; In re Bisheshwar Nath and Co., 1942 I.T.R. 103 (All.).

The same income cannot be taxed twice—once by the Income-tax Officer of the branch and again by the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of business, Ramkhelawan Ugamlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 3 I.T.C. 225. If the Income-tax Officer of a branch, instead of merely making a report to the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of business, makes a final assessment himself in respect of the Income within his jurisdiction, it would seem to be still open to the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of business to assess the branch income on a footing different from that assessed by the Income-tax Officer of the branch, cf., L. R. M. S. T. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 3 I.T.C. 416.

The obligation to make a return at the principal place of business is not discharged by filing returns before the Income-tax Officers at the branches, and it is therefore open to the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of business to assess under section 23 (4) in the absence of a return without waiting for reports from the Income-tax Officers of the branches, Mohanlal Hardeodas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 9 Pat. 172. See also notes under section 23.

If an assessee has more than one place of business, it is open to an Income-tax Officer in whose jurisdiction income accrues to issue a notice under section 22 (2) pending the orders of the Commissioner as to the principal place of business; and the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of business as determined by the Commissioner need not issue a further notice under section 22 (2), Bisheshwar Prasad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 7 I.T.C. 74 (All.).

Where an assessee's case is transferred from one Income-tax Officer to another and again back to the former, and both Income-tax Officers had issued notices under section 22 (2), the omission on the part of the first Income-tax Officer to issue a notice for the second time under section 22 (2) will not necessarily vitiate the proceedings before him, especially if the assessee appeared before him in response to notices under section 23 (2) section 22 (4), Hiralal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1942 I.T.R. 148 (All.).

Opportunity.—If the assessee is not given an opportunity the assessment will not be in accordance with the Act, and a fresh assessment will be necessary after giving the assessee an opportunity to represent his views. His views are not bound to be accepted; nor has he a right of appeal. An assessee, who has been allowed by the Commissioner to state his objections in an affidavit must be held to have an opportunity to state his views, In re Seth Kanhayalal Goenka, 1941 I.T.R. 25 (All.).

It is only if the Commissioners are not in general agreement that the question need be referred to the Central Board of Revenue. If the Commissioners agree, the assessee must abide by their decision. But in all cases he has the right to represent his point of view to the Commissioner, i.e., even if the Income-tax Officers are agreed. While therefore the assessee must abide by the decision of the Commissioners where they agree, he is not similarly bound by the opinion or orders of the Income-tax Officers even if they are in agreement, Lachhmandas Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 2 I.T.C. 35 (All.).

The assessee may approach the Commissioner or the Central Board of Revenue direct if he is so inclined.

Appeal and reference.—There is no right of appeal to the Assistant Commissioner or of reference to the High Court in respect of orders issued under this section. The question cannot be raised on appeal and even if raised, cannot be said to arise out of the appellate order. It is of course open to the Commissioner to refer the question to the High Court suo motu under section 66 (1), Dinanath Hemraj v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 2 I.T.C. 304; (All.); Seth Kanhaiyalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1937 I.T.R. 739 (All.). The Commissioner is no longer empowered to make a reference to the High Court.

The question of jurisdiction having been settled in accordance with section 64 (3) by the Commissioner or the Central Board of Revenue, as the case may be, the question cannot be raised on appeal before the Assistant Commissioner or the Tribunal or on a reference to the High Court. In re Seth Kanhayalal Goenka, 1941 I.T.R. 25 (All.).

The Act does not determine the place of assessment; it only determines the officer empowered to assess, and in some cases, it does so by reference to locality. An appeal under section 30 lies not against an order under section 64 (3) but against the consequences arising from such order. Dayaldas Kushiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1943 I.T.R. 67.

The determination of the principal place of business is primarily a matter of administrative convenience rather than of jurisdiction; and in any case it is not a matter for adjudication by the Court. The scheme of the Act does not contemplate an objection as to the place of assessment being raised on appeal after the assessment has been made. Wallace Bros., Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 39 (F.C.).

Misdesignation.—The fact that an Income-tax Officer designated himself wrongly will not divest him of jurisdiction if in truth he has it, Seth Kanhaiyalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 1937 I.T.R. 739 (All.).

Principal place of business.—The law does not define the expression. It is essentially a question of fact which is the principal place of business in a given case. 'Principal' is a vague word and involves only a relative concept. This idea of the principal place of business is really the English theory of 'control' with respect to 'residence' stated somewhat differently, the difference being that there can be only one principal place of business though there can be more than one place of control. Various considerations have to be taken into account and balanced against each other before it can be decided which is the principal place of business in a particular case. Such balancing involves the determination of questions of degree and therefore questions of fact. In accordance with the general scheme of the Act, therefore, it has been left to be decided by the Revenue Authorities in each case which is the principal place of business. Questions of law can arise only if the authorities decide without evidence to justify their findings. Relevant considerations would be where the partners reside and which among them have the real control; where the accounts are kept of the business as a whole; which is the parent business out of which the business has grown; where, in the case of a company, the registered office is located; whether the business at any place is conducted with partners and at other places without partners; where the finance is arranged, and contracts entered into; where the goods are actually manufactured and sold; and so forth; and most of these considerations are relevant only in ascertaining where the effective control is exercised. The object of giving the assessee an opportunity to state his view is partly to help him to decide where he can most conveniently appear before the Department and look after his interests, and partly to safeguard the secrecy of his business matters. Ordinarily the principal would not like a branch manager of his to see all his accounts. The section therefore says that the assessment shall be made at the principal place of business. If the principal, however to suit his own convenience, resides at some other place, that would be no reason for not making the assessment at the principal place of business.

The mere fact that goods are manufactured or sold at a place will not make that place the principal place of business, nor the fact that an expert partner or partners on whom the efficient conduct of the business largely depends resides or reside at a particular place, while the financing and contracts are regulated elsewhere. The relative volume of transactions and profits will in themselves prove nothing, Dinanath Hemraj v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 2 I.T.C. 304 (All.). Their relevancy comes in only incidentally helping to decide where the real control is exercised. It is conceivable that the principal place of business may be a place where the business may be making an actual loss, large profits being made elsewhere, or a place where goods are neither bought nor sold but effective control is exercised.

In connection with the service of a writ which had to be made at the "principal office" of a company, it was held by Lord Campbell, C.J., in Garton v. Western Ry., E. B. & E. 837 that "The words 'principal office' indicate one particular office for the whole line, not an office for the traffic station."

This was followed in Palmer v. Caledonian Ry., (1892) Q.B.D. 823 in which Lord Esher, M.R. said:—

"I should have thought without any authority that the 'principal office' of the company must be the place at which the business of the Company is controlled and managed;"

and Lopes, L.J., said:—

"What I understand by 'principal office' is that office where the general superintendence and management of the business . . . is carried on."

In this connection attention may be invited to the decisions (1) which declare that the carrying on of a business is a question of fact—see notes under section 2 (4); (2) which declare that carrying on business or exercising a trade in a particular place is also a question of fact—see notes under section 4 (1). A fortiori it would seem that the question which is the principal place of business is also a question of fact. As already stated, the concept involves the added factor of relativity which can only be a matter of degree or of opinion and therefore essentially a question of fact.

Partners of firms.—The expression "place of business" is not restricted to places where an assessee carries on business individually, but includes places where he carries on business as a partner in a firm. Stress should not be laid on the use of the word 'assessee' in section 64, and it is in fact inappropriate, since a person cannot become an "assessee" within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Act until he has been assessed. Moreover, though a partner in a firm cannot become an "assessee" in respect of his income from the firm so long as the firm is assessed he has none the less to be "assessed" in respect of it. The verb to "assess" can only mean to ascertain the amount of a person's income in order to determine whether he is liable to tax (and if so at what rate and in what sum) or not.

Take the case of a person residing in Madras, who is a partner in registered firms at Calcutta, Bombay and Rangoon and has no other business. Each firm has a principal place of business, but one of the three has to be selected as the principal place of business of the person who is a partner in all the three firms. Similarly, when a person is a partner in a firm and carries on business independently of the firm, it has to be determined whether the principal place of business is the place where the person carries on business individually or the place where he carries on business as a partner in a firm. It does not follow that the principal place of business of a firm is also the principal place of business of each partner in the firm.

Effect on assessment proceedings pending settlement—Principal place of business.—If an assessee declines to produce his branch books called for under a notice issued under section 22 (4) for inspection by the Income-tax Office of the principal place of business on the ground that it is not convenient to do so an assessment by the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of business under section 23 (4) would not be illegal, Lachmandas Baburam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 35. Whether the Income-tax Officer should re-open the assessment under section 27 or not would depend on whether the assessee was prevented by sufficient cause from producing the books, i.e., on the circumstances of each case. But if an Income-tax Officer assesses a person whether under section 23 (4) or under section 23 (3) when a question under section 64 is pending, his proceedings are irregular, Dinanath Hemraj v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 304. This is now laid down in the second proviso. He should wait till the question under section 64 is decided by the relative authority—the Commissioner or the Central Board of Revenue, as the case may be—before making the assessment. But it is clearly open to the Income-tax Officer to go on under section 64 (4) with the assessment of that part of the income arising or accruing or received in his jurisdiction.

Resides.—As regards the meaning of this word, see notes under section 4-A. The question of residence will arise under section 64, only if the assessee is not carrying on a business, profession or vocation. If he does the principal place of business, etc., settles the place of assessment and not the residence, no matter whether the assessee be an individual, firm or company. If an assessee who is not carrying on business, etc., has more than one residence, the Income-tax Officer at any of the places of residence can assess him. The law does not require the Income-tax Officer of the principal place of residence, i.e., of ordinary residence to assess. But whether the assessee carries on business, etc., or not sub-section (3) will apply if any difference arises.

Non-resident.—A non-resident partner in a firm assessed in British India is assessable by the same officer as assesses the firm, Wallace Bros. Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1943 I.T.R. 559.

United Kingdom Law.—In the United Kingdom, in cases in which there is a possible conflict of jurisdiction, one way of settling the doubt is by an application to the High Court for a Writ of Prohibition, but there is a provision authorising the Board of Inland Revenue to decide in cases of doubt in which parish an assessee should be assessed—see section 97 of the Act of 1918.

65. Every person deducting, retaining or paying any tax in pursuance of this Act in respect of income belonging to another person is hereby indemnified for the deduction, retention or payment thereof.

Indemnity.

History.—There were indemnity sections in previous Acts also. See section 49 of the 1886 Act and section 48 of the 1918 Act. Such a provision is obviously necessary in all systems in which tax is deducted 'at source.'

Scope of section.—Before any person can seek relief from Government on account of this indemnity, he must actually lose something as a consequence of his having deducted, retained or paid the tax. See Collinge v. Haywood, 8 L.J.Q.B. 98. The indemnity will, of course, cover only such acts as were made bona fide and in accordance with the Act, and the question whether any one else committed default or not would be irrelevant to the indemnity. The liability of Government is conterminous with that of the person deducting and paying the tax and will be neither more nor less.

Operation outside British India.—Payment of British Indian Income-tax to the British Indian Government on behalf of a third person will not enable the person deducting tax, at source to claim under the law of a foreign country a discharge of an equivalent corresponding debt. In British India, of course, he automatically gets the discharge, but if the contract between the person deducting tax and the person from whom it is deducted is under foreign law and to pay a specified rate of interest in the foreign country, this indemnity is of no help. A company in British India which raises debentures outside, the interest on which is payable outside and the contract relating to which is governed by the law of a foreign State cannot deduct under that law, Indian Income-tax from the foreign debentureholder in the absence of a contract to that effect. Similarly, a company paying interest on debentures in British India, cannot in the absence of a contract to that effect claim to deduct from such interest tax paid by it elsewhere, and if it does so deduct, indemnity under this section will be of no avail, see India and General Investment Trust v. Borax Consolidated, (1920) 1 K.B. 539; also London & South American Investment Trust, Ltd. v. British Tobacco Co., (Australia), Ltd., 42 T.L.R. 771; (1927) 1 Ch. 107.

As regards the enforcement in one country of Revenue, etc., laws of another, see Attorney-General for Canada v. Schultze, 9 S.L.T. 4 and Re-Visser, Queen of Holland v. Drukker and others, (1928) 1 Ch. 877.

The general principle is that Courts will not collect the taxes of other States for the benefit of the sovereigns of those States.

It is because of the difficulty in respect of foreign contracts that sections 8, 9, 10 and 12 instead of seeking to deduct tax at source from the payee, disallow from the taxable income of the payer of interest, the deduction of interest payable abroad except in certain restricted circumstances.

66. (1) Within sixty days of the date upon which he is served with notice of an order under sub-section (4) of section 33 the assessee or the Commissioner may, by application in the prescribed form, accompanied where application is made by the assessee by a fee of one hundred rupees, require the Appellate Tribunal to refer to the High Court any question of law arising out of such order, and the Appellate Tribunal shall within ninety days of the receipt of such application draw up a statement of the case and refer it to the High Court :

Provided that, if, in the exercise of its powers under sub-section (2), the Appellate Tribunal refuses to state a case which it has been required by the assessee to state, the assessee may, within thirty days from the date on which he receives notice of the refusal to state the case, withdraw his application and, if he does so, the fee paid shall be refunded.

(2) If on any application being made under sub-section (1) the Appellate Tribunal refuses to state the case on the ground that no question of law arises, the assessee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, may, within six months from the date on which he is served with notice of the refusal, apply to the High Court, and the High Court may, if it is not satisfied of the correctness of the decision of the Appellate Tribunal, require the Appellate Tribunal to state the case and to refer it, and on receipt of any such requisition the Appellate Tribunal shall state the case and refer it accordingly.

(3) If on any application being made under sub-section (1) the Appellate Tribunal rejects it on the ground that it is time-barred the assessee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, may, within two months from the date on which he is served with notice of the rejection, apply to the High Court, and the High Court, if it is not satisfied of the correctness of the Appellate Tribunal's decision, may require the Appellate Tribunal to treat the application as made within the time allowed under sub-section (1).

(4) If the High Court is not satisfied that the statements in a case referred under this section are sufficient to enable it to determine the question raised thereby, the Court may refer the case back to the Appellate Tribunal to make such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct in that behalf.

(5) The High Court upon the hearing of any such case shall decide the questions of law raised thereby and shall deliver its judgment thereon containing the grounds on which such decision is founded and shall send a copy of such judgment under the seal of the Court and the signature of the Registrar to the Appellate Tribunal which shall pass such orders as are necessary to dispose of the case conformably to such judgment.

(6) Where a reference is made to the High Court the costs shall be in the discretion of the Court.

(7) Notwithstanding that a reference has been made under this section to the High Court income-tax shall be payable in accordance with the assessment made in the case :

Provided that if the amount of an assessment is reduced as a result of such reference the amount overpaid shall be refunded with such interest as the Commissioner may allow unless the High Court on intimation given by the Commissioner within thirty days of the receipt of the result of such reference that he intends to ask for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council makes an order authorising the Commissioner to postpone payment of such refund until the disposal of the appeal to His Majesty in Council.

(7-A) Section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, shall apply to an application, the High Court by an assessee under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3).

(8) For the purposes of this section "the High Court" means—

(a) in relation to British Baluchistan, the High Court of Judicature at Lahore ;

(b) in relation to the province of Ajmer-Merwara, the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad ; and

(c) in relation to the province of Coorg, the High Court of Judicature at Madras.

History.—Under Act of 1886, the assessee had no express right of reference to a High Court; but it had been held in more than one case that he could invoke the assistance of a Civil Court if the Revenue Officer exceeded his jurisdiction or otherwise acted ultra vires of the Act. Under the Act of 1918, the authority corresponding to the present Commissioner could, at the assessee's instance, refer a case to the High Court on any question of interpretation of the Act or the rules made under it, unless the authority thought the reference unnecessary or frivolous, and the assessee had no right to force a reference to the High Court (except to a limited extent, through the Specific Relief Act).

From 1922 to 1941, references were made to the High Court by the Commissioner; and the section was amended several times between these two years. Of these amendments the following still remain in the section, viz. :—

(1) The words "within six months of the date on which he is served with notice of the refusal" inserted in 1924. There was no time-limit before. (2) Sub-section (8) added in 1926. The words "sixty days of the date on which he is served with notice" and "sixty days" in sub-section (2) were substituted for "one month of the passing" and "one month" respectively in 1930. (3) Option to the assessee to withdraw the application. (4) Extension of section 5 of the Limitation Act to applications under sub-sections (3) and (3-A) of this section. Both (3) and (4) were added in 1933. (5) Provision for the stay of refund of tax after taking the High Court's orders. (6) Cases in the North West Frontier Province being referred to the Judicial Commissioners' Court instead of to the Lahore High Court. The last three items date from 1939.

The section was radically recast when the Appellate Tribunal was set up in 1941. References are now made by the Tribunal, and the Commissioner is placed in the position of a party before it and given the right to ask for a reference and to approach the High Court in case a reference is refused.

Limitation.—Section 5 of the Limitation Act referred to in sub-section (7-A) above is as follows:—

5. Any appeal or application for review of judgment or for leave to appeal or any other application to which this section may be made applicable by or under any enactment for the time being in force may be admitted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor, when the appellant or applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal or making the application within such period.

Explanation.—The fact that the appellant or applicant was misled by any order, practice or judgment of the High Court in ascertaining or computing the prescribed period of limitation may be sufficient cause within the meaning of this section.

Form of application for reference.—See Form R (T) in Rule 22-A. There was no prescribed form before the Tribunal was set up, i.e., when the Commissioner made the reference to the High Court.

References suo motu.—The Appellate Tribunal is not empowered to refer cases suo motu to the High Court and can do so only at the instance either of the assessee or of the Commissioner. Formerly, both under the 1918 Act and under the present one, till 1941, (before the Tribunal was set up) the Commissioner could do so and there was a spate of litigation as to whether, under the Specific Relief Act or otherwise, he could be compelled to exercise that power. These rulings [there were nearly twenty of them; a few important ones being, Alcock Ashdown v. Chief Revenue Authority, 1 I.T.C. 221; 50 I.A. 227; 47 Bom. 742 (P.C.); V. E. A. Chettiyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 7 Rang. 581; 3 I.T.C. 436; Surajmal Brijlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 82; 10 Pat. 218; Commissioner of Income-tax v. Bombay Trust Corporation, 1936 I.T.R. 323 (P.C.)] are of no interest now.

Specific Relief Act.—Furthermore, till 1939, appeals to the Assistant Commissioner lay only in respect of certain specified matters, and such a reference could be made to the High Court only in respect of questions of law arising out of the Assistant Commissioner's orders (and prejudicial orders of the Commissioner) it was a matter of importance to the assessee somehow to seek to bring other questions within the scope of the Specific Relief Act and thus compel a reference to the High Court in some way or other. An appeal to the Assistant Commissioner and from him to the Tribunal, lies now in respect of almost every matter, and questions of law arising out of the Tribunal's order come automatically within the jurisdiction of the High Court.

The Court cannot claim even in appearance to command the Crown, and where an obligation is cast on the principal, the Court cannot enforce it against the servant merely as such. Before mandamus can issue against a public servant, therefore, it must be shown that a duty towards the applicant has been imposed on the public servant by Statute so that he can be charged thereon and independently of any duty which as servant he may owe to the Crown, his principal. Under section 45 (g) of the Specific Relief Act, therefore, orders cannot be made to enforce the satisfaction of a claim on the Crown even if such orders have some ulterior motive, e.g., to enforce an order made by the High Court itself, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Bombay Trust Corporation, Ltd., 1936 I.T.R. 323 (P.C.). Whether the Commissioner, is under any provision of law charged with some duty so as to make him amenable to an order under section 45 (g) of the Specific Relief Act is an open question, (ibid). Orders made by a Court under the Specific Relief Act should specify with exactitude and clarity the specific act which the person holding a public office is being commanded to do, (ibid).

The right to be assessed by a particular officer in accordance with section 64 of the Income-tax Act is a right to which section 45 of the Specific Relief Act applies, Dayaldas Kushiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1940 I.T.R. 139 (Bom.).

There is no right of reference now in respect of revisional orders passed by the Commissioner under section 33-A. He cannot pass, in revision, any orders prejudicial to the assessee. Formerly, when he could pass such orders, and a reference could be demanded to the High Court on questions of law arising out of a prejudicial order, there was difference of opinion as to what was a prejudicial order.

These rulings are of no interest, but it remains to be decided to what extent the High Court can intervene if the Commissioner either refuses to apply his mind to a petition before him under section 33-A or passes an order which is prejudicial, or whether a suit will lie in such cases.

Offences and Penalties—Chapter III—No case to High Court.— No case can be stated to the High Court in respect of proceedings under Chapter VIII (Offences and Penalties). These offences go before Criminal Courts, and the accused have the ordinary remedies under the criminal law. It is immaterial whether the Assistant Commissioner's order to prosecute is given separately or included in an appellate order under section 31 or 32. In neither case can the order to prosecute form the subject of a reference to the High Court, In re Naraindas Mohanlal, 1933 I.T.R. 182; A.I.R. 1933 All. 231; 6 I.T.C. 48.

Penalties under sections 25, 28, 44-E, 44-F and 46, which are imposed by Income-tax authorities are appealable under section 30; and a reference therefore will lie to the High Court in respect of them.

Jurisdiction of Income-tax Officer.—The question as to principal place of business under section 64 has to be raised at the very outset by the assessee, and the final decision rests with the Commissioner or the Central Board of Revenue as the case may be. The question cannot be raised either in appeal or by way of reference. See notes under section 64.

Recognition of provident and superannuation funds.—No appeal lies under section 30 in respect of refusal to recognise such a fund or of cancellation of its recognition; therefore no appeal lies to the Tribunal, and no reference to the High Court.

Double Income-tax relief—Indian States and Dominions.—This is allowed by Notifications under section 49-A, and no appeal lies under section 30 though one is allowed by the notifications. Consequently no reference can lie to the High Court in respect of such relief. On the other hand, there is a right of appeal in respect of claims under section 49 and consequently a right of reference. In respect of relief under section 49-D relating to countries with which there is no reciprocal arrangement an appeal would seem to lie as part of the appeal against the assessment.

Service of notice.—Sub-section (1) makes it clear that this limitation of 60 days runs from the date on which the assessee or the Commissioner is served with notice of the Tribunal's order under section 33. As regards the procedure for service of notice, see section 63. Where, however, a judgment has been pronounced in Court in the presence of the assessee or his agent, no further written notice will be required, Lala Harkishen Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 484.

Limitation.—As to computation of the period, see section 67-A.

Note also that section 66 (7-A) as introduced in 1933 lays down that section 5 of the Limitation Act applies to an application to the High Court under this section. An application therefore can be admitted after the period of limitation, if the Court is satisfied that the applicant had sufficient cause for not making the application in time. As regards "sufficient cause" see notes under section 27.

Sub-section (7-A) applies only to applications under sub-section (2) and sub-section (3), and not to applications under sub-section (1). In re Lala Ganesh Prasad, 1942 I.T.R. 288 (All.).

Old rulings.—Before the Appellate Tribunal was set-up, a reference lay to the High Court on questions of law arising out of appellate orders, both of the Assistant Commissioner and of the Commissioner, and out of prejudicial orders passed by the Commissioner in revision; now a reference lies in respect of questions of law arising out of the orders of the Tribunal. Most of the principles laid down in earlier rulings of Courts as to the extent to which references lie would apply mutatis mutandis to the orders of the Tribunal.

High Court—Function of—Not Court of Appeal.—The High Court is not a Court of Appeal to which resort may be had if the assessee happens to be dissatisfied with the decision against them. It will not examine further evidence or examine books of account and try to arrive at findings contrary to those of the Tribunal; still less will it allow evidence to be produced before it which ought to have been produced before the Revenue authorities. In re Binfray Hukumchand, 58 Cal. 1446; In re Baldeodas Rameswar, 135 I.C. 280. Its functions are strictly confined to the disposal of references on points of law under section 66, In re Makham Lal Ram Sarup, 1 I.T.C. 416. In Trustees Corporation v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 54 Bom. 437; 4 I.T.C. 378; A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 151, the Privy Council observed that the stringency of these requirements is clearly deliberate. It is the intention of the enactment that the High Court is not to be flooded with such applications. The High Court will not entertain any question under this section unless the preliminary statutory conditions have been fully observed.

If the Tribunal refers certain questions of law only and refuses to refer others on the ground that there is no question of law involved, the High Court will not, except on very strong grounds, adjourn the hearing of the reference in order to hear a petition under section 66 (2) in respect of the questions not referred by the Tribunal, In re Multanchand Johurmal, 5 I.T.C. 154. The function of the High Court in respect of a stated case is only advisory and restricted to considering and answering the actual question raised, Sir Rajendra Narayan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. 1940 I.T.R. 495 (P.C.). Even if there is a point of law on which the Tribunal has refused to state a case, the High Court will not order a reference if it is satisfied that the point of law had been rightly decided by the Tribunal, Tarakanath Bagchi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1946 I.T.R. 319.

High Court—Who can move?—An application for a reference can be made only after the appeal under section 33 has been disposed of. The assessee must exhaust his remedies under the Act before asking for a reference.

The High Court may be moved under section 66 (2) only if the assessee is competent to apply to the Tribunal under section 66 (1). Accordingly, an assessee who for any reasons, forfeits his right of appeal to the Tribunal is not competent to move the High Court under section 66 (2), Benarsi Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 7 Lah. 226; 2 I.T.C. 170. A fortiori, a person who has no right of appeal at all (e.g., one who has not been assessed at all) cannot move the High Court, Shiam Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 474. So also a person whose assessment has been set aside by the Tribunal, Palumal Bholanath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 458 (All.).

Unless there is an order under section 33 there can be no question of reference to the High Court. If the Tribunal, having rejected an appeal on the ground that no appeal lay, also went into the merits of the case, the latter part of the order is not an order under section 33 and cannot therefore form the foundation of a reference, Kunwarji Ananda v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 417.

In a case in which no claim was made before the Income-tax Officer under section 25-A that a Hindu family had been partitioned and the Assistant Commissioner on appeal declined to consider the claim when it was put forward before him for the first time, the High Court held that the question did not arise out of his appellate order, Chiranji Lal & Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 7 I.T.C. 42.

Section 30 (1) as it was before 1939—prevented the High Court from examining whether an assessment purporting to be made under section 23 (4) was rightly so made, Abdul Baree Chaudhuri v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 352, overruling, A. R. A. N. Chettyar's case, 2 I.T.C. 479 and other rulings. In such cases, no appeal lay, and therefore no question of law arose out of an appellate order under section 31.

No reference can be made on (a) the merits of an assessment or (b) the validity of the notice calling for accounts as questions arising out of an appellate order under section 33, confirming the refusal of the Income-tax Officer to reopen the assessment under section 27, Cf., A. K. R. P. L. A.

Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 182. Cases of this kind, however, do not often arise now since assessments made under section 23 (4) may be appealed against under section 30 instead of being sought to be reopened through section 27.

Till 1933, an original order passed by the Commissioner under section 28 in the course of proceedings under section 33 was not subject to appeal, and could not therefore form the subject-matter of a reference under subsection (2) of section 66, Jangi Bhagat Ramavatar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 3 I.T.C. 418. A reference was allowed to the High Court from 1933 onwards on questions of law arising out of prejudicial orders passed by the Commissioner. His power of revision was withdrawn when the Appellate Tribunal was set up in 1941, but was restored soon after though in a modified form. He cannot now levy a penalty or pass a prejudicial order, and there is no provision for any reference to the High Court against his orders.

The essential condition for an application under section 66 (2) is, that an application under section 66 (1) has been made to the Tribunal and refused by it; cf. Leong Mah & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 2 I.T.C. 103. Panchu Gopal Banerji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 4 I.T.C. 324; Aminoff v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 474. A question not raised before the Tribunal under section 66 (1) cannot, therefore, be raised in an application to the High Court under section 66 (2), In re Babulal Raj Garhia, 1936 I.T.R. 148 (Cal.); Somchand Malukchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 297; In re Lakshminarain Gadodia and Co., 1943 I.T.R. 491 (Lah.). Still less will the High Court refer the case back to the Tribunal under section 66 (5) for finding additional facts to enable the Court to determine such new questions, In re Lakshminarain Gadodia and Co., 1943 I.T.R. 491 (Lah.).

Legal representative.—Before sections 24-B and 49-F were embodied in the Act and section 48 had not taken its present form, the question arose whether the heirs of a deceased assessee who were refused by the Income-tax Officer a refund under section 25 (3) could claim a reference to the High Court, and was answered in the negative, Gobind Saran v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 2 I.T.C. 480. The question will not arise now because firstly the heirs take the place of the assessee under sections 24-B and 49-F, and secondly section 30 provides for appeals against orders under section 25 (3).

Death of assessee before case filed in High Court.—In the United Kingdom proceedings are held to commence as soon as the written notice requiring the Commissioners to state and sign a case has been given; such proceedings are not abated by reason of the death of a party before the case is stated; in order to give effect to the intention of the Legislature the Court has jurisdiction to order the case to proceed by adding the personal representative of the deceased; and the requirement that a copy of the case should be served upon the other party is sufficiently met by service upon the executor, Hemming v. Williams, (1871) L.R. 6 (C.P.) 480; Canning v. Farren, (1907) 2 I.R. 485.

Per Sankey, J.—"In my view as soon as the notice in writing referred to in that section has been given, that is a notice to state and sign a case for the opinion of the High Court—the proceedings have begun.

The notice having initiated the proceedings, the second step is the duty of the Commissioners to state a case setting forth the facts and their determination and the next step in the proceedings is to transmit the case when so stated and signed to the High Court the proceedings are proceedings which begin with a notice in writing and may end with the decision of the highest tribunal in the land the construction (should be followed) of allowing the matter to proceed by adding a personal representation of the deceased in order to give adequate effect to the intention of the Legislature I am of opinion that I am entitled to do what it seems to me has been done both in the English Divisional and the Irish Appeal Courts namely to so mould a convenient form of procedure to meet the case. Mr. Latter in reply to that part said: 'Oh, but that cannot be done where the Crown is a party'. I am of course thinking of what would happen when the boot is on the other leg and when it is the subject who wants to appeal. I think it would be the height of injustice—and I use the words advisedly—if in any case when the subject wished to appeal—and I am not using in any way offensive words—against an assessment which is considered to be grossly excessive the mere fact of his death should shut out those who would benefit from the appeal from prosecuting it", Smith v. Williams, 8 Tax Cases 321.

A reference before the High Court is not a suit and no question of abatement therefore arises. The High Court has to deal with a reference which it has to decide whether or not the assessee or his heirs appear before it. Further the heirs are directly interested in the result of a reference since they are entitled to any refund of tax; and even if the proceeding before the High Court had been a suit and the question of parties material, the Court would not decide the question without hearing Counsel for the heirs at least as amici curiae. The Patna High Court therefore heard the arguments on behalf of the heirs in the Darbhangra case, 9 Pat. 240; so also, the Allahabad High Court in In re Kesarlal Makundilal, 1941 I.T.R. 193.

Points of law not raised in first instance.—Parties requiring decisions on questions of law under this section should formulate them in a proper manner. The parties have no right to expect the Court to deduce from the application of the parties what the questions in their minds may have been. It is not open therefore to an assessee merely to ask for a reference to the High Court without at the same time precisely setting out the questions of law desired to be referred, Debidas Mandanlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 7 I.T.C. 132 (Luck.). If, however, in the opinion of the Tribunal, there is a question of law it is under no obligation to refuse a reference merely because the assessee or the Commissioner has not formulated it properly, but may itself frame the correct question and refer it, cf., In re Krishna Kumar Ghose, 5 I.T.C. 295 (Cal.).

Even if the application for a reference has been made in time, supplementary questions of law cannot be raised after the time has expired, In re Raghunath das Seolal, 139 I.C. 599 (Cal.).

If the Tribunal holds that there is no point of law, the assessee or the Commissioner has to satisfy the High Court that a distinct point of law was raised before the Tribunal and treated by it as a question of fact. The High Court will not listen to suggested points of law which were not first taken in the original proceedings and also submitted clearly and definitely on appeal.

or in the application for a reference under section 66 (1), cf., In re Makhan Lal Ram Sarup, 1 I.T.C. 416; Tiruvengada Mudaliar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 27 L.W. 729; 2 I.T.C. 514; A. K. A. C. T. V. Chettiyar Firm, 3 I.T.C. 213; In re Radhey Lal Balmukund, 52 All. 991; Husseinbhai Muham-madhbhai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind, 5 I.T.C. 31; In re Lalla Mal Hardeodas, 1 I.T.C. 266; S. A. S. Subbiah Iyer v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 53 M. 510; Manbhumi Transport Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 6 I.T.C. 203; Neki Devi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1934 I.T.R. 365. A question not raised before the Tribunal cannot be said to arise out of its appellate order under section 33, cf., Jamnadas Potdar & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1935 I.T.R. 112; In re Chanan Devi, 1944 I.T.R. 153 (Lah.).

Similarly, if a number of points be taken before the Tribunal but only one point made in the application to the High Court under section 66 (2), the Tribunal need refer to the High Court that point only and cannot be made to refer other points, cf., In re Ishardas Dharamchand, 2 I.T.C. 12.

Regarding the United Kingdom Act, which says: "the High Court shall hear and determine any question or questions of law arising on the case. . . . (section 149, Act of 1918), Atkin, L.J., said in Attorney-General v. Armayo and others, 9 Tax Cases 445:—

"No doubt there may be a point of law in respect of which the facts have not been sufficiently found, and if that point of law was not raised below at all so as to require further facts on either side the Court may very well refuse to give effect to it, and either party may have precluded themselves by their conduct from raising in the Court of Appeal the point of law which they deliberately refrained from raising down below. . . . But . . . if the point of law or the erroneous nature of the determination of the point of law is apparent on the case as stated, and there are no further facts to be found, it appears to me that the Court can give effect to the law."

The High Court is seized only of such questions as are raised by the Tribunal. If, therefore, the Tribunal agrees to refer only some of the questions raised by the assessee or the Commissioner, the party should move the High Court within the time allowed by section 66 (2) in respect of the questions on which the Tribunal does not agree to make a reference. The party cannot afterwards argue that there can be no such thing as a partial statement of a case, and that he can therefore raise before the High Court, in the course of the reference made by the Tribunal, points that the latter has not referred, though the party raised them before the Tribunal, Radhakishan and Sons v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 3 I.T.C. 73; P. K. N. P. R. Chettiyar Firm's case (Burma), 4 I.T.C. 340; Burjorjee v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 270. In considering a reference, the High Court is not competent to consider questions not referred by the Tribunal. In re The National Tannery, 1941 I.T.R. 618 (All.); Special Manager, Court of Wards v. Commissioner of Income-tax (Oudh), 1945 I.T.R. 94; Raja Mustafa Ali Khan, (ibid.), 1945 I.T.R. 98.

According to the Allahabad High Court in Shiva Prasad Gupta v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 406, the provision in sub-section (4) under which the Court may refer back the case to the Commissioner if the statements are insufficient to enable the Court to determine the question raised thereby, i.e., by the case, makes it clear that it is for the Court to find out what is the real point of law in issue between the assessee and the Income-tax authorities. There is nothing in the section to suggest that the duties of the High Court are confined to answering the question of law put to it by the Tribunal irrespective of whether it is the real question at issue between the Income-tax authorities and the assessee. Therefore, though the Tribunal would ordinarily frame the points of law and refer them, it is for the High Court to determine what questions arise, i.e., to "re-settle the issues" as it were. It is unnecessary to call for a fresh statement of the case under section 66 (4) if the statement submitted by the Tribunal is sufficient to enable the Court to determine the real questions of law in dispute. This view has been followed in several other cases, Kajormal Kalyanmal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 4 I.T.C. 50; In re Bhatuk Prasad Khetri, 5 I.T.C. 138; In re Ganga Sagar, 53 All. 351; In re Bhagwati Prasad, 54 All. 496; 6 I.T.C. 105; National Mutual Life Association v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 55 Bom. 637; Narayan Atmaram Patkar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1934 I.T.R. 486; Shaw Wallace & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 59 I.A. 206; Gangaram Balmukund v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 464; Kunwar Kartar Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1937 I.T.R. 569; Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Indian Relief and Benefit Insurance Co., 1939 I.T.R. 341; Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Central Popular Assurance Co., 1939 I.T.R. 293. The Court will not however consider points not already placed before the authorities, In re Radhey Lal Balmukund, 4 I.T.C. 454 (All.).

According to the Madras High Court in S. A. S. Subbiah Aiyar's case, 58 M.L.J. 581, the decision in Shivaprasad Gupta's case does not mean that the assessee (or the Commissioner) is entitled to argue any question of law which may arise out of the assessment and which he has not asked the Tribunal to refer to the High Court but merely means that the High Court can, if it chooses, alter the questions referred by the Tribunal or reject them altogether and decide the real questions of law at issue between the Commissioner and the assessee at the time when application was made to the Tribunal to refer the question or questions.

According to the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur in the case of Jainarain Motiram, 3 I.T.C. 255, the assessee was under no duty to formulate questions of law, it was sufficient if he indicated that the order in dispute gave rise to questions of law, and therefore he may raise questions before the High Court under sub-section (3) which had not been raised before the Tribunal under sub-section (1); and the Judicial Commissioners of Sind held that the Court was bound neither by the questions raised by the assessee nor by those raised by the Tribunal, Khemchand Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind, 1934 I.T.R. 216.

However, in view of the emphatic manner in which the Privy Council have deprecated departures from the regular procedure under which it is for the Tribunal to state formally the questions that arise and for the High Court to decide the questions of law so raised, Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1933 I.T.R. 94, all that can be inferred from the various rulings referred to above is that if the questions as framed by either party do not clearly represent the real issues relating to the facts found by the Tribunal, the Court can clarify the issues by reframing the questions but not in such a manner as to raise entirely new questions not raised before the Tribunal or to need new findings of facts (or evidence). The authorities were reviewed by Page, C.J., in C.P.L.E. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 1934 I.T.R. 201, when he reaffirmed the view that the Court was seized only of such questions as had been raised by or been before the Tribunal and on which it had expressed an opinion. Otherwise either party could raise practically any question before the Court leaving it to the latter to unearth some question of law. According to the Lahore High Court, it is not open to it when disposing of a reference from the Tribunal either to ask to submit other questions or to formulate other questions and answer them, Sonaram Nihalchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1934 I.T.R. 489.

When the High Court has ordered a reference under section 66 (2) and not modified the questions of law as raised by the party, the Tribunal is bound to refer the questions in the form raised by the party, Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P. v. Beharilall Ramchandra, 1937 I.T.R. 417. It has been suggested, Mohanlal Hardeodas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 9 Pat. 192, that if in an order refusing a reference to the High Court the Tribunal refers not only to the time-bar but also to questions of law, it is open to the High Court to consider the points of law in so far as the High Court is otherwise competent under the Income-tax Act to consider them.

Where the questions raised in the application under sub-section (2) rest on wrong assumptions and do not really arise out of the orders of the Tribunal the latter will not be ordered to make a reference. Istefa Khan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1942 I.T.R. 435 (Oudh).

In any event, an assessee is not entitled to obtain mere obiter dicta, Kunwarji Ananda v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 11 Pat. 187.

Whether a reference is made under sub-section (1) or under sub-section (2), the questions to be considered by the Court start with the questions raised by the assessee (or the Commissioner) as their basis. The Tribunal may give these questions a proper shape when making the reference, and if it refuses a reference, the High Court may, if it orders a reference, give at that stage a proper shape to the questions ordered to be referred. So far as the substance is concerned, the Court is confined to the statement of case drawn up by the Tribunal and the questions raised thereby.

Any assumptions of fact made by the High Court when ordering a reference will not bind the Tribunal who may point out the mistake when making the reference, and the mistaken assumptions will not bind the High Court when it eventually disposes of the reference, and the Court will not answer the questions of law arising out of such assumptions, Seth Gurmukh Singh, etc., v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 393 (Lah.).

Opinion of the Tribunal.—Before the Tribunal was set up references to the High Court, arose mostly out of appellate orders of the Assistant Commissioner, and only occasionally out of appellate or revisional orders of the Commissioner, but the referring authority in all cases was the Commissioner, who, in making a reference, had to state his own opinion on the questions referred. In respect of references arising out of his own orders, the provision that he should state his opinion was superfluous. There is no similar provision in section 66 now since only the Tribunal can make a reference and all references arise out of its own orders, which ex hypothesi already contain its opinion.

Remission.—As regards the unnecessary remission of a case under section 66 (4), the Privy Council observed that “the High Court will be well advised to require, before they seek to entertain any question under the section, always to see that the preliminary statutory requirements of the section are strictly complied with”, Trustees Corporation (India), Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 151.

If the case is framed by the Tribunal in disregard of the party's suggestions regarding the inclusion of questions, it would be open to the High Court to remit the case to the Tribunal for amendment of the questions. But where the party has failed to raise questions in the first instance before the Tribunal, he cannot raise them subsequently before the High Court, Martin v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 17 A.T.C. 513 (C.S.).

If the High Court feels that the Tribunal has not considered the true question of fact, e.g., whether a debt alleged to be bad was a trading debt or not and if so whether it could be recovered and to what extent, it will remit the case to the Tribunal, Kensington Palace Mansions, Ltd. v. Tillet, 17 A.T.C. 338 (K.B.D.).

Order to state case—Cannot be subsequently challenged.—If the High Court has directed the Tribunal to state a case, it is not open to another Bench of the Court to question the validity of the order, Trikamjee Jiwandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1 I.T.C. 406; Khemchand Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind, 1934 I.T.R. 216; The Tribunal Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1944 I.T.R. 370 (Lah.). But this does not affect the right of appeal, if any, of the party in cases of refusal by a single Judge to order the Tribunal to state a case: see Toharmal Uttamchand, 2 I.T.C. 301 and other cases under section 66-A.

The competency of a Court to issue a mandamus should be questioned before the mandamus is issued, and not when the reference is actually heard, Gokal Chand Jagan Nath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 180; Dinanath Hemraj v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 306 (All.). On the other hand, having issued an order under section 66 (2) to state a case, the Court may eventually decide after considering the case, that it has no jurisdiction, Somchand Malukchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 297.

High Court—When functus officio.—In Ramgopal Moolchand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1 I.T.C. 416, it was held that the Court having once exercised its discretion and fixed the costs was functus officio and could not re-open the matter. Questions relating to costs should therefore be discussed before orders are passed under section 66 (6).

Application for reference—Delay in.—The Tribunal has no power to condone delay if the party does not present his application for a reference within the time allowed; nor can the High Court condone delay at that stage, In re Lala Ganesh Prasad, 1942 I.T.R. 286 (All.); Official Receiver, Ramnad v. Income-tax Officer, 1945 I.T.R. 112 (Mad.). Similarly the High Court also had at one time no power to condone delays in respect of applications under section 66 (2), Lakshmi Sevak Sahu v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 6 I.T.C. 142; but sub-section 7 (A), added in 1933, gives that power now in respect of applications to it. Rulings to the contrary relate to an earlier period.

As to how limitation should be computed, see section 67-A.

In Edwards v. Roberts, (1891) 1 Q.B. 302, a case in the United Kingdom under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, 20 & 21 Vict., c. 43, in which the notice and copy of the case were not given within the prescribed time, it was held that the High Court had no jurisdiction to hear the reference. In Aspinall v. Sutton, (1894) 2 Q.B. 349, another case under the same Act, it was held that the case must be lodged at the proper office within the prescribed time, see also Dickinson & Co. v. Mayes, (1910) 1 K.B. 452; Holland v. Peacock, (1912) 1 K.B. 154 and Godman v. Crofton, (1914) 3 K.B. 803.

Fee—Payment of—Condition precedent to reference.—If the fee is not sent in, the application is not valid, and the Tribunal need not take any action. No fee is payable by the Commissioner if he asks for a reference. In England, the fee is only 20 shillings.

Fee—Separate for each assessee.—It is not competent for separately assessed persons to combine their applications for a case stated in one document. If they are separately assessed, the case for each must be stated separately, and a fee of Rs. 100 paid for each case, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Ganga Razu, 2 I.T.C. 199; 50 Mad. 335; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 545.

Fee—Whether for each point or for each reference.—The fee of Rs. 100 (or lesser sum prescribed) is on account of each reference and not on account of each point of law in a reference, A. R. A. R. S. M. Chockalingam Chetty v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1 I.T.C. 392; 2 Rang. 579. "Any question of law" means "any question or questions of law"—see General Clauses Act (X of 1897).

Refund of fee.—The proviso to sub-section (1) comes into operation only if the Tribunal refers to state a case on the ground that no question of law is involved. The fee will be refunded only if the application is withdrawn. So, an assessee, who asks for the refund of the fee and receives it, cannot afterwards move the High Court under sub-section (2). In re Rai Sahib Ram Dayal Agharwala, 1942 I.T.R. 93 (All.), even by making a fresh deposit of fee. Wazir Ali Ishabhai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 1943 I.T.R. 179; Ghulam Din & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1942 I.T.R. 89 (All.).

Even after the High Court have decided questions of law under section 66, it is open to the Income-tax Officer to make an additional assessment under section 34. He cannot, however, withhold refund of tax pending such assessment, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. The Bombay Trust Corporation, Ltd., 1936 I.T.R. 323; (1937) 1 M.L.J. 200; 60 Bom. 900. The only authority that can order the withholding of refund is the High Court itself acting under the proviso to sub-section (7).

Section 37.—The Appellate Tribunal cannot find new facts after receiving an application under section 66 (1); and there is therefore no need for the extension of section 37 to such proceedings, section 37 being applicable to proceedings under Chapter IV (Deductions and Assessment) only.

Procedure—Form of case—Points raised.—The form of the case and the procedure for stating it and hearing it is regulated by Rules of High Courts. As observed by Sankey, J., in Smith v. Williams, 8 Tax Cases 321; (1922) 1 K.B. 158, it is open to the High Court to mould the procedure when the Act makes no provision.

As to the way in which a case is to be presented, the following dicta may be noted. The allusions to the Commissioner who formerly made the reference apply with equal force to the Tribunal now.

In Jatharam Jankidas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1944 I.T.R. 344, the Patna High Court desired that the 'paper book' in a reference should ordinarily include the assessment order of the Income-tax Officer, the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner, the order of the Tribunal under section 33, the application of the assessee under, section 66 (1), the statement of case by the Tribunal, the order of the High Court if it had ordered the Tribunal to state a case and other relevant papers which the Tribunal or either party, the assessee or the Commissioner, may consider relevant.

In Hanmantram Ramnath v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1945 I.T.R. 203, the Bombay High Court deprecated the mixing up of allegations of fact and statements of fact with arguments and questions of law. There should either be a paragraph or paragraphs in the case itself setting out the findings of fact as such or if such findings have been properly set out in the judgment, they could be incorporated in the case by reference to the relevant paragraphs in the judgment. The duty to find facts lies on the Tribunal; and it has to state those facts and the questions of law arising out of them.

The Privy Council deprecate the statement of questions of law in an abstract form divorced from the facts of the particular case under consideration, Raja Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 101; 60 I.A. 133; 12 Pat. 305; 1933 I.T.R. 113; In re Charusila Dasi, 1937 I.T.R. 1 (Cal.). In Bihar v. Haribhajan Das, 1942 I.T.R. 399, a case under the Bihar Agricultural Income-tax Act, with provisions closely akin to section 66 of the Indian Income-tax Act, the High Court pointed out that it could not itself find facts, and that the Board of Agricultural Income-tax must not therefore refer a bare question of law without setting out the relevant facts. The case was therefore returned to the Board for resubmission with the appropriate facts. The Privy Council have also said that, for convenience of reference, the questions of law should be assembled and numbered consecutively at the end of the stated case, Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 1933 I.T.R. 94. Two or more questions should not be combined and rolled up in the form of one question, In re Gopiram Gobindram, 1936 I.T.R. 157; I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal. 697. The Bombay High Court, in In re Maharaja of Patiala v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1943 I.T.R. 202, deprecated the putting of questions in a negative form.

" . . . a statement of a case under section 66 ought to be drawn up in such a form as to state with precision and in a condensed form (the usual and most convenient practice is to do so in numbered paragraphs) all the facts and proceedings in chronological order which have led to the question of law arising. The statement of facts ought to be framed in such a form as, whilst stating completely and impartially every relevant fact, to show what is the question of law to which such statement of facts has given birth. To use a colloquial illustration, the statement of facts is the matrix, the question of law is the product, and the statement should conclude by framing in the most clear and concise language the exact question of law and the section under which it arises," per Walsh, C.J., in In re Lachmandas Naraindas, 1 I.T.C. 378; 47 All. 68; A.I.R. 1925 All. 115.

"The case stated is in fact an argumentative expression of his opinion as to the law to be applied in the course of which certain facts incidentally appear. It is his first duty to state clearly and fully the material facts admitted or proved in evidence before him. To adopt any other course must in most cases result in embarrassment and uncertainty when the matter comes before the Court for its decision, the Court being bound by the findings of fact arrived at", per Dawson Miller, C.J., in Raja Shivaprasad v. Crown, 1 I.T.C. 384; 4 Pat. 73.

"It is the duty of the Commissioner to find all the relevant facts he is required above all things to state the facts upon which the questions of law must be decided", per Rankin, C.J., in Ananda Mohan Saha's case, 3 I.T.C. 1.

The Commissioner should state specifically what facts are admitted or proved. Merely quoting the submissions of the parties is insufficient. He must not make any mis-statement; and if he does so, they are not binding on the Court, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Remington Typewriter Co., 3 I.T.C. 166; 52 Bom. 726. His findings of fact should be definite and adequate, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Ahmedabad New Cotton Mills Co., 3 I.T.C. 91; 52 Bom. 669; A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 510. When a question was formed in the following manner, viz., "whether on the facts of the case the sum of was rightly included in the assessment" the High Court returned the proceedings to the Commissioner and asked him to state more specifically the particular point of law that arose. It is not for the Court to investigate the facts for the purpose of finding out if some point of law could be extracted and then to determine it, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. V. S. A. R. Firm, 1935 I.T.R. 64. The use of the words 'in the circumstances of the case' without a more precise reference to the circumstances is to be deprecated since it casts on the Court the duty of searching out the circumstances on which the questions are founded, Punjab Co-operative Bank v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1938 I.T.R. 355.

A question of law should be so framed as to enable the Court hearing the reference to decide on the facts what is the answer to the question. It should not be so framed as to assume hypotheses compelling an answer in one way only when the hypotheses themselves have to be tested. Chengalvaraya Chetti's case, 2 I.T.C. 14; 48 Mad. 836; A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1242.

An order on an application for a case to be stated should be separate from the case stated to the High Court. The former will give reasons as to why the Commissioner refers a point to the High Court or refuses to do so, while the other will confine itself to the actual points referred, In re Krishna Kumar Ghose, 5 I.T.C. 295; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 513.

Per Lord Sumner in Lysaght v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1928) A.C. 234; 13 Tax Cases 511. "It is certainly much to be wished that the Commissioners should be scrupulously careful to say that they 'find' a conclusion of fact, arrived at from other facts found, or if they only mean to apply the law as they understand it to be and not to draw any conclusion of fact, should say that they hold so and so in accordance with what they conceive to be the law, for a debate on the meaning of a case stated is an unsatisfactory prelude to a debate on the general law applicable."

" Their determinations of questions of pure fact are not to be disturbed, any more than are the findings of a jury, unless it should appear that there was no evidence before them upon which they, as reasonable men, could come to the conclusion to which they have come: and this, even though the Court of Review would on the evidence have come to a conclusion entirely different from theirs. With their rulings upon questions of law it is entirely different. The Court of Review is quite entitled, indeed, I think, bound, to overrule their decisions if they think them erroneous. What I have many times in this House protested against is the attempt to secure for a finding on a mixed question of law and fact the unassailability which belongs only to a finding on questions of pure fact. This is sought to be effected by styling the finding on a mixed question of law and fact a finding of fact. What is the proper construction of a statute, or of any other printed or written document, is a question of law

. . . . It is essential, therefore, that the Commissioners should when stating a case, clearly set forth the conclusions of law at which they have arrived, and separate and distinct from these, the conclusions of fact at which they have arrived. . . .", Per Lord Atkinson in Great Western Ry. Co. v. Bater, 8 Tax Cases 231; (1922) 2 A.C. 1.

"A case should not be so stated that one of the parties is ruled out by an averment that the Commissioners found as a fact something that is being raised as a point of law", Per Farwell, L.J., in New Zealand Shipping Co. v. Stephens, 5 Tax Cases 553.

" the Commissioners ought not to state either side out of Court by stating under the guise of fact that which is really law. But this does not mean that the Commissioners ought only to state the circumstances and leave the Court to draw its own conclusions of fact as well as law. The Commissioners are bound to find the facts. In finding the facts they are bound to act upon legal principles and upon evidence which in law can support their finding, and they should state their findings of fact; but if they are required to do so and if it be possible—sometimes it might not be—then I think they should, upon which they have come to that conclusion, in order that the Court may judge whether in law those circumstances afford any evidence for the conclusion of fact to which the Commissioners have come", Per Stern-dale, M.R., in New Zealand Shipping Co. v. Thew, 8 Tax Cases 208.

"No doubt there are many cases in which Commissioners, having had proved or admitted before them a series of facts, may derive therefrom further conclusions which are themselves conclusions of pure fact. But in such cases the determination in point of law is that the facts proved or admitted provide evidence to support the Commissioner's conclusion. I think it would tend to clearness and be in closer accord with the (law) if Commissioners in such a case would state that the question of law is whether the facts formed or admitted can support their further conclusions of fact. Per Viscount Simon in Bomford v. Osborne, 1942 I.T.R. 27 (sup.).

Admissions by parties.—The Income-tax Authorities are bound by their admissions, and the Court will not resurrect a question which has been answered by the Department itself in favour of the assessee, Chamber of Commerce, Hapur v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1936 I.T.R. 397; 58 All 1003. A case of this kind is, however, unlikely to arise now that the Commissioner's dual role has disappeared. Similar considerations would also apply to the admissions of the assessee.

Hypothetical questions.—The High Court will not answer academic questions, e.g., when the question will not recur so far as the assessee is concerned, and the assessee, in any event, is not entitled to or has no intention to claim a refund of tax already paid, Surpat Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 1943 I.T.R. 549; Khemji Walji & Co. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1945 I.T.R. 421.

Amendment—Case stated.—The practice in the United Kingdom is to permit the amendment of the case if both parties agree. But the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords will not permit any points to be raised which are not raised in the High Court in the first instance, see City of London Contract Corporation v. Styles, 2 Tax Cases 239; Apthorpe v. Peter Schoenhofen Brewing Co., 4 Tax Cases 41. In the same way, there is little doubt that in regard to cases in India the Privy Council will not take notice of a point not raised before the High Court.

Remission.—See the remarks of the Privy Council in the case of the Trustees Corporation, 57 I.A. 152; 54 Bom. 437; A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 151, deprecating the unnecessary remission of cases under sub-section (4).

Hearing—Right to begin.—In the absence of any rules on the subject made by a High Court the appellant, i.e., the party at whose instance the Tribunal makes the reference will be heard first; and also have the right of reply. Rulings given when the Commissioner was the referring authority are of little interest now.

Applications under section 66 (2).—According to the Rangoon High Court, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Kokine Diary, 1938 I.T.R. 502; A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 260 (F.B.), it would be wrong to require the appearance of the Counsel for the Commissioner (now, the other party) in the first instance in respect of such applications, as most of them do not raise any question of law and may be dismissed in limine. If after hearing the applicant, the Court desires to hear the Commissioner's Counsel, the case can be adjourned for hearing the latter.

Costs.—Broadly speaking, costs follow the event; and income-tax cases do not form an exception to the rule that the successful party recovers from the other party the costs necessary to enable him to place the case before the Court, see In re Jagannath Vasudeo Pandit, 45 Bom. 1177 and cases cited therein. Where the success is partial the Court will use its discretion. In Killing Valley Tea Co. v. Secretary of State, 1 I.T.C. 54; 48 Cal. 161 and Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Secretary of State, 1 I.T.C. 67; 48 Cal. 766 each party was made to bear its own costs as both parties advanced claims much beyond their rights. Where a subsequent admission by the Commissioner rendered an answer to the reference unnecessary, the Commissioner was made to pay costs, Champalal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 7 I.T.C. 148 (Nag.). Similarly where a reference was made by the Commissioner under a misapprehension of facts for which the assessee was responsible, the latter was made to pay costs, Barakumar Banja Ramcharan Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 6 I.T.C. 190. Varying amounts have been given by High Courts as costs, e.g., In re Aurangabad Mills, 1 I.T.C. 116; 45 Bom. 1286; see also Girtanlal Rasiklal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 7 I.T.C. 209, where costs were taxed as on the Original Side. On the other hand, Madras and Allahabad have allowed lump sums as costs.

High Courts usually include in costs the fee of Rs. 100 deposited under this section, In re Radhey Lal Balmukund, 4 I.T.C. 454; 52 All. 991, and the Allahabad High Court have ruled that if the assessee is awarded costs against the Crown without any exception the fee should be included in the costs, In re Lachmandas Baburam, 1933 I.T.R. 275; A.I.R. 1933 All. 853. While stating that in the absence of authority, it would have held the fee not to be part of the costs of the reference, the Rangoon High Court decided, to fall in line with the practice of Madras, Allahabad and Patna, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Milne, 1934 I.T.R. 28.

The authorities were reviewed by the Bombay High Court, in Manohar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1936 I.T.R. 417 and it was held that while the Court had no jurisdiction to order the refund of the fee as such and could deal with it only as part of costs, an order directing the Commissioner to pay costs should be held to include the return of the fee, as part of the costs of the assessee. When the assessee is ordered to pay costs, it would be open to the Court to give the Commissioner his costs less the fee of Rs. 100.

While a successful assessee would ordinarily be allowed his costs, including the refund of the fee of Rs. 100, an unsuccessful assessee would not, except on special grounds, be allowed credit for the fee of Rs. 100, which he would have to bear in addition to paying the full costs to the Commissioner, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Central Popular Assurance, Co., 1939 I.T.R. 556 (Sind); Mohammad Mohsin Manik Baksh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1940 I.T.R. 247 (Lah.).

As the discretion is given to the Court, it cannot be delegated to the Taxing Officer or other officer of the Court, see Lambton v. Parkinson (1886) 35 W.R. 545. It is only the discretion that cannot be delegated, and the Court may award costs on the usual scale, subject to check by the Taxing Officer. Where references are withdrawn at the instance of either party, costs are usually allowed to the other party. No court-fees are payable, Khemchand Ramdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax (Sind), 6 I.T.C. 360; A.I.R. 1933 Sind 148.

The proceedings relating to a reference start with the assessee's application under section 66 (1) and it is therefore open to the High Court to deal with all costs from that stage. So, in a proper case, the Taxing Master may allow the assessee, if he is allowed costs, the cost of advice in settling the application, and similarly, to the Commissioner, if he is given costs the costs of getting the reference settled by the Government Solicitor and Counsel. It is however discretionary to the Taxing Master to decide whether a case was of sufficient importance to justify the Commissioner in adopting this course, Sir Chinubhai Madhavlal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1938 I.T.R. 148. This ruling was given before the Appellate Tribunal was set up. In the United Kingdom, the Scottish Court disallowed costs for getting the case settled by the Commissioner—see Scottish Union and National Insurance Co. v. Inland Revenue, 26 Sc.L.R. 489, but the English Court allowed them on the ground that such costs save costs of the hearing—see Manchester Corporation v. Sugden; Gresham Life Insurance Co. v. Bishop, 4 Tax Cases 595.

Costs in respect of applications under section 66 (2) should ordinarily be settled with reference to whether there was a question of law and not with reference to the ultimate success on the question of law after a reference is made, Central Talkies Circuit v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 41 Bom.L.R. 919; 1939 I.T.R. 629; Dhanrajmal Chitandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind, 1942 I.T.R. 384. An assessee, whose application under section 66 (2) has been dismissed by the High Court and who has been ordered to bear the costs of the case cannot claim that the costs be met out of the deposit of Rs. 100, Balchand Jiwandas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind, 1942 I.T.R. 507.

Costs—Resident agents of non-residents.—In re Wilcock v. Pinto & Co., 9 Tax Cases 111, under section 4 (1), the point was raised in the United Kingdom whether an order for costs could be made against the resident agent of a non-resident assessee. It was contended on behalf of the agent that the payment of the duty in question could not be enforced against the agent, and, therefore no order for costs could be made against him. The Court of Appeal held that the possibility of enforcing the duty against the agent was not in issue before them, and that so far as they were concerned, the appellant on the case stated by the Commissioners was the resident agent and that the Court were only concerned with the appellant as so stated, namely, the resident agent.

Privy Council—Costs.—See section 66-A and notes thereunder.

Security for Refund.—It is not open to the Commissioner, when making a refund of tax as a consequence of a decision of the High Court adverse to him, to ask the assessee to give security for payment of tax again if an appeal by the Commissioner to the Privy Council succeeds or if the Commissioner finds it possible, on further enquiries, to arrange for a re-assessment, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Bombay Trust Corporation, 1936 I.T.R. 323; 60 Bom. 900; (1937) 1 M.L.J. 200 (P.C.).

The High Court, however, may permit the Commissioner to postpone refund till the appeal to the Privy Council is disposed of. The section gives no right to the assessee to be heard in this connection.

Interest.—In the United Kingdom, the interest paid to the assessee on the tax refunded is fixed by the High Court; here, it is fixed by the Commissioner. The Commissioner has a discretion in the matter, and unless he acts flagrantly against "equity and good conscience" no Court can interfere with his discretion. The rate must obviously depend inter alia on the market rate of interest from time to time.

Jurisdiction—Original or appellate.—In Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Secretary of State, 1 I.T.C. 67; 48 Cal. 766 the Calcutta High Court held that, though when hearing a reference it really performed the functions of a Court of Appeal, the test for the purpose of right of audience of Counsel, Attorneys, etc., should be the residence of the assessee or his place of business. Therefore, if such residence or place was outside the limits of original jurisdiction of the Court, only Vakils and not Attorneys, could appear. In Raja Probhat Chandra Barua's case, 1 I.T.C. 414; 52 Cal. 546, the same Court suggested that income-tax cases came neither under the original nor the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, but under a special jurisdiction. The Court has since made rules under which all references under the Income-tax Act are dealt with by a Special Bench, before whom Vakils and Attorneys can appear. In connection with an appeal to the Privy Council, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Hungerford Investment Trust, 1935 I.T.R. 188; 62 Cal. 671 (see notes under section 66-A) the same Court decided that Income-tax cases came under the High Court's "special" jurisdiction—neither "original" nor "appellate."

The Madras High Court held in Chief Commissioner of Income-tax v. North Anantapur Gold Mines, 1 I.T.C. 133; 44 Mad. 718, that the Court exercises original jurisdiction in deciding income-tax references; but this view was not accepted by the Privy Council—see Alcock Ashdown case, 1 I.T.C. 221; 50 I.A. 227; 47 Bom. 742.

In In re Aurangabad Mills, Ltd., 1 I.T.C. 119; 45 Bom. 1286, the Bombay High Court held that, in view of the fact that the reference is made by an officer within the local limits of the original jurisdiction of the Court, costs should be given on the Original Side scale.

Decision of High Court—How far binding.—Neither the Commissioner nor the assessee can go back on the High Court's judgment under section 66 (5) except by appealing against it in accordance with section 66-A, Tehri case, 1934 I.T.R. 1; 61 I.A. 1.

Every case should be reassessed in the light of the High Court's orders after notice to the assessee. It is not enough to say that a material alteration in the figure of assessment is not expected and that therefore no reassessment need be made, Basant Rai v. Secretary of State, 5 I.T.C. 441; A.I.R. 1932 All. 372. As to the extent that the Commissioner should reopen assessments declared wrong by the High Court, see Tribunal Trust v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 370 which, however, relates to a period when, under section 33 (as it stood) there was no limit of time within which the Commissioner could exercise his revisional powers. Under section 33-A, now, if an application for revision is presented in time, the Commissioner must set aside assessments which have been subsequently found to be wrong in the light of decisions of the High Court or the Privy Council.

The Commissioner is evidently under no obligation to re-open the cases of other assesseees unless they are within time to appeal under section 30 and do so appeal.

Authorities in different provinces differing on facts.—The Income-tax authorities in a province are not bound by the findings of fact of the authorities in another; and if they differ, no question of law arises merely because of the difference, L. R. M. S. T. Chettiyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 3 I.T.C. 416.

Delay in appeals.—No question of law arises in connection with non-condonation of delay in presenting an appeal, and therefore no reference lies to the High Court, Kasi Chettyar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 98, but a reference can arise as to whether the time bar had been rightly applied or not, for the correct application of the time bar may be a question of law.

Facts of preceding years.—In regard to questions like residence, though the question of each year's liability is a separate issue, the facts over a period of years may be taken into account in order to get a clear picture as to the position in the year in question. See per Lord Sumner in Levene v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1928) A.C. 217; 13 Tax Cases 486. Even facts relating to subsequent years can be relevant.

High Court bound by findings of fact.—It is not open to the High Court to consider the facts and then order the Commissioner to alter his findings of fact and then refer the questions of law that arise. That is to say, the Commissioner's findings of fact must be accepted, and only such questions of law considered as arise from the findings of fact, In re Binjaj Hukamchand, 5 I.T.C. 303 (Cal.). The fact that some other findings of fact might give rise to other questions of law gives no jurisdiction to the High Court to consider such questions of law, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Ar. Ar. S. M. Somasundaram Chettiar, 2 I.T.C. 61. It is not open to an assessee, in any case, to omit to produce relevant evidence before the Income-tax Officer and then to raise questions of law depending on the investigation of this evidence, In re Baldeodas Ramesvar, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 761; 5 I.T.C. 476.

Findings of fact will ordinarily be presumed to be complete, and the case will not be remitted back to the Commissioner for further findings unless there are obvious lacunae, T. S. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 50 Mad. 847; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 732.

"The Court has no jurisdiction to consider the findings of fact arrived at by an Income-tax authority and it is immaterial whether the grounds stated for these findings are sound or unsound or whether no reasons at all have been stated," per Carr, J., in E. M. Chettyar Firm's case, 4 I.T.C. 464; A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 224.

"Mr. Scrutton in his very excellent argument suggested that the facts were all wrong. Well, they may be all wrong. I cannot help it. The only thing sent to us is these facts, and it is points of law upon these facts that we have to decide," per A. L. Smith, L.J., in Apthorpe v. Peter Schoenhofen, Brewing Co., 4 Tax Cases 41; see also Sungel Rinching Rubber Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 133 L.T. 670.

"It is not a question of what was before the Commissioners, but what the facts were. You cannot escape paying income-tax because some one raised a wrong question before the Commissioners," per Lord Esher, M. R., in Blake v. Imperial Brazilian Ry., 2 Tax Cases 58.

If there had been a misunderstanding the Court may strain a point to put it right; and if the Commissioner fails to include or to allude sufficiently to some topic that was brought before him by evidence, the Court may agree to put that right but it will not remit a case for findings on additional facts in respect of which the assessee led no evidence before the Revenue officers, Bird & Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 785; 1925 S.C. 188.

"Counsel for the assessee argues that we are not entitled to look beyond the Commissioner's specific findings of fact, and that if they are not sufficient to justify his opinion, we must either refer the case back or decide in favour of the assessee. . . . The point of law to be decided is not a hypothetical point but a specific point raised by the facts of the particular case. The documents and proceedings annexed to the statement of the case are annexed for our consideration and we are entitled to look at them. To shut our eyes to them because there is no specific reference to them in the body of the statement appears to me to be a trifle pedantic", per Panckridge, J., in In re George & Co., 1937 I.T.R. 12; I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 7.

Where a Commissioner was asked to state a case regarding the admissibility of certain deductions from the taxable income, and he determined on the evidence before him whether the various items in dispute ought to be allowed as deductions or not, it was held that Commissioner's decision was one of fact on the evidence before him and that there was no question of law for the High Court to consider, Dr. R. N. Singha v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 188.

Fact and law.—As to the difference between 'fact' and 'law', and the extent to which the High Court is bound by the findings of the Tribunal, the following dicta may be referred to:

To draw an inference of fact from evidence before you is not a question of law at all. The inference is a question of fact just as much as the direct evidence of fact, per Lord Esher in R. v. Special Commissioners of Income-tax (In re G. Fletcher), 3 Tax Cases 289; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. E. M. Chettiyar Firm, 4 I.T.C. 111; 7 Rang. 635; A.I.R. 1930 Rang 4. Whether a fact has been proved, when evidence for and against it has been admitted, is necessarily a pure question of fact, Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury v. Shukur Sheikh, 46 Cal. 189 (P.C.).

If the Commissioners have misconstrued a section of an Act, or have not done or applied their minds to doing that which the section directed, or if it is clearly shown that they have included, in coming to their result, some element—where the result is one of money and value—which they ought not to have included, or vice versa, an appeal to the High Court will lie, P and O. Steam Navigation Co. v. Leslie, 4 Tax Cases 177.

The facts of a case are not before the Court in the matter of proof, but they are before it in the matter of findings, Macpherson & Co. v. Moore, 6 Tax Cases, 107.

The proper inferences to be drawn from admitted facts may involve legal considerations, and questions of law and fact being sometimes difficult to disentangle the Court has the right to say whether the Income-tax Officer has misdirected himself on the facts, Scottish Provident Institution v. Allan, 4 Tax Cases 409, Subbiah Iyer v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 4 I.T.C. 345; 53 Mad. 510; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 449; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Zaveri, 1937 I.T.R. 664 (following certain Privy Council rulings). The proper effect of a proved fact is a question of law. Dhannalal v. Motisagar, (1927) I.L.R. 8 Lah. 573 (P.C.);

Sardar Indra Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1943 I.T.R. 16; Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. The Shanmugham Rubber Estate, 1945 I.T.R. 329.

Though stated as a point of law the Court may declare it to be one of fact, Metropolitan Water Board v. Kingston Union Assessment Committee, (1925) 2 K.B. 529, and a mere question of fact cannot be converted into one of law by merely asking whether as a matter of law the officer came to a correct conclusion on a matter of fact, Commissioner of Income-tax, C.P. v. Laxminarain Badridas, 1937 I.T.R. 170 (P.C.); Manohardas Munnial v. Secretary of State, 1945 I.T.R. 356 (All.).

Whether on the facts stated, the case falls under a particular section or not is obviously a question of law; and it is always open to an assessee who desires to argue the legal consequences of facts to require a reference as to whether the Commissioner has attributed in law the correct legal consequences of the facts he has found, Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. Zaveri, 1937 I.T.R. 664; Commissioner of Income-tax, Sind v. Central Popular Assurance Co., 1939 I.T.R. 293.

If the Commissioners find something as a fact, the Court is entitled to look and see whether there were materials on which they could properly find it, English Crown Spelter Co. v. Baker, 5 Tax Cases 327; American Thread Co. v. Joyce, 6 Tax Cases 163; Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. E. M. Chettyar Firm, 4 I.T.C. 111; 7 Rang. 635; A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 4.

On the other hand, if the insufficiency of materials is due to the neglect of the assessee, the insufficiency cannot be used in order to throw over a question of fact the cloak of law, Ramanatha Reddiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 3 I.T.C. 10; 6 Rang. 175; A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 152.

The High Court will not declare the findings of fact by the Tribunal as altogether vitiated so long as there are materials to support the finding, apart from confidential materials not communicated to the assessee, Seth Gurmukh Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 1944 I.T.R. 393.

If the Commissioners find a fact, the High Court cannot question it unless there is no evidence to support it. If, however, the Commissioners state the evidence which was before them, and add that upon such evidence they hold that certain results follow, it is open to the Court to say whether the evidence justified what the Commissioners held, Bonner v. Basset Mines, 6 Tax Cases 146; American Thread Co. v. Joyce, 6 Tax Cases 163.

The decision of the Commissioners must not be inconsistent with their own findings of fact; and if it is, the Court will interfere on the ground that they have misdirected themselves. Having found, for example, that an item of expenditure, viz., cost of acquisition of a site and buildings was exclusively laid out for the assessee's trade, they cannot simultaneously hold that the item relates to some other trade (i.e., of letting premises) merely because the assessee sub-let a part of the buildings which he found surplus and thus reduced his loss, Allied Newspapers v. Hindley, 16 A.T.C. 410 (C.A.). Similarly they cannot, in arriving at a conclusion, assume a fact which they have not found, Scammell and Nephew, Ltd. v. Rowles, 17 A.T.C. 324 (K.B.).

"It is, as a rule, a point of law whether there is evidence on which a certain finding of fact can be made. If the true question of law is whether, on the evidence, it was possible for the Commissioners to come to a certain conclusion of fact, the assessee may request the Court to send the case back, in order that the facts proved before the Commissioners may be set out to enable the assessee to raise the point of law whether it was possible, on such facts or such evidence, to come to the conclusion of fact. But this objection to a case must be taken in limine," Fletcher-Moulton, L.J., in New Zealand Shipping Co. v. Stephens, 5 Tax Cases 553.

"That would be a question of law, a question of evidence or no evidence; but if there is any evidence at all, then it is for the Commissioners and not for the Court," per Farewell, L.J., (ibid.).

"I only say with regard to the finding of the Commissioners that it seems to be based entirely upon a misapprehension, and therefore I cannot look upon their finding as a distinct finding upon a question of fact, upon which there is no appeal. I think I have all the facts before me and can determine what is the proper conclusion of law to be drawn from them," per Bray, J., in Merchiston Steamship Co. v. Turner, 5 Tax Cases 520.

"It is undoubtedly true that, if the Commissioners find a fact, it is not open to this Court to question that finding unless there is no evidence to support it. If, however, the Commissioners state the evidence which was before them and add that, upon such evidence, they hold that certain results followed, I think it is open, and was intended by the Commissioners that it should be open, to the Court to say whether the evidence justified what the Commissioners held. . . . They have carefully stated the evidence, but they have not, in my opinion, to use the words found in one of the authorities, 'stated the appellants out of Court' ". . . , per Cozens Hardy, M.R., in Stanley v. Gramophone and Typewriter, Ltd., 5 Tax Cases 358; (1908) 2 K.B. 89; see also per Hamilton, J., in American Thread Co. v. Joyce, 6 Tax Cases 1.

"Now, the question where an artificial person like a Corporation resides is clearly not a pure question of fact. It would not be so even in the case of an individual. It is a pure question of fact whether an individual was in a house on a particular day or on a particular series of days, but you cannot say whether those acts or presence are sufficient to make him a resident in that house until you know what in the eye of the law is sufficient and is necessary to constitute residence. If that is true of an individual, it must be still more evidently true in the case of a Corporation in which the word 'residence' cannot in any very natural sense be applied. The question of pure fact must be decided in the same way whatever be the system of law in force, and whatever be the purpose for which it is necessary to decide it; but when you come to a question of residence it is easily conceivable that, under different systems of law, there might be different requisites to constitute residence, and even under the same system of law, residence for one purpose might be proved under certain circumstances which would not constitute residence for another purpose. We therefore have here to see what are the findings of pure fact, and then we have to apply to those the proper legal principles in order to see whether the true deduction from those facts is that this Company resided in the realm.

"Now, in finding questions of pure fact, the tribunal is a tribunal without appeal. It is perfectly true that if it finds facts where there is no evidence, that becomes a matter of law, and we can set aside the finding, but I cannot doubt that there was evidence to support the findings and therefore they must be accepted by us legally and without criticism," per Fletcher Moulton, L.J., in The American Thread Co. v. Joyce, 6 Tax Cases 1.

Where what the Commissioner says he has found as facts is actually a series of conclusions which are founded partly on pure facts and partly inferences which he has drawn from these facts (as to the character of certain payments), it is open to, and the duty of, the Court to examine whether the Commissioner's findings follow from his premises, In re Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd., 1935 I.T.R. 21; 7 I.T.C. 414 (Cal.).

"It is not for us to enter into the question how, on the materials which came before the Inland Revenue Commissioners, we should have dealt with the question of fact. The Taxes Management Act of 1880 precludes us from looking at the finding of the Commissioners except in so far as it is necessary to see whether there was any evidence which could have supported it," per the Lord Chancellor, in American Thread Company v. Joyce, 6 Tax Cases, page 163.

"The facts set out by the Commissioners are found by them under circumstances when we have no authority to review the finding if it was wrong. It is enough to say that they have found it, and that there was evidence upon which they might find it, and if they did find it, and if there was evidence upon which they might find it, there is no question of appeal here at all," per the Earl of Halsbury, 6 Tax Cases 163.

"The first question that has been debated before us is this: Is the question whether a man is carrying on a profession or not a matter of law or a matter of fact? I do not know that it is possible to give a positive answer to that question; it must depend upon the circumstances with which the Court is dealing. There may be circumstances in which nobody could arrive at any other conclusion than that what the man was doing was carrying on a profession; and therefore, looking at the matter from the point of view of a judge directing a jury, the judge would be bound to direct them that on the facts they could only find that he was carrying on a profession. That reduces it to a question of law. On the other hand, there may be facts on which the direction would have to be given the other way. But between those two extremes there is a very large tract of country in which the matter becomes a question of degree; and where that is the case the question is undoubtedly, in my opinion, one of fact; and if the Commissioners come to a conclusion of fact without having applied any wrong principle then their decision is final upon the matter. . . .", per Lord Sterndale, M.R., in Currie v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1921) 2 K.B. 332; 12 Tax Cases 245.

"If the questions arising in the case are questions of fact the determination of the Commissioners is final, provided that there was evidence on which they could come to the conclusion they did; and that the Court itself, or any member of the Court, might on the facts have come to a different conclusion is perfectly irrelevant, provided that there was evidence from which the Commissioners' conclusion could be reasonably drawn. I do not say that all the authorities on the subject have been consistent. I rather agree with what Lord Parker said in Farmer v. Cotton's Trustees, (1915) A.C. 922; 6 Tax Cases 590. 'It may not always be easy to distinguish between questions of fact and questions of law for the purpose of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, or similar provisions in other Acts of Parliament. The views from time to time expressed in this House have been far from unanimous. I think the reason is, as has been suggested by the Master of the Rolls, that there has been a very strong tendency, arising from the infirmities of human nature, in a judge to say, if he agrees with the decision of the Commissioners, that the question is one of fact, and if he disagrees with them that it is one of law, in order that he may express his own opinion the opposite way. Undoubtedly the less a judge has tried cases with juries, the greater is the tendency on his part to think that the view he forms on the evidence is the only possible one; but when he has tried innumerable cases with juries and continually finds twelve reasonable and intelligent men taking a different view of the evidence from that which he himself takes, he becomes more and more convinced that there may be in many states of facts more than one possible view of the evidence, and that the fact that he would have taken a different view himself does not show that the view taken by the twelve persons was necessarily wrong.

“..... They are the judges of fact, and whether a man carried on a profession is in the last resort a question of fact. The reason why it appears to me to be so is this. In my view it is impossible to lay down any strict legal definition of what is a profession, because persons carry on such infinite varieties of trades and businesses that it is a question of degree in nearly every case whether the form of business that a particular person carries on is, or is not, a profession. Accountancy is of every degree of skill or simplicity. I should certainly not assent to the proposition that as a matter of law every accountant carries on a profession or that every accountant does not. The fact that a person may have some knowledge of law does not, in my view, determine whether or not the particular business carried on by him is a profession. Take the case that I put during the argument, of a forwarding agent. From the nature of his business he has to know something about Railway Acts, about the classes of risk that are run in sending goods in a particular way, and under particular forms of contract. That may or may not be sufficient to make his business a profession. Other persons may require rather more knowledge of law, and it must be a question of degree in each case. Take the case before Rowlatt, J., of a photographer: Cecil v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 36 Times L.R. 164. Art is a matter of degree, and to determine whether an artist is a professional man again depends, in my view, on the degree of artistic work that he is doing. All these cases which involve questions of degree seem to me to be eminently questions of fact, which the Legislature has thought fit to entrust to the Commissioners, who have, at any rate, from their very varied experience, at least as much knowledge, if not considerably more, of the various modes of carrying on trade than any judge on the bench

.....

“..... I very much doubt whether it would be possible for me even if I held a different view to decide otherwise. After all, the Commissioners are judges of fact, and they have not disclosed to me what view of the law they took. I cannot possibly say there is no evidence in support of that finding. But as the Commissioners have not disclosed to me upon what view of the law they proceeded, I very much doubt whether they have stated a case upon any point which is open to me . . . and indeed if I were invited to define exhaustively as a matter of law what a profession was, I should find the utmost difficulty in doing so. . . . At the same time I am not at all clear that the fact that there may be two inconsistent findings of fact by the tribunal which is bound to decide facts would in itself justify this Court in interfering. That may be the mistake of the Legislature in entrusting the decision to such a body as the Commissioners or it may be due to the infirmity of human nature in sometimes making mistakes. . . .", per Scrutton, L.J., in Currie v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1921) 2 K.B. 332; 12 Tax Cases 245.

"It is for a Court of law to construe these several paragraphs as written documents just as the Courts of law often have to construe the answers (in writing) of Juries to questions put to them by the Judge presiding at a trial or as such Courts have to construe a correspondence between parties litigant to determine whether their letters in the aggregate contain a concluded contract in writing. In doing this the tribunal of law does not usurp the exclusive jurisdiction of the tribunal of fact, and from facts found by the latter draw a further inference of fact. It merely discharges its proper and exclusive function of construing written documents," per Lord Atkinson in Usher's Wiltshire Brewery, Limited v. Bruce, 6 Tax Cases 399; (1915) A.C. 433.

"This involves the construction of the language of the case stated. It must be interpreted in the light of common knowledge and by the common sense of the language used, but the findings of fact, as such, when ascertained are final. . . . In the judgment appealed from it is said "I can see no such finding of fact in the case". This is so in terms but in substance it is otherwise. Furthermore the judgment seems to say that the question whether a given disbursement is 'wholly or exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade or concern' is a question of law and not of fact. With this I am not able to agree. Though the answer to the question may itself be an inference from a wide area of facts, it is an answer of fact. There is no suggestion here that the Commissioners found the facts under any mistake in law including in that term the view, conscious or unconscious, that a fact may be found when there is no relevant evidence to support," per Lord Sumner (ibid.).

"These findings (of fact) of the Commissioners must be accepted and the Courts are precluded from questioning them except so far as it is necessary to see whether there is relevant evidence," per Lord Parmoor (ibid.).

"Your Lordships were pressed with the usual argument, that as the county court judge, though a judge of law and facts, is the sole judge of fact, his findings cannot be disturbed if there be any evidence before him upon which he, as a reasonable man, could find as he has found. That argument is quite sound if it be applied to pure findings of fact. It is utterly unsound if it be applied either to findings on pure questions of law or on mixed questions of law and fact. The rule is analogous to that followed in setting aside the verdicts of juries. There is, however, this vital difference between the two cases. Juries can only decide questions of fact. The arbitrators in these cases can decide questions both of law and of fact. There is no danger in trials by juries that they will return composite findings of law and fact. It is wholly illegitimate, in my view, in cases such as the present, by finding in the words of the statute to endeavour to secure for a finding on a pure question of law, or on a mixed question of law and fact, that unassailability which properly belongs only to a finding on a question of pure fact", per Lord Atkinson in Herbert v. Samuel Fox & Co., (1916) 1 A.C. 405 (a case under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906).

"As their determination is conclusive unless it be erroneous in point of law, we have no jurisdiction to review it upon any issue of fact. We could, of course, interfere if it were clear that the Commissioners had proceeded upon a wrong construction of the Act. . . . There is another ground of law upon which, I think, the Commissioners are wrong. There is, upon a true construction of the Act, no evidence in this case upon which their decision can be supported. They have given us the relevant facts in detail, and we can see for ourselves that taking those facts as found, there are no materials at all upon which the conclusion they reached can be based. . . . If the facts were such that on a true construction of the Act a different conclusion could reasonably be reached, then there would be no power in a Court of law to interfere," per Earl Loreburn in Farmer v. Cotton's Trustees, 6 Tax Cases 590; (1915) A.C. 922 (a case relating to Inhabited House Duty).

"In so far as the Special Commissioners are skilled persons in matters of business, if, on an analysis of the business arrangements that have been made, out of which the case has arisen, they came to the conclusion as businessmen that a particular payment has, what my Lord called, the accountancy quality of a capital payment or an income payment, that is a view to which, in my opinion, the Court is entitled to give great weight. The position is analogous to the case of a trial in the Commercial Court before a city of London Special Jury, on a question of business and keeping of accounts, where the special jury have expressed a view on the issue whether a particular payment is a capital payment or an income payment. In such circumstances, the Court ought to be very slow to disagree with the skilled opinion," per Scott, L.J., in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. British Salmson Aero Engineers, 17 A.T.C. 187.

"It may not always be easy to distinguish between questions of fact and questions of law for the purpose of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, or similar provisions in our Acts of Parliament. The views from time to time expressed in this House have been far from unanimous, but in my humble judgment, when all the material facts are fully found, and the only question is whether the facts are such as to bring the case within the provisions properly construed of some statutory enactment the question is one of law only," per Lord Parker of Waddington in Farmer v. Cotton's Trustees, 6 Tax Cases 590; (1915) A.C. 922.

"It is well settled that when the Commissioners have thus ascertained the facts of the case and then have found the conclusion of fact which the facts prove, their decision is not open to review, provided (a) that they had before them evidence from which such a conclusion could properly be drawn, and (b) that they did not misdirect themselves in law in any of the forms of legal error which amount to misdirection," per Lord Sumner in Lysaght v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, (1928) A.C. 234; 13 Tax Cases 511.

" It was for the Special Commissioners to find and state all the facts respecting the nature of the office or employment as to which the question arises. It was not for the Court to question those facts in any way. But the question for the Court was whether, upon those facts, Mr. Hall held an office or employment of profit within the meaning of the Act. That is a question of law," per Lord Wrenbury in Great Western Railway Company v. Bater, 8 Tax Cases 231; (1922) 2 A.C. 1.

"The facts are ascertained for us. There is no doubt that in ascertaining from time to time what is a taxable amount it might have an extremely difficult problem, but these facts have been ascertained for us and I do not think it is competent for us to go out of what has already been determined by the tribunal which the Legislature has considered sufficient to determine the form in which such a question, if it arises, should be determined," per Lord Halsbury in Smith v. Lion Brewery, Limited, 5 Tax Cases 568; (1911) A.C. 150.

"Now partnership or no partnership is a question of fact. I agree with the learned Judge that it is a mixed question of fact and law in this case in the sense that if the persons who have to ascertain questions of fact apply a wrong principle of law as to instructing themselves as to what they have to find, then their finding of fact is not conclusive because they have done it according to wrong principles. But if they direct themselves properly as to the principles which have to be applied then it is a pure question of fact for the Commissioners," per Mr. R. Sterndale in Marden Rigg & Co. and R. B. Eskrigge & Co. v. Monks, 8 Tax Cases 450.

"The question whether what (they) did here was carrying on of trade or an adventure in the nature of trade is a matter of law, only if in coming to that conclusion (i) the Commissioners had no material from which to come to their conclusion; or (ii) they relied on irrelevant matters, or excluded relevant matters; or (iii) if they have misunderstood or misconstrued the statute," per Wrottesley, J., in Williams v. Davies and Misbit, (1945) 1 All.E.R. 304.

A finding by the Commissioners that a particular expenditure is in fact capital expenditure does not necessarily foreclose a consideration by the Court of a particular piece of expenditure in the light of the terms of the Income-tax Acts themselves, Lothian Chemical Co. v. Rogers, 11 Tax Cases 508.

The construction of the charter and bye-laws of a society is not a pure question of fact, Institution of Civil Engineers v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 16 Tax Cases 158; (1932) 1 K.B. 149.

There is hardly a case in which the question whether a particular matter is one of law or of fact does not arise; in fact that is a preliminary point to be considered before there can be a reference to the High Court. In addition to the decisions already referred to, cases which have been set out under the following other sections in the Act may also be referred to:

Cases under Capital and Income—section 3; Casual profits—section 4 (3) (vii); those under sections 25 and 26—Succession and Discontinuance; under section 10—Admissible deductions, Capital losses, etc.; under sections 4, 4-A and 4-B—Residence, Place of accrual, Foreign Remittances, etc.; and in particular Ramanatha Reddiar's case, 3 I.T.C. 10, in which the leading English cases were reviewed.

Estimating income is a question of fact, and merely because the Income-tax Officer disbelieves the assessee no question of law can arise. The High Court accordingly refused to issue notice in a case to the assessee even though the Commissioner of Income-tax referred the case, Bhagwat Halwai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 3 I.T.C. 48 (All.). An adverse inference against the assessee in suspicious circumstances which the assessee cannot explain satisfactorily does not give rise to a question of law, Gangaprasad v. Ibid., 1941 I.T.R. 373 (All.). Where there is a finding of fact that the assessee has books of account, an assessment under section 23 (4) as a result of his failure to prove the books when called for cannot give rise to a question of law, Haji Ali Muhammad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 1940 I.T.R. 243. The question of the existence of other sets of accounts is one of fact, Rahomal, Kannomal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P., 1942 I.T.R. 386 (All.).

Whether an alleged gift to a lady in a Hindu undivided family is bona fide or not is a question of fact and not of law, Seth Gopaldas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1943 I.T.R. 168 (Nag.). Whether a person is an individual or represents a Hindu undivided family is a question of fact, In re Lakshminarain Gadodia & Co., 1943 I.T.R. 491 (Lah.).

The question whether an assessee is a member of a joint family sharing in the funds, or whether he is separate, is a pure question of fact which must be tried according to law like every other question of fact, In re Mahan Lal Ram Sarup, 1 I.T.C. 416; A.I.R. 1925 All. 295. But the legal effect of the disruption of a Hindu undivided family and its business is a question of law, Nathumal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 103 I.C. 522; 9 Lah. 201; 5 I.T.C. 23.

Whether a particular document, on which the status of a family depends, is genuine or fabricated is a question of fact, Chokeylal Murlidhar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 4 I.T.C. 7; A.I.R. 1932 All. 471.

Accountancy—Questions of.—As to the extent to which questions of accountancy are questions of fact or law, see notes under section 13; Fassett and Johnston v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 4 A.T.C. 89, and other cases cited thereunder.

Question of degree.—Any question which involves an exercise of personal discretion or the determination of a matter of degree is essentially a question of fact and cannot be a question of law, Stubbs v. Cooper, 10 Tax Cases 29; (1925) 2 K.B. 753; Currie v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 245; (1921) 2 K.B. 332.

Sub-section (8).—The use of the definite article 'the' in the other sub-sections shows that the High Court contemplated is the High Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter, that is to say, over the place of assessment. Sub-section (8) makes certain exceptions to this principle.

See also the case of Lucknow Ice Association v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 156, where it was held that the Chief Court of Oudh which took the place of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh was the "High Court" for purposes of references arising out of assessments in Oudh. A similar question arose with regard to an assessee resident in Peshawar in Tora Gul Boi v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 164. In this case the reference was made by the Commissioner to the High Court at Lahore and the High Court held that it had no jurisdiction to hear the reference, as the 'High Court' invested with jurisdiction under section 66 in respect of the North-West Frontier Province was the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province. Section 66 was subsequently amended in 1926, the Lahore High Court being specified as the High Court but the section was again amended in 1939 restoring jurisdiction to the Judicial Commissioner.

It was decided by the Bombay High Court, in the case of the Indian Life Assurance Company, Limited, 33 Bom.L.R. 36 and in that of Bulchand Kesavdas, 128 I.C. 678, by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind, that the High Court in respect of assessments in Sind and for the purpose of this Act is the Judicial Commissioner of Sind.

Does High Court include Judicial Commissioner?—Under section 3 (24) of the General Clauses Act, 1887, the 'High Court' includes a Court of a Judicial Commissioner, the definition of a High Court being,

"High Court, used with reference to civil proceedings, shall mean the highest Civil Court of appeal in the part of British India in which the Act or Regulation containing the expression operates."

It was argued at one time that, because the Income-tax Act, expressly excludes the jurisdiction of Civil Courts, the proceedings are not 'civil' proceedings, and the power given to the High Court under section 66 belongs to it not inherently as a Civil Court but by express legislative provision. In the absence of a definition in the Income-tax Act it was contended accordingly that for this purpose the High Court cannot include the Court of a Judicial Commissioner, Ramchand Gopaldas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, but this view was not upheld.

66-A. (1) When any case has been referred to the High Court under section 66, it shall be heard by a Bench of not less than two Judges of the High Court, and in respect of such case the provisions of section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, shall, so far as may be, apply notwithstanding anything contained in the Letters Patent of any High Court established by Letters Patent or in any other law for the time being in force :

References to be heard by Benches of High Courts, and appeal to lie in certain cases to Privy Council.

Provided that where in any reference heard by the Bench of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province, a difference of opinion arises between the Judicial Commissioner and the Judge of the said Court, the opinion of the Judicial Commissioner shall prevail.

(2) An appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council from any judgment of the High Court delivered on a reference made under section 66 in any case which the High Court certifies to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

(3) The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, relating to appeals to His Majesty in Council shall, so far as may be, apply in the case of appeals under this section in like manner as they apply in the case of appeals from decrees of a High Court :

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall be deemed to affect the provisions of sub-section (5) or sub-section (7) of section 66 :

Provided, further, that the High Court may, on petition made for the execution of the order of His Majesty in Council in respect of any costs awarded thereby, transmit the order for execution to any Court subordinate to the High Court.

(4) Where the judgment of the High Court is varied or reversed in appeal under this section effect shall be given to the order of His Majesty in Council in the manner provided in sub-sections (5) and (7) of section 66 in the case of a judgment of the High Court.

(5) Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

(a) to bar the full and unqualified exercise of His Majesty's pleasure in receiving or rejecting appeals to His Majesty in Council, or otherwise howsoever, or

(b) to interfere with any rules made by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and for the time being in force, for the presentation of appeals to His Majesty in Council, or their conduct before the said Judicial Committee.

History.—Before 1926 no appeal lay to the Privy Council in the ordinary course. The proviso to sub-section (1) was added in 1939.

It was decided in the case of the Tata Iron and Steel Company v. The Chief Revenue Authority, Bombay, 1 I.T.C. 206, that a judgment of the High Court under section 66 of the Income-tax Act (section 51 of the Act of 1918) is not a final order or judgment within the meaning of clause 39 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court, that the judgment was only advisory and that therefore no appeal to the Privy Council lay. Though express provision has since been made for appeals to the Privy Council, it was reaffirmed by the Privy Council that the judgment of the High Court under section 66 is still only advisory, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Bombay Trust Corporation, 1936 I.T.R. 323 (P.C.).

Review of judgments.—There is no provision in the law under which the High Court can review or revise its judgment delivered on a reference under section 66. Even if it be considered that the application of section 98, Civil Procedure Code, attracts other provisions of that Code, the judgment on a reference is neither a decree nor an order, In re Kajori Mal Kalyandas, 4 I.T.C. 50 (All.); A.I.R. 1930 All. 211. In determining questions referred under section 66, the High Court is not functioning as an ordinary Civil Court, attracting to it the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. The reference, by the Privy Council, in Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O. v. Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga, 1933 I.T.R. 94, to a 'formal decree by the High Court' does not necessitate the inference that proceedings under sections 66 and 66-A are automatically governed by all the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. An application for a review of a judgment under section 66 does not therefore lie, Seth Mathurdas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., 1940 I.T.R. 413 (Nag.).

Difference of opinion.—Where there was a difference between the two judges who heard an application under section 66 (3) (now section 66 (2)) and the case was referred to a Full Bench, it was argued that as the judges had expressed their views, they were functus officio and that in the absence of a majority the opinion of the Commissioner should stand. This view was rejected and it was held that the reference to the Full Bench was valid, Umar Baksh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 5 I.T.C. 402; 12 Lah. 725; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 578.

Orders refusing a reference—Appeals against.—Under sub-section (1) of section 66-A, it is only when a reference has been made that it has to be heard by a bench of not less than two judges. An application under section 66 (2) need not necessarily be heard by a bench of not less than two judges. An application for a writ is neither a reference nor an application under section 66 (2) and neither the Act nor the rules made under it are applicable to it, which can therefore be heard by a single judge on the original side, In re Ramjedas Mahaliram, 1936 I.T.R. 25 (Cal.). It all depends on the Rules of the High Court.

In Tohar Mal Uttam Chand v. The Crown, 2 I.T.C. 301, the High Court held that in view of the difference between the provisions of the 1922 Act and those of the 1918 Act the former conferring a right of reference to the High Court, the decision in the Tata case, 1 I.T.C. 206, could be distinguished, and that an appeal lay from an order of a single judge of the High Court refusing to ask the Commissioner to state a case. The same view was also taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Shiva Pratap Battudu, 2 I.T.C. 40. See also the case of Rathan Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 2 I.T.C. 294.

Even under the 1918 Act appeals were allowed from the orders of a single judge—see The North Anantapur Gold Mines v. Chief Commissioner of Income-tax, 1 I.T.C. 133 and Jubilee Mills v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 2 I.T.C. 25.

No appeal (apart from special leave) lies to the Privy Council from an order of the High Court under section 66 (2) refusing to direct the Tribunal to make a reference, neither under section 66-A nor under Letters Patent. Proceedings connected with the assessment of tax are mainly concerned with questions of fact, and where both the Tribunal and the High Court are agreed that there is no question of law, it is neither convenient nor desirable that the Judicial Committee should be called upon to consider such cases. Further if an appeal lay under Letters Patent, an appeal against an order under section 66 (2)—in which both the Tribunal and the High Court agreed that there was no question of law—would lie on less stringent conditions than an appeal against a judgment in a reference made under section 66 (1); and the Legislature could not have contemplated such an anomalous situation, E. M. Chettiyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma, 5 I.T.C. 18. On the other hand a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court held that an order under section 66 (2) refusing to direct the Commissioner to make a reference is a final judgment, and that the assessee can claim a certificate for leave to appeal if the other conditions are satisfied, Ferozeshah Kaka Khel v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 5 I.T.C. 198. The question was raised before but not decided by the Privy Council, Ferozeshah Kaka Khel v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1933 I.T.R. 219. The Madras, Patna and Allahabad High Courts have followed Rangoon and dissented from Lahore, O. V. R. S. V. Arunachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras; Gurmukh Rai v. Secretary of State, 1934 I.T.R. 412; Harihar Gir v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 1941 I.T.R. 246. *

When disposing of an application under section 66 (3) (corresponding to present section 66 (2)), the Madras High Court overruled an earlier decision of the same Court on which the Commissioner had relied when refusing a reference, and directed him to make a reference. Thereupon, the Commissioner asked for a certificate to enable him to appeal to the Privy Council, and it was held that the order of the Court being interlocutory in a matter in which the Court acts in an advisory capacity, the Court had no jurisdiction to give a certificate either under section 66-A (2) or under the Letters Patent, Commissioner of Income-tax v. Voora Sreeramulu Chetti, 1939 I.T.R. 566.

North-West Frontier Province.—Proviso (1), it will seem, refers only to references heard by the Judicial Commissioner's Court and does not cover applications under section 66 (3).

Substantial question of law.—Under sub-section (2) no appeal lies to the Privy Council unless the High Court certifies that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council. Sub-section (3) deals with the procedure to be applied when an appeal lies under sub-section (2), Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P. v. Maharaj Kumar of Vizianagaram, 1935 I.T.R. 155 (All.).

Section 66-A is in terms the same as section 109 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. The section is intended to enable an appeal to His Majesty in Council, in cases in which the High Court could certify that the question of law involved was one of great private or public importance. The grant of a certificate under section 109 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code is not a matter which is left entirely to the discretion of the Court but is a judicial process which could not be performed without special exercise of that discretion—see Banarsi Prasad v. Kashi Krishna Narain, 23 All. 227 (P.C.) and Delhi Cloth Mills v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 8 Lah. 269.

A certificate will be granted in cases involving questions of public importance or cases forming important precedents governing numerous other cases Nattu Kesava Mudaliar v. Govindasami and others, 76 I.C. 811. On the other hand, even if the issue is of general importance, leave would be refused if the matter is not of sufficient importance to the respondent to justify his being put to the expense of an appeal to the Privy Council. The question whether through a disruption of a Hindu family a particular member had or had not succeeded to the business of the family has not been considered to be a sufficiently important question of law to justify the grant of leave to appeal, Nathumal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 109. So also the following questions, viz., whether a notice calling for a return of income issued by the Income-tax Officer had been abandoned because of subsequent proceedings taken by a Special Income-tax Officer whose appointment was invalid and whose proceedings had to be ignored, Lachiram Basantilal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, 5 I.T.C. 262; whether, after assessing a person for a number of years on the basis of an accounting year of less than 365 days, it is open to the Income-tax Officer to make up for the accumulated difference by assessing in a particular financial year on the profits of two accounting years, M. E. R. Malak v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P., A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 336; and whether a sum of Rs. 7,721 being interest paid by a firm to its partners can be deducted from its profits, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Tejchandras Motumal, 1936 I.T.R. 227. Leave to appeal was also refused in a case in which the issue was whether profits from the growing and manufacture of tea abroad were profits from business, R. M. S. T. Ponnusami Pillai v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 3 I.T.C. 378.

The question whether interest awarded under section 28 of the Land Acquisition Act is income or damages (capital) for the loss of possession of property, was considered to be a mixed question of fact and law and in any case not a question of general importance or a substantial question of law, Commissioner of Income-tax, U. P. v. Beharilal Bhargava, 1942 I.T.R. 388 (All.).

On the other hand, even though the tax was only Rs. 3,500, leave was given in a case because the question would recur every year and there was a substantial question of law, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Mathias, 1938 I.T.R. 8. The question whether income from spontaneously growing forests is agricultural, is a substantial question of law, Raju Mustafa Ali Khan v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1946 I.T.R. 265 (Oudh).

The words "so far as may be" in sub-section (3) confine the statutory right of appeal to the Privy Council to the cases described in sub-section (2). Even though the requirements of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, be satisfied, a High Court will be justified in refusing a certificate in circumstances in which it would not grant a certificate under section 109 (c), Civil Procedure Code, Delhi Cloth Mills v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 9 Lah. 284 (P.C.).

Appeal by special leave.—Sub-section (5) makes it clear that in any case it is open to an assessee to appeal to the Privy Council by special leave and that this prerogative right is not affected by the express provision for appeals to His Majesty in Council in the ordinary course.

Costs.—The Select Committee added a clause as below:—

"Provided that no such certificate shall be granted on an application on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council, unless the High Court is satisfied that, if the respondent does not appear at the hearing of the appeal and the judgment of the High Court is varied or reversed, the right to recover any costs which may be awarded by the order of His Majesty in Council to the appellant will not be exercised."

This clause was omitted by the Assembly as the result of an undertaking given by the Finance Member that in such cases the Crown would not demand costs.

The High Court has no power, when granting leave to appeal, to impose a condition that the appellant should bear the costs of the appeal, Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Mathias, 1938 I.T.R. 8.

Special jurisdiction.—The High Court exercises a special jurisdiction under section 66 of the Income-tax Act; and rules and orders framed by a High Court under its Original or Appellate jurisdictions modifying the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code have no application to Income-tax appeals which are governed entirely by the relevant provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and section 66-A of the Income-tax Act, Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. Hungerford Investment Trust, Ltd., 1935 I.T.R. 188.

United Kingdom Law.—See section 149 (3) of the 1918 Act which permits of appeals from the High Court to the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords.

67. No suit shall be brought in any Civil Court to set aside or modify any assessment made under this Act, and no prosecution, suit or other proceeding shall lie against any Officer of the Crown for anything in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

History.—The first part of the section has been the same since 1886; see section 39 of the 1886 Act. The second part of the section first found a place in the 1918 Act.

United Kingdom Law.—There are no corresponding provisions in the law in the United Kingdom. See however sections 133 (2) and 148 (2) under which an appeal, once determined by the Commissioners, shall be “final and conclusive” and neither the determination of the Commissioners nor the assessment thereon shall be altered except by order of the Court when a case has been stated as provided by the Income-tax Act. The law in the United Kingdom is governed by various rulings regarding the circumstances in which writs of certiorari and mandamus can be granted or petitions of right will lie. The more important rulings are referred to below.

Scope of section.—This section consists of two parts, the first part of which saves assessments made under the Act from interference by a Civil Court, and the second part gives immunity to every Government officer for anything in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act. It will be seen that in the first part there is no reference to good faith and intention. An assessment which is not strictly in accordance with the Act but purports to be made under the Act will not be set aside or modified by a Civil Court in so far as the assessee does not avail himself of the remedies provided for him under this Act, viz., appeal to the Appellate Tribunal, and a reference to the High Court under section 66, R. N. Singha v. Secretary of State for India, 2 I.T.C. 462; 5 Rang. 825; A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 70. It is only in those cases in which the assessee has exhausted all his rights under the Act and is at the same time the victim of an illegal assessment or other proceeding for which no relief has been provided by the Act, that a Civil Court can, if at all, interfere with an assessment, see Holborn Viaduct v. R., 2 Tax Cases 228. Whenever a statute deals with certain rights, it is right to conclude that it deals with the total ambit of those rights and leaves nothing outside the provisions of the statute, Sheobaran Singh v. Kulsum-un-Nissa, 49 All. 367.

It will be noticed also that the protection from interference by Civil Courts is only in regard to assessments. The word ‘assessment’ has nowhere been defined in the Act, but, obviously it includes the determination of the tax payable by a person, including penal assessments under sections 25 and 28. It presumably also includes refunds under sections 48 and 49 inasmuch as such refunds involves as a preliminary the determination of the tax for which the assessee is liable.

The first part of the section clearly does not refer to matters other than assessments, for example, penalties under Chapter VIII or summary proceedings under section 46 for the recovery of tax, etc. In respect of all such matters the Courts can interfere.

The Rangoon High Court ruled that a suit for a declaration that the registration of a firm (see section 26-A) was ultra vires and void is not barred by section 67, since it is not a suit to set aside or modify an assessment. Following the dictum of Lord Cranworth, L.C., in O'Flaherty v. M'Dowell, (1857) 6 H.L.C. 142, the Court also held that a remedy by suit was not necessarily ruled out by the existence of a concurrent remedy under the Income-tax Act. It is for the Income-tax authorities to consider the consequential effects of a declaration by a Court, C. T. A. C. T. Nachiyappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1933 I.T.R. 330; 11 Rang. 380; A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 330. On the other hand, according to the Nagpur High Court, the remedy against an Income-tax Officer's refusal to register a firm under section 26-A is by way of appeal to the Assistant Commissioner and thence to the Appellate Tribunal and reference on questions of law if any to the High Court under section 66, and not by way of civil suit against the Crown, Governor-General in Council v. Mulla Mahomed Bhai, etc., 1945 I.T.R. 10 Nag.).

According to the Patna High Court, a suit, not to set aside or modify an assessment, but to contest whether a claim for refund had been validly discharged by the Income-tax department is not barred by section 67, Inder Chand v. Secretary of State, 1941 I.T.R. 673.

A determination of fact by the Income-tax Officer in the course of his proceedings does not bind third parties; and while the assessee cannot invoke a Civil Court to set aside the finding, third parties can, Secretary of State v. Radha Swami Sat Sang, 1945 I.T.R. 520 (All.).

The second part of the section gives personal immunity to Government officers for anything done by them in good faith or intended to be done under the Act. They are protected from prosecution, suit or other proceeding. With reference to section 270 of the Government of India Act, 1935, which runs as follows: "No proceedings, civil or criminal, shall be instituted against any person in respect of any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown in India before the relevant date except with the consent of the Governor-General" (the 'relevant date' being the date of establishment of Federation), it was held that the motive with which acts are done is immaterial and that so long as such acts are done in purported execution of duty as servants of the Crown, no suit could be instituted against the person without the consent of the Governor-General, Kesarichand Kaverlal v. Nayudu, etc., 1942 I.T.R. 413 (Mad.). In this case, the Assistant of the Income-tax Officer was alleged to have trespassed into the premises of the plaintiff and taken away the latter's account books.

The word 'proceeding' is comprehensive. In Commissioner of Income-tax v. North Anantapur Gold Mines, 44 Mad. 718; 41 M.L.J. 177; 1 I.T.C. 133; it was held by the Madras High Court, following In re Onward Building Society, (1891) 2 Q.B. 463, that an application under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act is a 'proceeding' within the meaning of this section of the Income-tax Act. In the Onward Building Society's case—a case under the Companies Act, it was held, with reference to a section which prohibited any "suit, action or other proceeding against the company", that an application against the liquidator of a company directing him to register shares was within the prohibition of the Act.

"... gives a summary mode of enforcing rights which might have been prosecuted by a suit in Chancery or possibly by an action for a mandamus at common law. It would be impossible to say that if the circuitous proceeding would have been a proceeding against the company, that the compendious one is not so also."—Per Bowen, L.J.

Though the view of the Madras High Court that no proceeding under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act would lie against the Chief Revenue Authority was overruled by the Privy Council in the Alcock Ashdown case, 50 I.A. 227; 47 Bom. 742; 1 I.T.C. 221 the protection given by the second part of the section to officers is evidently unaffected.

Anything done.—"Anything done" includes "anything omitted to be done". See Chief Commissioner of Income-tax v. North Anantapur Gold Mines, supra and Jolliffe v. Wallasey Local Board, (1873) L.R. 9 C.P. 62, also section 3 (2) of the General Clauses Act, 1897; "words which refer to acts done extend also to illegal omissions".

"In good faith".—Under section 3 (20) of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897), a thing shall be deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not.

In Spooner v. Juddow, (1850) 4 M.I.A. 353, with reference to section 8 of the East India Company's Act, 1780 (corresponding to section 106 of the Government of India Act, 1915) which was in the following terms:—

"The said Supreme Court shall not have or exercise any jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue or concerning any act or acts ordered or done in the collection thereof according to the usage and practice of the country or the regulation of the Governor-General in Council" the Privy Council observed: "The point, therefore, is whether the exception of jurisdiction only arises where the defendants (the Revenue authority) have acted strictly, according to the usage and practice of the country, and the regulations of the Governor-General in Council. But upon this supposition the proviso is wholly nugatory; for, if the Supreme Court is to enquire whether the defendants in this matter concerning the public revenue were right in the demand made and to decide in their favour only if they acted in entire conformity to the regulations of the Governor-General in Council, they would equally be entitled to succeed if the statutes and charters contained no exception or proviso for their protection. Our books actually swarm with decisions putting a contrary construction upon such enactments, and there can be no rule more firmly established, than that if parties bona fide and not absurdly believe that they are acting in pursuance of statutes, and according to law they are entitled to the special protection which the legislature intended for them, although they have done an illegal act."

"I agree that if a person knows that he has not under statute authority to do a certain thing and yet intentionally does that thing, he cannot shelter himself by pretending that the thing was done with intent to carry out that statute. In this case nothing is stated showing that the defendants, when they made the rate in question, knew that it was not allowed by the statute under which they were appointed; and it has not been found that the defendants were trying under the colour of the law to get money to which they had no right, in which case they would not have been protected by the Act," per Blackburn, J., in Selmes v. Judge, (1874) L.R. 6 Q.B. 724, a Highway Rating case in which it was held with reference to a statutory provision which said that "no action or suit shall be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of or under the authority of this Act until . . . notice has been given . . . " that such notice was necessary in so far as the rating was made bona fide.

Wrong description of assessee.—It was held in R. N. Singha v. The Secretary of State in Council, 2 I.T.C. 462; 5 Rang. 825; A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 70, that the wrong description of the assessee in the notice issued under section 22 (2) would not make the assessment ultra vires or wholly illegal. Ultra vires and erroneous are not synonymous terms. The assessee could have availed himself of the remedies provided by the Income-tax Act if he desired, to challenge the assessment. The Court therefore declined to interfere.

Section 67 not ultra vires of Government of India Act.—Under section 32 of the Government of India Act, 1915, "every person shall have the same remedies against the Secretary of State for India in Council as he might have had against the East India Company if the Government of India Act, 1858, had not been passed." Relying on this section, it was argued in Dr. R. N. Singha v. Secretary of State, 5 Rang. 825; A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 70; 2 I.T.C. 462, that section 67 of the Income-tax Act was ultra vires. But the contention was not accepted. Before 1858 there was no such thing as income-tax; and unless it could be shown that a suit for the recovery of revenue of the nature of income-tax wrongly assessed would have lain against the East India Company before 1858, no suit for the recovery of income-tax wrongly assessed could be entertained. Section 176 of the Government of India Act, 1935 takes the place of section 32 in the old Act; and under the former, the right to sue the Federation or a Province is subject to any provisions that the Federal or the Provincial Legislature may enact within its powers under the Government of India Act.

Jurisdiction of High Courts.—Under sub-section (2) of section 100 of the old Government of India Act, 1915 (see section 226 of the new 1935 Act) High Courts are prohibited from exercising "any original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, or concerning any act ordered or done in the collection thereof according to the usage and practice of the country or the law for the time being in force."

It was held in Commissioner of Income-tax v. North Anantapur Gold Mines, 1 I.T.C. 133; 44 Mad. 718; 41 M.L.J. 177, that this section prevented the High Court from issuing a mandamus to the Income-tax Commissioner asking him to state a case for the decision of the High Court. In re Doraisamy Iyer & Co., 1 I.T.C. 93; 45 Bom. 1064 and In re the Bombay and Persia Steam Navigation Company, 1 I.T.C. 97; 45 Bom. 881 the Bombay High Court held a different view. The Privy Council in the Alcock Ashdown case, 50 I.A. 227; A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 138, overruled the view of the Madras High Court and confirmed that of the Bombay High Court, on the ground that the order of a High Court to a Revenue Officer to do his statutory duty did not constitute the exercise of 'original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue', see also, In re Ramjidas Mahaliram, 1936 I.T.R. 25 (Cal.). Just as an order directing a revenue officer to do his statutory duty is not the exercise of original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, (see Alcock Ashdown's case), an order directing him to refrain from doing something which he wrongly believes to be his statutory duty is not an exercise of such jurisdiction, Dayaldas Kushiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1940 I.T.R. 134. On the other hand, a suit to set aside an assessment on the ground that the relevant provision in the Income-tax Act is ultra vires of the powers of legislature as laid down in the Government of India Act, relates to revenue and a High Court has no original jurisdiction to entertain the suit, Governor-General in Council v. Raleigh Investments, 1944 I.T.R. 265 (F.C.).

The above bar applies not only to the original side of the three Presidency High Courts but to all original suits, such as, for example, under the Companies Act, before all High Courts, Governor-General in Council v. Shiromani Sugar Mills, 1946 I.T.R. 248 (F.C.). The initiation of a certificate under section 46 (2) of the Income-tax Act is an act done in the collection of Revenue, and it is not open to a High Court in its original jurisdiction to grant an injunction (ibid). The words "according to the usage . . . force" qualify only the immediately preceding words and not the words "original jurisdiction". Also the "law for the time being in force" refers not only to the law directly governing the revenue but all relevant laws. But the real point in such cases is whether the authority concerned bona fide believed that it was acting in accordance with law. If so, the bar in section 226 of the Government of India Act will apply. Governor-General in Council v. Shiromani Sugar Mills, 1946 I.T.R. 248 (F.C.).

The words 'original jurisdiction' in the above section are not confined to ordinary original civil jurisdiction and the acts protected are not only those in strict conformity with law but those done bona fide in the belief that they are in accordance with law, K. R. M. T. T. Thyagaraja Chettiar v. Collector of Madura, 1936 I.T.R. 56.

Writ of certiorari.—The present High Courts have only such powers in this respect as the Supreme Courts had and the latter could not issue writs of certiorari regarding acts ordered or done in the collection of revenue in accordance with the usage and practice of the country or the regulations of the Governor-General in Council. Income-tax is revenue, and the Letters Patent have not enlarged the powers of High Courts. No writ, therefore, can issue against a Collector who bona fide, took steps to collect arrears of income-tax even though after the time for such action had expired, K. R. M. T. T. Thyagaraja Chettiar v. Collector of Madura, 1936 I.T.R. 56; D. D. Shroff v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1943 I.T.R. 172.

Specific Relief Act.—A right to be assessed by a particular officer in accordance with section 64 of the Income-tax Act is a personal right in respect of which an order under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act can be issued, Dayaldas Kushiram v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, 1940 I.T.R. 139.

Excess of jurisdiction.—The following dicta may be noted:

"There must, of course, be certain conditions on which the right of every tribunal of limited jurisdiction to exercise that jurisdiction depends. But those conditions may be founded either on the character and constitution of the tribunal, or upon the nature of the subject-matter of the inquiry, or upon certain proceedings which have been made essential preliminaries to the inquiry, or upon facts or a fact to be adjudicated upon in the course of the inquiry. It is obvious that conditions of the last differ materially from those of the three other classes. Objections founded on the personal incompetency of the Judge, or on the nature of the subject-matter, or on the absence of some essential preliminary, must obviously, in most cases, depend upon matters which, whether apparent on the face of the proceedings or brought before the Superior Court by affidavit, are extrinsic to the adjudication impeached. But an objection that the Judge has erroneously found a fact which, though essential to the validity of his order, he was competent to try, assumes that, having general jurisdiction over the subject-matter, he properly entered upon the enquiry, but miscarried in the course of it. The Superior Court cannot quash an adjudication upon such an objection without assuming the functions of a Court of appeal, and the power to re-try a question which the Judge was competent to decide," Colonial Bank of Australasia v. Willan, 5 I.R.P.C. 417.

Lord Esher (Master of the Rolls) considered the formula in Reg. v. Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income-tax, (1888) 21 Q.B.D. 313, 319, and said:

"When an inferior Court or tribunal or body, which has to exercise the power of deciding facts, is first established by Act of Parliament, the Legislature has to consider what powers it will give that tribunal or body. It may in effect say that, if a certain state of facts exists and is shown to such tribunal or body before it proceeds to do certain things, it shall have jurisdiction to do such things, but not otherwise. Then it is not for them conclusively to decide whether that state of facts exists, and if they exercise the jurisdiction without its existence, when they do may be questioned, and it will be held that they have acted without jurisdiction. But there is another state of things which may exist. The Legislature may entrust the tribunal or body with a jurisdiction, which includes the jurisdiction to determine whether the preliminary state exists to proceed further or do something more. When the Legislature are establishing such a tribunal or body with limited jurisdiction, they also have to consider, whatever jurisdiction they give them, whether there shall be any appeal from their decision, for otherwise there will be none. In the second of the two cases I have mentioned, it is an erroneous application of the formula to say that the tribunal cannot give themselves jurisdiction by wrongly deciding certain facts to exist, because the Legislature gave them jurisdiction to determine all the facts, including the existence of the preliminary facts on which the further exercise of their jurisdiction depends, and if they were given jurisdiction so to decide, without any appeal being given, there is no appeal from such exercise of their jurisdiction."

An English Company acquired an English business which included the shares of two continental companies; it also included 98 per cent. of the shares of an American company carrying on business in America with the result that, according to the prospectus, all the companies concerned came under one single general control. The General Commissioners found that the business of the American company was as a fact carried on by and was the business of the English company and taxed the profits accordingly. A rule nisi was granted against the General Commissioners by the Court of Appeal but was discharged on the ground that it was within the jurisdiction of the Commissioners to ascertain what was the connection between the English and American Companies and that if the Commissioners had gone wrong the remedy was by way of appeal and not by prohibition. The Commissioners had not gone wrong in the finding of any facts preliminary to giving themselves jurisdiction. The English company was engaged in trade in the United Kingdom and the Commissioners had jurisdiction to find out the limits of the trade so carried on in order to fix the quantum. The only condition which was the essential preliminary to the Commissioners having jurisdiction was that the trader carried on the trade at least in part in the area of the Commissioners, Ex parte Kodak, Ltd. v. Clark, 4 Tax Cases 549; (1903) 1 K.B. 305.

"In my judgment this dictum (of Lord Esher quoted above) states accurately the principle applicable to such cases. The last question is within which class should the present case be placed? Allen v. Sharp, (1848) 2 Exch. 352, is a decision which appears to me in point. Baron Parke, at page 363, draws the distinction between the case then under consideration and cases under the Statutes relating to poor rates see Weaver v. Price, 3 Barn. & Ald. 409, and his observations are so important and bear so immediately upon the present case that I quote them in extenso: 'On a careful consideration of these Acts of Parliament, they seem to me to differ from the Statute of Elizabeth as to poor rate, and that the Legislature intended that the assessment of the assessors appointed by the Commissioners should be final and conclusive unless appealed from, in the first place, to the Commissioners, and further, if necessary, to the Judges of the superior Courts. It would be singular if there were no such provision; for what a flood of litigation would follow, if every subject of the Crown, who was dissatisfied with the judgment of the assessors, had a right to dispute the propriety of their assessment in an action against the collectors . . .

. . . without referring to the Statutes, I should say, a priori that the object of the Legislature was to make the decision of the assessor final and binding unless disputed in the manner pointed out. On reading the Statutes, I come to the same conclusion'. In my view an examination of the Income-tax Acts shows that the scheme of the Legislature is to entrust the decision of the facts to a tribunal of persons specially selected for the locality, and who are often in a better position than the Courts to determine the questions of fact, sometimes very complicated, which may arise. The exigencies of the State require that there should be a tribunal to deal expeditiously, and at comparatively little expense with all such questions, and to decide them finally, reserving always to the individual the right to have the Commissioner's decisions on points of law reviewed by the Courts. The obligation is placed, for reasons of expediency, upon the person assessed to appeal to the Commissioners if he wishes to rid himself of an assessment which is, in his view, based upon wrong conclusions of fact, and this obligation rests equally upon a person who contends that he is not chargeable as upon a person who admits that he is chargeable, but not to the extent of the assessment made upon him," per Lord Reading, C.J., in Rex v. Commissioners of Taxes for Bloomsbury, 7 Tax Cases 59; (1915) 3 K.B. 768.

"In such a case it is an erroneous application of the formula to say that the tribunal cannot give themselves jurisdiction by wrongly deciding certain facts to exist, because the Legislature gave them jurisdiction to determine all the facts including the existence of the preliminary facts of which the further exercise of their jurisdiction depends; see also The Colonial Bank of Australasia v. Willan, 5 L.R.P.C. 442, and the principle of law to be applied to this case is that laid down by Chief Justice Tindall in Cave v. Mountain, 1 Macnaghten and Gordon, page 257 (approved and adopted by Lord Denman in Reg. v. Bolton, 1 Queen's Bench, page 75), where he says dealing with a question of the jurisdiction of Magistrates: "If the charge be of an offence over which, if the offence charged be true in fact, the Magistrate has jurisdiction the Magistrate's jurisdiction cannot be made to depend upon the truth or falsity of the facts or upon the evidence sufficient or insufficient to establish the corpus delicti brought under investigation, and that the remedy for any person aggrieved by an assessment made under section 52 either by reason of his not being chargeable at all or by reason of its being excessive, is by appeal to the General Commissioners and by special case"—Per Avory, J., in Rex v. Commissioners of Taxes for Bloomsbury, 7 Tax. Cases 59; (1915) 3 K.B. 768.

No writ of prohibition can lie merely because the Revenue authorities come to a wrong finding of fact as to liability, e.g., as to income. Such a finding does not involve an excess of jurisdiction, Rex v. The Swansea Income-tax Commissioners (Ex parte The English Crown Spelter Co.), 9 Tax Cases 437; (1925) 2 K.B. 250.

"If what happened before the inferior tribunal was a refusal to hear the case, a mandamus would lie; but if what had taken place was in fact that upon the materials before them they had come to a wrong decision that could not be made a ground for directing and rehearing. Procedure by way of mandamus is not procedure by way of appeal," per Lord Alverstone in R. v. General Income-tax Commissioners of Offlow, 27 T.L.R. 353, followed in R. v. General Income-tax Commissioners of Winchester.

In England the Courts cannot interfere on the ground that the Commissioners should have heard the evidence tendered and should not have dispensed with it. In a case in which the Commissioners refused to hear an expert valuer whose evidence was tendered by the assessee, the Court considered that, as the Commissioners had been told the nature of the evidence and came to the conclusion that it would be of no help, there was no 'refusal to hear the case' which alone would justify the issue of a mandamus, per Lord Alverstone in R. v. Commissioners for the City of London (Ex parte Commissioners, I.R.), (1904) 91 L.T. 94.

"If I was satisfied that the Commissioners had entertained a different question. . . . I should not have hesitated to make the rule absolute. . . . It has long been recognised that when a tribunal of this kind acts within their jurisdiction on a matter properly before them, although they have gone wrong in law in the way they have applied the rules of law to their judgment or have gone wrong in fact, it is not for us to interfere," per Lord Alverstone in R. v. Commissioners for the City of London (Ex parte Commissioners, I.R.), (1904) 91 L.T. 94.

".....but for myself I wish to express the opinion, as at present advised, that prohibition would not lie in this case at this stage, on the ground that the general principle is that the proceedings to be prohibited must be of a judicial character, and not belonging to the Executive Government. As Lord Denman said in the case of Chabat v. Lord Morpeth, 15 Q.B. 457: 'Were we to grant prohibition in this case, we should be interfering with proceedings not judicial, but belonging to the Executive Government of the country,'” per Avory, J., in The King v. Kensington Commissioners, 6 Tax Cases 279; (1913) 3 K.B. 870.

“My view of the power of prohibition at the present day is that the Court should not be chary of exercising it and whenever the Legislature entrusts to any body of persons other than to the Superior Courts the power of imposing an obligation on individuals, the Courts ought to exercise as widely as they can the power of controlling those bodies or persons if these persons admittedly attempt to exercise powers beyond the powers given to them by Act of Parliament,” per Brett, L.J. (afterwards Lord Esher) in R. v. Local Government Board, (1882) 10 Q.B.D. 309, quoted with approval by Swinfen Eady, L.J., in R. v. Kensington Income-tax Commissioners, 6 Tax Cases 613; (1914) 3 K.B. 429; (1916) 1 A.C. 215.

As a result of information disclosed in connection with a claim for relief, additional assessments were made in respect of under-charged tax and at the same time relief was withheld by the Inspector of Taxes. Rules nisi were issued calling upon (1) the General Commissioners to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue prohibiting additional assessments, and (2) the Inspector of Taxes to show cause why writs of certiorari and mandamus should not issue quashing his refusal to certify the claim for relief. Held, discharging the rules that both the General Commissioners and the Inspector acted within their jurisdiction.

Per the Lord Chief Justice Hewart.—“The question whether there should be a writ of prohibition is a question whether that which is being done is or is not being done without jurisdiction. The Surveyor says that he discovers that a person chargeable has been allowed a reduction not authorised by this Act. Mr. Montgomery concedes the question whether the deduction is or is not authorised by the Act is a question within the jurisdiction of the Surveyor to determine. In that part of the argument Mr. Montgomery appeared to say—I do not know if he seriously meant it—that if the Surveyor decided the question correctly the matter was within his jurisdiction but if he decided it incorrectly the matter was not within his jurisdiction. If that be indeed the argument it appears to me to confuse two things; an erroneous decision within the jurisdiction and a usurpation of a jurisdiction which does not exist. I think it is a fact that the question which had to be determined here was a question within the jurisdiction of the Surveyor and if there is exception taken to the additional assessment . . . there is a clear right of appeal under the Act and that right of appeal is at this present moment being pursued. . . . I think therefore that the application for the writ of prohibition manifestly fails.

I pass now to the rules for mandamus and certiorari, which relate really to two aspects of the same matter. . . . The applicants went to the Surveyor and produced certain figures showing cost of maintenance, repairs, insurance and management and it is said that so far as arithmetic is concerned those figures were beyond dispute . . . and it is said that the Surveyor had no choice except . . . to give a certificate. . . . If that were the true interpretation . . . it would follow . . . that if the arithmetic were correct in the statement produced to the Surveyor, then notwithstanding that upon a review of all the relevant facts he was clearly and rightly of opinion that the owner was not entitled to any allowance at all, he must proceed to make a certificate of allowance based on the figures produced to him; and once the owner had got that document in his possession, it would be like a Bank of England note, he would immediately proceed to recover payment in accordance with that certificate. I cannot think that the Legislature intended to enact anything so grotesque. The Surveyor here having the figures before him came to the conclusion that the owners, notwithstanding those figures, were not entitled to any allowance . . . he certified that the owners in question were not entitled to any repayment and he proceeded to give his reasons. There also, as it seems to me, the Surveyor was acting within his jurisdiction. It may well be that the applicants for these rules are not satisfied with the conclusion at which he arrived. But that being so, they have in this matter a right of appeal and that appeal they are pursuing," R. v. Commissioners of Kingsland, 8 Tax Cases 327.

"You are entitled to say, as against certain Commissioners, that the order ought to go, if, as Lord Reading says, there was no doubt as to the facts, and if you were convinced that by no possibility could it be held that there was a liability on the subject; as for instance if the General Commissioners of Income-tax had purported to make an assessment on a man in respect of super-tax which is specially assigned to the Special Commissioners . . . but applying the rule of Lord Reading in the Singer case, there is sufficient evidence here . . . and (the General Commissioners) are entitled not merely to consider the matter geographically but also fundamentally as to whether there is a liability," per Hanworth, M.R., in R. v. General Commissioners, Marylebbite (Ex parte Schlesinger), 13 Tax Cases 746; 7 A.T.C. 101.

Indian Rulings under the 1886 and 1918 Acts.—Whether a particular person is in receipt of a particular income is a question to be primarily determined by the Income-tax Officer, that is to say, it is a question of fact entirely within his jurisdiction. The Civil Court cannot interfere and set aside the finding of the Income-tax Officer, see Forbes v. Secretary of State, 1 I.T.C. 8; 42 Cal. 151.

Where the assessee contended, unsuccessfully before the Taxing Officer that his income was below the taxable limit and filed a suit to recover the tax paid by him on the ground that he was not liable to be taxed under Act, section 39 of the Act of 1886 was held to be a bar to the suit, Swaminatha Iyer v. Secretary of State, 1 I.T.C. 25.

"If he has assessed income, then even if his assessment is wrong, the Civil Court cannot interfere by reason of section 39 of the Act. If he has assessed something which is not income, then he has acted without jurisdiction. (But who is to decide what is 'income'.) The plaint sets forth what the plaintiffs calls net income. This is not an expression to be found in the Act. The Act defines income and deals with income. It cannot be denied that the total sum on which the plaintiff has been assessed is income. This is implied in the plaint itself. The Collector, therefore, had jurisdiction to assess tax on it. The plaintiff claims that he is entitled to deduct Government revenue from the income. The Collector decided that he was not so entitled but this again was a matter within the jurisdiction of the Collector. If the Collector is to assess income-tax at all, he must decide how much comes in and what the outgoings to be legitimately deducted are. There is no dispute in this case as to what came in. The dispute is as to outgoings. This is for the Collector. I am wholly unable to see that anything has been done ultra vires. . . .", per Ross, J., in Secretary of State for India v. Forbes, 1 I.T.C. 23; A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 361.

"On the general principle on which the Civil Court interferes in such cases there is no doubt. Where an authority is by Statute vested with exclusive powers over any subject-matter, then so long as these powers are exercised on that subject-matter, the Civil Court cannot interfere, but if the authority purports to exercise these powers on what is not that subject-matter, then the Court will interfere, because the authority is not acting under the Statute and is not protected thereby. As was stated in Chairman of Giridih Municipality v. Srish Chandra Mozumdar, 35 Cal. 859, 'The true test is, whether there has been a substantial disregard of the provisions of the law which creates the authority . . . and regulates its powers and duties,' per Ross, J., in Secretary of State for India v. Forbes, 1 I.T.C. 23; A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 361.

On the other hand in Haji Rehemtulla Haji Tar Mahomed v. Secretary of State, 2 I.T.C. 118; A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 50, in which the question arose where profits accrued or arose, the Bombay High Court allowed a suit on the ground that the assessment was clearly ultra vires. The correctness of this ruling was, however, doubted by the same court in Shroff v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1943 I.T.R. 172.

In Raja of Ramnad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 3 I.T.C. 263; 52 Mad. 12, the Madras High Court said that the bar against a civil suit imposed by section 52 of the 1918 Act would not apply if the assessment was made in respect of an item of income clearly not assessable under the Act, and that in cases in which the Income-tax Officer had to decide whether a certain item of income was assessable or not his decision need not be ultra vires even if it was illegal.

These decisions and dicta are obsolete since the present Act provides the assessee with the right to demand a reference to the High Court on questions of law.

Position under present Act.—It was suggested, in passing in the judgment in Dunichand v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 4 I.T.C. 33; 10 Lah. 596, that even under the present Act a suit may lie if the assessment is ultra vires. For the contrary view, see R. N. Singha v. Secretary of State in Council, 2 I.T.C. 462; 5 Rang. 825; A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 70 and the case noted below.

The relevant authorities were closely reviewed by the Madras High Court in Secretary of State v. V. M. Meyappa Chettiar, 1936 I.T.R. 341; I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 211; A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 241, where it was held that in respect of matters which the Income-tax Act has left to be determined by the Income-tax authorities their decision cannot be questioned by a suit in a Civil Court. Accordingly, if the Income-tax authorities find, after due enquiry, that the assessee is a resident of British India, the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for a declaration that the assessee is not resident and that he is consequently not assessable as a resident. Also the fact that the assessee had defaulted and brought himself within the mischief of section 23 (4) and been thus deprived of the remedies provided by the Income-tax Act cannot give him a right to sue for a declaration of his non-assessability.

Illegal composition of tax—Not binding.—A proprietary life-assurance company established in the United Kingdom, had for some years been assessed to income-tax on the income basis of its untaxed income received in the United Kingdom. The basis of assessment was altered to a 'profits' basis, liability being calculated by reference to the surplus shown as the result of the last quinquennial valuation. For the next few years, the Society was assessed on the new basis, but afterwards in consequence of legislation altering the basis of taxation of income arising from foreign property, the company was assessed on an income basis. The company produced correspondence with the Surveyor of Taxes which, they averred, amounted to an agreement that the Crown was bound for five years to assess the company on the 'profits' basis, and asked for a declaration that the said agreement was valid and binding, and for an injunction restraining the Commissioners of Inland Revenue from enforcing or in any way acting upon the assessment made on the 'income' basis. Held, that the construction which the Society sought to put on the agreement was not a true one and that, if it were true, such an agreement would be invalid and ultra vires both as regards the Surveyor of Taxes and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. The question whether, having regard to the right of appeal allowed under section 57 of the Taxes Management Act, 1880, it was a proper case for a declaratory order against the Attorney-General was raised but not determined, Gresham Life Assurance Society, Limited v. Attorney-General, 7 Tax Cases 36; (1916) 1 Ch. 228.

"I can find nothing in these (departmental) instructions to suggest that the Inland Revenue had any intention of giving any concession to persons who are not entitled to any concession or exemption under the Act. Indeed, had the Inland Revenue attempted to do so by an agreement, the agreement, in my opinion, an opinion in which, I think, the Solicitor-General concurred on behalf of the Crown, would have been ultra vires" per Lord Blackburn in Inland Revenue v. Peter McIntyre, Ltd., 12 Tax Cases 1006.

In Liberty & Co. v. Inland Revenue, 12 Tax Cases 630, it did not avail the assessee to rely on a circular of the Board of Inland Revenue announcing a certain extra-legal concession in respect of investment in War Bonds.

On the other hand, when the Board of Inland Revenue broadcast a form calling for information which they had no right to call for from any one and the collection and supply of which might involve heavy expenditure and also required a person (plaintiff) to submit his return before the expiry of the statutory period, the Court interfered. Dyson v. Att. General, (1911) 1 K.B. 410 and (1912) 1 Ch. 158. So also, Burgh's case, (1911) 2 Ch. 139 and (1912) 1 Ch. 173 in which the Inland Revenue issued an unauthorised form, threatening with penalties failure of compliance, and the only way of contesting the action of the Inland Revenue was by way of declaration or defending proceedings for enforcement of penalties.

Remedy under Income-tax law not exhausted.—A company had been wrongly assessed, on the basis of its own returns, twice over in respect of a certain portion of its income for a series of years. A claim for refund was made on the Commissioners of Inland Revenue who were prepared to agree to a compromise on equitable lines. The Company did not accept the compromise and then brought in a petition of right. Held, (by Stephen, J.), that no petition of right lay, the grounds for the decision being (1) if the case was one of double assessment, a remedy was prescribed by the Income-tax Act under which the Commissioners of Inland Revenue were the sole judges of whether a double assessment had been made, (2) if the case was one of overcharge, the remedy was by way of appeal, and (3) in any case the claim for refund was time barred being more than three years old, Holborn Viaduct Co. v. R., 2 Tax Cases 228.

An individual, an advisory engineer by profession, refused to make a return for Excess Profits Duty on the ground that he was exempt and sought a declaration to that effect. The High Court, without going into the merits of the case, declined to make a declaration because there was an appropriate remedy way of appeal prescribed, Smceton v. Attorney-General, (1920) 1 Ch. 85; 12 Tax Cases 166; see also R. N. Singha v. Secretary of State in Council, 2 I.T.C. 462; A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 70; 5 Rang. 825 and In re Ramjidas Mahaliram, 1936 I.T.R. 25 (Cal.).

Tax—Paid under Coercion.—"To succeed in a suit for refund of tax paid it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show that the payment has been made under coercion . . . but it may be assumed for the purposes of this case that there was coercion within the meaning of section 72 of the Contract Act as interpreted by the Privy Council in Kanhya Lal v. National Bank of India, 40 Cal. 598; per Jenkins, C.J., in Forbes v. Secretary of State, 1 I.T.C. 8; 42 Cal. 151.

In Raja of Ramnad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, 3 I.T.C. 264; 52 Mad. 12, in which the assessee had included in his return of income non-taxable income and was taxed thereon, it was held that, the payment having been made voluntarily by mistake, and not by duress or coercion, no suit for recovery of tax lay in any circumstances.

67-A. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal under this Act or for an application under section 66, the day on which the order complained of was made, and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of such order, shall be excluded.

History.—This section was inserted by Act XXII of 1930 and removes doubts that had been felt as to the applicability of section 12 of the Indian Limitation Act to income-tax proceedings. See Muhammad Hayat Haj Muhammad v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab, 3 I.T.C. 319; A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 170; also Ramanatha Reddiar's case, 3 I.T.C. 10; 6 Rang. 175 and Mohanlal Hardecodas's case, 4 I.T.C. 90; 9 Pat. 172.

Scope.—The section applies only to appeals under this Act (see sections 30 and 32) and to applications under section 66. The section follows section 12 of the Indian Limitation Act. Note that section 5 of the latter Act has been specially extended by section 66 (7-A) of the Income-tax Act, to applications to the High Court made under sub-section (3) or (3-A) of section 66.

Copies of orders of Income-tax Officer and Assistant Commissioner.—Even though under the rules framed by a High Court it may be necessary to get copies of the Income-tax Officer's order and the Assistant Commissioner's order in addition to those of the Commissioner of Income-tax, the assessee gets no right thereby to extend the period of limitation by the time required to get copies of orders other than those of the Commissioner, Gulabchand Choteylal v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 5 I.T.C. 273; 53 All. 684; A.I.R. 1931 All. 673.

Invalid applications.—No time can be allowed in respect of an invalid application for copies of orders being corrected afterwards, Basantlal Ramjidas v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, 5 I.T.C. 383; 11 Pat. 40; A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 103.

Inapplicability of Limitation Act.—Since the Indian Income-tax Act specifically provides for the computation of periods of limitation [sections 66 (7-A) and 67-A], the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act do not apply to proceedings under the Income-tax Act. See section 29 of the Limitation Act, Lakshni Sevak Sahu v. Commissioner of Income-tax, U.P., 6 I.T.C. 142.

67-B. If on the first day of April in any year provision has not yet been made by an Act of the Indian Legislature for the charging of Income-tax for that year, this Act shall nevertheless have effect until such provision is so made as if the provision in force in the preceding year or the provision preferred in the Bill then before the Legislature, whichever is more favourable to the assessee, were actually in force.

History.—This section was added in 1940 to fill a lacuna in the Act. See notes under section 3.

Year.—The word as used in this section clearly refers to the financial year for tax is levied in respect of financial years.

Readjustment.—The section does not provide for the readjustment of tax in the light of the new finance Act. Can a supplementary assessment be made?

68. [* * * * *]

Repeals.—Section 68 along with the schedule of repealed enactments has been deleted by the Repealing and Amending Act, 1927 (XII of 1927).

Transitional provisions.—When the Appellate Tribunal was set-up, section 14 of the Income-tax Amendment Act of 1940 made special provisions in respect of jurisdiction over various appellate, revisional and reference proceedings then pending. These provisions were only of temporary interest.

SCHEDULE.

See Section 10 (7). This schedule contains special rules regarding the computation of the profits and gains of Insurance business, see notes under section 10 (7) where these rules have been set out and commented upon.

THE GOVERNMENT TRADING TAXATION ACT, ACT III OF 1926.

An Act to determine the liability of certain Government to taxation in British India in respect of trading operations.

WHEREAS it is expedient to determine the liability to taxation for the time being in force in British India of the Government of any part of His Majesty's Dominions, exclusive of British India in respect of any trade or business carried on by or on behalf of such Government ; it is hereby enacted as follows :—

Short title and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE GOVERNMENT TRADING TAXATION ACT, 1926.

(2) It shall come into force on such date¹ as the Central Government may by notification in the Gazette of India, appoint.

Liability of certain Governments to taxation in respect of trading operations.

2. (1) Where a trade or business of any kind is carried on by or on behalf of the Government of any part of His Majesty's Dominions, exclusive of British India, that Government shall, in respect of the trade or business and of all operations connected therewith, all property occupied in British India and all goods owned in British India for the purposes thereof, and all income arising in connection therewith, be liable—

(a) to taxation under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the like case a company would be liable ;

(b) to all other taxation for the time being in force in British India in the same manner as in the like case any other person would be liable.

(2) For the purposes of the levy and collection of income-tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1), any Government to which that sub-section applies shall be deemed to be a company within the meaning of that Act, and the provision of that Act shall apply accordingly.

(3) In this section the expression " His Majesty's Dominions " includes any territory which is under His Majesty's protection or in respect of which a mandate is being exercised by the Government of any part of His Majesty's Dominions.

History.—This Act is the outcome of a resolution of the Imperial Economic Conference in 1923 at which the Dominions of the British Empire decided to waive inter se their immunity from taxation under the laws of other dominions. This question of immunity is a much discussed one under international law, and the present Act places the position beyond doubt so far as Dominions of the British Empire are concerned.

Foreign countries.—This Act does not apply to countries outside the British Empire. The liability of such countries to British Indian tax and that of British India to tax in such countries depends on international law.

His Majesty's Dominions.—This is a special definition and cannot be extended to other purposes. It was ruled by the Allahabad High Court that the Tehri State, in which the British Government, under a treaty, "guarantee the Rajah and his posterity in the secure possession of the country..... and..... defend him against his enemies", is a territory which is under His Majesty's protection within the meaning of the Government Trading Taxation Act, The Tehri State case, In re Ram Prasad, 52 All. 419; A.I.R. 1930 All. 389. A ruling chief, not being an independent sovereign ruler, is not ipso facto exempt from tax on property owned by him in British India, Kumar Vishwanath Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, 1942 I.T.R. 322 (All.).

It was argued in the Tehri State case, 52 All. 419, that, under section 65 of the Government of India Act, which confines the jurisdiction of the legislature to persons within British India, the Government Trading Taxation Act is ultra vires since Indian States are not "persons within British India." Following section 19 of the English Interpretation Act, 1889, the Allahabad High Court held that the persons governing a State—whether individuals or bodies, carrying on business in British India came within the scope of the Indian legislature's law-making powers. Further, the object of the Act is to tax income acquired in British India (i.e., a thing in British India), and not to tax anything earned by a Government in its own territory. See also In re Patiala State Bank, 1943 I.T.R. 617 (P.C.).

Income from trading.—This Act applies only to profits from trading. The business need not be carried on in British India; it is enough if income accrues or arises or is received in British India, no matter where the business is carried on, and even if the entire business is carried on outside British India. In re Patiala State Bank, 1943 I.T.R. 61 (P.C.). Income from Government of India securities forming investments of the Patiala State Bank was held to be part of the profits of the Bank received in British India and therefore taxable; so also income from house property in British India taken over in settlement of bad debts, for even though the property may not be occupied for the purpose of the business, the income arose from the business.

Income from securities is taxed at source, and is exempt to the extent allowed under section 60—see Notifications under section 60. See also Introduction as to the liability of States to tax generally.

Trade or business.—As to what constitutes trade or business, see notes under section 2 (4) of the Income-tax Act.

And of all operations connected therewith.—This expression corresponds in a measure to the words 'business connection' used in section 42 (1) of the Income-tax Act. The idea is to widen the connotation of the words 'trade and business'.

Property occupied in British India.—This applies only to property used for trade or business or operations connected therewith. This Act does not determine the liability of property occupied otherwise than for purposes of trade.

Notice.—Under section 2 (2) it will be necessary for the Income-tax Officer to serve a notice on some person connected with the dominion or state and treat him as 'principal officer'.

Provincial Governments.—The proviso to section 155 of the Government of India Act, 1935, permits taxation by the Federal (Central) Government of Provinces in respect of trade or business carried on outside the province.

EXTRACTS FROM THE INDIAN FINANCE ACT, 1946.

11. Short Title and Extent.—(1) This Act may be called the Indian Finance Act, 1946.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

9. INCOME-TAX AND SUPER-TAX.—(1) Subject to the provisions of sub-sections (3), (4), (5), (6) and (7);—

(a) income-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1946, shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I of the Schedule, and

(b) rates of super-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1946 shall, for the purposes of section 55 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), be those specified in Part II of the Schedule.

(2) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1947, there shall be deducted from the total income of an assessee, in accordance with the provisions of section 15-A of the Indian Income-tax, Act, 1922, an amount equal to—

(i) one-tenth of the earned income chargeable under the head "Salaries" which is included in his total income, subject to a maximum of two thousand rupees, plus

(ii) one-fifth of the earned income other than the income chargeable under the head "Salaries" which is included in his total income:

Provided that the aggregate amount to be deducted under this sub-section shall not in any case exceed four thousand rupees.

(3) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1947,—

(a) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" as reduced by the deduction for earned income appropriate thereto, or any income chargeable under the head "Interest on Securities", or any income from dividends in respect of which he is deemed under section 49-B of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, to have paid income-tax imposed in British India, the income-tax payable by the assessee on that part of his total income which consists of such inclusions shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of income-tax payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1945, on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusions bears to his total income;

(b) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" on which super-tax has been or might have been deducted under the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the super-tax payable by the assessee on that portion of his total income which consists of such inclusion shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of super-tax payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1945, on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusion bears to his income.

(4) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1947, where the total income of an assessee consists partly of earned income and partly of unearned income, the super-tax payable by him shall be —

(i) on that part of the earned income chargeable under the head "Salaries" to which clause (b) or sub-section (3) applies, the amount of super-tax computed in accordance with the provisions of that clause, plus

(ii) on the remainder of the earned income, the amount which bears to the total amount of super-tax which would have been payable on his total income had it consisted wholly of earned income the same proportion as such remainder bears to his total income, plus

(iii) on the unearned income, the amount which bears to the total amount of super-tax which would have been payable on his total income had it consisted wholly of unearned income the same proportion as the unearned income bears to his total income.

(5) Where the total income of an assessee referred to in paragraph A of Part I of the Schedule does not exceed six thousand rupees and includes any income to which clause (a) of sub-section (3) applies, the income-tax payable by the assessee on such inclusion as computed in accordance with the provisions of that clause shall be reduced by an amount representing one rupee for every complete unit of two hundred rupees of such inclusion as reduced by the amount of income, if any, exempt under the second proviso to sub-section (1) of section 7; section 7, section 15, and sub-section (1) of section 58-F, of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922:

Provided that the reduction to be made under this sub-section shall not in any case exceed two-fifths of the income-tax otherwise payable on such inclusion:

Provided, further that if there is an incomplete unit of such inclusion amounting to one hundred rupees or more, it shall for the purposes of this sub-section be reckoned as a complete unit of two hundred rupees.

(6) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1947,—

(a) where the total income of a company includes any profits and gains from life insurance business, the super-tax payable by the company shall be reduced by an amount computed at the rate of one anna in the rupee on that part of its total income which consists of such inclusion;

(b) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any profits and gains from life insurance business, the income-tax and super-tax payable by the assessee on that part of his total income which consists of such inclusion shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of such taxes payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1942 (XII of 1942), on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusion bears to his total income, so however that the aggregate of the taxes so computed in respect of such inclusion shall not in any case exceed the amount of tax payable on such inclusion at the rate of five annas in the rupee.

(7) In cases to which section 17 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 applies, the tax chargeable shall be determined as provided in that section but with reference to the rates imposed by sub-section (1) of this section and in accordance, where applicable, with the provisions of sub-sections (3), (4), (5) and (6) of this section.

(8) For the purposes of making any deduction of income-tax in the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1946, under sub-section (2) or sub-section (2-B) of section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, from any earned income chargeable under the head "Salaries", the estimated total income of the assessee under this head shall, in computing the income-tax to be deducted, be reduced by an amount equal to one-fifth of such earned income but not exceeding in any case four thousand rupees.

(9) For the purposes of this section and of the rates of tax imposed thereby, the expression "total income" means total income as determined for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and the expression "earned income" has the meaning assigned to it in clause (6-AA) of section 2 of that Act.

(10) If any provision is made in the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the allowance of expenditure on scientific research related to the business carried on by an assessee, then any such expenditure incurred by him in the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1946 shall, for the purposes of that provision and in accordance therewith, be deemed to be expenditure incurred in the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1947, and shall be added to the amount of such expenditure, if any, in that previous year.

(11) Any sum being excess profits tax repaid in respect of any chargeable accounting period under the provisions of section 10 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942, or of S. 2 of the Excess Profits Tax Ordinance, 1943 (XVI of 1943) shall be deemed to be income for the purposes of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and shall, notwithstanding the provisions of S. 34 of that Act, be treated as income of the previous year which constitutes or includes the chargeable accounting period in respect of which the said sum is repayable:

Provided that any such sum repaid in respect of any profits which are also assessable to excess profits tax under the law in force in the United Kingdom shall be treated, for the purpose of assessment to income-tax and super-tax, as income of the previous year during which the repayment is made.

(12) The Income-tax Officer shall calculate the amount of income-tax and super-tax payable in respect of each sum referred to in sub-S. (11), and such amount shall be deducted from the said sum at the time that it is repaid, and where the regular assessment proceedings for the appropriate assessment year are not complete, the tax so deducted shall be treated as a payment of income-tax or super-tax, as the case may be, for the purposes of sub-section (5) of section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

(13) Any person objecting to the amount of a deduction made under sub-S. (12) may appeal to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner within thirty days of the receipt of the repayment order, and the provisions of Ss. 30, 31 and 33 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, shall apply as if such appeal were an appeal under the first-mentioned section.

(14) Where under the provisions of sub-S. (2) of S. 12 of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940 (XV of 1940), excess profits tax payable under the law in force in the United Kingdom has been deducted in computing for the purposes of income-tax and super-tax the profits and gains of any business, the amount of any repayment under sub-S. (1) of S. 28 of the Finance Act, 1941 (4 and 5 Geo. 6, c. 30), as amended by S. 37 of the Finance Act, 1942 (5 and 6 Geo. 6, c. 21), in respect of those profits, shall be deemed to be income for the purposes of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and shall, for the purpose of assessment to income-tax and super-tax, be treated as income of the previous year during which the repayment is made.

12. EXCESS PROFITS-TAX.—If any provision is made in clause (vi) of sub-S. (2) of S. 10 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), to allow in respect of depreciation a further sum which is not deductible in determining the written down value, then such sum shall not be included in the allowances made in computing profits for the purposes of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940 (XV of 1940).

13. AMENDMENT OF S. 10, ACT XII OF 1942.—(1) To sub-S. (1) of S. 10 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942, the following further proviso shall be added, namely:—

“Provided further that no such further sum herein referred to shall be deposited with the Central Government after the 28th of February, 1946.”

(2) The provisions of this section shall be deemed to have come into force on the 28th day of February, 1946.

THE SCHEDULE.

and in addition, in respect of that part of the total income (as reduced by the amount of dividends payable at a fixed rate) which does not exceed the amount of dividends, not being dividends payable at a fixed rate, declared in British India in respect of the whole or part of the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1947,— on the amount by which such part—

Rate.

- (a) exceeds 30 per cent., but does not exceed 40 per cent., of the total income as so reduced. Two annas in the rupee.
- (b) exceeds 40 per cent., but does not exceed 45 per cent., of the total income as so reduced. Three annas in the rupee.
- (c) exceeds 45 per cent., but does not exceed 50 per cent., of the total income as so reduced. Four annas in the rupee.
- (d) exceeds 50 per cent., but does not exceed 55 per cent., of the total income as so reduced. Five annas in the rupee.
- (e) exceeds 55 per cent., but does not exceed 60 per cent., of the total income as so reduced. Six annas in the rupee.
- (f) exceeds 60 per cent., of the total income as so reduced. Seven annas in the rupee.

Provided that—

(i) no additional super-tax shall be payable where such part is less than, or equal to, five per cent. on the capital of the company;

(ii) where such part is more than five per cent. on the capital of the company, the additional super-tax payable shall be reduced by the amount of additional super-tax which would, but for the provisions of clause (i) of this proviso, have been payable had such part been equal to five per cent. on the capital of the company;

(iii) where any dividends (not being dividends payable at a fixed rate) have been declared before the 1st day of March, 1946, in respect of the whole or part of the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1947, and the amount of super-tax computed at the rates set out in this paragraph exceeds the amount of super-tax which would be payable by the company at the rate specified in the Indian Finance Act, 1945, such proportion of the amount of super-tax computed under this paragraph as the amount of dividends declared before the 1st day of March, 1946, bears to the total amount of dividends declared in respect of the said previous year (not being dividends payable at a fixed rate) shall be so reduced as not exceed the same proportion of the super-tax computed at the rate specified in the Indian Finance Act, 1945.

(iv) the additional super-tax shall be payable only by a company in which the public are substantially interested within the meaning of the Explanation to sub-section (1) of section 23-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, or a subsidiary company of such a company where the whole of the share capital of such subsidiary company is held by the parent company or the nominees thereof.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this paragraph,—

(a) the expression “capital of the company” shall be deemed to mean the paid-up share capital at the beginning of the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1947 (other than capital entitled to a dividend at a fixed rate) plus any reserves other than depreciation reserves and reserves for bad or doubtful debts at the same date as diminished by the amount on deposit on the same date with the Central Government under section 10 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942, or section 2 of the Excess Profits Tax Ordinance, 1943;

(b) the expression “dividend” shall be deemed to include any distribution included in the expression “dividend” as defined in clause (6-A) of section 2 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and any such distribution made during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1947, shall be deemed to have been made in respect of the whole or part of the previous year.

(c) where any portion of the profits and gains of a company is not included in its total income, by reason of such portion being exempt from tax under any provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the capital of the company, the total amount of dividends and the amount of dividends payable at a fixed rate shall each be deemed to be the proportion thereof that the total income of the company bears to its total profits and gains.

NOTES ON THE INDIAN FINANCE ACT, 1946.

History.—Since 1922, the rates of tax are levied from year to year by the Annual Finance Acts, and the Income-tax Act remains an act regulating only machinery and procedure.

Total Income.—Note that the Finance Act, see sub-S. (9) of S. 11 defines this expression differently from S. 2 (15) of the Income-tax Act.

Rates of tax.—Note that companies and local authorities, certain trustees (See S. 41 of the Income-tax Act) and non-British non-residents (see S. 13) of the Income-tax Act have to pay income-tax at the maximum rate.

See also notes under S. 3 of the Income-tax Act as to the basis of assessment of different classes of assessee.

Surcharge.—In the 1946 Finance Act, the surcharges levied separately in the preceding years have been merged in the regular rates of tax.

Provisional collection of taxes.—See S. 67-B of the Income-tax Act which deals with the situation when a Finance Act has not been passed by the 31st of March.

Earned Income allowance.—For the assessment year 1946-47, this allowance was increased from 1/10th of the earned income subject to a maximum of Rs. 2,000 to 1/5th of earned income subject to a maximum of Rs. 4,000. But since salaries of 1945-46 are finally assessable only in 1946-47, but at the rates of the 1945 Finance Act, the earned income allowance for salaries remains at 1/10th of earned income subject to a limit of Rs. 2,000, as fixed by the Finance Act of 1945.

In the 1946 Act, different rates of super-tax apply to ‘earned’ and to other income, though there is no earned income allowance as in the case of income-tax.

Salaries and Interest on Securities and Dividends.—According to Clause (a) of sub-S. (3) of S. 11, in the case of an assessee other than a company, since these items are taxed at source, tax is levied on them on a proportionate basis with reference to the rate of the preceding year.

A deliberate exception has been made in the case of a Company, evidently because, if a Company were to pay tax at different rates on different parts of its income, there would be difficulty in “grossing” up dividends in the hands of shareholders with reference to S. 16 (2) of the Income-tax Act.

In the case of salaries, super-tax also is levied on a proportionate basis with reference to the rates of the preceding year, because super-tax also is deducted at source. But if super-tax was not deductible at source, the salary being below the super-taxable limit, it is liable at the rate of the assessment year, and not at that of the year in which the salary was drawn, thus if a total income of (say) Rs. 80,000 is composed of:

			Rs.
Salary	30,000
Profits	10,000
Business	40,000
Total ..			80,000

(1) Super-tax on salary will be $\frac{3}{8}$ ths of the super-tax on Rs. 80,000 at 1945-46 rates (which did not differentiate between earned and unearned income for super-tax).

(2) Super-tax on property will be $\frac{1}{8}$ th of super-tax on Rs. 80,000 at the 1946-47, rates for unearned income.

(3) Super-tax on business will be $\frac{1}{2}$ of super-tax on Rs. 80,000 at the 1946-47 rates for earned income.

The super-tax payable will be the sum of the three items above.

Income-tax will be as follows:

(a) On salary at $\frac{28}{80}$ of the tax on Rs. 80,000 of 1945-46 rates ($28=30-2$ for earned income)

(b) On other items at $\frac{48}{80}$ of the tax on Rs. 80,000 at 1946-47 rates ($48=50-2$ earned income in business).

The income-tax payable is the sum of the above two items.

Sub-section (5).—The 'funding' scheme, for the lower brackets, introduced by the Finance Acts of the preceding years having been given up by this Finance Act of 1946 this sub-section gives relief in cases with a total income below Rs. 6,000. The relief, as in the 'funding', is $\frac{1}{2}\%$ of the taxable income; i.e., income less exempt blocks.

All salaried assessees whose total income does not exceed Rs. 6,000 are eligible for the relief, which, however, will not exceed $\frac{2}{5}$ th of the tax on the total income at 1945 rates; this two fifths is the equivalent of the surcharge in the second and third slabs.

In fact the whole of this sub-section is consequential on the reduction of income-tax in the second and third slabs.

Sub-section (6).—A company is not liable to ordinary super-tax on its income from life insurance business, but it is liable to additional tax, e.g., dividend tax. An assessee other than a Company with profits from life insurance business will pay tax at the 1942 Finance Act rates but subject to a maximum of 5 annas in the rupee.

Sub-section (10).—This is consequential on the fact that the Income-tax Amendment Bill, 1945 had to be withdrawn owing to disagreement in the legislature and had to be reintroduced in 1946.

Sub-section (11).—Excess Profits Tax having been allowed as a deduction for the purpose of income-tax, the refund of Excess Profits Tax is related back to the previous year which constitutes or includes the chargeable accounting period to which the refund relates; and section 34 of the Income-tax Act is accordingly relaxed for this purpose.

The exception in respect of doubly taxed income is obviously made in order to simplify double income-tax relief.

Sub-section (12).—The Income-tax Officer will deduct at source the income-tax and super-tax payable in respect of refund of excess profits tax.

SCHEDULE

PART I.

Proviso to paragraph A.—If total income is wholly earned, income-tax under clause (iii) (a) is lower on incomes up to Rs. 2,017; above that limit clause (iii) (b) will give lower results. If the income is wholly unearned clause (iii) (a) will benefit the assessee up to Rs. 2,071. If income is partly earned and partly unearned and lies between Rs. 2,017 and Rs. 2,071, both the methods should be worked out to see which benefits the assessee.

PART II

Companies.

Public Companies.—Note that the additional super-tax is payable only by a public company, i.e., in which the public are substantially interested [vide Explanation to section 23-A (1)].

Declared in British India.—Note the words 'declared in British India'. The tax therefore is not payable by a company with its registered office abroad which declares dividends abroad, even though its income may accrue in British India.

Capital.—See clause (a) of the explanation.

'Paid up share capital' must obviously include all such capital irrespective of its origin, i.e., whether paid for in cash or not and whether taken from reserves or by otherwise writing up capital.

Depreciation reserve should be excluded even if capitalized and distributed as bonus shares.

'Reserves' mean real reserves and not provisions for contingencies which are similar to Depreciation and Bad Debts Reserves.

Example.—The example below illustrates how the additional super-tax or Dividend tax is to be calculated.

EXAMPLE:

Paid up capital on ordinary shares ..	10,00,000
On Preference shares (5 per cent.) ..	2,00,000
General Reserves (other than depreciation).	5,00,000
Total Income ..	2,10,000
Dividends declared on ordinary shares ..	1,50,000
Dividends declared on Preference shares ..	10,000

Additional super-tax is payable on that part of the total income which does not exceed the amount of dividends on ordinary shares i.e., which does not exceed Rs. 1,50,000.

The slabs of 1,50,000 are to be determined with reference to percentages of the total income as reduced by the amount of dividends payable at a fixed rate, i.e., 2,10,000 minus 10,000 or 2 lakhs.

On 30 per cent. of 2 lakhs i. e., 60,000	Nil
On the excess over 30 per cent. but not over 40 per cent. i. e., 10 per cent. of 2 lakhs. 20,000 at 2 annas.	2,500
On the excess over 40 per cent. but not over 45 per cent. i. e. 5 per cent. of 2 lakhs. 10,000 at 3 annas.	1,875
On the excess over 45 per cent. but not over 50 per cent. i. e. 5 per cent. of 2 lakhs. 10,000 at 4 annas.	2,500
On the excess over 50 per cent. but not over 55 per cent. i. e. 5 per cent. of 2 lakhs. 10,000 at 5 annas.	3,125
On the excess over 55 per cent. but not over 60 per cent. i. e. 5 per cent. of 2 lakhs. 10,000 at 6 annas.	3,750
On the excess over 60 per cent. 30,000 at 7 annas.	13,125
<hr/> 1,50,000	<hr/> 26,875

Now 5 per cent. on the capital of the company is 5 per cent.
on 10 lakhs plus 5 lakhs i. e. 75,000

Under clause (ii) of the proviso, the above amount is to be reduced by the additional super-tax payable if the dividends amounted to 75,000 i. e. by

1,875

Ordinary super-tax at As. 1. on 2,10,000

25,000
13,125

3,125

Now if this company had declared interim dividend on ordinary shares at 10 per cent. before the 1st March, 1946, and declared the balance of 5 per cent. on or after that date, the calculations according to clause (iii) of the proviso would be as follows:—

Proportion of dividends declared before 1-3-46 to total dividends		2 : 3
2/3rd of the super-tax calculated as above		25,417
Super-tax payable at the 1945 rates on 2,10,000 at 3 annas.	39,375
Less rebate at As. 1. on 2,10,000 minus 1,50,000 i. e. on 60,000	3,750
	35,625
2/3rd of the super-tax calculated at 1945 rates		23,750
Reduction to be made under clause (iii) of the proviso		1,667
• The super-tax payable is thus 38, 125-1, 667		36,458

Dividend.—Clause (b) of explanation to the paragraph about additional super-tax lays down that the expression 'dividend' includes any distribution contemplated in section 2 (6-A) of the Income-tax Act. Thus if a company issues any debentures, or there is a distribution on its liquidation or on reduction of its capital during the financial year 1946-47, such distribution, though it is not dividend for any specified period, is to be deemed to be dividend for the previous year for 1946-47 assessment. This clause applies only to the kind of distribution contemplated in section 2 (6-A), and not to the normal dividend.

Partly exempt dividends.—Clause (c) of the Explanation lays down that where any portion of the profits and gains of a company is not included in its total income, the factors entering into the computation of additional super-tax (viz., the capital, total amount of dividends and dividends payable at fixed rate) are each to be taken in the proportion that the total income of the company bears to its total profits and gains. Thus in the case of a tea company which is liable to tax on 40 per cent., of its profits, the other 60 per cent. being agricultural income, the material figures for computing additional super-tax in the example set out above would be as follows:

Paid Up Capital

On ordinary shares	..	4 lakhs, i.e., 40 per cent. of 10 lakhs.
On preference shares	..	8 lakhs.
Reserves	..	2 lakhs.
Total Income	..	84,000
Dividends declared on ordinary shares	..	60,000
Dividends declared on preference shares	..	4,000 and the calculations will be made accordingly.

Private Companies.—Additional super-tax is not payable by private companies as they fall within section 23-A of the Income-tax Act which came into force again from 1st April, 1947, and is applicable to the profits and gains for the previous year for the 1946-47 assessment. In the case of companies which, under the first proviso to section 23-A are required to distribute 100 per cent of the net profits after payment of taxes as dividends, there is no hardship as, whether they distribute any dividends or not, the full 100 per cent. is treated as dividends in the assessment of shareholders under section 23-A. Other private companies could have avoided the application of section 23-A by distributing 60 per cent. as dividends but might not have declared sufficient dividends, since at the relevant time section 23-A was in abeyance. There would have been some hardship in such cases if they were not allowed to declare and distribute sufficient dividends to escape the application of section 23-A. They were therefore allowed as a concession by executive orders to make up the deficiency, if any, and to distribute additional dividends up to the required percentage by the 30th June, 1946, or if all the shareholders of the company consented to the inclusion of their share of the dividend in their assessments the company was to be treated as having declared a 60 per cent. dividend.

EXTRACTS FROM THE INDIAN FINANCE ACT, 1942.

1. (1) This Act may be called the Indian Finance Act, 1942.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

* * * * *

8. (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) and (3),—

(a) income-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1942, shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I Schedule II increased in the cases to which sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph A and paragraph B of that Part apply by a surcharge for the purposes of the Central Government at the rate specified therein in respect of each such rate of income-tax, and

(b) rates of super-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1942, shall, for the purposes of section 55 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), be those specified in Part II of Schedule II increased in the cases to which paragraphs A, B and C of that Part apply by a surcharge for the purposes of the Central Government at the rate specified therein in respect of each such rate of super-tax.

(2) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1943,—

(a) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" or under the head "Interest on Securities" or any income from dividends in respect of which he is deemed under section 49-B of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, to have paid income-tax imposed in British India, the income-tax payable by the assessee on that part of his total income which consists of such inclusions shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of income-tax payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1941, on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusions bears to his total income;

(b) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" on which super-tax has been or might have been deducted under the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the super-tax payable by the assessee on that portion of his total income which consists of such inclusions shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of super-tax payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1941, on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusion bears to his total income.

(3) In cases to which section 17 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, applies, the tax chargeable shall be determined as provided in that section but with reference to the rates imposed by sub-section (1) of this section and, in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) of this section where applicable.

(4) For the purposes of this section and of the rates of tax imposed thereby, the expression "total income" means total income as determined for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

(5) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) no tax shall be payable in cases to which sub-paragraph (a) of paragraph A of Part I of Schedule II applies where the assessee deposits with the Central Government in such manner and in accordance with such conditions as the Central Government may by rule prescribe for the purposes of this sub-section an amount representing not less than one rupee for every complete unit of twenty-five rupees by which his total income exceeds seven hundred and fifty rupees;

Provided that where the total income includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" or under the head "Interest on Securities" or any income from dividends in respect of which he is deemed under section 49-B of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, to have paid income-tax imposed in British India, the amount to be deposited by the assessee in order to obtain the exemption conferred by this sub-section shall be an amount bearing to the minimum required to be deposited under the foregoing provisions of this sub-section the same proportion as the amount of his total income diminished by the amount of such inclusions bears to the amount of his total income.

(6) A deposit made in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (5) shall not in any way be capable of being charged and shall not be liable to attachment under any decree or order of any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court in respect of any debt or liability incurred by the depositor and neither the Official Assignee nor any receiver appointed under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, shall be entitled to or have any claim on any such deposit.

(7) Where the total income of an assessee referred to in sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph A of Part I of Schedule II does not exceed six thousand rupees, an amount representing one rupee for every complete unit of two hundred rupees of his total income as reduced by the deductions, if any, allowed under the second proviso to sub-section (1) of section 7, section 15 and sub-section (1) of section 58-F of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, shall be funded for the assessee's benefit and shall be paid to him on such date, not more than twelve months after the termination of the present hostilities, as the Central Government may fix:

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall apply to any part of total income to which clause (a) of sub-section (2) applies.

Explanation.—In computing the amount to be funded under this sub-section if there is an incomplete unit amounting to one hundred rupees or more it shall be reckoned as a complete unit of two hundred rupees.

EXTRACTS FROM THE INDIAN FINANCE ACT, 1943.

(1) This Act may be called the Indian Finance Act, 1943.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

* * * * *

5. (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-sections (2) and (3).—

(a) income-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1943, shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I of Schedule II increased in the cases to which sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph A and paragraph B of that Part apply by a surcharge for the purposes of the Central Government at the rate specified therein in respect of each such rate of income-tax, and

(b) rates of super-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1943, shall, for the purposes of section 55 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, (XI of 1922), be those specified in Part II of Schedule II increased in the cases to which paragraphs A, B and C of that Part apply by a surcharge for the purposes of the Central Government at the rate specified therein in respect of each such rate of super-tax.

(2) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1944,—

(a) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" or under the head "Interest on Securities" or any income from dividends in respect of which he is deemed under section 49-B of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), to have paid income-tax imposed in British India, the income-tax payable by the assessee on that part of his total income which consists of such inclusions shall be an amount bearing to the amount of income-tax payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1942 (XII of 1942), on his total income, the same proportion as the amount of such inclusions bears to his total income;

(b) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" on which super-tax has been or might have been deducted under the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), the super-tax payable by the assessee on that portion of his total income which consists of such inclusions shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of super-tax payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1942 (XII of 1942), on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusions bears to his total income.

(3) In cases to which section 17 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), applies, the tax chargeable shall be determined as provided in that section but with reference to the rates imposed by sub-section (1) of this section, and in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) of this section where applicable.

(4) For the purposes of this section and of the rates of tax imposed thereby, the expression "total income" means total income as determined for the purposes of Income-tax or super-tax, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922).

(5) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) no tax shall be payable in cases to which sub-paragraph (a) of paragraph A of Part I of Schedule II applies where the assessee deposits with the Central Government in such manner and in accordance with such conditions as the Central Government may by rule prescribe for the purposes of this sub-section an amount representing not less than one rupee for every complete unit of twenty-five rupees by which his total income exceeds seven hundred and fifty rupees.

(6) A deposit made in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (5) shall not in any way be capable of being charged and shall not be liable to attachment under any decree or order of any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court in respect of any debt or liability incurred by the depositor and neither the Official Assignee nor any receiver appointed under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 (V of 1920), shall be entitled to or have any claim on any such deposit.

(7) Where the total income of an assessee referred to in sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph A of Part I of Schedule II does not exceed six thousand rupees, an amount representing one rupee for every complete unit of two hundred rupees of his total income as reduced by the income, if any, exempt from tax under any provision of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), or any notification issued thereunder shall be funded for the assessee's benefit and shall be paid to him on such date, not more than twelve months after the termination of the present hostilities, as the Central Government may fix:

Explanation.—In computing the amount to be funded under this sub-section if there is an incomplete unit amounting to one hundred rupees or more it shall be reckoned as a complete unit of two hundred rupees.

(8) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (7) of section 8 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942 (XII of 1942), the amount to be funded under that sub-section for the assessee's benefit in respect of any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1943, shall be calculated on his total income as reduced by the income, if any exempt from tax under any provision of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), or any notification issued thereunder.

(9) The Central Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules prescribing the manner and conditions referred to in sub-section (5).

EXTRACT FROM THE INDIAN FINANCE ACT, 1944.

(1) This Act may be called the Indian Finance Act, 1944.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

* * * * *

6. Income-tax and super-tax.—(1) Subject to the provisions of sub-sections (2), (3) and (5),—

(6) income-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1944, shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I of the Second Schedule increased in each case by a surcharge for the purposes of the Central Government at the rate specified therein in respect of each such rate of income-tax, and

(b) rates of super-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1944, shall, for the purposes of section 55 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), be those specified in Part II of the Second Schedule increased in the cases to which paragraphs A, B and C of that Part apply by a surcharge for the purposes of the Central Government at the rate specified therein in respect of each such rate of super-tax.

(2) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1945,—

(a) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" or under the head "Interest on Securities" or any income from dividends in respect of which he is deemed under section 49-B of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), to have paid income-tax imposed in British India, the income-tax payable by the assessee on that part of his total income which consists of such inclusions shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of income-tax payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1943 (VIII of 1943), on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusions bears to his total income;

(b) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" on which super-tax has been or might have been deducted under the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), the super-tax payable by the assessee on that portion of his total income which consists of such inclusions shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of super-tax payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1943 (VIII of 1943), on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusions bears to his total income.

(3) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1944, or the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1945,—

(a) where the total income of a company includes any profits and gains from life insurance business the super-tax payable by the company on that part of its total income which consists of such inclusion shall be in the case of an assessment for the first mentioned year at the rate of one anna and one pie in the rupee and in the case of an assessment for the second mentioned year at the rate of nine pies in the rupee;

(b) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any profits and gains from life insurance business the income-tax and super-tax inclusion shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of such taxes payable by the assessee on that part of his total income which consists of such inclusion shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of such taxes payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1942 (XII of 1942) on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusion bears to his total income, so, however, that if the aggregate of the taxes so computed in respect of such inclusion exceeds the aggregate of the taxes on the same income payable by a company under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1942 (XII of 1942) the taxes payable on such inclusion shall be computed at the rates applicable to a company under the operation of the said Act.

(4) Where any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1944, to which clause (a) or (b) of sub-section (3) is applicable has been completed at the rates of tax in operation under the Indian Finance Act, 1943 (VIII of 1943), it shall be revised by the Income-tax Officer in accordance with the provisions of clause (a) or (b), as the case may be, of sub-section (3) and the excess tax paid, if any, shall be refunded.

(5) In cases to which section 17 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), applies, the tax chargeable shall be determined as provided in that section but with reference to the rates imposed by sub-section (1) of this section, and in accordance with the provisions of sub-sections (2) and (3) of this section where applicable.

(6) For the purposes of this section and of the rates of tax imposed thereby, the expression "total income" means total income as determined for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922).

(7) Where the total income of an assessee referred to in paragraph A of Part I of the Second Schedule does not exceed six thousand rupees, an amount representing one rupee for every complete unit of two hundred rupees of his total income as reduced by the income, if any, exempt from tax under any provision of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), or any notification issued thereunder shall be funded for the assessee's benefit and shall be paid to him on such date, not more than twelve months after the termination of the present hostilities, as the Central Government may fix.

Explanation.—In computing the amount to be funded under this sub-section if there is an incomplete unit amounting to one hundred rupees or more it shall be reckoned as a complete unit of two hundred rupees.

(8) The provisions of section 23-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), shall not apply in respect of profits and gains of the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1945.

7. Income-tax and super-tax.—(1) Subject to the provisions of sub-sections (3), (4) and (5),—

(a) income-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1945, shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I of the Second Schedule increased in each case by a surcharge for the purposes of the Central Government at the rate specified therein in respect of each such rate of income-tax, and

¹This "Explanation" was inserted by Ordinance XXXIII of 1944.

(b) rates of super-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1945, shall, for the purposes of section 55 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), be those specified in Part II of the Second Schedule increased in the cases to which paragraphs A, B and C of that Part apply by a surcharge for the purposes of the Central Government at the rate specified therein in respect of each such rate of super-tax.

(2) If any provision is made in the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), for the exemption from income-tax of a portion of the earned income included in the total income of an assessee, then, in making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1946, there shall be deducted from the total income of an assessee in accordance with such provision an amount equal to one-tenth of such earned income exclusive of any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" but not exceeding in any case two thousand rupees.

(3) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1946, where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any income chargeable under the head "Salaries" or under the head "Interest on Securities" or any income from dividends in respect of which he is deemed under section 49-B of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922) to have paid Income-tax imposed in British India, the income-tax payable by the assessee on that part of his total income which consists of such inclusions shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of income-tax payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1944, on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusions bears to his total income.

(4) In making any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1946,—

(a) where the total income of a company includes any profits and gains from life insurance business, the super-tax payable by the company on that part of its total income which consists of such inclusion shall be at the rate of six pias in the rupee;

(b) where the total income of an assessee, not being a company, includes any profits and gains from life insurance business, the income-tax and super-tax payable by the assessee on that part of his total income which consists of such inclusion shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of such taxes payable according to the rates applicable under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1942 (XII of 1942), on his total income the same proportion as the amount of such inclusion bears to his total income, so, however, that if the aggregate of the taxes so computed in respect of such inclusion exceeds the aggregate of the taxes on the same income payable by a company under the operation of the Indian Finance Act, 1942 (XII of 1942), the taxes payable on such inclusion shall be computed at the rates applicable to a company under the operation of the said Act.

(5) In cases to which section 17 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), applies, the tax chargeable shall be determined as provided in that section but with reference to the rates imposed by sub-section (1) of this section, and in accordance with the provisions of sub-sections (3) and (4) of this section where applicable.

(6) For the purposes of this section and of the rates of tax imposed thereby, the expression "total income" means total income as determined for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922); and the expression "earned income" means earned income as defined for the purposes of the said Act.

(7) Where the total income of an assessee referred to in paragraph A of Part I of the Second Schedule does not exceed six thousand rupees, an amount representing one rupee for every complete unit of two hundred rupees of his total income as reduced by the income, if any, exempt from tax under any provision of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), or any notification issued thereunder shall be funded for the assessee's benefit and shall be paid to him on such date not more than twelve months after a termination of the present hostilities, as the Central Government may fix:

Provided that the amount to be funded for the assessee's benefit shall in no case exceed two-fifths of the tax payable by him.

Explanation.—In computing the amount to be funded under this sub-section if there is an incomplete unit amounting to one hundred rupees or more it shall be reckoned as a complete unit two hundred rupees.

(8) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (7) of section 6 of the Indian Finance Act, 1944, the amount to be funded for the assessee's benefit under the provisions of that sub-section shall in no case exceed two-fifths of the amount of tax payable by him in respect of his assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1945.

(9) The provisions of section 23-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), shall not apply in respect of profits and gains of the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1946.

8. Continuance of and rate of excess profits tax.—(1) In sub-clause (a) of clause (6) of section 2 of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940 (XV of 1940), for the words and figures "31st day of March, 1945," the words and figures "31st day of March, 1946," shall be substituted.

(2) The excess profits tax imposed by section 4 of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940 (XV of 1940) shall, in respect of any chargeable accounting period beginning after the 31st day of March, 1945, be an amount equal to sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. of the amount by which the profits of the business during that chargeable accounting period exceed the standard profits.

INDIAN FINANCE (INCOME-TAX) RULES, 1942.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT (CENTRAL REVENUES) NOTIFICATION
No. 27, INCOME-TAX, DATED THE 4th APRIL, 1942.

No. 27.—In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (3) of section 10 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942 (XII of 1942), the Central Government is pleased to make the following rules for prescribing the manner and conditions referred to in sub-section (5) of section 8 of the said Act, namely:—

1. (1) These rules may be called the Indian Finance (Income-tax) Rules, 1942.

(2) They apply to the whole of British India including British Baluchistan and those excluded and partially excluded areas to which the Indian Finance Act, 1942, has been or may hereafter be applied by notification under sub-section (1) of section 92 of the Government of India Act, 1935.

2. In these rules the expression "total income" means total income as defined in sub-section (15) of section 2 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922).

3. Within 60 days of the publication of the notice under sub-section (1) of section 22 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (or such longer period as may be specified in the notice), any person, not being a company, a local authority or a person not resident in British India whose total income during the previous year exceeded Rs. 1,500 but did not exceed Rs. 2,000 may instead of making the return prescribed under rule 19 of the Indian Income-tax Rules, 1922, furnish to the Income-tax Officer a verified return of his total income in Form A annexed to these rules together with a certificate furnished by the Post Master under rule 7 showing that he has deposited in the Indian Post Office Defence Savings Bank an amount not less than the amount prescribed in sub-section (5) of section 8 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942:

Provided that where a person claims a refund of tax deducted or paid at source, such claim shall be made separately in accordance with rules 36 and 37 of the Indian Income-tax Rules, 1922:

Provided further that the return in Form A of the total income for the previous year and the certificate may be furnished not later than the 31st August in the year 1942.

4. On receipt of the return made under rule 3, if the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that the return made and the amount deposited are correct, he shall not take any further proceedings, but if the amount deposited is found to be less than the minimum amount that should have been deposited on a correct computation on the basis of the return made, he shall call upon the person to make good the deficiency within one month of such intimation. If such person deposits the amount within the said time he shall forthwith send to the Income-tax Officer the certificate of deposit furnished under rule 7 by the Post Master. If he does not deposit the amount, or fails to send the certificate to the Income-tax Officer, he shall be liable to assessment under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and in that case the amount deposited by him shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Post Office Defence Savings Bank Rules, be paid back to him, or at his option transferred to the credit of income-tax revenue, on a direction issued by the Income-tax Officer to the Post Master.

5. If the Income-tax Officer is not satisfied as to the correctness of the return made under rule 3, or the person fails to make good the deficiency in deposit as required by rule 4, the Income-tax Officer shall serve upon him a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and determine the total income and the tax payable thereon under the provisions of the said Act, provided that if the proceedings for assessment are started not in consequence of any deficiency in the amount deposited and if the income determined on assessment is still found to be below Rs. 2,000 the Income-tax Officer shall allow the assessee the option of depositing within one month the further amount due, if any, on such determination or of paying the income-tax due. If the assessee exercises the former option, no appeal shall lie against such determination. If he exercises the latter option, the Income-tax Officer shall serve upon him the notice of demand under section 29 of the Indian Income-tax Act,

1922, and the amount deposited in respect of the income which has been subjected to assessment shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Post Office Defence Savings Bank Rules, be paid back to the assessee, or at his option transferred to the credit of income-tax revenue on a direction issued by the Income-tax Officer to the Post Master:

Provided that where the assessee fails to exercise any option, or fails to deposit the amount due, if any, or having deposited the amount, fails to forward to the Income-tax Officer the certificate of deposit furnished under rule 7 by the Post Master, he shall be deemed to have exercised the latter option.

6. Where an assessee does not make a return as required by rule 3 and is not a person from whose salary a deposit has been deducted under rule 8, he shall not be allowed to discharge his liability to tax by making a deposit after the expiry of the date fixed for making the return.

7. Where a person makes a deposit in the Indian Post Office Defence Savings Bank for the purposes of rule 3, 4 or 5, the Post Master shall furnish to the person a certificate stating the name and address of the depositor, the amount deposited, the date of deposit, and the number of his account in the Bank.

8. Where the estimated total income chargeable under the head "salaries" exceeds Rs. 1,500 but does not exceed Rs. 2,000, the person responsible for paying the income shall before deducting income-tax as required by sub-section (2) of section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, allow the payee to exercise the option of depositing with the Central Government the amount specified in sub-section (5) of section 8 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942, and where such option has been exercised the person responsible for paying the income shall deduct from the amount of each payment, such portion of the amount to be deposited in respect of the estimated total income of the payee under the head "salaries" as each such payment bears to such total income:

Provided that such person may at the time of making any deduction, increase or reduce the amount to be deducted for the purpose of adjusting any excess or deficiency arising out of any previous deduction or failure to deduct:

Provided further that unless the estimated total income under the head "salaries" is likely to exceed two thousand rupees the option once exercised shall be final for the financial year ending on the 31st March of the year in respect of which the option has been exercised.

9. Where during the course of the financial year it is found that the total income of a person under the head "salaries" is likely to exceed two thousand rupees the person responsible for paying the income-tax shall, under the proviso to sub-section (2) of section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, adjust the deficiency arising out of the failure to deduct the proper amount of income-tax, and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Post Office Defence Savings Bank Rules, the amount deposited in the name of such person during that financial year shall, at his option, be treated as part of the income-tax appropriate to his total income and shall be transferred from the said deposit to the credit of income-tax revenue.

10. Where the total income of a person from whose salary deduction has been made in accordance with rule 8 for deposit in the Indian Post Office Defence Savings Bank is found on assessment to exceed two thousand rupees, he shall be chargeable to tax in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Post Office Defence Savings Bank Rules, the amount deposited, in respect of the income or part of the income included in the said assessment shall, at the option of the assessee, be treated as part of tax due, from him and shall be transferred from the said deposit to the credit of income-tax revenue.

11. All sums deducted under rule 8 shall, for the purpose of computing the total income of an assessee, be deemed to be income received.

12. All sums deducted in accordance with the provisions of rule 8 shall be deposited within one week by the person making the deduction in the Indian Post Office Defence Savings Bank in the name of the person from whose salary the deduction is made.

13. If any person does not deduct or after deducting fails to deposit the amount as required by rule 12, he shall, without prejudice to any other consequences which he may incur, be deemed to be an assessee in default in respect of the amount of income-tax that was deductible by him under sub-section (2) of section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922:

Provided that the Income-tax Officer shall not make a direction under sub-section (1) of section 46 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the recovery of any penalty from such person unless satisfied that such person wilfully failed to deduct and deposit the appropriate amount.

14. In the case of income chargeable under the head "salaries" where deduction in accordance with rule 8 is not made by or on behalf of Government the person making the deduction shall forthwith send to the Income-tax Officer within whose jurisdiction the deduction is made [or where there is more than one Income-tax Officer having jurisdiction in the same area to the Income-tax Officer specified by the Commissioner of Income-tax in accordance with rule 11 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Rules, 1922], a statement in Form B annexed to these rules.

15. In the case of income chargeable under the head "salaries" where deduction under rule 8 is made by or on behalf of Government, a return under section 21 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, shall be prepared and submitted by the person specified in rule 15 of the Indian Income-tax Rules, 1922. The return will be in the form prescribed by rule 17 of the said rules with the modification that in column 14 thereof the amount deposited during the year shall be shown.

INDIAN FINANCE (INCOME-TAX) RULES, 1943.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT (CENTRAL REVENUES) NOTIFICATION
NO. 48 (24)-I.T. 42, DATED THE 3RD APRIL, 1943.

No. 48 (24)-I.T. 42. In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (9) of section 5 of the Indian Finance Act, 1943 (VIII of 1943), the Central Government is pleased to make the following rules for prescribing the manner and conditions referred to in sub-section (5) of section 5 of the said Act, namely:—

1. (1) These Rules may be called the Indian Finance (Income-tax) Rules, 1943.

(2) They apply to the whole of British India including British Baluchistan and those excluded and partially excluded areas to which the Indian Finance Act, 1943, has been or may hereafter be applied by notification under sub-section (1) of section 92 of the Government of India Act, 1935.

2. The Indian Finance (Income-tax Rules, 1942, prescribed for the purposes of sub-section (5) of section 8 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942, shall apply for the purposes of sub-section (5) of section 5 of the Indian Finance Act, 1943, subject to the following modifications and additions, namely:—

In the said Rules—

(a) for the words, brackets and figures "sub-section (5) of section 8 of the Indian Finance Act, 1942" wherever they occur the words, brackets and figures "sub-section (5) of section 5 of the Indian Finance Act, 1943" shall be substituted.

(b) for the second proviso to rule 3 the following proviso shall be substituted, namely—

"Provided further that in the case of a person whose total income includes any income chargeable under the head 'salaries' or under the head 'interest on securities' from which tax has been deducted under section 18 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922) or dividends in respect of which he is deemed under section 49-B of the said Act to have paid income-tax himself in British India, the amount of the tax deducted or paid at source may, if he elects to discharge his

"In respect of the income from salaries|interest on securities|Dividends shown in paragraph 1 a sum of Rs. _____ has been deducted or is deemed to have been paid at source and therefore the balance of Rs. _____ only/no amount has been deposited in the Defence Savings Bank account."

Provided that in respect of assessments or reassessments made in the course of any proceedings taken under the powers conferred by this sub-section the periods of eight and four years mentioned in sub-section (2) of section 34 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), shall be deemed to commence on and to run from the date on which the notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 or sub-section (1) of section 34 of that Act is reissued under the powers conferred by this sub-section:

Provided further that where a person proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer or the Excess Profits Tax Officer, as the case may be, that he has already been assessed in respect of the income or the excess Profits in respect of which notices under section 22 or section 34 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), or under section 13 or section 15 of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940 (XV of 1940), have been reissued, and that he has paid the tax, he shall not be subject to fresh assessment.

(2) Any return or information required or which could be required under the provisions of either of the said Acts to be furnished by any person shall, if the Income-tax Officer or the Excess Profits Tax Officer so requires at any time, be again furnished by such person notwithstanding that it may have been or is alleged to have been already furnished, and any failure to comply with any such requirement by an Income-tax Officer or Excess Profits Tax Officer shall involve the same consequences as if the return or information had been altogether withheld.

3. Settlement of doubts.—If any question arises whether a document or record has been damaged, lost or destroyed as a result of riot or civil commotion, the matter shall be referred to the Commissioner of Income-tax or to the Commissioner of Excess Profits Tax, as the case may be, and his decision shall be final.

4. Power to make rule.—The Central Government may make rules providing for any matter necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this Ordinance.

ORDINANCE No. IV of 1943.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this proviso, the expression "dividend" shall be deemed to include any distribution included in the expression "dividend" as defined in clause (6A) of section 2 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and any such distribution made during the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1945, shall be deemed to have been made in respect of the whole or part of the previous year.'

ORDINANCE No. XLV of 1944.

(Published in the Gazette of India Extraordinary on the 3rd October, 1944.)

AN

to remove doubts as to the validity of certain notices under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, and the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940.

Whereas an emergency has arisen which makes it necessary to remove doubts as to the validity of certain notices under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), and the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940 (XV of 1940);

Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, as set out in the Ninth Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935 (26 Geo. 5, c. 2), the Governor-General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance:—

1. Short title, extent and commencement.—(1) This Ordinance may be called the Income-tax and Excess Profits Tax (Validity of Notices) Ordinance, 1944.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, and applies also, within the Indian States and the tribal areas, in relation to the persons specified in sub-section (2) of section 1 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922).

(3) It shall come into force at once.

2. Validity of certain notices.—For the removal of doubts it is hereby enacted that every notice published or issued, whether before or after the commencement of this Ordinance *[but not later than the 19th day of May 1945].

(a) under sub-section (1) of section 22 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), requiring a return to be furnished within sixty days from the date of the notice, or

(b) under sub-section (2) of the said section or under sub-section (1) of section 34 of the said Act, requiring a return to be furnished within thirty days of the receipt of the notice, or

(c) under sub-section (1) of section 13 of the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940 (XV of 1940) requiring a return to be furnished within sixty days from the date of the service of the notice, or

(d) under section 15 of the last-mentioned Act, requiring a return to be furnished within sixty days of the receipt of the notice—shall, notwithstanding any judgment or order of any Court, Appellate Tribunal or Income-tax authority to the contrary, and whether or not any specified date on or before which the return is to be furnished is or has been given in the notice as an alternative, be deemed to give or have given a period of notice in full compliance with law, and no such notice shall be called in question or be deemed to be, or at any time to have been, invalid for any purpose whatsoever (including any proceedings, criminal or otherwise, instituted whether before or after the commencement of this Ordinance, under, or for a contravention of, any of the provisions of either of the above-mentioned Acts) on the ground merely that a period insufficient in law within which to carry out the requirements of the notice has been specified therein.

ORDINANCE No. IX of 1945.

(Published in the Gazette of India Extraordinary on the 28th April, 1945.)

AN

ORDINANCE

further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

Whereas an emergency has arisen which makes it necessary further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), for the purposes hereinafter appearing;

Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, as set out in the Ninth Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935 (26 Geo. 5, c. 2), the Governor-General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance:—

1. Short title and commencement.—(1) This Ordinance may be called the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Ordinance, 1945.

(2) It shall come into force at once.

2. Amendment of section 2, Act XI of 1922.—In section 2 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), after clause (6A) the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

“(6AA) “earned income” means any income of an assessee who is an individual, Hindu undivided family, unregistered firm or other association of persons not being a company, a local authority, a registered firm or a firm treated as registered under clause (b) of sub-section (5) of section 23—

(a) which is chargeable under the head “Salaries”; or

(b) which is chargeable under the head “Profits and gains of business, profession or vocation” where the business, profession or vocation is carried on by the assessee or, in the case of a firm, where the assessee is a partner actively engaged in the conduct of the business, profession or vocation; or

*These words and figures were inserted by Ordinance No. XVI of 1945.

(c) which is chargeable under the head "Other sources" if it is immediately derived from personal exertion or represents a pension or superannuation or other allowance given to the assessee in respect of his past services or the past services of any deceased person;

and includes any such income which, though it is the income of another person, is included in the assessee's income under the provisions of this Act, but does not include any such income which is exempt from tax under sub-section (2) of section 14 or under a notification issued under section 60;

3. Insertion of new section 15A in Act XI of 1922.—After section 15 of the said Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

"15A. Exemption of portion of earned income.—The tax shall not be payable by an assessee in respect of such portion, if any, of the earned income included in his total income as is directed by the annual Act of the Central Legislature fixing the rate or rates of tax for any year to be deducted in making an assessment for that year, and for the purposes of determining the rates at which income-tax (but not super-tax) is payable by the assessee for that year his total income shall be deemed to be the total income reduced by the said portion."

4. Amendment of section 16, Act XI of 1922.—To clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 16 of the said Act, the following shall be added, namely:—

"and any sum exempted under section 15-A shall also be included except for the purpose of determining the rates at which income-tax (but not super-tax) is payable by the assessee of whom the exemption is given."

5. Amendment of section 17, Act XI of 1922.—To section 17 of the said Act the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

"(5) Where the amount of the total income of any assessee is deemed to be, the total income reduced under the provisions of section 15-A by an allowance for earned income, the expression 'total income' in this section shall, for the purpose of determining the amount of income-tax (but not super-tax) payable by the assessee, be deemed to refer to his total income so reduced."

6. Amendment of section 56, Act XI of 1922.—In section 56 of the said Act, after the words "Except in cases to which" the words, figures and letter "section 15-A applies or to which" shall be inserted.

7. Amendment of section 58, Act XI of 1922.—In sub-section (1) of section 58 of the said Act, after the words and figures "and sections 15" the figures and letter "15-A" shall be inserted.

ORDINANCE NO. XVI OF 1945.

(Published in the Gazette of India Extraordinary on the 19th May, 1945.)

AN

to amend the Income-tax and Excess Profits Tax (Validity of Notices) Ordinance, 1944.

Whereas an emergency has arisen which makes it necessary to amend the Income-tax and Excess Profits Tax (Validity of Notices) Ordinance, 1944 (XLV of 1944), for the purpose hereinafter appearing;

Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, as set out in the Ninth Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935 (26 Geo. 5, c. 2), the Governor-General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance:—

1. Short title and commencement.—(1) This Ordinance may be called the Income-tax and Excess Profits Tax (Validity of Notices) Amendment Ordinance, 1945.

(2) It shall come into force at once.

2. Amendment of section 2, Ordinance XLV of 1944.—In section 2 of the Income-tax and Excess Profits Tax (Validity of Notices) Ordinance, 1944, after the words "commencement of this Ordinance" where they occur for the first time, the words and figures "but not later than the 19th day of May, 1945" shall be inserted.

ORDINANCE NO. XXIV OF 1945.

(Published in the Gazette of India Extraordinary on the 14th July, 1945.)

AN

to exempt certain war gratuities from liability to income-tax.

Whereas an emergency has arisen which makes it necessary to provide for exempting certain war gratuities from liability to income-tax;

Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by section 72 of the Government of India Act, as set out in the Ninth Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935, (26 Geo. 5, c. 2), the Governor-General is pleased to make and promulgate the following Ordinance:—

1. Short title and commencement.—(1) This Ordinance may be called the War Gratuities (Income-tax Exemption) Ordinance, 1945.

(2) It shall come into force at once.

2. Interpretation.—In this Ordinance "war gratuity" means any gratuity paid in respect of any person's service in His Majesty's Forces in connection with any hostilities in which His Majesty has been or may be engaged during the period commencing on the 3rd day of September, 1939 and ending on such date as the Central Government may by notification in the official Gazette specify in this behalf, but does not include a gratuity (by whatever name called) payable under a contract of service.

3. Exemption of war gratuities from liability to income-tax.—Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (XI of 1922), any war gratuity paid whether after the commencement of this Ordinance or not to any person shall not for the purposes of that Act be included in the total income or world income of that person.

APPENDIX I.

ACTS BEFORE 1886.

THE first general income-tax was levied in 1860. Prior to this date there had been various local taxes on trade, etc., which were really the survival of native regimes.

The Income-tax Act of 1860 (Act XXXII of 1860 amended by XXXIX of same year by XXI of 1861, by IX and XVI of 1862, by XXVII of 1863) remained in force till 1865.

The law of 1860 was modelled very closely on the English Income-tax Law. In fact the schedules and various other provisions were verbatim reproductions of the sections in the English Acts.

Application.—To all incomes and profits arising from property, professions, trades and offices not being less than Rs. 200 per annum, the non-taxable limit was raised to Rs. 500 by Act XVI of 1862.

Rate of Assessment.—Two per cent. on incomes, etc., between Rs. 200 and 500 per annum; 4 per cent. on incomes, etc., above Rs. 500; 1 per cent. of the latter rate was intended to provide for Public Works Charges. The rate was reduced to 3 per cent. by Act XXVII of 1863.

Exemptions.—(1) Military and Police officers whose pay was less than that of a Captain of Infantry (Rs. 415 a month).

(2) Naval and Indian Marine officers whose pay did not exceed that of a Naval Lieutenant (Rs. 175 a month).

(3) Cultivators of land, the rent value of which was less than Rs. 600 per annum.

(4) Religious and charitable institutions (this last at the discretion of the Local Governments subject to the approval of the Governor-General in Council).

2. A licence tax on trades, etc., carried on by men who did not fall within the scope of the Income-tax Act or whose profits were less than Rs. 200 per annum was imposed by Act XVIII of 1861. Traders of this description were divided into three classes at the discretion of the assessing officers, which paid at the rate of Rs. 3, 2 and 1 per annum respectively.

This Act was repealed by Act II of 1862, the year in which the minimum taxable income under the Income-Tax Act was raised to Rs. 500.

3. Licence Tax Act of 1867 (XXI of 1867), so called because all persons taxable thereunder had to take out a license on which the taxation prescribed by the Act was charged. But Government servants were not required to take out a licence, and the tax was deducted from their salaries before disbursement. Remained in force only till 1868.

Application.—To all persons exercising a profession or trade and whose income or profit was not less than Rs. 200 a year.

Rate of Assessment.—The principle of a percentage rate was given up, all ordinary assesseees were divided into six classes according to amount of income or profit, and each class paid a fixed rate commencing at Rs. 4 per annum on incomes between Rs. 200 and 500, and ending at Rs. 500 on incomes above Rs. 25,000 per annum. (This was at the rate of 2 per cent. on the minimum income in each class.) Higher assessments than this were imposed only on certain large Companies which paid at Rs. 1,000 and 2,000 according to the amount of paid-up capital.

Exemptions.—(1) Military officers not in civil employ whose pay did not exceed Rs. 6,000 per annum. The Police Department was not civil employ for this purpose.

(2) Police officers drawing less than the pay of a Captain of Infantry (Rs. 415 a month).

(3) All Government officers whose annual income was less than Rs. 1,000.

(4) Cultivators in respect of the produce of their lands unless they sold the same in a shop.

(5) At the discretion of the Governor-General in Council, all persons assessed to any municipal or local tax—such as the Pandhari tax in the Central Provinces, on the exercise of any trade or profession to the extent they had paid under such tax.

4. The Certificate Act of 1868 (XI of 1868).—This was on much the same lines as the licence tax of 1867 which it superseded (the authorisation for carrying on a taxable trade or profession was now called “a certificate”) as regards the general non-official tax payer though the classes and fees of assessment were somewhat altered and the limit of non-taxable income raised; but as regards Government and Companies’ servants and (optionally) for Companies’ profits, it introduced the important modification of a rateable tax on incomes.

Application.—To all incomes and profits derived from trades and professions not less in amount than Rs. 500 per annum.

Rate of Assessment.—Servants of Government and Companies paid at 1 per cent. on incomes. Companies themselves had the option of paying 1 per cent. on dividend or a fixed sum of Rs. 500 for each place of business. Other assesseees were divided into 10 classes, each of which paid at a fixed rate from Rs. 8 on an annual income of less than Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 6,400 on one of 4 lakhs and upwards (1 $\frac{3}{5}$ per cent. on the minimum income of each class).

Exemptions.—(1) Military and Police officers as in the 1867 Act, except that the Police officers’ non-taxable income was now raised to the same level as the military men’s, viz., Rs. 500 a month.

(2) All servants and clerks on pay of less than Rs. 1,000 per annum. (The 1867 Act had given this concession only to Government servants.)

(3) Cultivators as in the 1867 Act.

5. The Income-tax Act of 1869 (IX of 1869, amended by XXIII of same year).

Application.—To all incomes and profits not being less than Rs. 500 per annum.

Original Rate of Assessment.—On Companies' profits and on salaries drawn from Government, Local Boards, Companies and any other public bodies, 1 per cent.

Other persons were divided into classes according to their income or profit and taxed at fixed rates varying from Rs. 6 on an income between Rs. 500 and Rs. 750 to Rs. 1,140 on an income between Rs. 1,10,000, with Rs. 100 extra for every additional Rs. 10,000 (a little over 1 per cent. on the minimum income of each class).

By the amending Act (XXIII of 1869) these rates were raised as follows:—

On Companies to $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

On Government servants, etc., to $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

On other persons to 150 per cent. of the rates previously scheduled.

Exemptions.—(1) Military officers as under the previous Act, but the exemption in favour of Police officers disappeared.

(2) Property solely applied to religious and charitable purposes.

(3) The exemptions previously allowed to cultivators and to clerks and servants on less than Rs. 1,000 per annum have now disappeared.

6. Income-tax Act of 1870 (XVI of 1870).

Application.—As before, to all incomes and profits not being less than Rs. 500 per annum.

Rate of Assessment.—All incomes and profits other than those under Rs. 2,000 per annum and not derived from service under Government, or Local Board, or Company or other public body were now taxed rateably at 6 pies in the rupee ($3\frac{1}{8}$ per cent.). The excepted incomes under Rs. 2,000 were arranged into four classes paying fixed rates and varying from Rs. 19 $\frac{1}{2}$ on incomes between Rs. 500 and 750 to Rs. 54 on those between Rs. 1,500 and Rs. 2,000 (about $3\frac{1}{8}$ per cent. on the minimum income in each class).

Exemptions.—As in the 1869 Act.

7. Income-tax Act of 1871 (XII of 1871).—This followed the Act of 1870 with the following alterations:—

(1) The limit of non-taxable income was raised to Rs. 750 per annum.

(2) The rate of assessment was reduced to 2 pies per rupee (a little over 1 per cent.) and this was a universal rate, that is the fixed rate for incomes under Rs. 2,000 under the previous Act were done away with.

8. Income-tax Act of 1872 (VIII of 1872).—This followed the Act of 1871 with the exception that the limit of non-taxable income was raised to Rs. 1,000 per annum. The Act lapsed on 31st March, 1873.

9. We next come to the Licence Tax Acts of 1877-1880.

(1) Act VIII of 1877 (India) applied only to the North-Western Provinces and taxed all trades and commercial dealings other than those which were (a) purely agricultural, or (b) produced a net annual profit of less than Rs. 200. Exemption (a) was with reference to the fact that in 1877-78 additional cesses were imposed on land throughout Northern India to meet the famine assurance grant.

Persons taxable were assessed without any reference to income, but simply with reference to the nature of their occupation according to a Schedule under which they paid fixed fees of Rs. 2, Rs. 8 or Rs. 16 per annum as the case might be.

(2) Act II of 1878 (India) applies to the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab. Like the Act of 1877, it taxed all trades and dealings other than those which were purely agricultural and exempted a man otherwise taxable if his annual income or profit was below a certain amount. Section 26 of the Act left this amount to be fixed by the Local Government with the sanction of the Government of India, and the non-taxable limit adopted was Rs. 200 a year for the North-Western Provinces and Rs. 100 for the Punjab.

As compared with the Act of 1877, this not only raised fees other than the lowest very largely, but provided grades taxed at different rates within each class. The class of an assessee was determined by his vocation, his grade within it by the Collector. The grading was evidently to be made on a rough estimate of assumed earnings, and no one was to be charged in excess of 2 per cent. thereof. This accounts for the provision of the Schedule that a man who would naturally fall under Class I or II might be reduced to a lower class by reason of insufficient earnings.

Thus, while the Act of 1877 taxed employment without reference to profits, except in so far as the low scale of these might justify total exemption, the Act of 1878 began by taxing employment, but varied the assessment with reference to profits also.

(3) Bengal Act I of 1878 was similar in its application to the Northern India Act as applied to the Punjab, while there were two schedules of taxation—one for Calcutta and one for the rest of the Province.

For Calcutta the Northern India system of taxing by occupation was applied, but without the refinement of grades within the trade classes except in Classes I and VI. But here also a man could be put below his proper class if it could be shown that he would otherwise pay more than 2 per cent. on his earnings.

For the districts the principle of taxation by occupation was maintained only as regards certain lucrative trades entered in Class I of the Schedule. Other persons were classed at the Collector's discretion which was no doubt exercised with reference to assumed profits.

(4) Bombay Act III of 1878 extended to all trades and dealings other than those which were purely agricultural. Assesseees were divided into 15 classes which paid fees varying from Rs. 2 to 200 per annum. Classification was made by the Collector with reference to assumed profits, but no one could be taxed at a higher rate than 2 per cent. thereon. This involved exemption of incomes less than Rs. 100 per annum.

(5) Madras Act III of 1878 went on the same lines as the Bombay Act, but with the following differences:—

(1) The exemption limit was Rs. 200 per annum.

(2) The fees were higher, assesseees being arranged in 12 classes which paid fees according to profits at rates varying from Rs. 4 on an income of between Rs. 200 and 500 to Rs. 800 on an income of Rs. 40,000 and upwards. The rates fixed came to 2 per cent. on the lowest income in each class.

(6) By Act III of 1880 (Madras) the Madras classes were changed to 8, varying from incomes between Rs. 500 and Rs. 1,250, which paid Rs. 10, to those of Rs. 25,000 and upwards which paid Rs. 500.

10. Other amending Acts of 1880 (VI of 1880), India; (II of 1880), Bengal.—These raised the limit of non-taxable income to Rs. 500 a year throughout India and altered previous Schedules in certain details.

11. The Licence Tax Acts thus amended remained in force till 1886.

APPENDIX II.

STAMPS AND COURT-FEES.

Affidavits.—An affidavit is not exempt from stamp duty on the ground that it is required for the immediate purpose of being filed or used in any Income-tax proceedings or before the Income-tax Officer or the Assistant Commissioner or the Commissioner, as none of these officers is a 'Court' except to the extent specified in section 37 of the Income-tax Act [see Exemption (b), Article 4, Schedule I, Indian Stamp Act.]

Copies or Extracts.—Under Article 24, Schedule I, Indian Stamp Act, all copies or extracts issued by officers in the Income-tax Department are liable to pay stamp duty if under the law they are not chargeable with Court-fees.

Authorisation letters.—If a letter authorising a clerk or some one else to appear before an officer of the Income-tax Department on behalf of the assessee is so written as to make it a 'power of attorney', i.e., to make it safe for the Income-tax authority to treat the agent as though he were the principal, it should be stamped as an authority to act in a single transaction [Article 48 (c) of Schedule I]. There is however nothing to prevent an Income-tax Officer permitting a representative to appear without acting on behalf of an assessee, i.e., merely to produce or explain accounts, etc., and in such a case, the authorisation will not be dealt with as a power-of-attorney.

Orders—Copies of.—Under Schedule I, Article 6, of the Court-fees Act, every copy of an order passed by an officer in the Income-tax Department in respect of any proceedings under the Act is chargeable with Court-fees.

Under Article 9 of the same Schedule, every copy of an Income-tax proceeding or order (not otherwise provided for by the Court-fees Act) or copy of any account, statement, report or the like taken out of an office in the Income-tax Department is liable to pay Court-fees.

Article 6 of Schedule I of the Court-fees Act applies to quasi-judicial orders, e.g., assessment orders including orders enhancing assessments, orders under section 27, orders imposing penalties under section 25 (2) and section 28 (1) and all appellate and revisional orders generally; and Article 9 to other orders.

The fifth paragraph of the Second Schedule of the Court-fees Act applies to every case in which a judgment, decree or order has been passed by any Court, Board or Officer capable of passing such judgment, decree or order. In view of the words "or when presented to any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court or to any Board or Executive Officer" and "judgments, decrees or orders passed by such Court, Board or Officer", applications to an Assistant Commissioner for copies of orders should bear Court-fees, Basantlal Ramji v. Commissioner of Income-tax, B. & O., 10 Pat. 40, A.I. R. 1932 Pat. 103, 5 I.T.C. 383.

Petitions—Applications.—Under Article 1 of Schedule II every application or petition presented to "any Executive Officer" (which presumably includes any officer in the Income-tax Department) for the purpose of obtaining a copy or translation of any order passed by such officer or any other document on record in such office is chargeable with Court-fees.

Under Article 1 (b) of the same Schedule, Court-fee is chargeable on every application or petition when presented to a Collector or any Revenue Officer having jurisdiction equal or subordinate to a Collector and not otherwise provided for by the Court-fees Act. It is doubtful, however, whether this Article will apply to applications presented to officers in the Income-tax Department.

Under Article 1 (c) of the same schedule, an application or petition presented to the Central Board of Revenue is chargeable with Court-fee.

Vakalatnama.—Under Article 10 (a) and (c) of the same schedule, a Mukhtarnama or Vakalatnama presented for the conduct of any one case to an officer in the Income-tax Department or the Central Board of Revenue is chargeable with Court-fee.

Appeal—Memorandum of.—Under Article 11 (a) and (b) a memorandum of appeal presented to an officer in the Income-tax Department or the Central Board of Revenue is chargeable with Court-fee.

Refunds.—Applications for refunds under section 48 of the Indian Income-tax Act are exempt from payment of Court-fees. See clause (xx) of section 19 of the Court-Fees Act, under which all applications for payment of money due by Government are exempt from Court-fees.

Court-fees—Computation of.—In all those cases where the Court-fee is ad valorem, the monetary value for the purpose of determining the Court-fee is the amount of tax or penalty levied by the Income-tax Officer.

Copies for assessee's information—Gratis.—For his own information, however, the assessee can, under departmental orders, have copies of any of the orders free, but they may not be used for any purpose except on payment of Court-fees. An assessment order for instance cannot be used for appeal unless stamped with Court-fees but the assessee can have a copy for his own private use gratis.

Rates of duties.—Stamp duties and Court-fees vary from Province to Province.

APPENDIX V.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CIVIL PROCEDURE CODE.

ORDER V.

ISSUE AND SERVICE OF SUMMONS.

Issue of Summons.

1. (1) When a suit has been duly instituted a summons may be issued to the defendant to appear and answer the claim on a day to be therein specified:

Provided that no such summons shall be issued when the defendant has appeared at the presentation of the plaint and admitted the plaintiff's claim.

* * * * *

- (3) Every such summons shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court.

* * * * *

3. (1) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the defendant, the summons shall order him to appear in person in Court on the day therein specified.

Court may order defendant or plaintiff to appear in person.

- (2) Where the Court sees reason to require personal appearance of the plaintiff on the same day, it shall make an order for such appearance.

No party to be ordered to appear in person unless resident within certain limits.

4. No party shall be ordered to appear in person unless he resides—

(a) within the local limits of the Court's ordinary original jurisdiction, or

(b) without such limits but at a place less than fifty or (where there is railway or steamer communication or other established public conveyance for five-sixths of the distance between the place where he resides and the place where the Court is situate) less than two hundred miles distance from the Court-house.

* * * * *

6. The day for the appearance of the defendant shall be fixed with reference to the current business of the Court, the place of residence of the defendant and the time necessary for the service of the summons; and the day shall be so fixed as to allow the defendant sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer on such day.

Fixing day for appearance of defendant.

* * * * *

Service of Summons.

9. (1) Where the defendant resides within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is instituted, or has an agent resident within that jurisdiction who is empowered to accept the service of the summons, the summons shall, unless the Court otherwise directs,

Delivery or transmission of summons for service.

be delivered or sent to the proper officer to be served by him or one of his subordinates.

(2) The proper officer may be an officer of a Court other than that in which the suit is instituted and, where he is such an officer, the summons may be sent to him by post or in such other manner as the Court may direct.

10. Service of the summons shall be made by delivering or tendering a copy thereof signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints in this behalf, and sealed with the seal of the Court.

* * * * *

Service to be on defendant in person when practicable or on his agent.

12. Wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient.

13. (1) In a suit relating to any business or work against a person who does not reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court from which the summons is issued, service on any manager or agent, who, at the time of service, personally carries on such business or work for such person within such limits, shall be deemed good service.

(2) For the purpose of this rule the master of a ship shall be deemed to be the agent of the owner or charterer.

* * * * *

15. Where in any suit the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him.

Explanation.—A servant is not a member of the family within the meaning of this rule.

16. Where the serving officer delivers or tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons.

17. Where the defendant or his agent, or such other person as afore-said refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence, cannot find the defendant, and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and shall then return the original to the Court from which it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto.

stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed.

18. The serving officer shall, in all cases in which the summons has been served under rule 16, endorse or annex, or cause to be endorsed or annexed, on or to the original summons, a return stating the time when and the manner in which the summons was served, and the name and address of the person (if any) identifying the person served and witnessing the delivery or tender of the summons.

19. Where a summons is returned under rule 17, the Court shall, if the return under that rule has not been verified by the affidavit of the serving officer, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching his proceedings, and may make such further inquiry in the matter as it thinks fit; and shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit.

20. (1) Where the Court is satisfied that there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service, or that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way, the Court shall order the summons to be served by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place in the Court-house, and also upon some conspicuous part of the house (if any) in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit.

(2) Service substituted by order of the Court shall be as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally.

(3) Where service is substituted by order of the Court, the Court shall fix such time for the appearance of the defendant as the case may require.

21. A summons may be sent by the Court by which it is issued, whether within or without the province, either by one of its officers or by post to any Court (not being the High Court) having jurisdiction in the place where the defendant resides.

22. Where a summons issued by any Court established beyond the limits of the towns of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay is to be served within any such limits, it shall be sent to the Court of Small Causes within whose jurisdiction it is to be served.

23. The Court to which a summons is sent under rule 21 or rule 22 shall, upon receipt thereof, proceed as if it had been issued by such Court and shall then return the summons to the Court of issue, together with the record (if any) of its proceedings with regard thereto.

24. Where the defendant is confined in a prison, the summons shall be delivered or sent by post or otherwise to the officer in charge of the prison for service on the defendant.

Service on defendant in prison.

25. Where the defendant resides out of British India and has no agent in British India empowered to accept service, the summons shall be addressed to the defendant at the place where he is residing and sent to him by post, if there is postal communication between such place and the place where the Court is situate.

Service where defendant resides out of British India and has no agent.

Service in foreign territory through Political Agent or Court.

26. Where—

(a) in the exercise of any foreign jurisdiction vested in His Majesty or in the Central Government or the Crown Representative, a Political Agent has been appointed, or a Court has been established or continued, with power to serve a summons issued by a Court under this Code in any foreign territory in which the defendant resides, or

(b) the Provincial Government has, by notification in the Official Gazette, declared, in respect of any Court situate in any such territory and not established or continued in the exercise of any such jurisdiction as aforesaid, that service by such Court of any summons issued under this Code by a Court of the Province shall be deemed to be valid service. The summons may be sent to such Political Agent or Court, by post or otherwise, for the purpose of being served upon the defendant; and, if the Political Agent or Court returns the summons with an endorsement signed by such Political Agent or by the Judge or other officer of the Court that the summons has been served on the defendant in manner hereinbefore directed such endorsement shall be deemed to be evidence of service.

27. Where the defendant is a public officer (not belonging to His Majesty's military, naval or air forces) or is the servant of a railway company or local authority, the Court may, if it appears to it that the summons may be most conveniently so served, send it for service on the defendant to the head of the office in which he is employed, together with a copy to be retained by the defendant.

Service on civil public officer or on servant of railway company or local authority.

28. Where the defendant is a soldier, sailor or airman the Court shall send the summons for service to his Commanding Officer together with a copy to be retained by the defendant.

Service on soldiers.

29. (1) Where a summons is delivered or sent to any person for service under rule 24, rule 27 or rule 28, such person shall be bound to serve it, if possible, and to return it under his signature, with the written acknowledgment of the defendant, and such signature shall be deemed to be evidence of service.

Duty of person to whom summons is delivered or sent for service.

(2) Where from any cause service is impossible, the summons shall be returned to the Court with a full statement of such cause and of the steps taken to procure service, and such statement shall be deemed to be evidence of non-service.

30. (1) The Court may, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, substitute for a summons a letter signed by the Judge or such officer as he may appoint in this behalf, where the defendant is, in the opinion of the Court, of a rank entitling him to such mark of consideration.

(2) A letter substituted under sub-rule (1) shall contain all the particulars required to be stated in a summons, and, subject to the provisions of sub-rule (3), shall be treated in all respects as a summons.

(3) A letter so substituted may be sent to the defendant by post or by a special messenger selected by the Court, or in any other manner which the Court thinks fit; and, where the defendant has an agent empowered to accept service, the letter may be delivered or sent to such agent.

ORDER XVI.

SUMMONING AND ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES.

1. At any time after the suit is instituted, the parties may obtain, on application to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf, summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents.

Summons to attend to give evidence or produce document.

* * * * *

5. Every summons for the attendance of a person to give evidence or to produce a document shall specify the time and place at which he is required to attend, and also whether his attendance is required for the purpose of giving evidence or to produce a document, or for both purposes, and any particular document, which the person summoned is called on to produce, shall be described in the summons with reasonable accuracy.

Time, place and purpose of attendance to be specified in summons.

6. Any person may be summoned to produce a document, without being summoned to give evidence; and any person summoned merely to produce a document shall be deemed to have complied with the summons if he causes such document to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same.

Summons to produce document.

Power to require persons present in Court to give evidence or produce document.

7. Any person present in Court may be required by the Court to give evidence or to produce any document then and there in his possession or power.

8. Every summons under this Order shall be served as nearly as may be in the same manner as a summons to a defendant, and the rules in Order V as to proof of service shall apply in the case of all summonses served under this rule.

Summons how served.

9. Service shall in all cases be made a sufficient time before the time specified in the summons for the attendance of the person summoned, to allow him a reasonable time for preparation and for travelling to the place at which his attendance is required.

Time for serving summons.

10. (1) Where a person to whom a summons has been issued either to attend to give evidence or to produce a document fails to attend or to produce the document in compliance with such summons the Court shall, if the certificate of the serving officer has not been verified by affidavit, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching the service or non-service of the summons.

(2) Where the Court sees reason to believe that such evidence or production is material, and that such person has, without lawful excuse, failed to attend or to produce the document in compliance with such summons or has intentionally avoided service, it may issue a proclamation requiring him to attend to give evidence or to produce the document at a time and place to be named therein; and a copy of such proclamation shall be affixed on the outer door or other conspicuous part of the house in which he ordinarily resides.

(3) In lieu of or at the time of issuing such proclamation, or at any time afterwards; the Court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant, either with or without bail, for the arrest of such person, and may make an order for the attachment of his property to such amount as it thinks fit, not exceeding the amount of the costs of attachment and of any fine which may be imposed under rule 12:

Provided that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for the attachment of immovable property.

If witness appears, attachment may be withdrawn.

11. Where, at any time after the attachment of his property, such person appears and satisfies the Court,—

(a) that he did not, without lawful excuse, fail to comply with the summons or intentionally avoid service, and

(b) where he has failed to attend at the time and place named in a proclamation issued under the last preceding rule, that he had no notice of such proclamation in time to attend, the Court shall direct that the property be released from attachment, and shall make such order as to the costs of the attachment as it thinks fit.

12. The Court may, where such person does not appear, or appears but fails so to satisfy the Court, impose upon him such fine not exceeding five hundred rupees as it thinks fit, having regard to his condition in life and all the circumstances of the case, and may order his property, or any part thereof, to be attached and sold or, if already attached under rule 10, to be sold for the purpose of satisfying all costs of such attachment, together with the amount of the said fine, if any:

Procedure if witness fails to appear.

Provided that, if the person whose attendance is required pays into Court the costs and fine aforesaid, the Court shall order the property to be released from attachment.

13. The provisions with regard to the attachment and sale of property in the execution of a decree shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to any attachment and sale under this order as if the person whose property is so attached were a judgment-debtor.

Mode of attachment.

place named in the summons for that purpose, and whoever is summoned to produce a document shall either attend to produce it, or cause it to be produced at such time and place.

When they may depart.

16. (1) A person so summoned and attending shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, attend at each hearing until the suit has been disposed of.

(2) On the application of either party and the payment through the Court of all necessary expenses (if any), the Court may require any person so summoned and attending to furnish security to attend at the next or any other hearing or until the suit is disposed of and, in default of his furnishing such security, may order him to be detained in the civil prison.

17. The provisions of rules 10 to 13 shall, so far as they are applicable be deemed to apply to any person who having attended in compliance with a summons departs, without lawful excuse, in contravention of rule 16.

Application of rules 10 to 13.

18. Where any person arrested under a warrant is brought before the Court in custody and cannot, owing to the absence of the parties or any of them, give the evidence or produce the document which he has been summoned to give or produce, the Court may require him to give reasonable bail or other security for his appearance at such time and place as it thinks fit and on such bail or security being given, may release him, and, in default of his giving such bail or security, may order him to be detained in the civil prison.

No witness to be ordered to attend in person unless resident within certain limits.

19. No one shall be ordered to attend in person to give evidence unless he resides—

(a) within the local limits of the Court's ordinary original jurisdiction, or

(b) without such limits but at a place less than fifty or (where there is railway or steamer communication or other established public conveyance for five-sixths of the distance between the place where he resides and the place where the Court is situate) less than two hundred miles distance from the Court-house.

ORDER XXVI.

COMMISSIONS.

Commissions to examine witnesses.

1. Any Court may in any suit issue a commission for the examination on interrogatories or otherwise of any person resident within the local limits of its jurisdiction who is exempted under this Code from attending the Court or who is from sickness or infirmity unable to attend it.

Cases in which Court may issue commission to examine witness.

2. An order for the issue of a commission for the examination of a witness may be made by the Court either of its own motion or on the application, supported by affidavit or otherwise, of any party to the suit or of the witness to be examined.

Order for commission.

Where witness resides within Court's jurisdiction.

3. A commission for the examination of a person who resides within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the same may be issued to any person whom the Court thinks fit to execute it.

Persons for whose examination commission may issue.

4. (1) Any Court may in any suit issue a commission for the examination of—

(a) any person resident beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction;

(b) any person who is about to leave such limits before the date on which he is required to be examined in Court; and

(c) any person in the service of the Crown who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service.

(2) Such commission may be issued to any Court, not being a High Court, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person resides, or to any pleader or other person whom the Court issuing the commission may appoint.

(3) The Court on issuing any commission under this rule shall direct whether the commission shall be returned to itself or to any subordinate Court.

5. Where any Court to which application is made for the issue of a commission for the examination of a person residing at any place not within British India is satisfied that the evidence of such person is necessary, the Court may issue such commission or a letter of request.

Commission or request to examine witness not within British India.

Court to examine witness pursuant to commission.

6. Every Court receiving a commission for the examination of any person shall examine him or cause him to be examined pursuant thereto.

7. Where a commission has been duly executed, it shall be returned together with the evidence taken under it, to the Court from which it was issued, unless the order for issuing the commission has otherwise directed, in which case the commission shall be returned in terms of such order; and the commission and the return thereto and the evidence taken under it shall (subject to the provisions of the next following rule) form part of the record of the suit.

* * * * *

Commissions for local investigations.

9. In any suit in which the Court deems a local investigation to be requisite or proper for the purpose of elucidating any matter in dispute, or of ascertaining the market-value of any property, or the amount of any mesne profits or damages or annual net profits, the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit directing him to make such investigation and to report thereon to the Court:

Provided that, where the Provincial Government has made rules as to the persons to whom such commission shall be issued, the Court shall be bound by such rules.

10. (1) The Commissioner, after such local inspection, as he deems necessary and after reducing to writing the evidence taken by him, shall return such evidence, together with his report in writing signed by him to the Court.

(2) The report of the Commissioner and the evidence taken by him (but not the evidence without the report) shall be evidence in the suit and shall form part of the record, but the Court or, with the permission of the Court, any of the parties to the suit may examine the Commissioner personally in open Court touching any of the matters referred to him or mentioned in his report or as to his report, or as to the manner in which he has made the investigation.

(3) Where the Court is for any reason dissatisfied with the proceedings of the Commissioner, it may direct such further inquiry to be made as it shall think fit.
